TO THE KING.

SIR,

THE firſt ſtep that was made in the Reformation of this Church, was the reſtoring to Your Royal Anceſtors the Rights of the Crown, and an entire Dominion over all their Subjects; of which they had been diſſeiſed by the craft and violence of an unjuſt Pretender: to to whom the Clergy, though your Majeſties Progenitors had enriched them, by a Bounty no leſs profuſe than ill-managed, did not only adhere, but drew with them the Laity, over whoſe Conſciences they had gained ſo abſolute an Authority, that our Kings were to expect no Obedience from their People, but what the Popes were pleaſed to allow.

It is true, the Nobler part of the Nation did frequently in Parliament, aſſert the Regal Prerogatives againſt thoſe Papal invaſions; yet theſe were but faint endeavours; for an ill-executed Law is but an unequal match to a Principle ſtrongly infuſed into the Conſciences of the People.

But how different was this from the teaching of Chriſt and his Apoſtles? They forbad men to uſe all thoſe Arts by which the Papacy grew up and yet ſubſiſts:

ſiſts: They exhorted them to obey Magiſtrates, when they knew it would coſt them their Lives: They were for ſetting up a Kingdom, not of this World, nor to be attained, but by a holy and peaceable Religion. If this might every where take place, Princes would find Government both eaſie and ſecure: It would raiſe in their Subjects the trueſt courage, and unite them with the firmeſt charity: It would draw from them Obedience to the Laws, and Reverence to the Perſons of their Kings. If the Standards of Juſtice and Charity, which the Goſpel gives, of doing as we would be done by, and loving our Neighbours as our ſelves, were made the meaſures of mens actions, how ſteadily would Societies be governed, and how exactly would Princes be obeyed.

The deſign of the Reformation, was to reſtore Chriſtianity to what it was at firſt, and to purge it of thoſe Corruptions, with which it was over-run in the latter and darker Ages.

GREAT SIR, This Work was carried on by a ſlow and unſteady Progreſs under King Henry the VIII. it advanced in a fuller and freer courſe under the ſhort, but bleſſed Reign of King Edward; was Sealed with the Blood of many Martyrs under Queen Mary; was brought to a full ſettlement in the happy and glorious days of Queen Elizabeth; was defended by the Learned Pen of King James; but the eſtabliſhed frame of it, under which it had ſo long flouriſhed, was overthrown with your Majeſties bleſſed Father, who fell with it, and honoured it by its unexempled Suffering for it; and was again reſtored to its former beauty and order, by Your Majeſties happy Return.

What

What remains to compleat and perpetuate this Bleſſing, the compoſing of our differences at home, the eſtabliſhing a cloſer correſpondence with the Reformed Churches abroad, the ſecuring us from the reſtleſs and wicked practiſes of that Party, who hoped ſo lately to have been at the end of their deſigns; and that which can only entitle us to a Bleſſing from God, the Reforming of our Manners and Lives, as our Anceſtors did our Doctrine and Worſhip; All this is reſerved for Your Majeſty, that it may appear, that Your Royal Title of Defender of the Faith is no empty Sound, but the real Strength and Glory of Your Crown.

For attaining theſe ends, it will be of great uſe to trace the ſteps of our firſt Reformers; for if the Landmarks they ſet be obſerved, we can hardly go out of the way. This was my chief deſign in the following ſheets, which I now moſt humbly offer to Your Majeſty, hoping that as You were graciouſly pleaſed to command that I ſhould have free acceſs to all Records for compoſing them, ſo You will not deny Your Royal Patronage to the Hiſtory of that Work, which God grant Your Majeſty may live to raiſe to its perfection, and to compleat in Your Reign the Glory of all Your Titles. This is a part of the moſt earneſt as well as the daily Prayers of,

May it pleaſe Your Sacred Majeſty,

Your Majeſties moſt Loyal,

moſt Faithful, and moſt devoted Subject and Servant,

PREFACE.

THere is no part of Hiſtory better receiv'd than the account of great Changes, and Revolutions of States and Governments, in which the Variety of unlooked-for Accidents and Events, both entertains the Reader, and improves him.

Of all Changes, thoſe in Religion that have been ſudden and ſignal, are inquired into with the moſt ſearching Curioſity: where the Salvation of Souls being concern'd, the better ſort are much affected; and the Credit, Honour and Intereſt of Churches and Parties draw in theſe, who though they do not much care for the Religous part, yet make noiſe about it to ſerve other ends. The Changes that were made in Religion in the laſt Century have produc'd ſuch effects every where, that it is no wonder if all perſons deſire to ſee a clear account of the ſeveral ſteps in which they advanced, of the Counſels that directed them, and the Motives both Religious and Political that inclined men of all conditions to concur in them. Germany produceth a Sleidan, France a Thuanus, and Italy a Frier Paul, who have given the World as full ſatisfaction in what was done beyond Sea as they could deſire. And though the two laſt lived and died in the Communion of the Church of Rome, yet they have delivered things to Poſterity, with ſo much Candour, and Evenneſs, that their Authority is diſputed by none but thoſe of their own Party.

But while Foreign Churches have ſuch Hiſtorians, ours at home have not had the like good Fortune: for whether it was, that the Reformers at firſt, preſumed ſo far on their Legal and calm proceedings, on the continued Succeſſion of their Clergy, the Authority of the Law, and the protection of the Prince, that they judged it needleſs to write an Hiſtory, and therefore employed their beſt Pens, rather to juſtifie what they did, than to deliver how it was done; or whether by a meer neglect the thing was omitted, we cannot determine. True it is, that it was not done to any degree of Exactneſs, when matters were ſo freſh in Mens Memories, that things might have been opened with greater Advantages, and vouch'd by better Authority, than it is to be expected at this diſtance.

They were ſoon after much provok'd by Sanders's Hiſtory, which he publiſhed to the World in Latin: yet either deſpiſing a Writer, who did ſo impudently deliver falſhoods, that from his own Book many of them may be diſproved, or expecting a Command from Authority, they did not then ſet about it. The beſt account I can give of their Silence is, that moſt of Sander's Calumnies being levelled at Queen Elizabeth, whoſe Birth and Parents he deſigned chiefly to diſgrace, it was thought too tender a Point by her Wiſe Counſellors to be much enquired into: it gave too great credit to his Lies, to anſwer them; an Anſwer would draw forth a Reply, by which thoſe Calumnies would ſtill be kept alive; and therefore it was not without good reaſon thought better to let them lie unanſwered and deſpiſed. From whence it is come that in this Age that Author is in ſuch Credit, that now he is quoted with much aſſurance: moſt of all the Writers in the Church of Rome rely on his Teſtimony as a good Authority. The Collectors of the General Hiſtory of that Age, follow his thread cloſely, ſome of them tranſcribe his very words. One Pollini a Dominican, publiſhed an Hiſtory of the Changes that were made in England, in Italian, at Rome, Anno 1594. which he ſhould more ingenuouſly have called a Tranſlation, or Paraphraſe of Sanders's Hiſtory: and of late more candidly, but no leſs maliciouſly, one of the beſt Pens of France has been employed to tranſlate him into their Language, which has created ſuch prejudices in the minds of many there, that our Reformation, which generally was more modeſtly ſpoken of, even by thoſe who wrote againſt it, is now look'd on by ſuch as read Sanders, and believe him, as one of the fouleſt things that ever was.

Fox for all his Voluminous Work, had but few things in his Eye when he made his Collection, and deſigned only to diſcover the Corruptions and Cruelties of the Roman Clergy, and the Sufferings and Conſtancy of the Reformers. But his Work was written in haſte, and there are ſo many defects in it, that it can by no means be called a Compleat Hiſtory of theſe times; though I muſt add, that having compared his Acts and Monuments with the Records, I have never been able to diſcover any errors or prevarications in them, but the utmoſt Fidelity and exactneſs. Parker, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, deſigned only in his account of the Britiſh Antiquities, to do juſtice and honour to his See, and ſo gives us barely the life of Cranmer, with ſome few and general hints of what he did. Hall was but a ſuperficial Writer, and was more careful to get full Informations of the Cloaths that were worn at the Interviews of Princes, Juſts, Tournaments, and great Solemnities, than about the Counſels, or ſecret Tranſactions of the time he lived in. Holingſhead, Speed, and Stow, give bare relations of things that were Publick, and commit many faults. Upon their ſcent moſt of our later Writers have gone, and have only collected and repeated what they wrote.

The Lord Herbert judged it unworthy of him to trifle as others had done, and therefore made a more narrow ſearch into Records and Original Papers, than all that had gone before him; and with great fidelity and induſtry, has given us the Hiſtory of King Henry the Eighth. But in the Tranſactions that concern Religion, he dwells not ſo long as the matter required, leaving thoſe to Men of another Profeſſion, and judging it perhaps not ſo proper for one of his condition to purſue a full and accurate Deduction of thoſe matters.

Since he wrote, two have undertaken the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, Fuller and Heylin. The former got into his hands ſome few Papers, that were not ſeen before he publiſhed them; but being a Man of fancy, and affecting an odd way of writing, his work gives no great ſatisfaction. But Doctor Heylin wrote ſmoothly and handſomly, his Method and Stile are good, and his Work was generally more read than any thing that had appeared before him: but either he was very ill informed, or very much led by his Paſſions; and be being wrought on by moſt violent prejudices againſt ſome that were concerned in that time, delivers many things in ſuch a manner, and ſo ſtrangely, that one would think he had been ſecretly ſet on to it by thoſe of the Church of Rome, though I doubt not he was a ſincere Proteſtant, but violently carried away by ſome particular conceits. In one thing he is not to be excuſed, That he never vouched any Authority for what he writ, which is not to be forgiven any who write of Tranſactions beyond their own time, and deliver new things not known before. So that upon what Grounds he wrote a great deal of his Book we can only conjecture, and many in their gueſſes are not apt to be very favourable to him.

Things being delivered to us with ſo much alloy and uncertainty, thoſe of the Church of Rome do confidently diſparage our Reformation. The ſhort Hiſtory of it, as it is put in their mouths, being, That it was begun by the luſts and paſſions of King Henry the Eighth, carried on by the Ravenouſneſs of the Duke of Somerſet, under Edward the Sixth, and confirmed by the Policy of Queen Elizabeth and her Council to ſecure her Title. Theſe things being generally talked and ſpread abroad in Foreign parts, eſpecially in France, by the new Tranſlation of Sanders, and not being yet ſufficiently cleared, many have deſired to ſee a fuller and better account of thoſe Tranſactions than has yet been given; ſo the thing being neceſſary, I was the more encouraged to ſet about it by ſome perſons of great Worth and Eminence, who thought I had much leiſure and other good Opportunities to go through with it, and wiſhed me to undertake it. The Perſon that did engage me chiefly to this work, was on many accounts much fitter to have undertaken it himſelf, being the moſt indefatigable in his Induſtry, and the moſt Judicious in his Obſervations, of any I know, and is one of the greateſt Maſters of Stile now living. But being engaged in the Service of the Church, in a ſtation that affords him very little leiſure, he ſet me on to it, and furniſhed me with a curious Collection of his own Obſervations. And in ſome ſort this work may be accounted his, for he corrected it with a moſt Critical Exactneſs; ſo that the firſt materials, and the laſt finiſhing of it, are from him. But after all this I lie under ſuch reſtraints from his Modeſty, that I am not allowed to publiſh his Name.

I had two Objections to it, beſides the knowledge of my own unfitneſs for ſuch a Work. One was my Unacquaintedneſs with the Laws and Cuſtoms of this Nation, not being born in it: the other was the Expence, that ſuch a Search as was neceſſary, required, which was not eaſie for me to bear: My acquaintance with the moſt ingenious Maſter William Petyt, Councellor of the Inner Temple, cleared one difficulty, he offering me his aſſiſtance and direction, without which I muſt have committed great faults. But I muſt acknowledge my ſelf highly obliged by the favour and bounty of the Honourable Maſter of the Rolls, Sir Harebottle Grimſtone, of whoſe worth and Goodneſs to me I muſt make a large digreſſion, if I would undertake to ſay all that the Subject will bear: The whole Nation expreſſed their value of him, upon the moſt Signal Occaſion, when they made him their Mouth and Speaker in that Bleſſed Aſſembly which called home their King, after which real evidence all little Commendations may be well forborn. The Obligations he has laid on me are ſuch, that as the Gratitude and Service of my whole life, is the only equal return I can make for them; ſo as a ſmall tribute I judge my ſelf obliged to make my acknowledgments in this manner, for the leiſure I enjoy under his Protection, and the Support I receive from him; and if this work does the World any ſervice, the beſt part of the Thanks is due to him, that furniſhed me with particular Opportunities of carrying it on. Nor muſt I conceal the Nobleneſs of that Renowned Promoter of Learning Mr. Boyle, who contributed liberally to the Expence this Work put me to.

Upon theſe encouragements I ſet about it, and began with the Search of all Publick Records and Offices, the Parliament and Treaty-Rolls, with all the Patent-Rolls, and the Regiſters of the Sees of Canterbury and London, and of the Augmentation-Office. Then I laid out for all the MSS. I could hear of, and found things beyond my Expectation in the famous Cotton Library, where there is ſuch a Collection of original Papers relating to theſe times, as perhaps the World can ſhew nothing like it. I had alſo the favour of ſome MSS. of great value, both from the Famous and Eminently Learned Doctor Stillingfleet, who gave me great Aſſiſtance in this Work, and from Mr. Petyt and others. When I had look'd theſe over, I then uſed all the Endeavours I could, to gather together the Books that were printed in thoſe days, from which I not only got conſiderable hints of matters of Faſt, but (that which I chiefly look'd for) the Arguments upon which they managed the Controverſies then on foot, of which I thought it was the part of an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorian to give an Account, as I could recover them, that it may appear upon what Motives and Grounds they proceeded.

Patent-

The Three chief Periods of Henry the Eighth his Reign, in which Religion is concerned, are, Firſt, from the beginning of his Reign, till the Proceſs of his Divorce with Queen Katherine commenced. The Second is from that, till his total Breaking off from Rome, and ſetting up his Supremacy over all Cauſes and Perſons. The Third is from that, to his Death.

When I firſt ſet about this Work, I intended to have carried on the Hiſtory of the Reformation to the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, in which it was finiſhed and fully ſettled; but I was forced to change that Reſolution. The chief reaſon, among many others, was, that I have not yet been able to diſcover ſuch full Informations of what paſſed under the Succeeding Reigns as were neceſſary for a Hiſtory; and though I have ſearch'd the publick Regiſters of that time, yet I am ſtill in the dark my ſelf in many particulars. This made me reſolve on publiſhing this Volume firſt, hoping that thoſe in whoſe hands any Manuſcripts or Papers of that time, will from what is now performed, be encouraged to communicate them: or if any have made a conſiderable Progreſs in thoſe Collections, I ſhall be far from envying them the honour of ſuch a Work, in which it had been inexcuſable Vanity in me to have medled, if the deſires of others, who have great Power over me, had not prevailed with me to ſet about it, And therefore, though I have made a good Advance in the following part of the Work, I ſhall moſt willingly reſign it up to any who will undertake it, and they ſhall have the free uſe of all my Papers. But if none will ſet about it, who yet can furniſh materials towards it, I hope their zeal for carrying on ſo deſired a Work, will engage them to give all the help to it that is in their Power.

There is only one paſſage belonging to the next Volume, which I ſhall take notice of here, ſince from it I muſt plead my Excuſe for ſeveral Defects, which may ſeem to be in this Work. In the ſearch I made of the Rolls and other Offices, I wondred much to miſs ſeveral Commiſſions, Patents, and other Writings, which by clear evidence I knew were granted, and yet none of them appeared on Record. This I could not impute to any thing but the omiſſion of the Clerks, who failed in the enrolling thoſe Commiſſions, though it was not likely that matters of ſo high Concernment ſhould have been neglected, eſpecially in ſuch a Critical time and under ſo ſevere a King. But as I continued down my ſearch to the Fourth year of Queen Mary, I found in the Twelfth Roll of that Year, a Commiſſion, which cleared all my former doubts, and by which I ſaw what was become of the things I had ſo anxiouſly ſearched after. We have heard of the Expurgation of Books practi-

ſed in the Church of Rome, but it might have been imagined, that publick Regiſters and Records would have been ſafe; yet leaſt theſe ſhould have been afterwards Confeſſors, it was reſolved they ſhould then be Martyrs; for on the 29th of December, in the 4th year of her Reign, a Commiſſion was iſſued out under the Great Seal to Bonner Biſhop of London, Cole Dean of St. Pauls, and Martine a Doctor of the Civil Law, which is of that importance, that I ſhall here inſert the material words of it: Whereas it is come to our knowledge, that in the time of the late Schiſm divers Compts, Books, Scrolls, Inſtruments, and other Writings were practiſed, deviſed, and made, concerning Profeſſions againſt the Popes Holineſs, and the See Apoſtolick, and alſo ſundry infamous Scrutinies taken in Abbeys and other Religious Houſes, tending rather to ſubvert and overthrow all good Religion and Religious Houſes, than for any truth contained therein: Which being in the Cuſtody of divers Regiſters, and we intending to have thoſe Writings brought to knowledge, whereby they may be conſidered and ordered according to our Will and Pleaſure; thereupon, thoſe three, or any two of them are empowered to cite any Perſons before them, and examine them upon the Premiſſes upon Oath, and to bring all ſuch Writings before them, and certifie their diligence about it to Cardinal Pool, that further order might be given about them.

When I ſaw this, I ſoon knew which way ſo many Writings had gone: and as I could not but wonder at their boldneſs, who thus perſumed to raze ſo many Records; ſo their ingenuity in leaving this Commiſſion in the Rolls, by which any who had the Curioſity to ſearch for it, might be ſatisfied how the other Commiſſions were deſtroyed, was much to be commended. Yet in the following Work, it will appear that ſome few Papers eſcaped their Hands.

I know it is needleſs to make great Proteſtations of my ſincerity in this Work. Theſe are of courſe, and are little conſidered, but I ſhall take a more effectual way to be believed, for I ſhall vouch my Warrants for what I ſay and tell where they are to be found. And having copied out of Records and MSS. many Papers of great importance, I ſhall not only inſert the ſubſtance of them in the following Work, but at the end of it ſhall give a Collection of them at their full length, and in the Language in which they were originally written: from which as the Reader will receive full evidence of the truth of this Hiſtory; ſo he will not be ill pleaſed, to obſerve the Genius and way of the Great Men in that time, of which he will be better able to judge, by ſeeing their Letters, and other Papers, than by any repreſentation made of them at ſecond hand. They are digeſted into that order, in which they are referred to in the Hiſtory.

It will ſurprize ſome to ſee a Book of this Bigneſs, written of the Hiſtory of our Reformation, under the Reign of King Henry the Eighth: ſince the true beginnings of it, are to be reckoned from the Reign of King Edward the 6. in which the Articles of our Church. And the Forms of our Worſhip, were firſt compiled and ſet forth by Authority. And indeed in King Henry's time the Reformation was rather conceived than brought forth, and two Parties were in the laſt 18 years of his Reign ſtrugling in the Womb, having now and then advantages on either ſide, as the unconſtant humour of that King changed, and as his Intereſts, and often as his Paſſions ſwayed him.

Cardinal Wolſey had ſo diſſolved his mind into pleaſures, and puffed him up with Flattery and ſervile Compliances, that it was not an eaſie thing to ſerve him; for being boiſtrous and impatient naturally, which was much heightned by his most extravagant vanity, and high conceit of his own Learning and Wisdom, he was one of the most uncounsellable Persons in the World.

The Book which he wrote, had engaged him deep in these Controversies, and by perpetual flatteries, he was brought to fancy it was written with some degrees of Inspiration. And Luther in his Answer had treated him so unmanerly, that it was only the necessity of his Affairs, that forced him to any correspondence with that Party in Germany.

And though Cranmer and Cromwell improved every advantage, that either the Kings Temper, or his Affairs offered them, as much as could be; yet they were to be pitied, having to do with a Prince, who upon the slightest pretences threw down those whom he had most advanced; which Cromwel felt severely, and Cranmer was sometimes near it.

The faults of this King being so conspicuous, and the severity of his proceedings so unjustifiable, particularly that heinous violation of the most sacred Rules of Justice and Government, in condemning men without bringing them to make their Answers; most of our Writers have separated the Concerns of this Church from his Reign: and imagining that all he did, was founded only on his Revenge upon the Court of Rome, for denying his Divorce, have taken little care to examine how matters were transacted in his time.

But if we consider the great things that were done by him, we must acknowledge that there was a signal Providence of God, in raising up a King of his temper, for clearing the way to that blessed Work that followed: and that could hardly have been done, but by a Man of his Humour; so that I may very fitly apply to him the witty Simile of an Ingenious Writer, who compares Luther to a Postilion in his Waxed Boots and Oiled Coat, lashing his Horses through thick and thin, and bespattering all about him.

This Character befits King Henry better (saving the Reverence due to his Crown) who as the Postilion of Reformation, made way for it through a great deal of mire and filth. He abolished the Popes Power, by which not only that Tyranny was destroyed, which had been long an heavy burthen on this oppressed Nation; but all the Opinions, Rites, and Constitutions, for which there was no better Authority than Papal degrees, were to fall to the Ground; The Foundation that supported them being thus sapped. He suppressed all the Monasteries; in which though there were some inexcusable faults committed, yet he wanted not reason to do what he did. For the Foundation of those Houses being laid on the Superstitious Conceit of Redeeming Souls out of Purgatory, by saying Masses for them; they whose Office that was, had by counterfeiting Relicks, by forging of Miracles, and other like Impostures, drawn together a vast Wealth, to the enriching of their Saints, of whom some perhaps were damn'd Souls, and others were never in being. These Arts being detected, and withal their great Viciousness in some places, and in all, their great abuse of the Christian Religion, made it seem unfit they should be continued. But it was their dependence on the See of Rome, which, as the state of things then was, made it necessary that they should be suppress. New Foundations might have done well, and the scantness of those, considering the number and wealth of those which were suppressed, is one of the great blemishes of that Reign. But it was in vain to endeavour to amend the old ones. Their Numbers were so great, their Riches and Interests in the Nation so considerable, that a Prince of Ordinary mettal would not have attempted such a design, much less have compleated it in Five years time. With these fell the Superstition of Images, Reliques, and the Redemption of Souls out of

Purgatory

Purgatory. And thoſe Extravagant Addreſſes to Saints that are in the Roman Offices were thrown out, only an Ora pro nobis was kept up, and even that was left to the liberty of Prieſts, to leave it out of the Litanies as they ſaw cauſe. Theſe were great preparations for a Reformation. But it went further, and two things were done, upon which a greater change was reaſonably to be expected. The Scriptures were Tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue, and ſet up in all Churches, and every one was admitted to read them, and they alone were declared the Rule of Faith. This could not but open the Eyes of the Nation, who finding a profound ſilence in theſe Writings about many things, and a direct oppoſition to other things that were ſtill retained, muſt needs conclude, even without deep Speculations or nice Diſputing, that many things that were ſtill in the Church had no Ground in Scripture, and ſome of the reſt were directly contrary to it. This Cranmer knew well would have ſuch an operation, and therefore made it his chief buſineſs to ſet it forward, which in Concluſion he happily effected.

Another thing was alſo eſtabliſhed, which opened the way to all that followed: That very National Church was a Compleat Body within it ſelf, ſo that the Church of England, with the Authority and concurrence of their Head, and King, might examine and reform all Errors and Corruptions, whether in Doctrine or Worſhip. All the Provincial Councils in the Ancient Church, were ſo many Precedents for this, who condemned Hereſies, and Reformed abuſes as the occaſion required. And yet theſe being all but parts of one Empire, there was a leſs reaſon for their doing it, without ſtaying for a General Conncil, which depended upon the pleaſure of one man (the Roman Emperor) than could be pretended, when Europe was divided into ſo many Kingdoms: By which a common Concurrence of all theſe Churches was a thing ſcarce to be expected; and therefore this Church muſt be in a very ill Condition, if there could be no endeavours for a Reformation, till all the reſt were brought together.

The Grounds of the new Covenant between God and Man in Chriſt, were alſo truly ſtated, and the terms on which Salvation was to be hoped for, were faithfully opened according to the New Teſtament. And this being in the ſtrict notion of the Word, the Goſpel, and the glad Tidings preached through our Bleſſed Lord and Saviour, it muſt be confeſſed that there was a great Progreſs made, when the Nation was well inſtructed about it; though there was ſtill an alloy of other Corruptions, embaſing the Purity of the Faith. And indeed in the whole progreſs of theſe Changes, the Kings deſign ſeemed to have been to terrifie the Court of Rome, and cudgel the Pope into a Compliance with what he deſired: for in his heart he continued addicted to ſome of the moſt extravagant Opinions of that Church, ſuch as Tranſubſtantiation and the other Corruptions in the Maſs, ſo that he was to his lives end more Papiſt than Proteſtant.

There are two Prejudices, which Men have generally drunk in againſt that time. The one is, from the Kings great Enormities, both in his perſonal Deportment and Government, which make many think, no good could be done by ſo ill a Man, and ſo cruel a Prince. I am not to defend him, nor to leſſen his faults. The vaſtneſs and irregularity of his Expence procured many heavy Exactions, and twice extorted a publick Diſcharge of his Debts, embaſed the Coin, with other Irregularities. His proud and impatient Spirit occaſioned many cruel proceedings. The taking ſo many lives, only for denying his Supremacy, particularly Fiſher's and More's, the one being extream old, and the other one of the Glories of his Nation, for Probity and Learning: The taking advantage from ſome Eruptions in the North, to break the Indempnity he had before proclaimed to thoſe in the Rebellion, even though they could not be proved Guilty of thoſe ſecond diſorders: his Extream Severity to all Cardinal Pool's Family: his cruel uſing, firſt Cromwel, and afterwards the Duke of Norfolk and his Son, beſides his unexampled Proceedings againſt ſome of his Wives; and that which was firſt of all, the laying a Precedent for the ſubverſion of Juſtice, and oppreſſing the cleareſt Innocence, by attainting men without hearing them: Theſe are ſuch remarkable blemiſhes, that as no man of ingenuity can go about the whitening them; ſo the poor Reformers drunk ſo deep of that bitter Cup, that it very ill becomes any of their followers, to endeavour to give fair Colours to thoſe red and bloody Characters, with which ſo much of his Reign is ſtained.

Yet after all this ſad enumeration, it was no new nor unuſual thing in the methods of Gods Providence, to employ Princes who had great Mixtures of very groſs faults, to do ſignal things for his Service. Not to mention David and Solomon, whoſe ſins were expiated with a ſevere Repentance; it was the Bloody Cyrus that ſent back the Jews to their Land, and gave them leave to re-build their Temple. Conſtantine the Great is by ſome of his Enemies charged with many blemiſhes both in his Life and Government. Clovis of France, under whom that Nation received the Chriſtian Faith, was a Monſter of Cruelty and Perfidiouſneſs, as even Gregory of Tours repreſents him, who lived near his time, and nevertheleſs makes a Saint of him. Charles the Great, whom ſome alſo make a Saint, both put away his Wife for a very ſlight cauſe, and is ſaid to have lived in moſt unnatural Luſts with his own Daughter. Irene, whom the Church of Rome magnifies, as the Reſtorer of their Religion in the Eaſt, did both contrary to the Impreſſions of Nature, and of her Sex, put out her own Sons Eyes, of which he died ſoon after, with many other execrable things. And whatever Reproaches thoſe of the Church of Rome caſt on the Reformation, upon the account of this Kings faults, may be eaſily turned back on their Popes, who have never failed to court and extol Princes that ſerved their ends, how groſs and Scandalous ſoever their other faults have been. As Phocas, Brunichild, Irene, Mathildis, Edgar of England, and many more. But our Church is not near ſo much concerned in the perſons of thoſe Princes, under whom the Reformation began, as theirs is in the perſons of their Popes, who are believed to have far higher Characters of a Divine Power and Spirit in them, than other Princes pretend to. And yet if the Lives of thoſe Popes, who have made the greateſt advances in their Juriſdiction be examined, particularly Gregory the Seventh, and Boniface the Eighth, vices more eminent, than any can be charged on King Henry, will be found in them. And if a leud and wicked Pope may yet have the Holy Ghoſt dwelling in him, and directing him infallibly; why may not an ill King do ſo good a Work as ſet a Reformation forward? And if it were proper to enter into a diſſection of Four of thoſe Popes, that ſate at Rome during this Reign, Pope Julius will be found beyond him in a vaſt Ambition, whoſe bloody Reign did not only embroil Italy, but a great part of Chriſtendom. Pope Leo the Tenth was as extravagant and prodigal in his expence, which put him on baſer Shifts, than ever this King uſed, to raiſe Money; not by embaſing the Coin, or raiſing new and heavy Taxes, but by embaſing the Chriſtian Religion, and proſtituting the pardon of ſin in that foul trade of Indulgences. Clement the

Seventh

Seventh was falſe to the higheſt degree; a vice which cannot be charged on this King. And Paul the third was a vile and lewd Prieſt, who not only kept his Whore, but gloried in it, and raiſed one of his Baſtards to an high Dignity, making him Prince of Parma and Piacenza; and himſelf is ſaid to have lived in Inceſt with others of them. And except the ſhort Reign of Hadrian the Sixth, there was no Pope at Rome all this while, whoſe example might make any other Prince bluſh for his faults; ſo that Guicciardine, when he calls Pope Clement a good Pope, adds, I mean not Goodneſs Apoſtolical; for in thoſe days he was eſteemed a good Pope, that did not exceed the wickedneſs of the worſt of Men.

In ſum, Gods Ways are a great Deep, who has often ſhewed his Power and Wiſdom, in raiſing up unlikely and unpromiſing Inſtruments, to do great ſervices in the World; not always employing the beſt Men in them, leſt good Inſtruments ſhould ſhare too deep in the Praiſes of that, which is only due to the Supream Creator and Governour of the World. And therefore he will ſtain the Pride of all Glory, that ſuch as Glory may only Glory in the Lord. Jehu did an acceptable Service to God, in deſtroying the Idolatry of Baal, though neither the way of doing it be to be imitated, being groſly inſincere, nor was the Reformation compleat, ſince the Worſhiping the two Calves was ſtill kept up; and it is very like, his chief deſign in it, was to deſtroy all the Party that favoured Ahab's Family; yet the thing was good, and was rewarded by God: So whatever this Kings other faults were, and how defective ſoever the Change he made was, and upon what ill motives ſoever it may ſeem to have proceeded; yet the things themſelves being good, we ought not to think the worſe of them becauſe of the Inſtrument, or manner by which they were wrought; but are to adore and admire the paths of the Divine Wiſdom, that brought about ſuch a Change, in a Church, which being ſubjected to the See of Rome, had been more than any other part of Europe, moſt tame under its Oppreſſions, and was moſt deeply drenched in Superſtition: And this by the means of a Prince, who was the moſt devoted to the Intereſt of Rome of any in Chriſtendom, and ſeemed to be ſo upon knowledge, being very learned; and continued to the laſt much leavened with Superſtition, and was the only King in the World whom that See declared, Defender of the Faith. And that this ſhould have been carried on ſo far, with ſo little Oppoſition, ſome riſings though numerous and formidable being ſcattered and quieted without Blood; and that a mighty Prince, who was Victorious almoſt in all his undertakings, Charles the 5th. and was both provoked in point of honour and Intereſt, yet could never find one ſpare ſeaſon to turn his Arms upon England, are great Demonſtrations of a particular Influence of Heaven in theſe Alterations, and of its watchful care of them.

But the other prejudice touches the Reformation in a more vital and tender part; and it is, That Cranmer and the other Biſhops, who promoted the Reformation in the Succeeding Reign, did in this comply too ſervilly with King Henry's humours, both in carrying on his frequent Divorces, and in retaining thoſe Corruptions in the Worſhip, which by their throwing them off in the beginning of King Edward's Reign, we may conclude were then condemned by them; ſo that they ſeem to have prævaricated againſt their Conſciences in that Complyance.

It were too faint a way of anſwering ſo ſevere a Charge, to turn it back on the Church of Rome, and to ſhew the baſe Compliances of ſome, even of the beſt of their Popes, as Gregory the Great, whoſe Congratulations to the Usurper Phocas, are a strain of the meanest, and undecentest flattery that ever was put in writing. And his Complements to Brunichild, who was one of the greatest Monsters both for Lust and Cruelty that ever her Sex produced, show that there was no person so wicked that he was ashamed to flatter: but the blemishing them will not (I confess) excuse our Reformers, therefore other things are to be considered for their Vindication. They did not at once attain the full knowledge of Divine Truth, so that in some particulars, as in that of the Corporal Presence in the Sacrament, both Cranmer and Ridley were themselves then in the dark. Bertram's Book first convinced Ridley, and he was the chief Instrument in opening Cranmer's eyes: So if themselves were not then enlightned, they could not instruct others. As for other things, such as the giving the Cup to the Laity, the Worshiping God in a known Tongue, and several Reformations about the Mass, though they judged them necessary to be done as soon as was possible; yet they had not so full a perswasion of the necessity of these, as to think it a sin not to do them. The Prophets words to Naaman the Syrian, might give them some colour for that mistake, and the practise of the Apostles, who continued not only to worship at the Temple, but to Circumcise and to offer Sacrifices (which must have been done by St. Paul, when he purified himself in the Temple) even after the Law was dead, by the appearing of the Gospel, seemed to excuse their Compliance. They had also observed, that as the Apostles were all things to all men, that so they might gain some; so the Primitive Christians had brought in many rites of Heathenism into their Worship: Upon which inducements they were wrought on to comply in some uneasie things, in which if these excuses do not wholly clear them, yet they very much lessen their Guilt.

And after all this, it must be confessed they were men, and had mixtures of fear and Humane infirmities with their other excellent Qualities. And indeed Cranmer was in all other points so extraordinary a Person, that it was perhaps fit, there should be some ingredients in his Temper, to lessen the Veneration, which his great worth might have raised too high, if it had not been for these feeblenesses, which upon some occasions appeared in him. But if we examine the failings of some of the greatest of the Primitive Fathers, as Athanasius, Cyril, and others, who where the most zealous asserters of the Faith, we must conclude them to have been nothing inferiour to any that can be charged on Cranmer; whom if we consider narrowly, we shall find as eminent vertues, and as few faults in him, as in any Prelate that has been in the Christian Church for many Ages. And if he was prevailed on to deny his Master through fear, he did wash off that stain by a sincere Repentance and a patient Martyrdom, in which he expressed an eminent resentment of his former frailty, with a pitch of Constancy of mind above the rate of modern Examples.

But their vertues as well as their faults are set before us for our instruction; and how frail soever the Vessels were, they have conveyed to us a treasure of great value, The pure Gospel of our Lord and Saviour: which if we follow, and govern our lives and hearts by it, we may hope in easier and plainer paths to attain that Blessedness, which they could not reach but through scorching flames: and if we do not improve the Advantages, which this light affords, we may either look for some of those trials, which were sent for the exercise of their Faith and Patience, and perhaps for the punishment of their former Compliance; or if we escape these, we have cause to fear the worse in the Conclusion.

THE HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION OF THE Church of England.

BOOK I.

A Summary View of King Henry the Eighth's Reign, till the Proceſs of his Divorce was begun, in which the State of England, chiefly as it related to Religion, is opened.

ENGLAND had for a whole Age felt the Miſeries of a long and cruel War between the Two Houſes of York and Lancaſter; during which time, as the Crown had loſt great Dominions beyond Sea, ſo the Nation was much impoveriſhed, many Noble Families extinguiſht, much Blood ſhed, great Animoſities every where raiſed, with all the other Miſeries of a laſting Civil War: But they now ſaw all theſe happily compoſed when the Two Families did unite in King Henry the Eighth. In his Fathers Reign they were rather cemented and joyned than united; whoſe great Partiality to the Houſe of Lancaſter, from which he was Deſcended, and Severity to the Branches of the Houſe of York, in which even his own Queen had a large ſhare, together with the Impoſtors that were ſet up to diſturb his Reign, kept theſe Heats alive, which were now all buried in his Grave: and this made the Succeſſion of his Son ſo univerſally acceptable to the whole Nation, who now hoped to revive their former pretenſions in France, and to have again a large ſhare in all the Affairs of Europe, from which their Domeſtick Broils had ſo long excluded them.

King Henry's Succeſſion to the Crown. Apr. 22. 1509

There was another thing, which made his firſt coming to the Crown no leſs acceptable, which was, that the ſame Day that his Father

He proceeds againſt Dudley and Empſon.

Father died, * he ordered Dudley and Empſon to be committed to the Tower: His Father whether out of Policy, or Inclination, or both, was all his life much ſet on the gathering of Treaſure, ſo that thoſe Miniſters were moſt acceptable, who could fill his Coffers beſt, and though this occaſioned ſome Tumults, and diſpoſed the People to all thoſe Commotions, which fell out in his Reign; yet he being ſucceſsful in them all, continued in his courſe of heaping up Money.

* Hall ſays the ſame day. L. Herbert ſays the day following.

Towards the end of his Life, he found out thoſe two Inſtruments, who out-did all that went before them, and what by vexatious Suits upon Penal but obſolete Laws, what by unjuſt Impriſonments, and other violent and illegal proceedings, raiſed a general odium upon the Government; and this grew upon him with his years, and was come to ſo great a height towards the end of his Life, that he died in good time for his own quiet: For as he uſed all poſſible endeavours to get Money, ſo what he got, he as carefully kept, and diſtributed very little of it among thoſe about him; ſo that he had many Enemies, and but few Friends. This being well conſidered by his Son, he began his Government with the diſgrace of thoſe Two Miniſters, againſt whom he proceeded according to Law; all the other inferiour Officers whom they had made uſe of were alſo impriſoned.

When they had thus fallen, many and great Complaints came in from all parts againſt them; they alſo apprehending the danger they were like to be in upon their Maſters Death, had been practiſing with their Partners to gather about them all the Power they could bring together, whether to ſecure themſelves from popular Rage, or to make themſelves ſeem conſiderable, or formidable to the new King. This and other Crimes being brought in againſt them, they were found guilty of Treaſon in a legal Trial. But the King judged this was neither a ſufficient Reparation to his Oppreſſed People, nor Satisfaction to Juſtice: Therefore he went further, and both ordered Reſtitution to be made by his Fathers Executors of great Sums of Money, which had been unjuſtly extorted from his Subjects; and in his firſt Parliament which he Summoned to the Twenty firſt of January following, he not only delivered up Empſon and Dudley with their Complices to the Juſtice of the Two Houſes, who attainted them by Act of Parliament, and a little after gave order for their Execution; but did alſo give his Royal Aſſent to thoſe other Laws by which the Subject was ſecured from the like Oppreſſions for the future: and that he might not at all be ſuſpected of any ſuch Inclinations as his Father had to amaſs Treaſure, he was the moſt magnificent in his Expence of any Prince in Chriſtendom, and very bountiful to all about him; and as one extream commonly produces another, ſo his Fathers Covetouſneſs led him to be Prodigal; and the vaſt Wealth which was left him, being reckoned no leſs than 1800000 l. was in Three years diſſipated, as if the Son in his expence had vied Induſtry with his Father in all his Thrift.

His great Expence.

Thomas Earl of Surrey, (afterwards Duke of Norfolk) to ſhew how compliant he was to the Humours of the Princes whom he ſerved, as he had been Lord-Treaſurer to the Father the laſt Seven years of his Life; ſo being continued in the ſame Office by this King, did as dextrouſly comply with his Prodigality, as he had done formerly with his Fathers ſparingneſs.

But

But this in the beginning of the Princes Reign did much endear him both to the Court and Nation: there being a freer Circulation of Money by which Trade was encouraged; and the Courtiers taſted ſo liberally of the Kings bounty, that he was every where much magnified, though his Expence proved afterwards heavier to the Subject, than ever his Fathers Avarice had been.

His Affairs beyond Sea.

Another thing that raiſed the Credit of this King was, the great Eſteem he was in beyond Sea, both for his Wiſdom and Power; ſo that in all the Treaties of Peace and War he was always much conſidered; and he did ſo exactly purſue that great Maxime of Princes, of Holding the Ballance, that ſtill as it grew heavier, whether in the Scale of France, or Spain, he governed Himſelf and Them as a wiſe Arbiter. His firſt Action was againſt France, which by the Acceſſion of the Dutchy of Britain, through his Fathers over-ſight, was made greater and more formidable to the Neighbouring Princes; therefore the French Succeſſes in Italy having United all the Princes there againſt them, Spain and England willingly joyned themſelves in the Quarrel. The Kingdom of Spain being alſo then United, conquered Navarre, which ſet them at great eaſe, and weakned the King of France on that ſide. Whoſe Affairs alſo declining in Italy, this King finding him ſo much leſſened, made Peace with him; having firſt managed his ſhare of the War, with great Honour at Sea and Land: For, going over in Perſon, he did both defeat the French Army, and take Terwin and Tourney; the former he demoliſhed, the latter he kept: and in theſe Exploits he had an unuſual Honour done him, which though it was a ſlight thing, yet was very pleaſant to him; Maximilian the Emperor taking Pay in his Army, amounting to a Hundred Crowns a-day, and upon all publick Solemnities giving the King the precedence.

A War with France.

Aug. 24. & Octob. 2. 1513.

The Peace between England and France was made firmer by Lewis the French Kings Marrying Mary the Kings Siſter; but he dying ſoon after, new Counſels were to be taken, Francis, who ſucceeded, did in the beginning of his Reign, court this King with great Offers to renew the Peace with him, which was accordingly done. Afterward Francis falling in with all his Force upon the Dutchy of Milan, all endeavours were uſed to engage King Henry into the War, both by the Pope and Emperor, this laſt feeding him long with hopes of reſigning the Empire to him, which wrought much on him; inſomuch that he did give them a great Supply in Money, but he could not be engaged to divert Francis by making War upon him: and Francis ending the War of Italy by a Peace, was ſo far from reſenting what the King had done, that he courted him into a ſtraiter League, and a Match was agreed between the Dolphin and the Lady Mary the Kings Daughter, and Tourney was delivered up to the French again.

But now Charles, Arch-Duke of Auſtria by his Father, and Heir to the Houſe of Burgundy by his Grand-mother, and to the Crown of Spain by his Mother, began to make a great Figure in the World; and his Grand-father Maximilian dying, Francis and He were Corrivals for the Empire: but Charles being preferred in the Competition, there followed, what through perſonal Animoſities, what through reaſon of State, and a deſire of Conqueſt, laſting Wars between them; which though they were ſometimes for a while cloſed up, yet were never clearly ended. And thoſe two great Monarchs as they eclipſed moſt other Princes about them, ſo they raiſed this Kings glory higher, both courting him by turns, and that not only by earneſt and warm Addreſſes, but oft by unuſual Submiſſions; in which they, knowing how great an Ingredient Vanity was in his temper, were never deficient when their Affairs required it. All which tended to make him appear greater in

The Emperor comes to England, May 26. in the Complement, and without any Treaty or previous Aſſurances came to Dover, and ſollicited the Kings friendſhip againſt Francis: and to advance his deſign gained Cardinal Wolſey, who then Governed all the Kings Counſels, by the promiſe of making him Pope; in which he judged he might, for a preſent Advantage, promiſe a thing that ſeemed to be at ſo great a diſtance, (Pope Leo the Tenth being then but a young Man) and with rich Preſents, which he made both to the King, the Cardinal, and all the Court, wrought much on them. But that which prevailed moſt with the King was, that he ſaw, though Charles had great Dominions, yet they lay at ſuch a diſtance, that France alone was a ſufficient Counterpoiſe to him; but if Francis could keep Milan recover Naples, Burgundy, and Navarre, to all which he was then preparing, he would be an uneaſie Neighbour to himſelf; and if he kept the footing he then had in Italy, he would lie ſo heavy on the Papacy, that the Popes could no longer carry equally in the Affairs of Chriſtendom, upon which much depended, according to the Religion of that time. Therefore he reſolved to take part with the Emperor, till at leaſt Francis was driven out of Italy, and reduced to juſter terms: ſo

But two years after, That Pope dying, the Em-

ded, by which, beſide mutual aſſiſtance, a Match was agreed on between the Emperor and the Lady Mary, the Kings only Child by his Queen, of whom he had no hopes of more Iſſue. This was ſworn to on both hands, and the Emperor was obliged, when She was of Age, to marry Her, Per verba de præſenti, under pain of Excommunication and the forfeiture of 100000 Pounds. The Emperor contracted to the Kings Daughter, June 19.

The War went on with great ſucceſs on the Emperors part, eſpecially after the Battel of Pavia, in which Francis his Army was totally defeated, and himſelf taken Priſoner and carried into Spain. After which the Emperor being much offended with the Pope for joyning with Francis, turned his Arms againſt him, which were ſo ſucceſsful, that he beſieged and took Rome, and kept the Pope Priſoner Six Months. May 6. 1527.

The Cardinal finding the publick Intereſts concur ſo happily with his private Diſtaſtes, engaged the King to take part with France, and afterwards with the Pope againſt the Emperor, his Greatneſs now becoming the Terror of Chriſtendom; for the Emperor lifted up with his ſucceſs, began to think of no leſs than an Univerſal Empire. And firſt, that he might unite all Spain together, he preferred a Match with Portugal, to that which he had before Contracted in England; and he thought it not enough to break off his ſworn Alliance with the King, but he did it with an heavy Imputation on the Lady Mary: for in his Council it was ſaid that ſhe was illegitimate, as being born in an unlawful Marriage, ſo that no Advantage could be expected from her Title to the Succeſſion, as will appear more particularly in the Second Book. And the Pope having diſpenſed with the Oath, he Married the Infanta of Portugal. Beſides, though the King of England had gone deep in the Charge, he would give him no ſhare in the Advantages of the War; much leſs give him that Aſſiſtance which he had promiſed him, to recover his Ancient Inheritance in France. The King being irritated with his manifold ill uſage, and led on by his own Intereſts, and by the offended Cardinal, joyned himſelf to the Intereſts of France. Upon which there followed not only a firm Alliance, but a perſonal Friendſhip, which appeared in all the moſt obliging expreſſions that could be deviſed. And upon the Kings threatning to make War on the Emperor, the French King was ſet at liberty, though on very hard terms, if any thing can be hard that ſets a King out of Priſon; but he ſtill acknowledged he owed his Liberty to King Henry. Mar. 18. 1526

Then followed the famous Clementine League between the Pope and Francis, the Venetians, the Florentines, and Francis Sforza Duke of Milan, by which the Pope abſolved the French King from the Oath he had ſworn at Madrid, and they all united againſt the Emperor, and declared the King of England Protector of the League. This gave the Emperor great diſtaſte, who complained of the Pope as an ungrateful and perfidious Perſon. The firſt beginning of the ſtorm fell heavy on the Pope; for the French King, who had a great mind to have his Children again into his own hands, that lay Hoſtages in Spain, went on but ſlowly in performing his part. And the King of England would not openly break with the Emperor, but ſeemed to reſerve himſelf to be Arbiter between the Princes. So that the Colonna's being of the Imperial Faction, with 3000 Men entered Rome, and ſack'd a part of it, forcing the Pope to fly into the Caſtle of St. Angelo, and The Clementine League, May 22. 1526. September 20.

to make Peace with the Emperor. But as ſoon as that fear was over, the Pope returning to his old Arts complained of the Cardinal of Colonna, and reſolved to deprive him of that Dignity, and with and Army entred the Kingdom of Naples, taking divers places that belonged to that Family. But the Confederates coming ſlowly to his Aſſiſtance, and he hearing of great Forces that were coming from Spain againſt him, ſubmitted himſelf to the Emperor, and made a Ceſſation of Arms; but being again encouraged with ſome hopes from his Allies, and (by a Creation of 14 Cardinals for Money) having raiſed 300000 Duckats, he diſowned the Treaty, and gave the Kingdom of Naples to Count Vaudemont, whom he ſent with Forces to ſubdue it: But the Duke of Bourbon prevented him, and went to Rome; and giving the Aſſault, in which himſelf received his mortal wound, the City was taken by Storm, and plundered for ſeveral days, about 5000 being killed. The Pope with 17 Cardinals fled to the Caſtle St. Angelo, but was forced to render his perſon, and to pay 400000 Duckats to the Army.

Rome taken and ſack'd, May 16.

This gave great offence to all the Princes of Chriſtendom, except the Lutherans of Germany; but none reſented it more loudly than this King, who ſent over Cardinal Wolſey to make up a new Treaty with Francis, which was chiefly intended for ſetting the Pope at liberty. Nor did the Emperor know well how to juſtifie an Action which ſeemed ſo inconſiſtent with his Devotion to the See of Rome; yet the Pope was for ſome months detained a Priſoner, till at length the Emperor having brought him to his own terms, ordered him to be ſet at liberty: but he being weary of his Guards eſcaped in a diſguiſe, and owned his Liberty to have flowed chiefly from the Kings endeavours to procure it. And thus ſtood the King as to Forreign Affairs: he had infinitely obliged both the Pope and the French King, and was firmly united to them, and engaged in a War againſt the Emperor, when he began firſt to move about his Divorce.

July 11.

Decemb. 9.

As for Scotland, the near Alliance between him and James the Fourth King of Scotland did not take away the ſtanding Animoſities between the two Nations, nor interrupt the Alliance between France and Scotland. And therefore when he made the firſt War upon France in the Fourth year of his Reign, the King of Scotland came with a great Army into the North of England, but was totally defeated by the Earl of Surrey in Floudon Field. The King himſelf was either killed in the Battel, or ſoon after; ſo that the Kingdom falling under Factions, during the Minority of the new King, the Government was but feeble, and ſcarce able to ſecure its own quiet. And the Duke of Albany, the chief Inſtrument of the French Faction, met with ſuch oppoſition from the Parties that were raiſed againſt him by King Henry's means, that he could give him no diſturbance. And when there came to be a laſting Peace between England and France, then, as the King needed fear no trouble from that Warlike Nation, ſo he got a great Intereſt in the Government there. And at this time Money becoming a more effectual Engine than any the War had ever produced, and the diſcovery of the Indies having brought great Wealth into Europe, Princes began to deal more in that Trade than before: ſo that both France and England had their Inſtruments in Scotland, and gave conſiderable yearly Penſions to the chief Heads of Parties and Families. In the ſearch I have made made, I have found ſeveral Warrants for Sums of Money, to be ſent into Scotland, and divided there among the Favourers of the Engliſh Intereſt; and 'tis not to doubted but France traded in the ſame manner, which continued till a happier way was found out for extinguiſhing theſe Quarrels, both the Crowns being ſet on one Head.

His Counſels at home.

Having thus ſhewed the State of this Kings Government as to Forreign Matters, I ſhall next give an account of the Adminiſtration of Affairs at home, both as to Civil and Spiritual Matters. The King upon his firſt coming to the Crown did chooſe a wiſe Council, partly out of thoſe whom his Father had truſted, partly out of thoſe that were recommended to him by his Grand-mother, the Counteſs of Richmond and Derby, in whom was the Right of the Houſe of Lancaſter, though ſhe willingly devolved her pretenſions on her Son, claiming nothing to her ſelf, but the Satisfaction of being Mother to a King. She was a Wiſe 1509. and Religious Woman, and died ſoon after her Grand-ſon came to the Crown. There was a Faction in the Council between Fox Biſhop of VVincheſter, and the Lord Treaſurer, which could never be well made up, though they were oft reconciled: Fox always complaining of the Lord Treaſurer, for ſquandring away ſo ſoon that vaſt Maſs of Treaſure, left by the Kings Father; in which the other juſtified himſelf, that what he did, was by the Kings Warrants which he could not diſobey: but Fox objected that he was too eaſie to anſwer, if not to procure theſe Warrants, and that he ought to have given the King better advice. Jan. 21 1510. In the Kings firſt Parliament things went as he deſired upon his delivering up Empſon and Dudley, in which his preventing the ſeverity of the Houſes, and proceeding againſt them at the Common Law, as it ſecured his Miniſters from an unwelcome Preſident, ſo the whole honour of it fell on the Kings Juſtice.

His next Parliament was in the third year of his Reign, and there Feb. 4. 1512. was conſidered the Brief from Pope Julius the Second to the King, complaining of the Indignities and Injuries done to the Apoſtolick See and the Pope by the French King, and entreating the Kings aſſiſtance with ſuch cajoling words as are always to be expected from Popes on the like occaſions. It was firſt read by the Maſter of the Rolls in the Houſe of Lords, and then the Lord Chancellor (VVarham Arch-biſhop of Canterbury) and the Lord Treaſurer, with other Lords, went down to the Houſe of Commons and read it there. Upon this and other Reaſons they gave the King Subſidies towards the War with France. At this time Fox, to ſtrengthen his party againſt the Lord Treaſurer, finding Thomas VVolſey to be a likely man to get into the Kings favour, uſed Cardinal Wolſey's riſing. all his endeavours to raiſe him, who was at that time neither unknown nor inconſiderable, being Lord Almoner; he was at firſt made a Privy Counſellor, and frequently admitted to the Kings Preſence, and waited on him over to France. The King liked him well, which he ſo managed that he quickly engroſſed the Kings favour to himſelf, and for 15 years together was the moſt abſolute Favourite that had ever been ſeen in England; all Forreign Treaties and Places of Truſt at home were at his Ordering; he did what he pleaſed, and his Aſcendant over the King was ſuch, that there never appeared any Party againſt him all that while. The great Artifice by which he inſinuated himſelf ſo much on the King, is ſet down very plainly by one that knew him well, in theſe theſe words. In him the King conceived ſuch a loving fancy, eſpecially for that he was moſt earneſt and readieſt in all the Council to advance the Kings only Will and Pleaſure, having no reſpect to the caſe; and whereas the Ancient Counſellors would according to the Office of good Counſellors, divers times perſwade the King to have ſometime a recourſe unto the Council, there to hear what was done in weighty Matters, the King was nothing at all pleaſed therewith; for he loved nothing worſe than to be conſtrained to do any thing contrary to his pleaſure, and that knew the Almoner very well, having ſecret Inſinuations of the Kings Intentions; and ſo faſt as the others Counſelled the King to leave his pleaſures, and to attend his Affairs, ſo buſily did the Almoner perſwade him to the contrary, which delighted him much, and cauſed him to have the greater affection and love to the Almoner. Having got into ſuch Power, he obſerved the Kings Inclinations exactly, and followed his Intereſts cloſely: for though he made other Princes retain him with great Preſents and Penſions, yet he never engaged the King into any Alliance, but what was for his Advantage. For Affairs at home, after he was eſtabliſhed in his Greatneſs, he affected to Govern without Parliaments; there being from the Seventh year of his Reign, after which he got the Great Seal, but one Parliament in the 14*th* and 15*th* year, and no more till the One and Twentieth, when matters were turning about: But he raiſed great Sums of Money by Loans and Benevolences. And inded if we look on him as a Miniſter of State, he was a very extraordinary Perſon; but as he was a Churchman, he was the diſgrace of his Profeſſion. He not only ſerved the King in all his ſecret pleaſures, but was lewd and vicious himſelf; ſo that his having the French Pox (which in thoſe days was a matter of no ſmall infamy) was ſo publick, that it was brought againſt him in Parliament when he fell in diſgrace: he was a man of moſt extravagant vanity, as appears by the great State he lived in; and to feed that, his Ambition and Covetouſneſs were proportionable.

Octob. 1513.

He was firſt made Biſhop of Tourney, when that Town was taken from the French; then he was made Biſhop of [a] Lincoln, which was the firſt Biſhoprick that fell void in this Kingdom; after that, upon Cardinal Bembridge his death, he parted with Lincoln and was made Arch-biſhop of [b] York; then Hadrian, that was a Cardinal and Biſhop of Bath and Wells, being deprived, that [c] See was given to him; then the Abbey of [d] St. Albans was given to him in Comendam; he next parted with Bath and Wells, and got the Biſhoprick of [e] Dureſme, which he afterwards exchanged for the Biſhoprick of [f] Wincheſter: But beſides all that he had in his own hands, the King granted him a full Power of diſpoſing of all the Eccleſiaſtical Benefices in England (which brought him in as much Money as all the Places he held) for having ſo vaſt a Power committed to him both from the King and the Pope as to Church-preferments, it may be eaſily gathered what advantages a man of his temper would draw from it. Warham was Lord Chancellor the firſt ſeven years of the Kings Reign, but retired to give place to this aſpiring Favourite, who had a mind to the Great Seal, that there might be no interfering between the Legantine and Chancery Courts. And perhaps it wrought ſomewhat on his vanity, that even after he was Cardinal, Warham as Lord Chancellor took place of him, as appears from the Entries made in the Journals of the Houſe of Peers in the Parliament held held the 7*th* year of the Kings Reign, and afterwards gave him place, as appears on many occasions, particularly, in the Letter written to the Pope 1530. set down by the Lord Herbert, which the Cardinal subcribed before Warham. We have nothing on Record to shew what a Speaker he was, for all the Journals of Parliament from the 7*th* to the 25*th* year of this King are lost, but it is like he spoke as his Predecessor in that Office Warham did, whose Speeches as they are entred in the Journals, are Sermons begun with a Text of Scripture; which he expounded and applyed to the business they were to go upon, stuffing them with the most fulsome flattery of the King that was possible.

The next in Favour and Power was the Lord Treasurer, restored to his Fathers Honour of Duke of Norfolk, to whom his Son succeeded in that Office as well as in his hereditary Honours; and managed his Interest with the King so dexterously, that he stood in all the Changes that followed, and continued Lord Treasurer during the Reign of this King, till near the end of it, when he fell through Jealousie rather than Guilt; this shewed how dexterous a Man he was, that could stand so long in that employment under such a King.

But the chief Favorite in the Kings pleasures, was Charles Brandon, a gallant graceful Person, one of the strongest Men of the Age, and so a fit Match for the King at his Justs and Tiltings, which was the manly diversion of that time, and the King taking much pleasure in it, being of a robust Body, and singularly expert at it, he who was so able to second him in these Courses, grew mightily in his favour; so that he made him first Viscount Lisle, and some Months after Duke of Suffolk. Nor was he less in the Ladies favours, than the Kings; for his Sister the Lady Mary liked him, and being but so long Married to King Lewis of France, as to make her Queen Dowager of France, she resolved to choose her second Husband her self, and cast her Eye on the Duke of Suffolk, who was then sent over to the Court of France. Her Brother had designed the Marriage between them, yet would not openly give his Consent to it; but she by a strange kind of Wooing, prefixed him the Term of four days to gain her Consent, in which she told him if he did not prevail, he should for ever lose all his hopes of having her, though after such a Declaration he was like to meet with no great difficulty from her. So they were Married, and the King was easily pacified and received them into favour; neither did his favour die with her, for it continued all his life: but he never medled much in business, and by all that appears was a better Courtier than States-Man. Little needs be said of any other Person more than will afterwards occur.

Lady Mary died, Jun. 23. 1533.

The King loved to raise mean Persons, and upon the least distaste to throw them down: and falling into disgrace, he spared not to sacrifice them to publick discontents. His Court was magnificent, and his Expence vast; he indulged himself in his pleasures: and the hopes of Children (besides the Lady Mary) failing by the Queen, he, who of all things desired Issue most, kept one Elizabeth Blunt, by whom he had Henry Fitzroy, whom in the 17*th* year of his Reign he created Earl of Nottingham, and the same day made him Duke of Richmond and Somerset, and intended afterwards to have put him in the Succession of the Crown after his other Children; but his death prevented it.

Duke Rich. died, Jun. 22. 1536.

As for his Parliament, he took great care to keep a good understanding ſtanding with them, and chiefly with the Houſe of Commons, by which means he ſeldom failed to carry Matters as he pleaſed among them: only in the Parliament held in the 14*th* and 15*th* of his Reign, the Demand of the Subſidy towards the War with France, being ſo high as 800000 l. the fifth of Mens Goods and Lands, to be paid in Four years, and the Cardinal being much hated, there was great Oppoſition made to it: for which the Cardinal blamed Sir Thomas More much, who was then Speaker of the Houſe of Commons; and finding that which was offered, was not above the half of what was asked, went himſelf to the Houſe of Commons, and deſired to hear the Reaſons of thoſe who oppoſed his Demands, that he might anſwer them: but he was told the Order of their Houſe was to reaſon only among themſelves, and ſo went away much diſſatisfied. It was with great difficulty that they obtained a Subſidy of 3 s. in the lib. to be paid in four years. This diſappointment it ſeems did ſo offend the Cardinal, that as no Parliament had been called for Seven years before, ſo there was none ſummoned for Seven years after. And thus ſtood the Civil Government of England in the 19*th* year of the Kings Reign, when the Matter of the Divorce was firſt moved. But I ſhall next open the State of Affairs in Reference to Religious and Spiritual Concerns.

He was bred a Scholar.

King Henry was bred with more care than had been uſually beſtowed on the Education of Princes for many Ages, who had been only trained up to thoſe Exerciſes that prepared them to War; and if they could read and write, more was not expected of them. But Learning began now to flouriſh; and as the Houſe of Medici in Florence had great Honour by the Protection it gave to learned Men, ſo other Princes every where cheriſhed the Muſes. King Henry the 7*th*, though illiterate himſelf, yet took care to have his Children inſtructed in good Letters. And it generally paſſes current that he bred his ſecond Son a Scholar, having deſigned him to be Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, but that has no foundation; for the Writers of that time tell, that his Elder Brother Prince Arthur was alſo bred a Scholar. And all the Inſtruction King Henry had in Learning, muſt have been after his Brother was dead, when that Deſign had vaniſhed with his life. For he being born the 28*th* of June 1491. and Prince Arthur dying the ſecond of April 1502. he was not full eleven years of Age, when he became Prince of Wales; at which Age Princes have ſeldom made any great progreſs in Learning. But King Henry the 7*th* judging either that it would make his Sons Greater Princes, and fitter for the Management of their Affairs, or being jealous of their looking too early into buſineſs, or their pretending to the Crown upon their Mothers Title, which might have been a dangerous competition to him, that was ſo little beloved by his Subjects, took this Method for amuſing them with other things: thence it was, that his Son was the moſt learned Prince that had been in the World for many Ages, and deſerved the Title Beau-Clerke, on a better account than his Predeceſſor that long before had carried it. The Learning then in credit, was either that of the Schools, about abſtruſe Queſtions of Divinity, which from the days of Lombard were debated and deſcanted on with much ſubtlety and nicety, and exerciſed all Speculative Divines; or the Study of the Canon-Law, which was the way to Buſineſs and Preferment. To the former of theſe the King

King was much addicted, and delighted to read often in Thomas Aquinas; and this made Cardinal Wolſey more acceptable to him, who was chiefly converſant in that ſort of Learning. He loved the purity of the Latin Tongue, which made him be ſo kind to Eraſmus that was the great Reſtorer of it, and to Polidore Virgil; though neither of theſe made their Court dextrouſly with the Cardinal, which did much intercept the Kings favour to them; ſo that the one left England, and the other was but courſly uſed in it, who has ſufficiently revenged himſelf upon the Cardinals Memory. The Philoſophy then in faſhion was ſo intermixed with their Divinity, that the King underſtood it too; and was alſo a good Muſician, as appears by two whole Maſſes which he compoſed. He never wrote well, but ſcrawled ſo that his hand was ſcarce legible.

Being thus inclined to Learning, he was much courted by all hungry Scholars, who generally over Europe dedicated their Books to him, with ſuch flattering Epiſtles, that it very much leſſens him, to ſee how he delighted in ſuch Stuff. For if he had not taken pleaſure in it, and rewarded them, it is not likely that others ſhould have been every year writing after ſuch ill Copies. Of all things in the World Flattery wrought moſt on him; and no ſort of Flattery pleaſed him better than to have his great Learning and Wiſdom commended. And in this, his Parliaments, his Courtiers, his Chaplains, Forreigners and Natives, all ſeemed to vie who ſhould exceed moſt, and came to ſpeak to him in a Stile which was ſcarce fit to be uſed to any Creature. But he deſigned to entail theſe Praiſes on his Memory, cheriſhing Church-men more than any King in England had ever done; he alſo Courted the Pope with a conſtant ſubmiſſion, and upon all occaſions made the Popes Intereſts his own, and made War and Peace as they deſired him. So that had he died any time before the 19*th* year of his Reign, he conld ſcarce have eſcaped being Canonized, notwithſtanding all his faults; for he abounded in thoſe vertues, which had given Saintſhip to Kings for near 1000 years together, and had done more than they all did, by writing a Book for the Roman Faith.

The Kings Prerogative in Eccleſiaſtical matters.

England had for above 300 years been the tameſt part of Chriſtendom to the Papal Authority, and had been accordingly dealt with. But though the Parliaments and two or three High-ſpirited Kings, had given ſome interruption to the cruel exactions and other illegal proceedings of the Court of Rome, yet that Court always gained their deſigns in the end. But even in this Kings days, the Crown was not quite ſtript of all its Authority over Spiritual Perſons. The Inveſtitures of Biſhops and Abbots, which had been originally given by the delivery of the Paſtoral Ring and Staff, by the Kings of England, were after ſome oppoſition wrung out of their hands; yet I find they retained another thing, which upon the matter was the ſame. When any See was vacant, a Writ was iſſued out of the Chancery for ſeizing on all the Temporalities of the Biſhoprick, and then the King recommended one to the Pope, upon which his Bulls were expeded at Rome, and ſo by a Warrant from the Pope he was conſecrated, and inveſted in the Spiritualities of the See; but was to appear before the King either in Perſon or by Proxy, and renounce every clauſe in his Letters and Bulls, that were or might be prejudicial to the Prerogative of the Crown, or contrary to the Laws of the Land, and was to ſwear Fealty and Allegiance to the King. And after this a new Writ was iſſued out of the Chancery, bearing that this was done, and that thereupon the Temporalities ſhould be reſtored. Of this there are ſo many Precedents in the Records, that every one that has ſearched them muſt needs find them in every year; but when this began, I leave to the more Learned in the Law to diſcover. And for proof of it the Reader will find in the Collection the fulleſt Record which I met with concerning it in Henry the 7th his Reign, of Cardinal Adrians being Inveſted in the Biſhoprick of Bath and Wells. So that upon the matter the Kings then diſpoſed of all Biſhopricks, keeping that ſtill in their own hands which made them moſt deſired in thoſe Ages; and ſo had the Biſhops much at their Devotion.

Reſtitutio Temporalitatis.

Collect. Numb. 1.

But King Henry in a great degree parted with this, by the above-mentioned Power granted to Cardinal Wolſey, who being Legate as well as Lord Chancellor, it was thought a great error in Government, to lodge ſuch a truſt with him which might have paſt into a Precedent, for other Legates pretending to the ſame Power; ſince the Papal greatneſs had thus riſen, and oft upon weaker Grounds, to the height it was then at. Yet the King had no mind to ſuffer the Laws made againſt the ſuing out of Bulls in the Court of Rome without his leave to be neglected; for I find ſeveral Licences granted to ſue Bulls in that Court, bearing for their Preamble the Statute of the 16 of Richard the Second againſt the Popes pretended Power in England.

But the immunity of Eccleſiaſtical Perſons was a thing that occaſioned great complaints. And good cauſe there was for them. For it was ordinary for Perſons after the greateſt Crimes to get into Orders; and then not only what was paſt muſt be forgiven them, but they were not to be queſtioned for any Crime after Holy Orders given, till they were firſt degraded; and till that was done they were the Biſhops Priſoners. Whereupon there aroſe a great diſpute in the beginning of this Kings Reign, of which none of our Hiſtorians having taken any notice, I ſhall give a full account of it.

A Conteſt about the Eccleſiaſtical Immunity. Kitlways Reports.

King Henry the Seventh in his Fourth Parliament did a little leſſen the Priviledges of the Clergy, enacting that Clerks convicted ſhould be burnt in the Hand. But this not proving a ſufficient reſtraint, it was Enacted in Parliament in the Fourth year of this King, that all Murderers and Robbers ſhould be denied the benefit of their Clergy. But though this ſeemed a very Juſt Law, yet to make it paſs through the Houſe of Lords, they added two Proviſo's to it, the one for excepting all ſuch as were within the Holy Orders of Biſhop, Prieſt, or Deacon; the other that the Act ſhould only be in force till the next Parliament. With theſe Proviſo's it was unanimouſly aſſented to by the Lords on the 26 Jan. 1513. and being agreed to by the Commons, the Royal Aſſent made it a Law: Purſuant to which many Murderers and Felons were denied their Clergy, and the Law paſſed on them to the great Satisfaction of the whole Nation. But this gave great offence to the Clergy, who had no mind to ſuffer their Immunities to be touched or leſſened. And judging that if the Laity made bold with Inferiour Orders, they would proceed further even againſt Sacred Orders; therefore as their Oppoſition was ſuch, that the Act not being continued, did determine at the next Parliament (that was in the fifth year of the King,) ſo they not ſatisfied with that, reſolved to fix a cenſure on that Act as contrary to the Franchiſes of the Holy Church. And the Abbot of Winchelcomb being more forward than the reſt, during the Seſſion of Parliament in the 7*th* year of this Kings Reign, in a Sermon at Pauls Croſs, ſaid openly, That that Act was contrary to the Law of God, and to the Liberties of the Holy Church, and that all who aſſented to it, as well Spiritual as Temporal Perſons, had by ſo doing incur'd the Cenſures of the Church. And for Confirmation of his Opinion, he publiſhed a Book to prove, that all Clerks, whether of the greater or lower Orders, were ſacred, and exempted from all Temporal Puniſhments by the Secular Judge, even in Criminal Caſes. This made great noiſe, and all the Temporal Lords, with the cocurrence of the Houſe of Commons, deſired the King to ſuppreſs the growing Inſolence of the Clergy. So there was a hearing of the Matter before the King, with all the Judges and the Kings Temporal Council. Doctor Standiſh, Guardian of the Mendicant Friers in London (afterwards Biſhop of Saint Aſaph) the chief of the Kings Spiritual Council, argued, That by the Law, Clerks had been ſtill convened and judged in the Kings Court for Civil Crimes, and that there was nothing either in the Laws of God, or the Church, inconſiſtent with it; and that the publick good of the Society, which was chiefly driven at by all Laws, and ought to be preferred to all other things, required that Crimes ſhould be puniſhed. But the Abbot of Winchelcomb being Counſel for the Clergy, excepted to this and ſaid, There was a Decree made by the Church expreſly to the contrary, to which all ought to pay Obedience under the pain of Mortal ſin; and that therefore the trying of Clerks in the Civil Courts was a ſin in it ſelf. Standiſh upon this turned to the King and ſaid, God forbid that all the Decrees of the Church ſhould bind. It ſeems the Biſhops think not ſo, for though there is a Decree that they ſhould reſide at their Cathedrals all the Feſtivals of the year, yet the greater part of them do it not; Adding, That no Decree could have any force in England, till it was received there; and that this Decree was never received in England, but that as well ſince the making of it, as before, Clerks had been tryed for Crimes in the Civil Courts. To this the Abbot made no Anſwer, but brought a place of Scripture to prove this Exemption to have come from our Saviours words, Nolite tangere Chriſtos meos, Touch not mine Anointed; and therefore Princes ordering Clerks to be arreſted and brought before their Courts, was contrary to Scripture, againſt which no cuſtom can take place. Standiſh replyed, theſe words were never ſaid by our Saviour, but were put by David in his Pſalter 1000 years before Chriſt; and he ſaid theſe words had no relation to the Civil Judicatories, but becauſe the greateſt part of the World was then wicked, and but a ſmall number believed the Law, they were a Charge to the reſt of the World, not to do them harm. But though the Abbot had been very violent, and confident of his being able to confound all that held the contrary opinion, yet he made no Anſwer to this. The Laity that were preſent being confirmed in their former opinion by hearing the Matter thus argued, moved the Biſhops to order the Abbot to renounce his former opinion, and recant his Sermon at Pauls Croſs. But they flatly refuſed to do it, and ſaid they were bound by the Laws of the Holy Church to maintain the Abbots opinion in every point of it. Great heats followed upon this during the sitting of the Parliament, of which there is a very Partial Entry made in the Journal of the Lords House; and no wonder, the Clerk of the Parliament, Doctor Tylor Doctor of the Canon-Law, being at the same time Speaker of the Lower House of Convocation. The entry is in these Words. In this Parliament and Convocation there were most dangerous Contentions between the Clergy and the Secular Power, about the Ecclesiastical Liberties, one Standish a Minor Frier being the Instrument and Promoter of all that Mischief. But a passage fell out, that made this matter be more fully prosecuted in the Michalemas-Term. One Richard Hunne a Merchant-Taylor in London, was questioned by a Clerk in Middlesex for a Mortuary, pretended to be due for a Child of his that died five Weeks old. The Clerk claimed the beering sheet, and Hunne refusing to give it; upon that he was sued, but his Counsel advised him to sue the Clerk in a Præmunire, for bringing the Kings Subjects before a Forreign Court; the Spiritual Court sitting by Authority from the Legate. This touched the Clergy so in the quick, that they used all the Arts they could to fasten Heresie on him; and understanding that he had Wickliffs Bible, upon that he was attached of Heresie, and put in the Lollards Tower at Pauls, and examined upon some Articles objected to him by Fitz-James then Bishop of London. He denied them as they were charged against him, but acknowledged he had said some Words sounding that way, for which he was sorry, and asked Gods Mercy, and submitted himself to the Bishops Correction; upon which he ought to have been enjoyned Penance and set at Liberty; but he persisting still in his Sute in the Kings Courts, they used him most cruelly. On the Fourth of December he was found hanged in the Chamber where he was kept * Prisoner. And Doctor Horsey Chancellor to the Bishop of London, with the other Officers who had the charge of the Prison, gave it out that he had hang'd himself. But the Coroner of London, coming to hold an Inquest on the dead Body, they found him hanging so loose, and in a silk Girdle, that they clearly perceived he was killed; they also found his Neck had been broken, as they judged, with an Iron Chain, for the Skin was all fretted and cut; they saw some streams of Blood about his Body, besides several other evidences which made it clear he had not murdered himself; whereupon they did acquit the dead Body, and laid the Murder on the Officers that had the charge of that Prison: and by other proofs they found the Bishops Sumner and the Bell-ringer guilty of it, and by the deposition of the Sumner himself it did appear, that the Chancellor and he, and the Bell-ringer, did Murder him, and then hang him up.

But as the Inquest proceeded in this Trial, the Bishop began a new Process against the dead body of Richard Hunne, for other points of Heresie; and several Articles were gathered out of Wickliffs Preface to the Bible with which he was charged. And his having the Book in his Possession being taken for good evidence, he was judged an Heretick, and his Body delivered to the Seculiar Power. When judgment was given, the Bishops of Duresme and Lincoln, with many Doctors both of Divinity and the Canon-Law sate with the Bishop of London; so that it was look'd on as an Act of the whole Clergy, and and done by common consent. On the 20*th* of December his body was burnt at Smithfield. And his body burned. Dec. 20. 1514.

But this produced an effect very different from what was expected, for it was hoped that he being found an Heretick no body should appear for him any more: whereas on the contrary, it occasioned a great outcry, the Man having lived in very good Reputation among his Neighbours; so that after that day the City of London was never well affected to the Popish Clergy, but declined to follow any body who spoke against them, and every one lookt on it, as a Cause of common concern. All exclaimed against the Cruelty of their Clergy, that for a Mans suing a Clerk according to Law, he should be long and hardly used in a severe Imprisonment, and at last cruelly murdered; and all this laid on himself to defame him, and ruin his Family. And then to burn that body which they had so handled, was thought such a complication of Cruelties, as few Barbarians had ever been guilty of. The Bishop finding that the Inquest went on, and the whole matter was discovered, used all possible endeavours to stop their proceedings; and they were often brought before the Kings Council, where it was pretended that all proceeded from Malice and Heresie. The Cardinal laboured to procure an Order to forbid their going any further, but the thing was both so foul and so evident that it could not be done: and that opposition made it more generally believed. In the Parliament there was a Bill sent up to the Lords by the Commons for restoring Hunne's Children, which was passed, and had the Royal Assent to it; but another Bill being brought in about this Murder, it occasioned great heats among them. The Bishop of London said that Hunne had hanged himself, that the Inquest were false perjured Caitiffs, and if they proceeded further he could not keep his House for Hereticks; so that the Bill which was sent up by the Commons was but once read in the House of Lords, for April 3. the Power of the Clergy was great there. But the Trial went on, and both the Bishops Chancellor and the Sumner were endicted as Principals in the Murder.

The Convocation that was then sitting, finding so great a stir made, and that all their Liberties were now struck at, resolved to call Doctor Standish to an Account for what he had said and argued in that matter; so he being summoned before them, some Articles were objected to him by word of Mouth, concerning the judging of Clerks in Civil Courts; and the day following they being put in writing, the Bill was delivered to him, and a day assigned for him to make Answer. The Doctor perceiving their intention, and judging it would go hard with him if he were tried before them, went and claimed the Kings Protection, from this trouble that he was now brought in, for discharging his Duty as the Kings Spiritual Counsel. But the Clergy made their excuse to the King, that they were not to question him for any thing he had said as the Kings Counsel; but for some Lectures he read at St. Pauls and elsewhere, contrary to the Law of God, and Liberties of the holy Church, which they were bound to maintain; and desired the Kings Assistance according to his Coronation Oath, and as he would not incur the Censures of the holy Church. On the other hand the Temporal Lords and Judges, with the concurrence of the House of Commons, addressed to the King, to maintain the Temporal Jurisdiction according to his Coronation Oath, and and to protect Standiſh from the Malice of his Enemies.

This put the King in great perplexity, for he had no mind to loſe any part of his Temporal Juriſdiction, and on the other Hand was no leſs apprehenſive of the dangerous effects that might follow on a breach with the Clergy. So he called for Doctor Veyſey, then Dean of his Chappel, and afterwards Biſhop of Exeter, and charged him upon his Allegiance to declare the truth to him in that matter: which after ſome ſtudy he did, and ſaid, upon his Faith, Conſcience, and Allegiance, he did think that the convening of Clerks before the Secular Judge, which had been always practiſed in England, might well conſiſt with the Law of God and the true Liberties of the Holy Church. This gave the King great Satisfaction; ſo he commanded all the Judges, and his Council both Spiritual and Temporal, and ſome of both Houſes, to meet at Black-Friers, and to hear the matter argued. The Bill againſt Doctor Standiſh was read, which conſiſted of Six Articles that were objected to him. Firſt, That he had ſaid that the lower Orders were not ſacred. Secondly, That the Exemption of Clerks was not founded on a Divine Right. Thirdly, That the Laity might coerce Clerks when the Prelates did not their duty. Fourthly, that no poſitive Eccleſiaſtical Law binds any but thoſe who receive it. Fifthly, That the Study of the Cannon-Law was needleſs. Sixthly, That of the whole Volume of the Decretum, ſo much as a Man could hold in his fiſt, and no more, did oblige Chriſtians. To theſe Doctor Standiſh anſwered, That for thoſe things expreſt in the third, the Fifth, and the Sixth Articles he had never taught them; as for his aſſerting them at any time in diſcourſe, as he did not remember it, ſo he did not much care, whether he had done it or not. To the firſt he ſaid, Leſſer Orders in one ſenſe are Sacred, and in another they are not Sacred. For the Second and Fourth, he confeſſed he had taught them, and was ready to juſtifie them. It was objected by the Clergy, that as by the Law of God, no man could judge his Father, it being contrary to that Commandment, Honour thy Father: So Church-men being Spiritual Fathers, they could not be judged by the Laity who were their Children. To which he anſwered, That as that only concluded in favour of Prieſts, thoſe in Inferiour Orders not being Fathers; ſo it was a miſtake to ſay a Judge might not ſit upon his Natural Father, for the Judge was by another Relation above his Natural Father: And though the Commandment is conceived in general Words, yet there are ſome exceptions to be admitted; as though it be ſaid, Thou ſhalt not kill, yet in ſome caſes we may lawfully kill; ſo in the caſe of Juſtice a Judge may lawfully ſit on his Father.

But Doctor Veyſey's Argument was that which took moſt with all that were preſent. He ſaid, it was certain that the Laws of the Church did not bind any but thoſe who received them. To prove this, he ſaid, that in old times all Secular Prieſts were Married; but in the days of St. Auguſtine, the Apoſtle of England, there was a Decree made to the contrary, which was received in England, and in many other places, by vertue whereof the Secular Prieſts in England may not Marry: but this Law not being univerſally received, the Greek Church never judged themſelves bound by it, ſo that to this day the Prieſts in that Church have Wives as well as other Seculer Men. If then the Churches of the Eaſt not having received the Law of the Celibate of the Clergy, have never ver been condemned by the Church, for not obeying it; then the conveening Clerks having been always practiſed in England, was no ſin, notwithſtanding the Decree to the contrary, which was never received here. Nor is this to be compared to thoſe Priviledges that concern only a Private Mans Intereſt, for the Common-wealth of the whole Realm was chiefly to be look'd at, and to be preferred to all other things.

When the Matter was thus argued on both ſides, all the Judges delivered their Opinions, in theſe Words. That all thoſe of the Convocation who did award the Citation againſt Standiſh, were in the caſe of a Præmunire facias; and added ſomewhat about the Conſtitution of the Parliament, which being forreign to my buſineſs, and contrary to a received Opinion, I need not mention, but refer the Reader to Keilway for his Information, if he deſires to know more of it: And thus the Court broke up. But ſoon after, all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, with many of the Houſe of Commons, and all the Judges and the Kings Council, were called before the King to Baynards Caſtle; and in all their preſence the Cardinal kneeled down before the King, and in the Name of the Clergy ſaid, That none of them intended to do any thing that might derogate from his Prerogative, and leaſt of all himſelf who owed his advancement only to the Kings Favour. But this matter of Conveening of Clerks, did ſeem to them all to be contrary to the Laws of God, and the Liberties of the Church, which they were bound by their Oaths to maintain according to their Power; Therefore in their Name he humbly begged, That the King to avoid the Cenſures of the Church, would refer the Matter to the deciſion of the Pope and his Council, at the Court of Rome. To which the King anſwered, It ſeems to us that Doctor Standiſh, and others of our Spiritual Council, have anſwered you fully in all points. The Biſhop of Wincheſter replyed, Sir, I warrant you Doctor Standiſh will not abide by his Opinion at his Peril. But the Doctor ſaid, What ſhould one poor Frier do alone, againſt all the Biſhops and Clergy of England? After a ſhort ſilence the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury ſaid, That in former times divers Holy Fathers of the Church had oppoſed the execution of that Law, and ſome of them ſuffered Martyrdom in the Quarrel. To whom Fineux Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, That many Holy Kings had maintained that Law, and many holy Fathers had given Obedience to it, which it is not to be preſumed they would have done, had they known it to be contrary to the Law of God: and he deſired to know by what Law Biſhops could judge Clerks for Felony, it being a thing only determined by the Temporal Law; ſo that either it was not at all to be tryed, or it was only in the Temporal Court; ſo that either Clerks muſt do as they pleaſe, or be tryed in the Civil Courts. To this no Anſwer being made, the King ſaid theſe words: By the Permiſſion and Ordinance of God we are King of England, and the Kings of England in times paſt had never any Superiour, but God only. Therefore know you well that we will maintain the Right of our Crown, and of our Temporal Juriſdiction as well in this, as in all other Points, in as ample manner as any of our Progenitors have done before our time. And as for your Decrees we are well aſſured that you of the Spirituality go expreſly againſt the words of divers of them, as hath been ſhewed you by ſome of our Council; and you interpret your Decrees at your pleaſure, but we will not agree to them more than our Progenitors have done in former times. But the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury made moſt humble Inſtance, that the Matter

Matter might be ſo long reſpited, till they could get a Reſolution from the Court of Rome, which they ſhould procure at their own Charges; and if it did conſiſt with the Law of God, they ſhould conform themſelves to the Law of the Land. To this the King made no anſwer: but the Warrants being out againſt Doctor Horſey the Biſhop of London's Chancellor, he did abſcond in the Arch-biſhops Houſe; though it was pretended he was a Priſoner there, till afterwards a temper was found that Horſey ſhould render himſelf a Priſoner in the Kings Bench and be tryed. But the Biſhop of London made earneſt Applications to the Cardinal that he would move the King to command the Attorny-General to confeſs the Indictment was not true, that it might not be referred to a Jury; ſince he ſaid the Citizens of London did ſo favour Hereſie, that if he were as innocent as Abel, they would find any Clerk guilty. The King not willing to irritate the Clergy too much, and judging he had maintained his Prerogative by bringing Horſey to the Bar, ordered the Attorney to do ſo. And accordingly when Horſey was brought to the Bar and Endited of Murder, he pleaded Not guilty; which the Attorney acknowledging, he was diſmiſſed, and went and lived at Exeter, and never again came back to London, either out of fear or ſhame. And for Doctor Standiſh, upon the Kings Command, he was alſo diſmiſſed out of the Court of Convocation.

It does not appear that the Pope thought fit to interpoſe in this Matter. For though upon leſs Provocations, Popes had proceeded to the higheſt Cenſures againſt Princes; yet this King was otherwiſe ſo neceſſary to the Pope at this time, that he was not to be offended. The Clergy ſuffered much in this buſineſs, beſides the loſs of their Reputation with the People, who involved them all in the guilt of Hunne's Murder; for now their Exemption being well examined, was found to have no foundation at all but in their own Decrees; and few were much convinced by that Authority, ſince upon the matter it was but a judgment of their own, in their own favours: nor was the City of London at all ſatisfied with the Proceedings in the Kings-Bench, ſince there was no juſtice done; and all thought the King ſeemed more careful to maintain his Prerogative than to do Juſtice.

This I have related the more fully, becauſe it ſeems to have had great influence on Peoples Minds, and to have diſpoſed them much to the Changes that followed afterwards. How theſe things were entred in the Book of Convocation, cannot be now known. For among the other ſad loſſes ſuſtained in the late burning of London, this was one, that almoſt all the Regiſters of the Spiritual Courts were burnt, ſome few of the Arch-biſhops of Canterbury and Biſhops of London's Regiſters being only preſerved. But having compared Fox his Account of this and ſome other matters, and finding it exactly according to the Regiſters that are preſerved, I ſhall the more confidently build, on what he publiſhed from thoſe Records that are now loſt.

The King obliged the Popes highly, and was much courted by them.

This was the only thing in the firſt 18 years of the Kings Reign that ſeemed to leſſen the Greatneſs of the Clergy, but in all other Matters he was a moſt Faithful Son of the See of Rome. Pope Julius ſoon after his coming to the Crown, ſent him a Golden Roſe with a Letter

Letter to Arch-biſhop Warham to deliver it, and though ſuch Preſents might ſeem fitter for young Children, than for men of diſcretion; yet the King was much delighted with it: and to ſhew his Gratitude, there was a Treaty concluded the year following between the King and Ferdinand of Arragon, for the defence of the Papacy againſt the French King. And when in oppoſition to the Council, that the French King and ſome other Princes and Cardinals had called, firſt to Piſa (which was afterwards tranſlated to Milan, and then to Lions, that ſummoned the Pope to appear before them, and ſuſpended his Authority) Pope Julius called another Council to be held in the Lateran; the King ſent the Biſhops of Worceſter and Rocheſter, the Prior of St. Johns, and the Abbot of Winchelcomb to ſit in that Council, in which there was ſuch a Repreſentative of the Catholick Church as had not been for ſeveral of the latter Ages in the Weſtern Church: in which a few Biſhops packt out of ſeveral Kingdoms, and many Italian Biſhops with a vaſt number of Abbots, Priors, and other Inferiour Dignified Clergy-men, were brought to Confirm together whatever the Popes had a mind to Enact; which paſſing eaſily among them, was ſent over the world with a ſtamp of Sacred Authority, as the Decrees and Deciſions of the Holy Univerſal Church aſſembled in a General Council.

Collect. Numb. 22. Treaty-Rolls 3 Reg. 19 April 1512.

Nor was there a worſe underſtanding between this King and Pope Leo the 10*th.* that ſucceeded Julius, who did alſo complement him with thoſe Papal Preſents of Roſes, and at his deſire made Wolſey a Cardinal; and above all other things obliged him by conferring on him the Title of Defender of the Faith, (upon the preſenting to the Pope his Book againſt Luther) in a pompous Letter Signed by the Pope, and 27 Cardinals, in which the King took great pleaſure; affecting it always beyond all his other Titles, though ſeveral of the former Kings of England had carried the ſame Title as Spelman informs us. So eaſie a thing it was for Popes to oblige Princes in thoſe days, when a Title or a Roſe was thought a ſufficient Recompence for the greateſt Services.

1521. October 11. L. Herbert.

The Cardinal Governing all Temporal Affairs as he did, it is not to be doubted but his Authority was abſolute in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, which ſeemed naturally to lye within his Province; yet Warham made ſome oppoſition to him, and complained to the King of his encroaching too much in his Legantine Courts, upon his Juriſdiction; and the things being clearly made out, the King chid the Cardinal ſharply for it, who ever after that hated Warham in his heart, yet he proceeded more warily for the future.

But the Cardinal drew the hatred of the Clergy upon himſelf, chiefly by a Bull which he obtained from Rome, giving him Authority to viſit all Monaſteries, and all the Clergy of England, and to diſpence with all the Laws of the Church for one whole year after the date of the Bull. The power that was lodged in him by this Bull was not more invidious, than the words in which it was conceived were offenſive; for the Preamble of it was full of ſevere Reflections againſt the Manners and Ignorance of the Clergy, who are ſaid in it to have been delivered over to a Reprobate mind. This, as it was a publick Defaming them, ſo how true ſoever it might be, all thought it did not become the Cardinal, whoſe Vices were notorious and ſcandalous, to tax others whoſe faults were neither ſo great, nor ſo eminent as his were.

A Bull for Reforming the Clergy. 10 June 1519. L. Herbert, and Article 29. of his Impeachment.

The Cardinal's Pride. Polyd. et Virgil

He did also affect a Magnificence and Greatness, not only in his Habit (being the first Clergy-man in England that wore Silks) but in his Family, his Train, and other pieces of State equal to that of Kings. And even in performing Divine Offices, and saying Mass, he did it with the same Ceremonies that the Popes use; who judge themselves so nearly related to God, that those humble Acts of Adoration, which are Devotions in other persons, would abase them too much. He had not only Bishops and Abbots to serve him, but even Dukes and Earls to give him the Water and the Towel. He had certainly a vast mind; and he saw the corruptions of the Clergy gave so great Scandal, and their Ignorance was so profound, that unless some effectual ways were taken for correcting these, they must needs fall into great disesteem with the People: For though he took great liberties himself, and perhaps according to the Maxime of the Canonists, he judged Cardinals, as Princes of the Church, were not comprehended within ordinary Ecclesiastical Laws; yet he seemed to have designed the Reformation of the Inferiour Clergy by all the means he could think of, except the giving them a good Example: Therefore he intended to visit all the Monasteries of England, that so dicovering their corruptions, he might the better justifie the design he had to suppress most of them, and convert them into Bishopricks, Cathedrals, Collegiate Churches and Colledges: For which end he procured the Bull from Rome, but he was diverted from making any use of it, by some who advised him rather to suppress Monasteries by the Popes Authority, than proceed in a Method which would raise great hatred against himself, cast foul aspersions on Religious Orders, and give the Enemies of the Church great advantages against it. Yet he had communicated his design to the King; and his Secretary Cromwell understanding it, was thereby instructed how to proceed afterwards when they went about the total suppression of the Monasteries.

He designs a Reformation.

And a Suppression of Monasteries.

The Calling of Convocations.

The Summoning of Convocations he assumed by vertue of his Legantine Power. Of these there were two sorts, the first were called by the King; for with the Writs for a Parliament there went out always a Summons to the Two Arch-Bishops for calling a Convocation of their Provinces; the Stile of which will be found in the Collection. It differs in nothing from what is now in use, but that the King did not prefix the day; requiring them only to be Summoned to meet with all convenient speed; and the Arch-Bishops, having the King's pleasure signified to them, did in their Writs prefix the day. Other Convocations were called by the Arch-Bishops in the several Provinces, upon great Emergencies, to meet and treat of things relating to the Church, and were Provinical Councils. Of this I find but one, and that called by Warham in the first year of this King, for restoring the Ecclesiastical Immunities that had been very much impaired, as will appear by the Writ of Summons. But the Cardinal did now, as Legate, issue out Writs for Convocations. In the year 1522. I find by the Register there was a Writ issued from the King to Warham to call one, who upon that Summoned it to meet at St. Pauls the 20*th.* of April. But the Cardinal prevailed so far with the King, that on the 2*d.* of May after, he by his Legantine Authority dissolved that Convocation; and issued out a Writ to Tonstall Bishop of London to bring the Clergy of Canterbury to St. Peter's in Westminster, there to meet and reform Abuses in the Church; and con-conſider of other important Matters that ſhould be propoſed to them. What they did towards Reformation, I know not, the Records being loſt: But as to the Kings Supply, it was propoſed, That they ſhould give the King the half of the full value of their Livings for one year, to be paid in Five years. The Cardinal laid out to them how much the King had merited from the Church, both by ſuppreſſing the Schiſm that was like to have been in the Papacy in Pope Julius his time, and by protecting the See of Rome from the French Tyranny; but moſt of all, for that excellent Book written by him in defence of the Faith againſt the Hereticks: and that therefore, ſince the French King was making War upon him, and had ſent over the Duke of Albany to Scotland to make War alſo on that ſide, it was fit that on ſo great an occaſion, it ſhould appear that his Clergy were ſenſible of their happineſs in having ſuch a King; which they ought to expreſs in granting ſomewhat, that was as much beyond all former Precedents, as the King had merited more from them than all former Kings had ever done.

But the Biſhops of Wincheſter and Rocheſter oppoſed this: For they both hated the Cardinal. The one thought him ungrateful to him who had raiſed him: The other being a man of a ſtrict Life hated him for his Vices. Both theſe ſpake againſt it as an unheard-of Tax, which would ſo oppreſs the Clergy, that it would not be poſſible for them to live and pay it; and that this would become a Precedent for after-times, which would make the condition of the Clergy moſt miſerable. But the Cardinal, who intended that the Convocation by a great Subſidy ſhould lead the way to the Parliament, took much pains for carrying it through; and got ſome to be abſent, and others were prevailed on to conſent to it: And for the fear of its being made a Precedent, a Clauſe was put in the Act, That it ſhould be no Precedent for after-times. Others laughed at this, and ſaid, It would be a Precedent for all that, if it once paſſed. But in the end it was granted, with a moſt glorious Preamble; and by it all the Natives of England that had any Eccleſiaſtical Benefice were to pay the full half of the true value of their Livings in Five years; and all Foreigners who were Beneficed in England were to pay a whole years Rent in the ſame time: out of which number were excepted the Biſhop of Worceſter and Landaffe, Polidore Virgil, Peter the Carmelite, Eraſmus of Roterdam, Silveſter Darius, and Peter Vannes, who were to pay only as Natives did. This encreaſed the hatred that the Clergy bore the Cardinal. But he deſpiſed them, and in particular was a great Enemy to the Monks, and looked on them as idle mouths that did neither the Church nor State any Service, but were through their ſcandalous Lives a reproach to the Church, and a burden to the State. Therefore he reſolved to ſuppreſs a great number of them, and to change them to another Inſtitution. Collect. Numb. 5th.

From the days of King Edgar the State of Monkery had been ſtill growing in England. For moſt of the Secular Clergy being then Married, and refuſing to put away their Wives, were by Dunſtan Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and Ethelwald Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Oſwald Biſhop of Worceſter, who were all Monks, turned out of their Livings. There is in the Rolls an Inſpeximus of King Edgar's, Erecting the Priory and Convent of Worceſter, which bears date Anno 964. Edgari 6to on St. Innocents day, Signed by the King, the Queen, Two Arch-Biſhops, Five Of the State of the Monaſteries. Rot. Pat. 11. Hen. 8. Part. 1.

Biſhops, Six Abbots, (but neither Biſhoprick nor Abby are named) Six Dukes, and Five Knights, but there is no Seal to it. It bears, that the King, with the Council and Conſent of his Princes and Gentry, did Confirm and Eſtabliſh that Priory; and that he had Erected 47 Monaſteries, which he intended to encreaſe to 50. the number of Jubilee; and that the former Incumbents ſhould be for ever excluded from all pretenſions to their Benefices, becauſe they had rather choſen with the danger of their Order, and the prejudice of the Eccleſiaſtical Benefice, to adhere to their Wives, than to ſerve God chaſtly and Canonically.

The Monks being thus ſetled in moſt Cathedrals of England, gave themſelves up to Idleneſs and Pleaſure, which had been long complained of; but now that Learning began to be reſtored, they being everywhere poſſeſſed of the beſt Church-Benefices, were looked upon by all Learned-men with an evil eye, as having in their hands the chief encouragements of Learning, and yet doing nothing towards it; they on the contrary decrying and diſparaging it all they could, ſaying, It would bring in Hereſie, and a great deal of miſchief. And the Reſtorers of Learning, ſuch as Eraſmus, Vives, and others, did not ſpare them, but did expoſe their Ignorance and ill Manners to the world.

Now the King naturally loved Learning, and therefore the Cardinal, either to do a thing which he knew would be acceptable to the King, or that it was alſo agreeable to his own Inclinations, reſolved to ſet up ſome Colledges, in which there ſhould be both great Encouragements for eminent Scholars to proſecute their Studies, and good Schools for teaching and training up of Youth. This he knew would be a great honour to him, to be lookt upon as a Patron of Learning; and therefore he ſet his heart much on it, to have Two Colledges (the one at Oxford, the other at Ipſwich, the place of his Birth) well conſtituted, and nobly Endowed. But towards this, it was neceſſary to ſuppreſs ſome Monaſteries, which was thought every-whit as juſtifiable and lawful, as it had been many Ages before, to change Secular Prebends into Canons Regular; the endowed Goods being ſtill applied to a Religious uſe. And it was thought hard to ſay, That if the Pope had the abſolute Power of diſpenſing the Spiritual Treaſure of the Church, and to tranſlate the Merits of one man, and apply them to another; that he had not a much more abſolute Power over the Temporal Treaſure of the Church, to tranſlate Church-Lands from one uſe and apply them to another. And indeed the Cardinal was then ſo much conſidered at Rome, as a Pope of another world, that whatever he deſired he eaſily obtained. Therefore on the 3*d*. of April 1524. Pope Clement by a Bull gave him Authority to ſuppreſs the Monaſtery of St. Frideſwide in Oxford, and in the Dioceſs of Lincoln, and to carry the Monks elſewhere, with a very full non obſtante. To this the King gave his aſſent the 19*th*. of April following. After this there followed many other Bulls for other Religious Houſes and Rectories that were Impropriated. Theſe Houſes being thus ſuppreſſed by the Law, they belonged to the King; who thereupon made them over to the Cardinal by new and ſpecial Grants, which are all Enrolled. And ſo he went on with theſe great Foundations, and brought them to Perfection: That at Oxford in the 18*th* year, and that at Ipſwich in the 20*th* year of the Kings Reign, as appears by the Dates of the Kings Patents for Founding them.

The Cardinal's Colledges

In

In the laſt Place I come to ſhew the new opinions in Religion, or thoſe that were accounted new then in England; and the State and Progreſs of them till the 19*th* year of the Kings Reign.

From the days of WWickliffe, there were many that diſliked moſt of the received Doctrines, in ſeveral parts of the Nation. The Clergy were at that time very hateful to the people; for as the Pope did exact heavily on them, ſo they being oppreſſed took all means poſſible to make the people repay what the Popes wreſted from them. Wickliffe being much encouraged and ſupported by the Duke of Lancaſter, and the Lord Piercy, the Biſhops could not proceed againſt him till the Duke of Lancaſter was put from the King, and then he was condemned at Oxford. Many opinions are charged upon him, but whether he held them or not, we know not, but by the Teſtimonies of his Enemies, who writ of him with ſo much paſſion, that it diſcredits all they ſay; yet he dyed in Peace, though his body was afterwards burn't. He tranſlated the Bible out of Latin into Engliſh, with a long Preface before it, in which he reflected ſeverely on the corruptions of the Clergy, and condemned the Worſhiping of Saints and Images, and denyed the corporal Preſence of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, and exhorted all people to the Study of the Scriptures. His Bible with this Preface was well received by a great many, who were led into theſe Opinions, rather by the Impreſſions which common ſenſe and plain Reaſon made on them, than by any deep Speculation or Study. For the followers of this Doctrine were illiterate and ignorant men: ſome few Clerks joyned to them, but they formed not themſelves into any body or aſſociation; and were ſcattered over the Kingdom, holding theſe Opinons in private without making any publick Profeſſion of them: Generally they were known by their diſparaging the ſuperſtitious Clergy, whoſe Corruptions were then ſo notorious, and their Cruelty ſo enraged, that no wonder the people were deeply prejudiced againſt them. Nor were the methods they uſed likely to prevail much upon them, being ſevere and cruel.

The Firſt beginning of Reformation in England.

In the Primitive Church, though in their Councils they were not backward to paſs Anathematiſms on every thing that they judged Hereſie; yet all Capital proceedings againſt Hereticks were condemned; and when two Biſhops did proſecute Priſcillian, and his followers before the Emperour Maximus, upon which they were put to death, they were generally ſo blamed for it that many refuſed to hold Communion with them. The Roman Emperors made many Laws againſt Hereticks, for the fining and baniſhing of them, and ſecluded them from the Priviledges of other Subjects; ſuch as making WWills, or receiving Legacies; only the Manichees (who were a ſtrange mixture between Heathenism and Chriſtianity) were to ſuffer death for their errors. Yet the Biſhops in thoſe days, particularly in Africk, doubted much, whether upon the Inſolencies of Hereticks, or Schiſmaticks, they might deſire the Emperor to execute thoſe Laws for Fining, Baniſhing, and other reſtraints. And St. Auſtin was not eaſily prevailed on to conſent to it. But at length the Donatiſts were ſo intolerable, that after ſeveral Conſultations about it, they were forced to conſent to thoſe inferior penalties, but ſtill condemned the taking away of their lives. And even in the Execution of the Imperial Laws in thoſe inferiour puniſhments, they they were always interposing, to moderate the severity of the Prefects and Governours. The first Instance of severity on mens bodies that was not censured by the Church, was in the Fifth Century under Justin the first, who Ordered the tongue of Severus (who had been Patriarch of Antioch, but did daily Anathematise the Council of Chalcedon) to be cut out. In the Eighth Century Justinian the 2d. (called Rhinotmetus from his cropt nose) burnt all the Manichees in Armenia: And in the end of the Eleventh Century the Bogomili were condemned to be burnt by the Patriarch and Council of Constantinople. But in the end of the 12th, and in the beginning of the 13th Century, a Company of Simple and Innocent persons in the Southern parts of France, being disgusted with the Corruptions both of the Popish Clergy and of the publick Worship, separated from their Assemblies; and then Dominick and his brethren Preachers, who came among them to convince them, finding their Preaching did not prevail, betook themselves to that way, that was sure to silence them. They perswaded the Civil Magistrates to burn all such as were judged Obstinate Hereticks. That they might do this by a Law, the Fourth Council of Lateran did Decree, that all Hereticks should be delivered to the Secular Power to be extirpated; (they thought not fit to speak out, but by the Practise it was known that Burning was that which they meant;) and if they did it not, they were to be Excommunicated; and after that, if they still refuse to do their duty, (which was upon the matter to be the Inquisitors Hangmen) they were to deny it at their utmost Perils. For not only the Ecclesiastical Censures, but Anathema's were thought too feeble a punishment for this Omission. Therefore a Censure was found out, as severe upon the Prince, as Burning was to the poor Heretick. He was to be deposed by the Pope, his Subjects to be absolved from their Oaths of Allegiance, and his Dominions to be given away to any other faithful Son of the Church, such as pleased the Pope best; and all this by the Authority of a Synod, that passed for a Holy General Council. This as it was fatal to the Counts of Tholouse, who were great Princes in the South of France, and first fell under the Censures; so it was terrible to all other Princes, who thereupon, to save themselves delivered up their Subjects to the Mercy of the Ecclesiastical Courts.

Fitz-Herbert de Nat. Brevium.

Burning was the death they made choice of, because Witches, Wizards, and Sodomites had been so executed. Therefore to make Heresie appear a terrible thing, this was thought the most proper punishment of it. It had also a resemblance of everlasting Burning, to which they adjudged their Souls, as well as their bodies were condemned to the fire; but with this signal difference, that they could find no such effectual way to oblige God to execute their sentence, as they contrived against the Civil Magistrate. But however they confidently gave it out, that by vertue of that Promise of our Saviours, Whose sins ye bind on Earth, they are bound in Heaven, their Decrees were ratified in Heaven. And it not being easie to disprove what they said, people believed the one, as they saw the other sentence executed. So that whatever they condemned as Heresie, was looked on as the worst thing in the world.

There was no occasion for the execution of this Law in England, till till the days of Wickliffe. And the favour he had from ſome great men ſtopt the Proceedings againſt him. But in the 5th. year of King Richard the Second, a Bill paſſed in the Houſe of Lords, and was aſſented to by the King, and publiſhed for an Act of Parliament, though the Bill was never ſent to the Houſe of Commons. By this pretended Law it appears, Wickliff's followers were then very numerous; that they had a certain habit, and did Preach in many places, both in Churches, Church-yards and Markets, without licence from the Ordinary; and did preach ſeveral Doctrines both againſt the Faith, and the Laws of the Land, as had been proved before the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, the other Biſhops, Prelates, Doctors of Divinity, and of the Civil and Canon-Law, and others of the Clergy: That they would not ſubmit to the Admonitions, nor Cenſures of the Church; but by their ſubtile ingenious words, did draw the people to follow them and defend them by ſtrong hand, and in great routs. Therefore it was Ordained, that upon the Biſhops certifying into the Chancery the names of ſuch Preachers and their Abettors, the Chancellour ſhould iſſue forth Commiſſions to the Sheriffs and other the Kings Miniſters, to hold them in Arreſt and ſtrong Priſon till they ſhould juſtify them according to the Law and reaſon of Holy Church. From the gentleneſs of which Law it may appear, that England was not then ſo tame as to bear the ſeverity of thoſe cruel Laws which were ſetled and put in execution in other Kingdoms.

The Laws of England againſt Hereticks.

Under Rich. the 2*d.*

The Cuſtom at that time was to engroſs Copies of all the Acts of Parliament, and to ſend them with a Writ under the great Seal to the Sheriffs, to make them be proclaimed within their juriſdictions. And John Braibrook Biſhop of London, then Lord Chancellour, ſent this with the other Acts of that Parliament to be proclaimed. The Writ bears date the 26th. of May, 5^to^ Reg. But in the next Parliament that was held in the 6th. year of that Kings Reign, the Commons preferred a Bill reciting the former Act, and conſtantly affirmed that they had never aſſented to it, and therefore deſired it might be declared to be void: for they proteſted it was never their intent to be juſtified, and to bind themſelves and their Succeſſors to the Prelates, more than their Anceſtors had done in times paſt. To which the King gave the Royal Aſſent, as it is in the Records of Parliament. But in the Proclamation of the Acts of that Parliament this Act was ſuppreſſed; ſo that the former Act was ſtill looked on as a good Law, and is Printed in the Book of Statutes. Such pious frauds were always practiſed by the Popiſh Clergy, and were indeed neceſſary for the ſupporting the Credit of that Church. When Richard the 2*d.* was depoſed and the Crown uſurped by Henry the 4th, then he in gratitude to the Clergy that aſſiſted him in his coming to the Crown, granted them a Law to their hearts content in the 2*d* year of his Reign. The Preamble bears, That ſome had a new Faith about the Sacraments of the Church, and the Authority of the ſame; and did preach without Authority, gathered Conventicles, taught Schools, wrote Books againſt the Catholick Faith; with many other heinous aggravations. Upon which the Prelates and Clergy, and the Commons of the Realm prayed the King to provide a ſufficient remedy to ſo great an evil. Therefore the King by the aſſent of the States and other diſcreet men of the Realm being in the ſaid Parliament, did ordain, That none ſhould Preach

Preach without Licence, except persons Priviledged; That none should Preach any Doctrine contrary to the Catholick Faith, or the Determination of the Holy Church, and that none should favour and abett them, nor keep their Books, but deliver them to the Diocesan of the place within 40 days after the Proclamation of that Statute. And that if any Persons were defamed or suspected of doing against that Ordinance, then the Ordinary might arrest them, and keep them in his Prison, till they were Canonically purged of the Articles laid against them, or did abjure them according to the Laws of the Church. Provided always, that the proceedings against them were publickly and judicially done and ended, within three Months after they had been so Arrested; and if they were Convict, the Diocesan, or his Commissaries, might keep them in Prison as long as to his discretion shall seem expedient, and might Fine them as should seem competent to him, certifying the Fine into the Kings Exchequer: and if any being Convict did refuse to abjure, or after Abjuration did fall into Relapse, then he was to be left to the Secular Court according to the Holy Canons. And the Majors, Sheriffs, or Bayliffs were to be personally present at the passing the Sentence, when they should be required by the Diocesan, or his Commissaries, and after the Sentence they were to receive them, and them before the People in a high place do to be Brent. By this Statute the Sheriffs, or other Officers, were immediately to proceed to the Burning of Hereticks without any Writ, or Warrant from the King. But it seems the Kings Learned Council advised him to issue out a Writ, De Hæretico comburendo, upon what grounds of Law I cannot tell. For in the same year when William Sautre (who was the first that was put to death upon the account of Heresie) was judged Relapse by Thomas Arundel, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, in a Convocation of his Province; and thereupon was degraded from Priesthood, and left to Secular Power; a Writ was issued out to Burn him, which in the Writ is called The Customary Punishment (relating it is like to the Customs that were beyond Sea.) But this Writ was not necessary by the Law, and therefore it seems these Writs were not Enrolled: For in the whole Reign of King Henry the 8*th*. I have not been able to find any of these Writs in the Rolls. But by Warham's Rigister I see the Common course of the Law, was to certifie into the Chancery the Conviction of an Heretick, upon which the Writ was issued out, if the King did not send a Pardon. Thus it went on all the Reign of Henry the 4*th*. But in the beginning of his Sons Reign, there was a Conspiracy (as was pretended) by Sir John Oldcastle, and some others against the King and the Clergy; upon which many were put in Prison, and 29 were both attainted of Treason, and condemned of Heresie, so they were both Hanged and Burnt. But as a Writer that lived in the following Age, says, Certain affirmed that these were but feigned causes, surmised of the Spiritualty more of displeasure than truth. That Conspiracy, whether real or pretended, produced a severe Act against those Hereticks, who were then best known by the name of Lollards. By which Act all Officers of State, Judges, Justices of the Peace, Majors, Sheriffs and Bayliffs, were to be Sworn when they took their Imployments, to use their whole Power and Diligence to destroy all Heresies and Errors, called Lollardies, and to assist the Ordinaries and their Commissaries in their proceedings against them; and that the Lollards should forfeit all the Lands they held in Fee-Simple, and their Goods and Chattels to the King.

The Clergy according to the Genius of that Religion, having their Authority fortified with ſuch ſevere Laws, were now more cruel and inſolent than ever. And if any Man denied them any part of that reſpect, or of thoſe advantages to which they pretended, he was preſently brought under the ſuſpicion of Hereſie, and vexed with impriſonments, and Articles were brought againſt him.

Upon which great complaints followed. And the Judges to correct this, granted Habeas Corpus upon their Impriſonments, and examined the Warrants and either Bailed, or Diſcharged the Priſoners as they ſaw cauſe: For though the Decrees of the Church had made many things Hereſie, ſo that the Clergy had much matter to work upon; yet when Offenders againſt them in other things could not be charged with any formal Hereſie, then by conſequences they ſtudied to faſten it on them, but were ſometimes over-ruled by the Judges. Thus, when one Keyſer (who was Excommunicated by Thomas Bourchier, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, at the Suit of another) ſaid openly, that That Sentence was not to be feared; for though the Arch-biſhop, or his Commiſſary had Excommunicated him, yet he was not Excommunicated before God; he was upon this Committed by the Arch-biſhops Warrant, as one juſtly ſuſpected of Hereſie: but the Judges upon his moving for an Habeas Corpus, granted it; and the Priſoner being brought to the Bar, with the Warrant for his Impriſonment, they found the matter contained in it was not within the Statute, and firſt Bailed him, and after that they Diſcharged him. One Warner of London, having ſaid, That he was not bound to pay Tithes to his Curate was alſo impriſoned by Edward Vaughan, at the command of the Biſhop of London; but he eſcaped out of Priſon, and brought his Action of falſe impriſonment againſt Vaughan. Whereupon Vaughan pleading the Statute of Henry the 4*th*, and that his Opinion was an Hereſie againſt the Determination of the Catholick Faith; the Court of the Common-Pleas judged, That the words were not within the Statute, and that his Opinion was an Error, but no Hereſie. So that the Judges looking on themſelves as the Interpreters of the Law, thought, That even in the Caſe of Hereſie, they had Authority to declare, what was Hereſie by the Law, and what not: But what oppoſition the Clergy made to this, I do not know. 5*th* year of Edw. 4*th*.

I hope the Reader will eaſily excuſe this Digreſſion, it being ſo material to the Hiſtory that is to follow. I ſhall next ſet down what I find in the Records about the proceedings againſt Hereticks in the beginning of this Reign.

On the 2*d* of May in the year 1511. Six Men and Four Women, moſt of them being of Tenterden, appeared before Arch-biſhop Warham, in his Mannor of Knoll, and abjured the following Errors. 1*ſt*. That in the Sacrament of the Altar is not the Body of Chriſt, but Material Bread. 2*dly*, That the Sacraments of Baptiſm, and Confirmation, are not neceſſary, nor profitable for Mens Souls. 3*dly*, That Confeſſion of Sins ought not to be made to a Prieſt. 4*thly*, That there is no more Power given by God to a Prieſt than to a Lay-man, 5*thly*, That the Solemnization of Matrimony is not profitable, nor neceſſary for the well of Mans Soul. 6*thly*, That the Sacrament of Extreme Unction is not profitable, nor neceſſary for Mans Soul. 7*thly*, That Pilgrimages to holy and devout Places be not profitable, neither Meritorious for Mans Soul. Warham's Proceedings againſt Hereticks. Regiſt. Warham, Fol. 164

8*thly*, That Images of Saints be not to be worſhipped. 9*thly*, That a Man ſhould pray to no Saint, but only to God. 10*thly*, That holy Water and holy Bread be not the better after the Benediction made by the Prieſt, than before. And as they abjured theſe Opinions, ſo they were made to ſwear, That they ſhould diſcover all whom they knew to hold theſe Errors, or who were ſuſpected of them, or that did keep any private Conventicles, or were Fautors, or Comforters of them that publiſhed ſuch Doctrines. Two other Men of Tenterden did that day in the afternoon abjure moſt of theſe Opinions. The Court ſate again the 5*th* of May, and the Arch-biſhop enjoyned them Penance, to wear the Badge of a Faggot in Flames on their Cloaths during their lives, or till they were diſpenſed with for it; and that in the Proceſſion both at the Cathedral of Canterbury, and at their own Pariſh Churches they ſhould carry a Faggot on their ſhoulders: which was looked on as a publick Confeſſion that they deſerved Burning.

That ſame day another of Tenterden abjured the ſame Doctrines. On the 15*th* of May the Court ſate at Lambeth, where four Men and one Woman abjured. On the 19*th* four Men more abjured. On the 3*d* of June a Man and a Woman abjured. Another Woman the 26*th* of July: Another Man the 29*th* of July: Two Women on the 2*d* of Auguſt: A Man on the 3*d* and a Woman on the 8*th* of Auguſt: Three Men on the 16*th* of Auguſt: And three Men and a Woman on the 3*d* of Sept. In theſe Abjurations ſome were put to abjure more, ſome fewer of the former Doctrines; and in ſome of their Abjurations Two Articles more were added: 1*ſt*, That the Images of the Crucifix, of our Lady and other Saints, ought not to be worſhipped becauſe they were made with Mens Hands, and were but Stocks and Stones. 2*dly*, That Money and Labours ſpent in Pilgrimages were all in vain. All theſe Perſons (whether they were unjuſtly accuſed, or were overcome with fear, or had but crude conceptions of thoſe Opinions, and ſo were eaſily frighted out of them) abjured and performed the Penance that was enjoyned them. Others met with harder meaſure; for on the 29*th* of April, in the ſame year, 1511. one William Carder of Tenterden, being Endited on the former Article, he denied them all but one, That he had ſaid it was enough to pray to Almighty God alone, and therefore we needed not to pray to Saints for any Mediation. Upon which Witneſſes were brought againſt him, who were all ſuch as were then Priſoners, but intended to abjure and were now made uſe of to Convict others. They ſwore that he had taught them theſe Opinions. When their Depoſitions were publiſhed, he ſaid he did repent if he had ſaid any thing againſt the Faith and the Sacraments; but he did not remember that he had ever ſaid any ſuch thing. Sentence was given upon him as an obſtinate Heretick, and he was delivered up to the Secular Power. On the ſame day a Woman, Agnes Grevill, was Endited upon the ſame Articles: She pleaded Not Guilty, but by a ſtrange kind of proceeding, her Husband and her Two Sons were brought in Witneſſes againſt her. Her Husband depoſed, that in the end of the Reign of King Edward the 4*th*, one John Ive, had perſwaded her into theſe Opinions, in which ſhe had perſiſted ever ſince: Her Sons alſo depoſed, that ſhe had been ſtill infuſing theſe Doctrines into them. One Robert Harriſon, was alſo Endited, and pleading Not Guilty, Witneſſes did prove the Articles againſt him. And on the 2*d* of May,

May Sentence was given againſt theſe Two as obſtinate Hereticks. And the ſame day the Arch-biſhop Signed the Writs for certifying theſe Sentences into the Chancery, which conclude in theſe words: Our holy Mother the Church having nothing further that ſhe can do in this matter, we leave the fore-mentioned Hereticks, and every one of them to your Royal Highneſs, and to your Secular Council. And on the 8*th* of May, John Brown and Edward Walker, being alſo Endited of Hereſie on the former Points, they both pleaded Not Guilty. But the Witneſſes depoſing againſt them, they were judged obſtinate Hereticks; and the former a Relapſe, for he had abjured before Cardinal Morton. And on the 19*th* of May Sentence was given. When, or how the Sentences were Executed, I cannot find. Sure I am, there are no Pardons upon Record for any of them, and it was the courſe of the Law, either to ſend a Pardon, or to iſſue out the Writ for Burning them.

Fox mentions none of theſe proceedings, only he tells that John Brown was taken for ſome words ſaid in Diſcourſe with a Prieſt, about the ſaying of Maſſes for redeeming Souls out of Purgatory. Upon which he was committed for ſuſpicion of Hereſie: But Fox ſeems to have been miſinformed about the time of his Burning, which he ſays was, Anno 1517. for they would not have kept a condemned Heretick Six years out of the Fire. I never find them guilty of any ſuch clemency. Theſe ſevere Sentences made the reſt ſo apprehenſive of their danger, that all the others who were Endited, abjured. And in the year 1512. on the 5*th*. of June, Two Men and Two Women abjured that Article, That in the Sacrament of the Altar, there was only Material Bread, and not the Body of Chriſt. And on the 4*th* and 13*th* of September, Two other Women abjured the former Articles: and this is all that is in Warham's Regiſter about Hereticks.

In what remains of Fitz-James, Biſhop of London's Regiſter, There are but Three Abjurations. In the year 1509. one Elizabeth Sampſon, of Aldermanbury, was Endited for having ſpoken reproachfully of the Images of our Lady, of Willſden, Crom, and Walſingham, condemning Pilgrimages to them, and ſaying, It was better to give Alms at home to poor People, than to go on Pilgrimages; and that Images were but Stocks and Stones, and denying the vertue of the Sacrament of the Altar, when the Prieſt was not in clean life, and ſaying, It was but Bread and that Chriſt could not be both in Heaven and in Earth; and for denying Chriſts Aſcenſion to Heaven, and ſaying, That more ſhould not go to Heaven than were already in it. But ſhe to be free of further trouble, confeſſed her ſelf Guilty, and abjured all thoſe Opinions. It is generally obſerved, That in the proceedings againſt Lollards, the Clergy always mixed ſome Capital Errors, which all Chriſtians rejected, with thoſe for which they accuſed them; and ſome particulars being proved, they gave it out that they were Guilty of them all, to repreſent them the more odious. And in this caſe the thing is plain, for this Woman is charged for denying Chriſts Aſcenſion; and yet another of the Articles was, That ſhe ſaid Chriſts Body could not be in the Sacrament, becauſe it could not be both in Heaven and on Earth. Which two Opinions are inconſiſtent. In the year 1511. William Potier was Endited for ſaying, There were Three Gods, and that he knew not for what Chriſts Paſſion, or Baptiſm availed; and did abjure. Whether he only ſpoke theſe things Impiouſly, or whether he held them in Opinion, is not clear. But certainly he was no Lollard. One Joan Baker was alſo made to abjure ſome words ſhe had ſaid, That Images were but Idols, and not to be worſhipped; and that they were ſet up by the Prieſt out of Covetouſneſs, that they might grow Rich by them; and that Pilgrimages were not to be made. More is not in that Regiſter. But Fox gives an account of Six others, who were burnt in Fitz-James his time. On this I have been the longer, that it may appear, what were the Opinions of the Lollards at that time, before Luther had publiſhed any thing againſt the Indulgences. For theſe Opinions did very much diſpoſe People to receive the Writings which came afterwards out of Germany.

The Progreſs of Luther's Doctrine.

The firſt beginnings and Progreſs of Luther's Doctrine are ſo well known, that I need not tell how upon the publiſhing of Indulgences in Germany, in ſo groſs a manner, that for a little Money any Man might both preſerve himſelf, and deliver his Friends out of Purgatory, many were offended at this Merchandiſe, againſt which Luther wrote. But it concerning the See of Rome in ſo main a Point of their Prerogative, which would alſo have cut off a great Branch of their Revenue, he was proceeded againſt with extream ſeverity: So ſmall a ſpark as that Colliſion made, could never have raiſed ſo great a fire, if the World had not been ſtrongly diſpoſed to it, by the juſt prejudices they had conceived againſt the Popiſh Clergy, whoſe Ignorance and lewd Lives had laid them ſo open to contempt and hatred, that any one that would ſet himſelf againſt them, could not but be kindly looked on by the People. They had engroſſed the greateſt part both of the Riches and Power of Chriſtendom, and lived at their eaſe and in much Wealth. And the corruptions of their Worſhip and Doctrine were ſuch, that a very ſmall proportion of common ſenſe, with but an overly looking on the New Teſtament, diſcovered them. Nor had they any other varniſh to colour them by, but the Authority and Traditions of the Church. But when ſome ſtudious Men began to read the Ancient Fathers, and Councils, (though there was then a great mixture of Sophiſticated ſtuff that went under the Ancient Names, and was joyned to their true Works, which Criticks have ſince diſcovered to be ſpurious) they found a vaſt difference between the firſt Five Ages of the Chriſtian Church, in which Piety and Learning prevailed, and the laſt Ten Ages in which Ignorance had buried all their former Learning, only a little miſguided Devotion was retained for Six of theſe Ages; and in the laſt Four, the reſtleſs Ambition and Uſurpation of the Popes was ſupported by the ſeeming holineſs of the begging Friers, and the falſe Counterfeits of Learning, which were among the Canoniſts, Schoolmen and Caſuiſts. So that it was incredible to ſee, how Men, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition the Princes every where made to the progreſs of theſe reputed new Opinions, and the great advantages by which the Church of Rome both held and drew many into their Intereſts, were generally inclined to theſe Doctrines. Thoſe of the Clergy, who at firſt Preached them, were of the begging Orders of Friers, who having fewer engagements on them from their Intereſts, were freer to diſcover and follow the truth. And the Auſtere Diſcipline they had been trained under, did prepare them to encounter thoſe difficulties that lay in their way. And the Laity that had long lookt lookt on their Paſtors with an evil Eye, did receive theſe Opinions very eaſily; which did both diſcover the Impoſtures with which the World had been abuſed, and ſhewed a plain and ſimple way to the Kingdom of Heaven, by putting the Scriptures into their hands, and ſuch other Inſtructions about Religion, as were ſincere and genuine. The Clergy who at firſt deſpiſed theſe new Preachers, were at length much Allarmed when they ſaw all People running after them, and receiving their Doctrines.

As theſe things did ſpread much in Germany, Switzerland, and the Netherlands, ſo their Books came over into England, where there was much matter already prepared to be wrought on, not only by the prejudices they had conceived againſt the corrupt Clergy, but by the Opinions of the Lollards, which had been now in England ſince the days of Wickliff, for about 150 years. Between which Opinions, and the Doctrines of the Reformers, there was great affinity; and therefore to give the better vent to the Books that came out of Germany, many of them were tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue, and were very much read and applauded. This quickned the Proceedings againſt the Lollards, and the enquiry became ſo ſevere, that great numbers were brought into the Toils of the Biſhops and their Commiſſaries. If a Man had ſpoken but a light word againſt any of the Conſtitutions of the Church, he was ſeized on by the Biſhops Officers; and if any taught their Children the Lords Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and the Apoſtles Creed in the Vulgar Tongue, that was Crime enough to bring them to the Stake: As it did Six Men and a Woman at Coventry, in the Paſſion-week, 1519. being the 4*th* of April. Longland, Biſhop of Lincoln, was very cruel to all that were ſuſpected of Hereſie in his Dioceſs; ſeveral of them abjured, and ſome were burnt. Fox.

But all that did not produce what they deſigned by it. The Clergy did not correct their own Faults, and their cruelty was looked on as an evidence of Guilt, and of a weak Cauſe; ſo that the method they took, wrought only on Peoples fears, and made them more cautious and reſerved, but did not at all remove the Cauſe, nor work either on their reaſons or affections.

Upon all this, the King to get himſelf a Name, and to have a laſting Intereſt with the Clergy, thought it not enough to aſſiſt them with his Authority, but would needs turn their Champion, and write againſt Luther in defence of the Seven Sacraments. This Book was magnified by the Clergy as the moſt Learned Work that ever the Sun ſaw; and he was compared to King Solomon, and to all the Chriſtian Emperours that had ever been: And it was the chief Subject of Flattery for many years, beſides the glorious Title of Defender of the Faith, which the Pope beſtowed on him for it. And it muſt be acknowledged, that conſidering the Age, and that it was the work of a King, it did deſerve ſome Commendation. But Luther was not at all daunted at it, but rather valued himſelf upon it, that ſo great a King had entred the liſts with him, and anſwered his Book. And he replied, not without a large mixture of Acrimony, for which he was generally blamed, as forgetting that great reſpect, that is due to the Perſons of Sovereign Princes. The King writes againſt Luther. 1522.

But all would not do. Theſe Opinions ſtill gained more footing, and William Tindal made a Tranſlation of the New Teſtament in Engliſh,

October 23. Reg. Tonſtall. Fol. 45. with which that in Fox agrees exactly.

to which he added ſome ſhort Gloſſes. This was printed in Antwerp and ſent over into England in the year 1526. Againſt which there was a Prohibition publiſhed by every Biſhop in his Dioceſs, bearing that ſome of Luthers followers had erroneouſly Tranſlated the New Teſtament, and had corrupted the Word of God, both by a falſe Tranſlation, and by heretical Gloſſes: Therefore they required all Incumbents to charge all within their Pariſhes, that had any of theſe, to bring them in to the Vicar-General within thirty days after that premonition, under the pains of Excommunication and incurring the ſuſpicion of Hereſie. There were alſo many other Books Prohibited at that time, moſt of them written by Tindal. And Sir Thomas More, who was a Man celebrated for Vertue and Learning, undertook the anſwering of ſome of thoſe; but before he went about it, he would needs have the Biſhops Licence for keeping and reading them. He wrote according to the way of the Age with much bitterneſs: and though he had been no Friend to the Monks, and a great declamer againſt the Ignorance of the Clergy, and had been ill uſed by the Cardinal; yet he was one of the bittereſt Enemies of the New Preachers; not without great cruelty when he came into Power, though he was otherwiſe a very good-natur'd Man. So violently did the Roman Clergy hurry all their Friends into thoſe exceſſes of Fire and Sword.

Collection Number 6.

When the Party became ſo conſiderable, that it was known there were Societies of them, not only in London, but in both the Univerſities, then the Cardinal was conſtrained to act. His contempt of the Clergy was looked on as that which gave encouragement to the Hereticks. When reports were brought to Court of a company that were in Cambridge, Bilney, Latimer, and others that read and propagated Luther's Book and Opinions: ſome Biſhops moved, in the year 1523. that there might be a Viſitation appointed to go to Cambridge, for trying who were the Fautors of Hereſie there. But he, as Legate, did inhibit it (upon what grounds I cannot imagine.) Which was brought againſt him afterwards in Parliament (Art. 43. of his Impeachment,) Yet when theſe Doctrines were ſpread every where, he called a meeting of all the Biſhops and Divines, and Canoniſts about London; where Thomas Bilney and Thomas Arthur were brought before them, and Articles were brought in againſt them. The whole Proceſs is ſet down at length by Fox in all Points according to Tonſtall's Regiſter, except one fault in the Tranſlation. When the Cardinal asked Bilney whether he had not taken an Oath before, not to preach, or defend any of Luthers Doctrines; he confeſſed he had done it, but not judicially, (judicialiter in the Regiſter.) This Fox Tranſlates, not lawfully. In all the other particulars there is an exact agreement between the Regiſter and his Acts. The ſum of the proceedings of the Court, was, That after examination of Witneſſes, and ſeveral other ſteps in the Proceſs, which the Cardinal left to the Biſhop of London, and the other Biſhops to manage, Bilney ſtood out long, and ſeemed reſolved to ſuffer for a good Conſcience. In the end, what through humane infirmity, what through the great importunity of the Biſhop of London, who ſet all his Friends on him, he did abjure on the 7*th* of December, as Arthur had done on the 2*d* of that Month. And though Bilney was relapſt, and ſo was to expect no mercy by the Law, yet the Biſhop of London enjoyned him Penance, and let him go. For Tonſtall being being a Man both of good Learning and an unblemiſht Life, theſe Vertues produced one of their ordinary effects in him, great moderation, that was ſo eminent in him, that at no time did he dip his hands in Blood. Geoffry, Loni, and Thomas Gerrard, alſo abjured for having had Luther's Books, and defending his Opinions.

Theſe were the proceedings againſt Hereticks, in the firſt half of this Reign. And thus far I have opened the State of Affairs, both as to Religious and Civil Concerns for the firſt 18 years of this Kings time, with what Obſervations I could gather of the Diſpoſitions and Tempers of the Nation at that time, which prepared them for the Changes that followed afterwards.

THE HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION OF THE Church of England.

BOOK II.

Of the Proceſs of Divorce between King Henry and Queen Katharine, and of what paſſed from the Nineteenth to the Twenty fifth year of his Reign, in which he was declared Supreme Head of the Church of England.

The beginning of the Sute of Divorce.

KING Henry hitherto lived at eaſe, and enjoyed his pleaſures; he made War with much Honour, and that always produced a juſt and advantageous Peace. He had no trouble upon him in all his Affairs, except about the getting of Money, and even in that, the Cardinal eaſed him. But now a Domeſtick trouble aroſe, which perplexed all the reſt of his Government, and drew after it Conſequences of a high nature.

The Marriage of Prince Arthur to the Infanta of Spain.

Henry the 7th upon wiſe and good conſiderations, reſolved to link himſelf in a cloſe Confedracy with Ferdinand and Iſabella, Kings of Caſtile and Arragon, and with the Houſe of Burgundy againſt France, which was looked on as the laſting and dangerous Enemy of England. And therefore a Match was agreed on between his Son, Prince Arthur, and Katharine the Infanta of Spain, whoſe eldeſt Siſter Joan was Married to Philip, that was then Duke of Burgundy, and Earl of Flanders; out of which aroſe a triple Alliance between England, Spain, and Burgundy, againſt the King of France, who was then become formidable to all about him. There was given with her 200000 Duckats, the greateſt Portion that had been given for many Ages with any Princeſs, which made it not the leſs acceptable to King Henry the Seventh.

The Infanta was brought into England, and on the 14th of Nov. was Married at St. Pauls to the Prince of Wales. They lived together as Man and Wife, till the 2*d* of April following; and not only had their Bed ſolemnly bleſt when they were put in it, on the night of their Marriage, but alſo were ſeen publickly in Bed for ſeveral days after, and went down to live at Ludlow-Caſtle in Wales, where they ſtill Bedded together. But Prince Arthur, though a ſtrong and healthful youth when he Married her, yet died ſoon after, which ſome thought was haſtned by his too early Marriage. The Spaniſh Ambaſſador had by his Maſters order taken proofs of the Conſummation of the Marriage, and ſent them into Spain; the young Prince alſo himſelf had by many expreſſions given his Servants cauſe to believe that his Marriage was conſummated the firſt night, which in a youth of Sixteen years of Age, that was vigorous and healthful, was not at all judged ſtrange. It was ſo conſtantly believed that when he died, his younger Brother Henry Duke of York was not called Prince of Wales, for ſome conſiderable time. Some ſay for one Month, ſome for 6 Months. And he was not created Prince of Wales till 10 Months were elapſed, viz. in the February following, when it was apparent that his Brothers Wife was not with Child by him. Theſe things were afterwards looked on as a full Demonſtration (being as much as the thing was capable of) that the Princeſs was not a Virgin after Prince Arthur's Death. 1501.

But the reaſon of State ſtill ſtanding for keeping up the Alliance againſt France, and King Henry the 7th having no mind to let ſo great a Revenue as ſhe had in Jointure be carried out of the Kingdom, it was propoſed, That ſhe ſhould be married to the younger Brother Henry now Prince of Wales. The two Prelates that were then in greateſt eſteem with King Henry the 7th, were Warham Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter. The former delivered his opinion againſt it, and told the King that he thought it was neither honourable nor well pleaſing to God. The Biſhop of Wincheſter perſwaded it, and for the Objections that were againſt it, and the Murmuring of the people who did not like a Marriage that was diſputable, leſt out of it new Wars ſhould afterward ariſe about the Right of the Crown, the Popes Diſpenſation was thought ſufficient to anſwer all; and his Authority was then ſo undiſputed that it did it effectually. So a Bull was obtained on the 26 of Decemb. 1503 to this effect, That the Pope according to the greatneſs of his Authority, having received a Petition from Prince Henry and the Princeſs Katharine, Bearing, That whereas the Princeſs was Lawfully Married to Prince Arthur (which was perhaps conſummated by the Carnalis Copula) who was dead without any iſſue, but they being deſirous to Marry for preſerving the Peace between the Crowns of England and Spain, did Petition his Holineſs for his Diſpenſation; therefore the Pope, out of his care to maintain peace among all Catholick Kings, did abſolve them from all Cenſures under which they might be, and Diſpenſed with the Impediment of their Affinity, notwithſtanding any Apoſtolical Conſtitutions or Ordinances to the contrary, and gave them leave to Marry, or if they were already Married, he Confirming it, required their Confeſſor to enjoyn them ſome healthful penance for their having Married before the Diſpenſation was obtained.

It is allowed by the Pope, Collections Numb. firſt.

1501. Upon political reasons. L. Herbert.

It was not much to be wondred at, that the Pope did readily grant this; for though very many both Cardinals and Divines did then oppose it, yet the Interest of the Papacy, which was preferred to all other Considerations, required it. For as that Pope being a great Enemy to Lewis the 12th the French King, would have done any thing to make an Alliance against him firmer; so he was a War-like Pope who considered Religion very little, and therefore might be easily perswaded to Confirm a thing that must needs oblige the succeeding Kings of England to maintain the Papal Authority, since from it they derived their Title to the Crown; little thinking that by a secret Direction of an over-ruling Providence, that Deed of his would occasion the extirpation of the Papal Power in England. So strangely doth God make the Devices of Men become of no effect, and turn them to a contrary end to that which is intended.

Henry Protests against it. Jun. 27. 1505.

Upon this Bull they were Married, the Prince of Wales being yet under Age. But Warham had so possessed the King with an aversion to this Marriage, that on the same day that the Prince was of Age, he by his Fathers command, laid on him in the presence of many of the Nobility and others, made a Protestation in the hands of Fox Bishop of Winchester before a publick Notary, and read it himself, by which he Declared, That whereas he being under Age was Married to the "Princess Katharine; yet now coming to be of Age, he did not con- "firm that Marriage, but retracted and Annulled it, and would not pro- "ceed in it, but intended in full form of Law to void it and break it "off; which he declared he did freely and of his own accord.

His Father also dissuaded it.

Thus it stood during his Fathers life, who continued to the last to be against it; and when he was just dying, he charged his Son to break it off, though it is possible that no consideration of Religion might work so much on him, as the apprehension he had of the troubles that might follow on a controverted Title to the Crown; of which the Wars between the Houses of York and Lancaster had given a fresh and sad Demonstration. The King being dead, one of the first things that came under Consultation, was, that the young King must either break his Marriage totally, or conclude it. Arguments were brought on both hands: But those for it prevailed most with the King: So six weeks after he came to the Crown, he was Married again publickly, and soon after they were both Crowned. On the first day of the year she made him a very acceptable new-years gift of a Son, but he dyed in the February thereafter: She miscarried often, and an other Son dyed soon after he was born; only the Lady Mary lived to a perfect Age.

In this state was the Kings Family when the Queen left bearing more Children, and contracted some diseases, that made her person unacceptable to him; but was, as to her other Qualities, a vertuous and grave Princess, much esteemed and beloved both of the King and the whole Nation. The King being out of hopes of more Children declared his Daughter Princess of Wales, and sent her to Ludlow to hold her Court there, and projected divers Matches for her. The first was with the Dolphin, which was agreed to between the King of France and him the 9th of Novemb. 1518. as appears by the Treaty yet extant. The Kings Marriage queſtioned by Forreigners.

But while this was in agitation the Biſhop of Tarbe the French Ambaſſador, made a great demur about the Princeſs Mary's being illegitimate, as begotten in a Marriage that was contracted againſt a Divine Precept, with which no humane Authority could diſpenſe. How far this was ſecretly concerted between the French Court and ours, or between the Cardinal and the Ambaſſador, is not known. It is ſurmiſed that the King or the Cardinal ſet on the French to make this exception publickly, that ſo the King might have a better Colour to juſtifie his ſuit of Divorce, ſince other Princes were already queſtioning it. For if upon a Marriage propoſed of ſuch infinite advantage to France, as that would be with the Heir of the Crown of England, they nevertheleſs made Exceptions and proceeded but coldly in it, it was very reaſonable to expect that after the Kings Death, other Pretenders would have diſputed her Title in another manner.

To ſome it ſeemed ſtrange that the King did offer his Daughter to ſuch great Princes as the Emperor and the King of France, to whom if England had fallen in her right, it muſt have been a Province: for though in the laſt Treaty with France, ſhe was offered either to the King, or his Second Son; by which either the Children which the King might have by her, or the Children of the Duke of Orleance, ſhould have been Heirs to the Crown of England, and thereby it would ſtill have continued divided from France; yet this was full of hazard, for if the Duke of Orleance by his Brothers Death ſhould become King of France, as it afterwards fell out, or if the King of France had been once poſſeſſed of England, then according to the maxime of the French Government, that whatever their King acquires he holds it in the Right of his Crown, England was ſtill to be a Province to France, unleſs they freed themſelves by Arms. Others judged that the King intended to Marry her to France, the more effectually to ſeclude her from the Succeſſion, conſidering the averſion his Subjects had to a French Government, that ſo he might more eaſily ſettle his Baſtard Son the Duke of Richmond in the Succeſſion of the Crown.

While this Treaty went on, the Kings ſcruples about his Marriage began to take vent. It is ſaid that the Cardinal did firſt infuſe them into him, and made Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, that was the Kings Confeſſor, poſſeſs the Kings mind with them in confeſſion. If it was ſo, the King had, according to the Religion of that time, very juſt 1527. cause of Scruple, when his Confessor judged his Marriage sinful, and the Popes Legate was of the same mind. It is also said that the Cardinal being alienated from the Emperor, that he might irreparably embroil the King and him, and unite the King to the French Interests, designed this out of Spite; and that he was also dissatisfied toward the Queen, who hated him for his lewd and dissolute Life, and had oft admonished and checkt him for it: And that he therefore, designing to engage the King to Marry the French Kings Sister, the Dutchess of Alenoon, did (to make way for that) set this Matter on foot: but as I see no good Authority for all this, except the Queens suspitions, who did afterwards charge the Cardinal as the cause of all her trouble; so I am inclined to think the Kings Scruples were much ancienter: for the King declared to Simon Grineus four years after this, that for seven years he had abstained from the Queen upon these Scruples, so that by that it seems they had been received into the Kings mind three years before this time.

The Grounds of his Scruples.

What were the Kings secret motives and the true grounds of his Aversion to the Queen, is only known to God, and till the discovery of all secrets at the day of Judgment, must lye hid. But the reasons which he always owned, of which all Humane Judicatories must only take notice, shall be now fully opened. He found by the Law of Moses, if a Man took his Brothers Wife they should die Childless: This made him reflect on the death of his Children, which he now looked on as a curse from God for that unlawful Marriage. Upon this he set himself to study the Case, and called for the judgments of the best Divines and Canonists. For his own Enquiry, Thomas Aquinas being the Writer in whose Works he took most pleasure, and to whose judgment he submitted most, did decide it clearly against him. For he both Concluded, that the Laws in Leviticus about the forbidden degrees of Marriage were Moral and Eternal, such as obliged all Christians; and that the Pope could only Dispence with the Laws of the Church, but could not Dispence with the Laws of God. Upon this reason, that no Law can be Dispenced with, by any Authority, but that which is equal to the Authority that enacted it. Therefore he infers that the Pope can indeed Dispence with all the Laws of the Church, but not with the Laws of God, to whose Authority he could not pretend to be equal. But as the King found this from his own private Study; so having commanded the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury to require the Opinions of the Bishops of England, they all in a Writing under their Hands and Seals, declared they judged it an unlawful Marriage. Only the Bishop of Rochester refused to set his Hand to it; and though the Arch-Bishop pressed him most earnestly to it, yet he persisted in his refusal, saying, that it was against his Conscience. Upon which the Arch-bishop made another write down his Name, and set his Seal to the Resolution of the rest of the Bishops. But this being afterwards questioned, the Bishop of Rochester denied it was his hand, and the Arch-Bishop pretended that he had leave given him by the Bishop to put his hand to it, which the other denied. Nor was it likely that Fisher who scrupled in Conscience to Subscribe it himself, would have consented to such a weak Artifice. But all the other Bishops did declare against the Marriage, and as the

King

King himſelf ſaid afterwards in the Legantine Court, neither the Cardinal nor the Biſhop of Lincoln did firſt ſuggeſt theſe ſcruples, but the King being poſſeſſed with them, did in Confeſſion propoſe them to that Biſhop: and added that the Cardinal was ſo far from cheriſhing them, that he did all he could to ſtifle them. 1527.

The dangers that were like to follow from it.

The King was now convinced that his Marriage was unlawful, both by his own ſtudy, and the reſolution of his Divines. And as the point of Conſcience wrought on him, ſo the Intereſt of the Kingdom required, that there ſhould be no doubting about the Succeſſion to the Crown: leſt as the long Civil-War between the Houſes of York and Lancaſter had been buried with his Father, ſo a new one ſhould riſe up at his Death. The King of Scotland was the next Heir to the Crown after his Daughter. And if he married his Daughter to any out of France, then he had reaſon to judge, that the French upon their Ancient Alliance with Scotland, and that they might divide and diſtract England, would be ready to aſſiſt the King of Scotland in his pretenſions: Or if he Married her in France, then all thoſe in England to whom the French Government was hateful, and the Emperor and other Princes to whom the French Power grew formidable, would have been as ready to ſupport the pretenſions of Scotland. Or if he ſhould either ſet up his Baſtard Son, or the Children which his Siſter bore to Charles Brandon, there was ſtill cauſe to fear a bloody deciſion of a Title that was ſo doubtful. And though this may ſeem a conſideration too Politick and Foreign to a matter of that nature, yet the obligation that lies on a Prince to provide for the happineſs and quiet of his Subjects, was ſo weighty a thing, that it might well come in among other Motives, to incline the King much to have this matter determined. At this time the Cardinal went over into France under colour to conclude a League between the two Crowns, and to Treat about the means of ſetting the Pope at Liberty, who was then the Emperors Priſoner at Rome; and alſo for a project of Peace between Francis and the Emperor. But his chief buſineſs was to require Francis to declare his Reſolutions concerning that Alternative about the Lady Mary. To which it was anſwered, that the Duke of Orleance as a fitter Match in years, was the French Kings Choice; but this matter fell to ground upon the Proceſs that followed ſoon after.

Wolſey went into France 1527. July 11.

The Kings fears & hopes about it.

The King did much apprehend the oppoſition the Emperor was like to make to his deſigns; either out of a principle of Nature and Honour to protect his Aunt, or out of a Maxime of State, to raiſe his Enemy all the trouble he could at home. But on the other hand he had ſome cauſe to hope well even in that particular. For the Queſtion of the unlawfulneſs of the Match had been firſt debated in the Cortes, or Aſſembly of the States at Madrid; and the Emperor had then ſhewed himſelf ſo favourable to it, that he broke the Match, (to which he had bound himſelf) with the Princeſs. Therefore the King had reaſon to think that this at leaſt would mitigate his oppoſition. The Emperor had alſo uſed the Pope ſo hardly, that it could not be doubted that the Pope hated him. And it was believed that he would find the protection of the King of England moſt neceſſary to ſecure him, either from the greatneſs of France or Spain, who were fighting for the beſt part of Italy, which muſt needs fall into one of their Hands. Therefore the King did not doubt but the Pope would be compliant to his deſires. And in this he 1527. he was much confirmed by the hopes, or rather assurance, which the Cardinal gave him of the Popes favour; who either calculating what was to be expected from that Court on the account of their own Interest, or upon some promises made him, had undertaken to the King to bring that matter about to his hearts content. It is certain that the L. Herbert. Cardinal had carried over with him out of the Kings Treasure 240000 l. to be employed about the Popes Liberty. But whether he had made a bargain for the Divorce, or had fancied that nothing could be denied him at Rome, it does not appear. It is clear by many of his Letters that he had undertaken to the King, that the business should be done; and it is not like that a man of his wisdom would have adventured to do that without some good warrant.

The Arguments against the Bull. But now that the Suit was to be moved in the Court of Rome, they were to devise such Arguments as were like to be well heard there. It would have been unacceptable to have insisted on the nullity of the Bull on this account, because the matter of it was unlawful, and fell not within the Popes Power. For Popes, like other Princes, do not love to hear the extent of their Prerogative disputed or defined. And to condemn the Bull of a former Pope as unlawful, was a dangerous Precedent at a time when the Popes Authority was rejected by so many in Germany. Therefore the Canonists as well as Divines, were consulted to find such Nullities in the Bull of Dispensation, as according to the Canon-Law, and the proceedings of the Rota, might serve to invalidate it without any diminution of the Papal Power. Which being once done the Marriage that followed upon it, must needs be annulled. When the Canonists examined the Bull, they found much matter to proceed upon. It is a Maxime in Law, that if the Pope be surprized in any thing, and Bulls be procured upon false suggestions and untrue premises, they may be annulled afterwards. Upon which foundation most of all the Processes against Popes Bulls were grounded. Now they found by the Preamble of this Bull that it was said, The King had desired that he might be dispensed with to Marry the Princess. This was false; for the King had made no such desire, being of an Age that was below such considerations, but Twelve years old. Then it appeared by the Preamble that this Bull was desired by the King to preserve the Peace between the King of England, and Ferdinand, and Isabella (called Elizabetha in the Bull) the Kings of Spain. To which they excepted, That it was plain this was false, since the King being then but Twelve years old, could not be supposed to have such deep speculations, and so large a prospect as to desire a Match upon a politick account. Then it being also in the Bull, that the Popes Dispensation was granted to keep Peace between the Crowns, if there was no hazard of any Breach or War between them; this was a false suggestion, by which the Pope had been made believe, That this Match was necessary for averting some great mischief. And it was known that there was no danger at all of that, and so this Bull was obtained by a surprize. Besides, both King Henry of England, and Isabella of Spain were dead before the King Married his Queen; so the Marriage could not be valid by vertue of a Bull that was granted to maintain Amity between Princes that were dead before the Marriage was consummated: And they also judged that the Protestation which the King made, when he came of Age, did retract any such pretended desire, that might have been preferred to the Pope in his name; and that from that time forward, the Bull could have no further operation, ſince the ground upon which it was granted, which was the King's deſire, did then ceaſe, any pretended deſire before he was of Age being clearly annulled and determined by that Proteſtation after he was of Age, ſo that a ſubſequent Marriage founded upon the Bull muſt needs be void. 1527.

Theſe were the grounds upon which the Canoniſts adviſed the Proceſs at Rome to be carried on. But firſt to amuſe or over-reach the Spaniard, the King ſent word to his Ambaſſador in Spain to ſilence the noiſe that was made about it in that Court. Whether the King had then reſolved on the Perſon that ſhould Succeed the Queen, when he had obtained what he deſired, or not, is much queſtioned. Some ſuggeſt that from the beginning he was taken with the charmes of Anne Boleyn, and that all this Proceſs was moved by the unſeen ſpring of that ſecret affection. Others will have this Amour to have been later in the King's thoughts. How early it came there, at this diſtance it is not eaſie to determine. But before I ſay more of it, ſhe being ſo conſiderable a Perſon in the following Relation, I ſhall give ſome account of her. "Sanders has aſſured "the World, That the King had a liking to her Mother, who was Daugh- "ter to the Duke of Norfolk, and to the end that he might enjoy her "with the leſs diſturbance, he ſent her Husband Sir Thomas Boleyn to "be Ambaſſador in France: And that after Two years abſence his Wife "being with Child, he came over, and ſued a Divorce againſt her in the "Arch-biſhop of Canterburies Court; but the King ſent the Marqueſs of "Dorſet to let him know, that ſhe was with Child by him, and that "therefore the King deſired he would paſs the matter over, and be re- "conciled to his Wife: To which he conſented. And ſo Anne Boleyn, "though ſhe went under the name of his Daughter, yet was of the King's "begetting. As he deſcribes her, ſhe was ill-ſhaped and ugly, had Six "Fingers, a Gag-tooth, and a Tumor under her Chin, with many other "unſeemly things in her Perſon. At the 15. year of her Age, he ſays, "both her Father's Butler and Chaplain lay with her: Afterwards ſhe "was ſent to France, where ſhe was at firſt kept privately in the houſe of "a Perſon of Quality, then ſhe went to the French Court, where ſhe "led ſuch a Diſſolute life, that ſhe was called the Engliſh Hackney. That "the French King liked her, and from the freedoms he took with her, "ſhe was called, the King's Mule. But returning to England, ſhe was "admitted to the Court, where ſhe quickly perceived how weary the "King was of the Queen, and what the Cardinal was deſigning; and "having gained the King's affection, ſhe governed it ſo, that by all inno- "cent freedoms ſhe drew him into her Toiles, and by the appearances "of a ſevere virtue, with which ſhe diſguiſed her ſelf, ſo encreaſed "his affection and eſteem, that he reſolved to put her in his Queens "place as ſoon as the Divorce was granted. The ſame Author adds, That "the King had likewiſe injoyed her Siſter, with a great deal more, to the "diſgrace of this Lady and her Family.

Sanders his ſtory about Anne Boleyn examined.

For this he cites Raſtal's life of Sir Tho. Moor, a Book that was never ſeen by any body elſe.

I know it is not the work of an Hiſtorian to refute the Lies of others, but rather to deliver ſuch a plain account as will be a more effectual confutation, than any thing can be that is ſaid by way of Argument, which belongs to other Writers. And at the end of this King's Reign, I intend to ſet down a Collection of the moſt Notorious Falſe-hoods of that Writer, 1527. ter, together with the evidences of their being ſo. But all this of Anne Boleyn is ſo palpable a lie, or rather a complicated heap of lies, and ſo much depends on it, that I preſume it will not offend the Reader to be detained a few minutes in the refutation of it. For if it were true, very much might be drawn from it, both to diſparage King Henry, who pretended Conſcience to annul his Marriage for the nearneſs of Affinity, and yet would after that Marry his own Daughter. It leaves alſo a foul and laſting ſtain both on the Memory of Anne Boleyn, and of her incomparable Daughter Queen Elizabeth. It alſo derogates ſo much from the firſt Reformers, who had ſome kind of dependance on Queen Anne Boleyn, that it ſeems to be of great importance for directing the Reader in the judgment he is to make of perſons and things, to lay open the falſhood of this account. It were ſufficient for blaſting it, that there is no proof pretended to be brought for any part of it, but a Book of one Raſtal a Judg, that was never ſeen by any other perſon than that Writer. The Title of the Book is the Life of Sir Thomas More: there is great reaſon to think that Raſtal never writ any ſuch Book, for it is moſt common for the Lives of great Authors to be prefixed to their Works. Now this Raſtal publiſhed all More's Works in Queen Maries Reign, to which if he had written his Life, it is likely he would have prefixt it. No evidence therefore being given for his Relation, either from Record, Letters, or the Teſtimony of any perſon who was privy to the matter, the whole is to be looked upon as a black Forgery, deviſed on purpoſe to defame Queen Elizabeth. For upon her Mothers death, who can doubt but that ſome, either to flatter the King, or to defame her, would have publiſhed theſe things, which if they had been true, could be no ſecrets? For a Lady of her Mothers condition to bear a Child, two years after her Husband was ſent out of England on ſuch a publick Employment, and a Proceſs thereupon to be entred in the Arch-biſhops Courts, are things that are not ſo ſoon to be forgotten. And that ſhe her ſelf was under ſo ill a Reputation, both in her Father's Family, and in France, for common lewdneſs, and for being the Kings Concubine, are things that could not lye hid. And yet when the Books of the Arch-biſhops Courts (which are now burnt) were extant, it was publiſhed to the World, and ſatisfaction offered to every one that would take the pains to inform themſelves that there was no ſuch thing on Record. Nor did any of the Writers of that time, either of the Imperial or Papal ſide, once mention theſe things, notwithſtanding their great occaſion to do it. But 80 years after, this Fable was invented, or at leaſt it was then firſt publiſhed, when it was ſafer to lie, becauſe none who had lived in the time could diſprove it.

Anti-Sanderus.

But it has not only no foundation, but Sanders through the vulgar errors of Liars, has ſtrained his wit to make ſo ill a ſtory of the Lady, that ſome things in his own relation, make it plainly appear to be impoſſible. For to paſs by thoſe many improbable things that he relates, as namely, That both the King of England and the French King, could be ſo taken, with ſo ugly and monſtrous a Woman, of ſo notorious and lewd manners; and that this King for the ſpace of ſeven years, that is, during the Suit of the Divorce, ſhould continue enamoured of her, and never dicover this, or having diſcovered it, ſhould yet reſolve at all hazards to make her his Wife; which are things that would require no common teſtimony to make them ſeem credible: There is beſide in that ſtory, an heap head of things ſo inconſiſtent with one another, that none but ſuch an one as Sanders could have had either blindneſs or brow enough to have made or publiſht it. For firſt, if the King, that he might the more freely enjoy Sir Thomas Boleyn's Lady, ſent him over into France, as Sanders ſays, I ſhall allow it as ſoon as may be, that it was in the very beginning of his Reign 1509. Then the time when Anne Boleyn was born, being according to Sanders his account two years after, that muſt be Anno 1511. and being, as he ſays, deflowred when ſhe was 15. that muſt be Anno 1526. Then ſome time muſt be allowed for her going to France, for her living privately there for ſome time, and afterwards for her coming to Court, and meriting thoſe Characters that he ſays went upon her; and after all that, for her return into England, and inſinuating her ſelf into the Kings favour: yet by Sanders his own Relation theſe things muſt have happened in the ſame year 1526. for in that year he makes the King think of putting away his Wife in order to Marry Anne Boleyn, when according to his account ſhe could be but 15. years old, though this King had ſent Sir Thomas Boleyn into France the firſt day of his coming to the Crown. But that he was not ſent ſo early, appears by ſeveral Grants, that I have ſeen in the Rolls, which were made to him in the firſt 4 years of the Kings Reign: They ſufficiently ſhew that he was all that while about the Kings Perſon, and mention no ſervices beyond Sea, but about the Kings Perſon, as the ground upon which they were made. Beſides, I find in the Treaty-Rolls no mention of his being Ambaſſador the firſt 8 years of the Kings Reign. In the firſt year the Biſhops of Wincheſter and Dureſme, and the Earl of Surrey, are named in the Treaty between the two Crowns, as the Kings Ambaſſadors in France. After this, none could be Ambaſſadors there for two years together, for before two years elapſed there was a War proclaimed againſt France, and when overtures were made for a Peace, it appears by the Treaty-Rolls, that the Earl of Worceſter was ſent over Ambaſſador. And when the Kings Siſter was ſent over to Lewis the French King, though Sir Thomas Boleyn went over with her he was not then ſo much conſidered as to be made an Ambaſſador. For in the Commiſſion that was given to many Perſons of Quality, to deliver her to her Husband King Lewis the 12. Sir Thomas Boleyn is not named. The Perſons in the Commiſſion are the Duke of Norfolk, the Marqueſs of Dorſet, the Biſhop of Dureſme, the Earls of Surrey, and Worceſter, the Prior of St. Johns, and Doctor Weſt Dean of Windſor. A year after that, Sir Thomas Boleyn was made Ambaſſador; but then it was too late for Anne Boleyn to be yet unborn, much leſs could it be, as Sanders ſays, that ſhe was born two years after it.

But the Learned Cambden, whoſe Study and Profeſſion led him to a more particular knowledge of theſe things, gives us another account of her birth. He ſays that ſhe was born in the year 1507. which was two years before the King came to the Crown. And if it be ſuggeſted, that then the Prince, to enjoy her Mother, prevailed with his Father to ſend her Husband beyond Sea, that muſt be done when the Prince himſelf was not 14 years of Age: ſo they muſt make him to have corrupted other Mens Wives at that Age, when yet they will not allow his Brother (no not when he was 2 years older) to have known his own Wife.

1528. But now I leave this foul Fiction, and go to deliver certain Truths. Anne Boleyn's Mother was Daughter to the Duke of Norfolk, and Siſter to the Duke that was at the time of the Divorce Lord Treaſurer. Her Fathers Mother was one of the Daughters and Heirs to the Earl of Wiltſhire and Ormond, and her great Grand-Father Sir Geoffry Boleyn, who had been Lord Major of London, Married one of the Daughters and Heirs of the Lord Haſtings; and their Family as they had mixed with ſo much great Blood, ſo had Married their Daughters to very Noble Families. She being but ſeven years old was carried over to France with the Kings Siſter, which ſhews ſhe could have none of thoſe deformities in her Perſon, ſince ſuch are not brought into the Courts and Families of Queens. And though upon the French Kings Death the Queen Dowager came ſoon back to England, yet ſhe was ſo liked in the French Court, that the next King Francis his Queen kept her about her ſelf for ſome years: and after her death the Kings Siſter the Dutcheſs of Alenſon, kept her in her Court all the while ſhe was in France; which as it ſhews there was ſomewhat extraordinary in her Perſon, ſo thoſe Princeſſes being much celebrated for their Vertues, it is not to be imagined that any Perſon ſo notoriouſly defamed as Sanders would repreſent her, was entertained in their Courts.

Her Birth, and Breeding.

When ſhe came into England is not ſo clear: it is ſaid that in the year 1522. when War was made on France, her Father who was then Ambaſſador was recalled, and brought her over with him, which is not improbable; but if ſhe came then, ſhe did not ſtay long in England, for Cambden ſays, that ſhe ſerved Queen Claudia of France till her death (which was in July 1524) and after that ſhe was taken into ſervice by K. Francis his Siſter. How long ſhe continued in that Service I do not find, but it is probable that ſhe returned out of France with her Father from his Embaſſy in the year 1527. when, as Stow ſays, he brought with him the Picture of her Miſtreſs, who was offered in Marriage to this King. If ſhe came out of France before, as thoſe Authors before-mentioned ſay, it appears that the King had no deſign upon her then, becauſe he ſuffered her to return, and when one Miſtreſs died to take another in France; but if ſhe ſtayed there all this while, then it is probable he had not ſeen her till now at laſt, when ſhe came out of the Princeſs of Alenſon's ſervice: but whenſoever it was that ſhe came to the Court of England, it is certain that ſhe was much conſidered in it. And though the Queen, who had taken her to be one of her Maids of Honour, had afterwards juſt cauſe to be diſpleaſed with her as her Rival; yet ſhe carried her ſelf ſo, that in the whole Progreſs of the Sute, I never find the Queen her ſelf, or any of her Agents, fix the leaſt ill Character on her, which would moſt certainly have been done had there been any juſt cauſe or good colour for it.

Her coming to England. L. Herbert. Title and Duplex. Cavendiſh ſays ſhe was very young. Cambden.

And ſo far was this Lady at leaſt for ſome time from any thoughts of Marrying the King, that ſhe had conſented to Marry the Lord Piercy the Earl of Northumberland's eldeſt Son, whom his Father, by a ſtrange compliance with the Cardinals vanity, had placed in his Court and made him one of his Servants. The thing is conſiderable, and clears many things that belong to this Hiſtory; and the Relator of it was an Ear-witneſs of the Diſcourſe upon it as himſelf informs us. The Cardinal hearing that the Lord Piercy was making addreſſes to Anne Boleyn, one day as he came from the Court called for him before his Servants, (before us all ſays the Relator including himſelf) and "chid him for it, pretending at firſt that it was unworthy of him to "match ſo meanly; but he juſtified his choice, and reckoned up her "Birth and Quality, which he ſaid was not inferiour to his own. And "the Cardinal inſiſting fiercely, to make him lay down his pretenſions, "he told him, he would willingly ſubmit to the King and him; but "that he had gone ſo far before many Witneſſes, that he could not "forſake it, and knew not how to diſcharge his Conſcience: and there- "fore he entreated the Cardinal would procure him the Kings Favour "in it. Upon that the Cardinal in great rage ſaid, why? thinkeſt "thou that the King and I know not what we have to do in ſo weigh- "ty a matter? yes I warrant you, but I can ſee in thee no ſubmiſſi- "on at all to the purpoſe: and ſaid, you have matched your ſelf with ſuch "an one, as neither the King, nor yet your Father will agree to it; and "therefore I will ſend for thy Father, who at his coming ſhall either "make the break this unadviſed bargain, or diſinherit thee for ever. To "which the Lord Piercy replyed, That he would ſubmit himſelf to him, "if his Conſcience were diſcharged of the weighty burden that lay upon "it, and ſoon after, his Father coming to Court he was diverted another "way. 1527.

Had that Writer told us in what year this was done, it had given a great light to direct us, but by this relation we ſee that ſhe was ſo far from thinking of the King at that time, that ſhe had engaged her ſelf another way; but how far this went on her ſide, or whether it was afterwards made uſe of, when ſhe was divorced from the King, ſhall be conſidered in its proper place. It alſo appears that there was a Deſign about her, then formed between the King and the Cardinal, yet how far that went, whether to make her Queen, or only to corrupt her, is not evident. It is ſaid, that upon this ſhe ever after hated the Cardinal, and that he never deſigned the Divorce after he ſaw on whom the King had fixed his thoughts: but all that is a miſtake, as will afterwards appear. L. Herbert

And now having made way through theſe things that were previous to the firſt motion of the Divorce, my Narration leads me next to the Motion it ſelf. The King reſolving to put the matter home to the Pope, ſent Doctor Knight Secretary of State to Rome, with ſome Inſtructions to prepare the Pope for it, and to obſerve what might be the beſt Method, and who the fitteſt Tools to work by. At that time the Family of the Caſſali being three Brothers were entertained by the King as his Agents in Italy, both in Rome, Venice, and other places. Sir Gregory Caſſali was then his ordinary Ambaſſador at Rome: To him was the firſt full diſpatch about this buſineſs directed by the Cardinal, the Original whereof is yet extant dated the 5*th* of Decemb. 1527. which the Reader will find in the Collection: but here I ſhall give the Heads of it. 1527. The King moved for his Divorce at Rome.

"After great and high Complements, and Aſſurances of Rewards "to engage him to follow the Buſineſs very vigorouſly, and with great "Diligence, he writes that he had before opened the Kings caſe to "him, and that partly by his own ſtudy, partly by the opinion of "many Divines, and other Learned men of all ſorts, he found that The firſt diſpatch about it. Collect. Numb. 3*d*.

1572 "he could no longer with a good Conſcience continue in that Mar"riage with the Queen: having God and the Quiet and Salvation of "his Soul chiefly before his Eyes. And that he had conſulted both "the moſt learned Divines and Canoniſts, as well in his own Domi"nions as elſewhere, to know whether the Popes Diſpenſation could "make it good, and that many of them thought the Pope could not "Diſpence in this caſe of the firſt degree of Affinity, which they "eſteemed forbidden by a Divine, Moral, and Natural Law; and all
"the reſt concluded, that the Pope could not do it, but upon very "weighty reaſons: and they found not any ſuch in the Bull. Then
"he lays out the reaſons for Annulling the Bull, which were touched "before, upon which they all concluded the Diſpenſation to be of "no force; that the King looked on the death of his Sons as a
"Curſe from God: and to avoid further Judgments, he now deſired
"help of the Apoſtolick See, to conſider his caſe, to reflect on what "he had merited by theſe Services he had done the Papacy, and to "find a way that he being divorced from his Queen may marry ano"ther Wife, of whom by the bleſſing of God he might hope for "iſſue Male. Therefore the Ambaſſador was to uſe all means poſſi-
"ble to be admitted to ſpeak to the Pope in private, and then to "deliver him theſe Letters of Credence, in which there was a moſt "earneſt clauſe added with the Kings own hand. He was alſo to "make a Condolance of the Miſeries the Pope and Cardinals were "in, both in the Kings name and the Cardinals, and to aſſure the "Pope they would uſe all the moſt effectual means that were poſſi-
"ſible for ſetting him at liberty, in which the Cardinal would em"ploy as much induſtry, as if their were no other way to come to "the Kingdom of Heaven but by doing it. Then he was to open "the Kings buſineſs to the Pope, the Scruples of his Conſcience, the "great danger of cruel Wars upon ſo diſputable a Succeſſion, the En"treaties of all the Nobility and the whole Kingdom, with many "other urgent reaſons, to obtain what was deſired. He was alſo to "lay before the Pope the preſent Condition of Chriſtendom and of "Italy, that he might conſider of what Importance it was to his own "affairs, and to the Apoſtolick See, to engage the King ſo firmly to "his Intereſts as this would certainly do. And to move that the Pope
"without communicating the matter to any Perſon, would freely
"grant it, and ſign the Commiſſion which was therewith ſent en-
"groſſed in due form, and ready to be ſigned, by which the Car"dinal was authorized with the Aſſiſtance of ſuch as he ſhould chooſe,
"to proceed in the matter, according to ſome Inſtructions which "were alſo ſent fairly written out for the Pope to ſign. A Diſpen"ſation was alſo ſent in due form: and if theſe were expeded, he "might aſſure the Pope that as the King had ſent over a vaſt ſum
"to the French King, for paying his Army in Italy, ſo he would "ſpare no Travel nor Treaſure, but make War upon the Emperor in "Flanders, with his whole ſtrength till he forced him to ſet the "Pope at liberty, and reſtore the State of the Church to its former "Power and Dignity. And if the Pope were already at liberty, and "had made an Agreement with the Emperour, he was to repreſent to "him how little cauſe he had to truſt much to the Emperor; who "had

"had ſo oft broke his Faith, and deſigned to do all he could towards 1527.
"the depreſſing the Eccleſiaſtical State. And the Pope was to be re-
"membred that he had diſpenced with the Emperors Oath, for Mar"rying the Kings Daughter without communicating the Matter to "King. And if he had done ſo much for one that had been his "Enemy, how much more might the King expect the like favour,
"who had always payed him a moſt filial Duty? Or if the Pope would "not grant the Commiſſion to the Cardinal to try the Matter, as a "Perſon that being the Kings chief Miniſter, was not indifferent e"nough to judge in any of the Kings Concerns; he was by all means "to overcome that, and aſſure the Pope that he would proceed in it "as a Judge ought to do. But if the Pope ſtood upon it, and would
"by no means be perſwaded to ſign the Commiſſion for the Cardi"nal, then he was to propoſe Staphileus, Dean of the Rota, who was "then in England; and was to except againſt all other Foreigners,
"if the Pope chanced to propoſe any other. He was alſo to repre-
"ſent to the Pope, that the King would look upon a delay as a De"nial, and if the Pope inclined to conſult with any of the Cardinals, "about it, he was to divert him from it all that was poſſible: but if "the Pope would needs do it, then he was to Addreſs himſelf to them,
"and partly by informing them of the reaſons of the Kings Cauſe,
"partly by rewarding the good Offices they ſhould do, he was to engage "them for the King. And with this Diſpatch Letters were ſent to Car"dinal Pucci, Sanctorum Quatuor, and the other Cardinals, to be made "uſe of as there ſhould be occaſion for it. And becauſe Money was "like to be the moſt powerful Argument, eſpecially to men impoveriſh-
"ed by a Captivity, 10000 Ducats were remitted to Venice, to be diſtri-
"buted as the Kings Affairs required; and he was empowred to make "farther promiſes, as he ſaw cauſe for it, which the King would "faithfully make good; and in particular they were to be wanting in "nothing, that might abſolutely engage the Cardinal Datary to favour
"the Kings Buſineſs.

The Pope grants it when he was in Priſon. Collect. Numb. 4th.

The ſame things had been committed to the Secretary's care, and they were both to proceed by conſert, each of them doing all that was poſſible to promote the Buſineſs. But before this reached Rome, Secretary Knight was come thither, and finding it impoſſible to be admitted to the Popes Preſence, he had by corrupting ſome of his Guards ſent him the Sum of the Kings Demands. Upon which the Pope ſent him word, that the Diſpenſation ſhould be ſent fully exped-ed. So gracious was a Pope in Captivity. But at that time the General of the Obſervants in Spain being at Rome required a Promiſe of the Pope not to grant any thing that might prejudice the Queens Cauſe till it were firſt communicated to the Imperialiſts there. But when the Pope made his eſcape, the Secretary and the Ambaſſador went to him to Orvieto about the end of December, and firſt did in the Kings and Cardinals name congratulate his freedom. Then the Secretary diſcourſed the Buſineſs. The Pope owned that he had recieved the Meſſage which he had ſent to him at Rome, but in reſpect of his Promiſe, and that yet in a manner he was in Captivity, he begged the King would have a little Patience, and he ſhould before long have not only that Diſpenſation, but any thing elſe that lay in his 1527. Power. But the Secretary not being satisfied with that excuse, the Pope in the end said, he should have it; but with this condition, That he would beseech the King not to proceed upon it, till the Pope were fully at Liberty, and the Germans and Spaniards were driven out of Italy. And upon the Kings promising this, the Dispensation was to be put in his hands. So the Secretary, who had a great mind once to have the Bull in his possession, made no scruple to engage his promise for that. The Pope also told them he was not expert in those things, but he easily apprehended the danger that might arise from any dispute about the Succession to the Crown, and that therefore he would communicate the business to the Cardinal Sanctorum Quatuor; upon which they resolved to prevent that Cardinals being with the Pope, and went and delivered the Letters they had for him, and promised him a good reward if he were favourable to their Requests in the Kings behalf. Then they shewed him the Commissions that were sent from England; but he upon the perusal of them, said, They could not pass without a perpetual dishonour on the Pope and the King too, and excepted to several Clauses that were in them. So they desired him to draw one that might both be sufficient for the Kings purpose, and such as the Pope might with honour grant. Which being done, the Pope told them, That though he apprehended great danger to himself, if the Emperour should know what he had done; yet he would rather expose himself to utter ruin, than give the King, or the Cardinal cause to think him Ingrate; but with many sighs and tears, he begged that the King would not precipitate things, or expose him to be undone, by beginning any Process upon the Bull. And so he delivered the Commission and Dispensation Signed to Knight. But the means that the Pope proposed for his publishing and owning what he now granted, was, that Lautrech with the French Army should march, and coming where the Pope was, should require him to grant the Commission: So that the Pope should excuse himself to the Emperor, that he had refused to grant it upon the desire of the English Ambassador, but that he could not deny the General of the French Army, to do an Act of publick justice: and by this means he would save his honour, and not seem guilty of breach of promise; and then he would dispatch the Commission about the time of Lautrech's being near him, and therefore he entreated the King to accept of what was then granted for the present. The Commission and Dispensation was given to the Secretary: and they promised to send the Bull after him, of the same form that was desired from England, and the Pope engaged to reform it as should be found needful. And it seems by these Letters that a Dispensation and Commission had been Signed by the Pope when he was a Prisoner; but they thought not fit to make any use of them, lest they should be thought null, as being granted when the Pope was in Captivity.

Power

And being at liberty gives a Bull for it.

The Pope's craft and policy.

Thus the Pope expressed all the readiness that could be expected from him, in the circumstances he was then in; being overaw'd by the Imperialists, who were harassing the Country, and taking Castles very near the place where he was. Lautrech which the French Army lay still fast about Bononia, and as the season of the year was not favourable, so he did not express any inclinations to enter into action. earneſt of what he was to expect when the matter ſhould be brought to a final concluſion. In this whole matter the Pope carried himſelf as a Wiſe and Politick Prince, that conſidered his Intereſt, and provided againſt dangers with great fore-ſight. But as for Apoſtolical Wiſdom and the Simplicity of the Goſpel, that was not to be expected from him, For now, though the high-ſounding Names of Chriſts Vicar, and St. Peters Succeſſor, were ſtill retained to keep up the Popes Dignity and Authority, yet they had for many Ages governed themſelves as Secular Princes; ſo that the Maxims of that Court were no more to keep a good Conſcience, and to proceed according to the Rules of the Goſpel, and the Practice of the Primitive Church, committing the event to God, and ſubmitting to his Will in all things: but the keeping a ballance, the maintaining their Intereſt in the Courts of Princes, the ſecuring their Dominions, and the raiſing their Families, being that which they chiefly looked at, it is not to be wondred at, that the Pope governed himſelf by theſe meaſures, though Religion was to be made uſe of to help him out of ſtraits. All this I ſet down the more particularly, both becauſe I take my information from Original Letters, and that it may clearly appear how matters went at that time in the Court of Rome. 1528.

Secretary Knight being Infirm, could not travel with that haſt that was required in this buſineſs, and therefore he ſent the Proto-Notary Gambara with the Commiſſion and Diſpenſation to England, and followed in eaſie journies. The Cardinals that had been conſulted with, did all expreſs great readineſs in granting the Kings deſire. The Cardinal Datary had forſaken the Court, and betaken himſelf to ſerve God and his Cure; and other Cardinals were Hoſtages, ſo that now there were but Five about the Pope, Monte, Sanctorum Quatuor, Ridolphi, Ravennate and Peruſino. But a motion being made of ſending over a Legate, the Pope would by no means hearken to it, for that would draw new troubles on him from the Emperor. That had been deſired from England by a diſpatch of the 27*th* of December, which preſſed a ſpeedy concluſion of the buſineſs; upon which the Pope on the 12*th* of January, did communicate the matter under the Seal of Confeſſion to the Cardinals Sanctorum Quatuor and Simoneta, (who was then come to the Court) and upon conference with them, he propoſed to Sir Gregory Caſſali, that he thought the ſafer way was, "That either by Vertue of the Commiſſion "that the Secretary had obtained, or by the Legantine Power that was "lodged with the Cardinal of York, he ſhould proceed in the buſineſs. "And if the King found the matter clear in his own Conſcience, (in "which the Pope ſaid, No Doctor in the whole World could reſolve the "matter better than the King himſelf) he ſhould without more noiſe, "make judgment be given; and preſently Marry another Wife, and "then ſend for a Legate to Confirm the matter. And it would be eaſier "to ratifie all when it was once done, than to go on in a Proceſs from "Rome. For the Queen would proteſt, that both the Place and the "Judges were ſuſpected and not free, upon which, in the courſe of Law, "the Pope muſt grant an Inhibition for the Kings not Marrying another "while the Suit depended, and muſt avocate the buſineſs to be heard in "the Court of Rome; which, with other prejudices, were unavoidable "in a publick Proceſs by Bulls from Rome. But if the thing went on in 1528. "England, had the King had once married another Wife, the Pope then "would find very good reasons to justifie the confirming a thing that was "gone so far, and promised to send any Cardinal whom they should name. This the Pope desired the Ambassador would signifie to the King, as the advice of the two Cardinals, and take no notice of him in it. But the dispatch shews he was a more faithful Minister than to do so.

"England

The Ambassador found all the earnestness in the Pope that was possible, to comply with the King; and that he was jealous both of the Emperor and Francis, and depended wholly on the King; so that he found if the terror of the Imperial Forces were over, the Court of England would dispose of the Apostolical See as they pleased. And indeed this advice, how little soever it had of the Simplicity of the Gospel, was certainly prudent and subtil, and that which of all things the Spaniards apprehended most. And therefore the General of the Observants moved Cardinal Campegius, then at Rome, for an Inhibition, lest the Process should be carried on and determined in England. But that being signified to the Pope, he said, It could not be granted, since there was no Suit depending, in which case only an Inhibition can be granted.

Staphileus sent from England.

But now I must look over again to England, to open the Counsels there. At that time Staphileus Dean of the Rota was there; and he either to make his Court the better, or that he was so perswaded in opinion seemed fully satisfied about the Justice of the Kings Cause. So they sent him to Rome with Instructions both publick and secret. The publick Instructions related to the Popes Affairs, in which all possible Assistance was promised by the King. But one Proposition in them flowed from the Cardinals Ambition, "That the Kings of England and France

It cannot be imagined but the Pope would be offended with this Proposition, and apprehend that the Cardinal of York was not satisfied to be intriguing for the Popedom after his death, but was aspiring to it while he was alive. For as it was plain, he was the Person that must be chosen for that trust; so if the Pope were used hardly by the Emperor, and forced to ill conditions, the Vicar so chosen and his Cardinals would disown those Conditions, which might end in a Schism or his Deposition. But Staphileus his secret Instructions, related wholly to the Kings business, which were these: "That the King had opened to him the error of his "Marriage; and that the said Bishop out of his great Learning, did now "clearly perceive how invalid and insufficient it was: Therefore the "King recommended it to his care, that he would convince the Pope and "the Cardinals, with the Arguments that had been laid before him, and "of which a Breviate was given him. He was also to represent the great "mischiefs that might follow, if Princes got not justice and ease from

"the Apoſtolick See. Therefore if the Pope were yet in Captivity 1528.
"he was to propoſe a meeting of the Cardinals, for chooſing the Car"dinal of York to be their Head, during the Popes Impriſonment, or "that a full Commiſſion might be ſent to him for the Kings matter. And "in particular he was to take care that the Buſineſs might be tryed in "England. And for his pains in promoting the Kings Concerns, the "King promiſed to procure a Biſhoprick for him in France; and to "help him to a Cardinals Hat. By him the King wrote to the Pope.
The rude draught of it remains under the Cardinals hand, earneſtly deſiring a ſpeedy and favourable diſpatch of his buſineſs with a Credence to the Bearer.

The Cardinal alſo wrote to the Pope by him; and after a long Congratulating his Liberty with many ſharp reflections on the Emperor, he preſſed a Diſpatch of the Kings buſineſs, in which he would not uſe many words: this only I will add, ſays he, That that which is "deſired is holy and juſt, and very much for the ſafety and quiet of "this Kingdom, which is moſt devoted to the Apoſtolical See. He "alſo wrote by the ſame hand to the Ambaſſador, that the King would "have things ſo carried, that all occaſion of diſcontent or cavilling, "whether at home or abroad, might be removed; and therefore deſired "that another Cardinal might be ſent Legate to England, and joyned "in Commiſſion with himſelf for judging the Matter. He named ei-"ther Campegius, Tranus, or Farneſe: Or if that could not be obtain-"ed, that a fuller Commiſſion might be ſent to himſelf, with all poſſible "haſte, ſince delays might produce great inconveniences. If a Legate "were named, then care muſt be taken that he ſhould be one who were "Learned, Indifferent, and Tractable; and if Campegius could be the "Man, he was the fitteſt perſon. And when one was named he ſhould "make him a decent Preſent, and aſſure him that the King would moſt "liberally recompence all his labour and expence. He alſo required him "to preſs his ſpeedy Diſpatch, and that the Commiſſion ſhould be full "to try and determine, without any reſervation of the Sentence to be "given by the Pope. This Diſpatch is interlined, and amended with the Cardinals own hand. The Cardinals Letters by him.

But upon the Arrival of the Meſſenger whom the Secretary had ſent, with the Commiſſion and Diſpenſation, and the other Packets before-mentioned; It was debated in the Kings Council, whether he ſhould go on in his Proceſs, or continue to ſolicite new Bulls from Rome. On the one hand, they ſaw how tedious, dangerous, and expenſive a Proceſs at Rome was like to prove: and therefore it ſeemed the eaſieſt and moſt expedite way to proceed before the Cardinal in his Legantine Court, who ſhould ex officio, and in the Summary way of the Court, bring it to a ſpeedy Concluſion. But on the other hand, if the Cardinal gave Sentence, and the King ſhould Marry, then they were not ſure, but before that time the Pope might either change his mind, or his Intereſt might turn him another way. And the Popes Power was ſo abſolute by the Canon Law, that no general Clauſes in Commiſſions to Legates, could bind him to confirm their Sentences: and if upon the Kings Marrying another Wife, the Pope ſhould refuſe to confirm it, then the King would be in a worſe caſe than he was now in, and his Marriage and Iſſue by it ſhould be ſtill diſputable: A Larger Bull deſired by the King.

1528. disputable: Therefore they thought this was by no means to be adventured on, but they should make new Addresses to the Court of Rome. In the debate, some sharp words fell either from the King, or some of his Secular Counsellors; Intimating that if the Pope continued under such fears the King must find some other way to set him at ease. So it was resolved that Stephen Gardiner, commoly called Doctor Stevens, the Cardinals chief Secretary, and Edward Fox the Kings Almoner, should be sent to Rome; the one being esteemed the ablest Canonist in England, the other one of the best Divines, they were dispatched the 10*th* of February. "By them the King wrote to the Pope thanking him, that he had expressed such forward and earnest willingness "to give him ease: and had so kindly promised to gratifie his desires, "of which he expected now to see the effects. He wrote also to the "Cardinals, his thanks for the chearfulness with which they had in "Consistory promised to promote his Sute; for which he assured them "they should never have cause to repent. But the Cardinal wrote in "a strain, that shews he was in some fear that if he could not bring about the Kings desires, he was like to lose his favour. "He besought "the Pope as lying at his feet, that if he thought him a Christian, "a good Cardinal, and not unworthy of that Dignity, and useful Member of the Apostolick See, a Promoter of Justice and Equity, or "thought him his faithful Creature, or that he desired his own eternal Salvation, that he would now so far consider his Intercession, as "to grant kindly and speedily that which the King earnestly desired; "which if he did not know to be Holy, Right, and Just, he would "undergo any hazard or punishment whatsoever, rather than promote it; but he did apprehend if the King found that the Pope was "so over-awed by the Emperor, as not to grant that which all Christendom judged was grounded both on the Divine and Humane Laws, "both he and other Christian Princes would from thence take occasion to provide themselves of other Remedies, and lessen and despise "the Authority of the Apostolick See. In his Letters to Cassali he expressed a great sense of the Services which the Cardinal Sanctorum Quatuor had done the King; and bid him enquire what were the things in which he delighted most, whether Furniture, Gold, Plate, or Horses, that they might make him acceptable Presents; and assure him that the King would contribute largely towards the carrying on the building of St. Peters in the Vatican.

The most Important thing about which they were employed, was to procure the expediting of a Bull which was formed in England, with all the strongest Clauses that could be imagined. In the Preamble of which all the Reasons against the validity of the Bull of P. Julius the second, were recited: and it was also hinted that it was against "the Law of God; but to lessen that, it was added, at least where there "was not a sufficient Dispensation obtained: therefore the Pope, to reward the great Services by which the King had obliged the Apostolick See, and having regard to the Distractions that might follow "on a Disputable Title; upon a full Consultation with the Cardinals, having also heard the Opinions of Divines and Canonists, "Deputed —— for his Legate, to concur with the Cardinal of York, either together, or (the one being hindred, or unwilling) severally.

The substance of the Bull desired by them. Collection Number 10.

And

"And if they found thoſe things that were ſuggeſted againſt the Bull "of P. Julius, or any of them, well or ſufficiently proved, then to "declare it void and null, as ſurreptitiouſly procured, upon falſe "grounds; and thereupon to Annul the Marriage that had followed "upon it: And to give both Parties full leave to Marry again, not-"withſtanding any Appellation or Proteſtation, the Pope making "them his Vicars, with full and abſolute Power and Authority: "empowering them alſo to declare the Iſſue begotten in the former "Marriage good and legitimate, if they ſaw cauſe for it. The Pope "binding himſelf to confirm whatever they ſhould do in that Proceſs, "and never to revoke or repeal what they ſhould pronounce. De-"claring alſo that this Bull ſhould remain in force till the Proceſs "were ended, and that by no Revocation or Inhibition it ſhould be "recalled; and if any ſuch were obtained, theſe are all declared void "and null, and the Legates were to proceed notwithſtanding: and all "ended with a full Non obſtante. 1527.

This was judged the uttermoſt force that could be in a Bull: Though the Civilians would ſcarce allow any validity at all in theſe extravagant Clauſes: but the moſt material thing in this Bull, is, that it ſeems the King was not fully reſolved to declare his Daughter illegitimate. Whether he pretended this, to mitigate the Queens, or the Emperors oppoſition, or did really intend it, is not clear. But what he did afterwards in Parliament, ſhews, he had this deep in his thoughts, though the Queens Carriage did ſoon after provoke him to purſue his reſentments againſt her Daughter. The French King did alſo joyn a moſt earneſt Letter of his to the Pope, which they were alſo to deliver. They had likewiſe a ſecret Inſtruction by all means to endeavour that Cardinal Campegio ſhould be the Legate: he had the reputation of a Learned Canoniſt, and they knew he was a tractable man: and beſides that, he was Biſhop of Salisbury, the King had obliged him by the grant of a Palace, which the King was building in Burgo at Rome for his Ambaſſadors, which before it was finiſhed he had by a Patent given to him and his Heirs: ſo they had better hopes of him than of any other. Rot. Pat. 2^d Pars. R. 1^o

By theſe Ambaſſadors the Cardinal wrote a long and moſt earneſt Letter to John Caſſali the Proto-Notarie, that was the Ambaſſadors Brother. In which all the Arguments that a moſt anxious mind could invent or dictate, are laid together to perſwade the Pope to grant the Kings deſires. Among other things he tells him, "How he had "engaged to the King, that the Pope would not deny it; That the King "both out of ſcruple of Conſcience, and becauſe of ſome Diſeaſes in "the Queen, that were incurable, had reſolved never to come near "her more; and that if the Pope continued, out of his partial reſpects "to the Emperor, to be inexorable, the King would proceed another "way. He offers to take all the blame of it upon his own Soul, if it were amiſs; with many other Particulars in which he is ſo preſſing, that I cannot imagine what moved the Lord Herbert, who ſaw thoſe Letters, to think that the Cardinal did not really intend the Divorce. He (it ſeems) ſaw another Paper of their Inſtructions, by which they were ordered to ſay to the Pope, that the Cardinal was not the Author of the Counſel. But all that was intended by that, was only The Cardinals Earneſtneſs in this matter. Collection Number 11

1527. to excuse him so far, that he might not be thought too partial, and an incompetent Judge. For as he was far from disowning the justice of the Kings Sute, so he would not have trusted a Secret of that Importance to Paper, which when it should be known to the King, would have lost him his favour. But undoubtedly it was concerted between the King and him to remove an Exception, which otherwise the Cardinals of the Imperial Faction would have made, to his being the Judge in that matter.

Collection Number 12. With those Letters and Instructions were Gardiner and Fox sent to Rome, where both the Cassalies and Staphileus were promoting the Kings business all they could. And being strengthned with the Accession of those other two they made a greater progress; so that in April the Pope did in Consistory, declare Cardinal Campegio Legate to go to England, that he with the Cardinal of York might try the validity of the Kings Marriage: But that Cardinal made great excuses: he was then Legate at Rome, in which he had such advantages, that he had no mind to enter in a business which must for ever engage either the Emperor or the King against him. He also pretended an Inability to travel so great a Journey, being much subject to the Gout. But when this was known in England, the Cardinal wrote him a most earnest Letter, to hasten over, and bring with him all such things as were necessary for making their Sentence firm and irreversible, so that it might never again be questioned.

Campegio declared Legate. Collection Number 13.

Wolsey writes to him to haste over. May 7.

But here I shall add a Remark, which though it is of no great importance, yet will be diverting to the Reader. The draught of the Letter is in Wolsey's Secretaries hand, amended in some places by his own; and concluded thus, I hope all things shall be done according to the Will of God, the Desire of the King, the Quiet of the Kingdom, and to our honour with a good Conscience. But the Cardinal dasht out this last word with a good conscience; perhaps judging that was a thing fit for meaner persons, but that it was below the Dignity of two Cardinals to consider it much. He wrote also to Cassali high Complements for his diligence in the Step that was made, but desired him with all possible means to get the Bull granted and trusted to his keeping, with the deepest Protestations, that no use should be made of it, but that the King only should see it; by which his mind would be at ease, and he being put in good hopes would employ his Power in the Service of the Pope and Apostolick See: but the Pope was not a Man to be cozen'd so easily.

May 23. When the Cardinal heard by the next Dispatch what excuses and delays Campegio made, he wrote to him again, and pressed his coming over in haste. "For his being Legate of Rome he desired him to name "a Vice-Legate. For his want of Money and Horses, Gardiner would "furnish him as he desired, and he should find an equipage ready for "him in France; and he might certainly expect great Rewards from "the King. But if he did not make more haste, the King would in- "cline to believe an Advertisement that was sent him, of his turning "over to the Emperors Party. Therefore if he either valued the "Kings kindness, or were grateful for the favours he had received "from him; if he valued the Cardinals Friendship or Safety, or if he "would hinder the diminution of the Authority of the Roman Church, "all excuses set aside, he must make what haste in his Journey was pos- sible.

sible. Yet the Legate made no great haſte, for till October following he came not into England. The Bull that was deſired could not be obtained, but another was granted, which perhaps was of more force becauſe it had not thoſe extraordinary Clauſes in it. There is the Copy of a Bull to this purpoſe in the Cottonian Library, which has been printed more than once by ſome that have taken it for a Copy of the ſame Bull that was ſent by Campegio: but I take it to be rather a Copy of that Bull which the Pope Signed at Rome while he was there a Priſoner, and probably afterward at Orvieto he might give it the date that it bears 1527. Decemb. 17. But that there was a Decretal Bull ſent by Campegio will appear evidently in the Sequel of this Relation. About this time I meet with the firſt evidence of the progreſs of the Kings love to Anne Boleyn, in two Original Letters of hers to the Cardinal, from which it appears, not only that the King had then reſolved to Marry her, but that the Cardinal was privy to it. They bear no date, but the matter of them ſhews they were written after the end of May, when the Sweating-ſickneſs began, and about the time that the Legate was expected. They give ſuch a light to the Hiſtory, that I ſhall not caſt them over to the Collection at the end, but ſet them down here.

Two Letters of Anne Boleyn's to Wolſey

MY Lord, in my moſt humbleſt wiſe that my heart can think, I deſire you to pardon me that I am ſo bold to trouble you with my ſimple and rude writing, eſteeming it to proceed from her, that is much deſirous to know that your Grace does well, as I perceive by this Bearer that you do. The which I pray God long to continue, as I am moſt bound to pray; for I do know the great pains and troubles that you have taken for me both day and night, is never like to be recompenced on my part, but alonely in loving you next unto the Kings Grace, above all Creatures living. And I do not doubt but the daily proofs of my deeds, ſhall manifeſtly declare and affirm my writing to be true, and I do truſt you do think the ſame. My Lord, I do aſſure you I do long to hear from you news of the Legate: for I do hope and they come from you they ſhall be very good, and I am ſure you deſire it as much as I, and more, and it were poſſible, as I know it is not: and thus remaining in a ſteadfaſt hope, I make an end of my Letter written with the Hand of her that is moſt bound to be.

A Poſtſcript of the Kings to him.

THE writer of this Letter would not ceaſe till ſhe had cauſed me likewiſe to ſet to my Hand; deſiring you, though it be ſhort to take it in good part. I enſure you there is neither of us, but that greatly deſireth to ſee you, and much more joyous to hear that you have ſcaped this Plague ſo well, truſting the fury thereof to be paſſed, ſpecially with them that keepeth good diet as I truſt you do. The not hearing of the Legates Arrival in France, cauſeth us ſomewhat to muſe; notwithſtanding we truſt by your diligence and vigilancy (with the aſſiſtance of Almighty God) ſhortly to be eaſed out of that trouble. No more to you at this time; but that I pray God ſend you as good health and proſperity as the Writer would.

My

1528. *MY Lord, In my moſt humble wiſe that my poor heart can think, I do thank your Grace for your kind Letter, and for your rich and goodly Preſent, the which I ſhall never be able to deſerve without your help: of the which I have hitherto had ſo great plenty, that all the days of my life I am moſt bound of all Creatures, next the Kings Grace, to love and ſerve your Grace: of the which I beſeech you never to doubt, that ever I ſhall vary from this thought as long as any breath is in my body. And as touching your Graces trouble with the ſweat, I thank our Lord, that them that I deſired and prayed for, are ſcaped, and that is the King and you; not doubting but that God has preſerved you both for great cauſes known alonely of his high wiſdom. And as for the coming of the Legate, I deſire that much, and if it be Gods pleaſure, I pray him to ſend this matter ſhortly to a good end, and then I truſt, my Lord, to recompence part of your great pains. In the which I muſt require you in the mean time to accept my good-will in the ſtead of the power, the which muſt proceed partly from you, as our Lord knoweth; to whom I beſeech to ſend you long life, with continuance in honour. Collection Number 14.

The Cardinal hearing that Campegius had the Decretal Bull committed to his Truſt, to be ſhewed only to the King and himſelf, wrote to the Ambaſſador that it was neceſſary it ſhould be alſo ſhewed to ſome of the Kings Council; not to make any uſe of it, but that thereby they might underſtand how to manage the Proceſs better by it. This he begged might be truſted to his care and fidelity, and he undertook to manage it ſo, that no kind of danger could ariſe out of it.

The Cardinals Colledges finiſhed.

At this time the Cardinal having finiſhed his Foundations at Oxford and Ipſwich, and finding they were very acceptable, both to the King and to the Clergy, reſolved to go on, and ſuppreſs more Monaſteries, and erect new Biſhopricks, turning ſome Abbies to Cathedrals. This was propoſed in the Conſiſtory, and granted, as appears by a Diſpatch of Caſſali's. He alſo ſpoke to the Pope about a general Viſitation of all Monaſteries. And on the 4*th* of November, the Bull for ſuppreſſing ſome was expected, a Copy whereof is yet extant, but written in ſuch a Hand, that I could not read three words together in any place of it; and though I tried others that were good at reading all Hands, yet they could not do it. But I find by the diſpatch that the Pope did it with ſome averſion; and when Gardiner told him plainly, it was neceſſary and it muſt be done, he paused a little, and ſeemed unwilling to give any further offence to Religious Orders: But ſince he found it ſo uneaſie to gratifie the King in ſo great a Point, as the matter of his Divorce, he judged it the more neceſſary to mollifie him by a compliance in all other things. So there was a power given to the Two Legates to examine the ſtate of the Monaſteries, and to ſuppreſs ſuch as they thought fit, and convert them into Biſhopricks and Cathedrals.

Oſiob. 30.

More Monaſteries were to be ſuppreſſed.

While

While matters went thus between Rome and England, the Queen was as active as ſhe could be, to engage her Two Nephews, the Emperor, and his Brother, to appear for her. She complained to them much of the King, but more of the Cardinal: She alſo gave them notice of all the Exceptions that were made to the Bull, and deſired both their advice and aſſiſtance: They having a mind to perplex the Kings Affairs, adviſed her by no means to yield, nor to be induced to enter into a Religious Life; and gave her aſſurance, that by their Intereſt at Rome, they would ſupport her, and maintain her Daughters Title, if it went to extremities. And as they employed all their Agents at Rome to ſerve her Concerns, ſo they conſulted with the Canoniſts about the force of the Exceptions to the Bull. The Iſſue of which was, that a Breve was found out, or forged, that ſupplied ſome of the moſt material defects in the Bull. For whereas in the Bull, the Preamble bore, that the King and Queen had deſired the Popes Diſpenſation to Marry, that the Peace might continue between the Two Crowns without any other cauſe given: In the Preamble of this Breve, mention is made of their deſire to Marry, "becauſe otherwiſe it was not likely that the Peace would be "continued between the Two Crowns. And for that, and divers other "reaſons they asked the Diſpenſation. Which in the body of the Breve is granted, bearing date the 26*th* of December, 1503. Upon this they pretended that the Diſpenſation was granted upon good Reaſons; ſince by this Petition it appeared, that there were fears of a Breach between the Crowns: And that there were alſo other reaſons made uſe of, though they were not named. But there was one Fatal thing in it. In the Bull it is only ſaid, That the Queens Petition bore, That perhaps ſhe had Conſummated her Marriage with Prince Arthur, by the Carnalis Copula. But in this perhaps is left out, and 'tis plainly ſaid, That they had Conſummated their Marriage. This the Kings Council, who ſuſpected that the Breve was forged, made great uſe of when the Queſtion was argued, whether Prince Arthur knew her or not? Though at this time 'twas ſaid, the Spaniards did put it in on deſign, knowing it was like to be proved, that the former Marriage was Conſummated: which they intended to throw out of the debate, ſince by this it appeared that the Pope did certainly know that, and yet granted the Breve; and that therefore there was to be no more enquiry to be made into that, which was already confeſſed: ſo that all that was now to be debated, was the Popes power of granting ſuch a Diſpenſation, in which they had good reaſon to expect a favourable Deciſion at Rome.

1528. The Emperor oppoſes the Kings Suit.

A Breve found out in Spain Collection Number 15.

But there appeared great grounds to reject this Breve as a forged Writing. It was neither in the Records of England, nor Spain, but ſaid to be found amongſt the Papers of D. de Puebla, that had been the Spaniſh Ambaſſador in England at the time of concluding the Match. So that if he only had it, it muſt have been caſſated, otherwiſe the Parties concerned would have got it into their hands: Or elſe it was forged ſince. Many of the Names were written falſe, which was a preſumption that it was lately made by ſome Spaniards, who knew not how to write the Names true. For Sigiſmund, who was Secretary, when it was pretended to have been Signed, was an exact Man, and no ſuch errors were found in Breves at that time. But that which ſhewed it a manifeſt Forgery, was, that it bore date the 26*th* of December Anno 1503. on the ſame day that the Bull Preſumptions of its being forged.

1528. Bull was granted. It was not to be imagined that in the ſame day a Bull, and a Breve, ſhould have been expedited in the ſame buſineſs, with ſuch material differences in them. And the ſtile of the Court of Rome had this ſingularity in it; That in all their Breves, they reckon the beginning of the year from Chriſtmas-day, which being the Nativity of our Lord, they count the year to begin then. But in their Bulls they reckon the year to begin at the Feaſt of the Annunciation. So that a Breve dated the 26th of December, 1503. was in the vulgar account in the year 1502. therefore it muſt be falſe; for neither was Julius the ſecond, who granted it, then Pope, nor was the Treaty of the Marriage ſo far advanced at that time, as to admit of a Breve ſo ſoon. But allowing the Breve to be true, they had many of the ſame Exceptions to it, that they had to the Bull, ſince it bore that the King deſired the Marriage, to avoid a Breach between the Crowns, which was falſe. It likewiſe bore that the Marriage had been Conſummated between the Queen and Prince Arthur, which the Queen denied was ever done; ſo that the ſuggeſtion in her Name being as ſhe ſaid, falſe, it could have no force, though it were granted to be a true Breve: And they ſaid, it was plain, the Imperialiſts were convinced the Bull was of no force, ſince they betook themſelves to ſuch Arts to fortifie their Cauſe.

Campegio comes into England.

When Cardinal Campegio came to England, he was received with the publick Solemnities ordinary in ſuch a Caſe, and in his Speech at his firſt Audience, he called the King the Deliverer of the Pope, and of the City of Rome, with the higheſt complements that the occaſion did require. But when he was admitted to a private Conference with the King and the Cardinal, he uſed many Arguments to diſſwade the King from proſecuting the matter any further. This the King took very ill, as if his errand had been rather to confirm than annul his Marriage; and complained that the Pope had broken his word to him. But the Legate ſtudied to qualifie him, and ſhewed the Decretal Bull, by which he might ſee, that though the Pope wiſhed rather that the buſineſs might come to a more friendly concluſion; yet if the King could not be brought to that, he was empowered to grant him all that he deſired. But he could not be brought to part with the Decretal Bull out of his hands, or to leave it for a minute, either with the King or the Cardinal: ſaying, That it was demanded on theſe terms, that no other perſon ſhould ſee it; and that Gardiner and the Ambaſſador had only moved to have it expedited, and ſent by the Legate, to let the King ſee how well the Pope was affected to him. With all this the King was much diſſatisfied; but to encourage him again, the Legate told him, he was to ſpeak to the Queen in the Popes Name, to induce her to enter into a Religious Life, and to make the Vows. But when he propoſed that to her, ſhe anſwered him modeſtly, that ſhe could not diſpoſe of her ſelf, but by the advice of her Nephews.

And ſhews the King the Bull.

But refuſes to let it be ſeen to the Council.

Wolſey's endeavour at Rome that it might be ſhowed.

Of all this the Cardinal of York advertiſed the Caſſalies, and * ordered them to uſe all poſſible endeavours, that the Bull might be ſhewn to ſome of the Kings Council. Upon that (Sir Gregory being then out of Rome) the Proto-Notary went to the Pope, and complained that Campegio had diſſwaded the Divorce. The Pope juſtified him in it, and ſaid, He did as he had ordered him. He next complained that the Legate would not proceed to execute the Legantine Commiſſion. The Pope denied that he

he had any order from him to delay his proceedings, but that by vertue of his Commiſſion they might go on and paſs Sentence. Then the Proto-Notary preſſed him for leave to ſhew the Bull to ſome of the Kings Council, complaining of Campegio's ſtiffneſs in refuſing it, and that he would not truſt it to the Cardinal of York, who was his equal in the Commiſſion. To this the Pope anſwered in paſſion, That he could ſhew the Cardinals Letter, in which he aſſures him, that the Bull ſhould only be ſhowed to the King and himſelf; and that if it were not granted he was ruined, therefore to preſerve him he had ſent it, but had ordered it to be burnt when it was once ſhowed. He wiſhed he had never ſent it, ſaying, he would glady loſe a Finger to recover it again, and expreſſed great grief for granting it: and ſaid, They had got him to ſend it, and now would have it ſhowed, to which he would never conſent, for then he was undone for ever. Upon this, the Proto-Notary laid before him the danger of loſing the King, and the Kingdom of England; of ruining the Cardinal of York, and of the undoing of their Family, whoſe hopes depended on the Cardinal; and that by theſe means Hereſie would prevail in England, which if it once had got footing there, would not be ſo eaſily rooted out: That all perſons judged the Kings Cauſe right; but though it were not ſo, ſome things that were not good, muſt be born with to avoid greater evils. And at laſt he fell down at his feet, and in moſt paſſionate expreſſions begged him to be more compliant to the Kings deſires, and at leaſt not to deny that ſmall favour of ſhowing the Decretal to ſome few Counſellors, upon the aſſurance of abſolute ſecrecy: But the Pope interrupted him, and with great ſigns of an unuſual grief, told him, theſe ſad effects could not be charged on him, he had kept his word, and done what he had promiſed, but upon no conſideration would he do any thing that might wound his Conſcience, or blemiſh his Integrity. Therefore let them proceed as they would in England, he ſhould be free of all blame, but ſhould confirm their Sentence. And he proteſted he had given Campegio no commands to make any delays, but only to give him notice of their proceedings. If the King, who had maintained the Apoſtolick See, had written for the Faith, and was the Defender of it, would over-turn it, it would end in his own diſgrace. But at laſt the ſecret came out, for the Pope confeſſed there was a League in Treaty between the Emperor and himſelf; but denied that he had bound himſelf up by it, as to the Kings buſineſs.

But all in vain.

The Pope conſulted with the Cardinals, Sanctorum Quatuor and Simonetta, (not mentioning the Decretal to them, which he had granted without communicating it to any body, or entring it in any Regiſter) and they were of opinion that the Proceſs ſhould be carried on in England, without demanding any thing further from Rome. But the Imperial Cardinals ſpake againſt it, and were moving preſently for an Inhibition, and an Avocation of the Cauſe, to be tryed at the Court of Rome. The Pope alſo took notice, that the Interceſſion of England and France had not prevailed with the Venetians to reſtore Cervia and Ravenna, which they had taken from him; and that he could not think that Republick durſt do ſo, if theſe Kings were in earneſt. It had been promiſed that they ſhould be reſtored as ſoon as his Legate was ſent to England, but it was not yet done. The Proto-Notary told him it ſhould moſt certainly be done. Thus ended that Converſation. But the more earneſt 1528. the Cardinal was to have the Bull ſeen by ſome of the Privy-Council, the Pope was the more confirmed in his reſolutions never to conſent to it. For he could not imagine the deſire of ſeeing it was a bare curioſity, or only to direct the Kings Counſellors; ſince the King and the Cardinal could inform them of all the material Clauſes that were in it. Therefore he judged the deſire of ſeeing it was only that they might have ſo many witneſſes to prove that it was once granted, whereby they had the Pope in their power; and this he judged too dangerous for him to ſubmit to.

The Pope ſends Campana to England Collect. Numb. 18th.

But the Pope finding the King and the Cardinal ſo ill ſatisfied with him, reſolved to ſend Franciſco Campana, one of his Bed-chamber, to England, to remove all miſtakes, and to feed the King with freſh hopes. In England, Campegio found ſtill means by new delays to put off the buſineſs, and amuſed the King with new and ſubtle motions for ending the matter more dextrouſly. Upon which, in the beginning of December, Sir Francis Brian and Peter Vannes, the Kings Secretary for the Latine Tongue were ſent to Rome. They had it in Commiſſion to ſearch all the Records there, for the Breve that was now ſo much talked of in Spain. They were to propoſe ſeveral overtures. "Whether if the Queen vowed Re"ligion, the Pope would not diſpence with the Kings ſecond Marriage?
"or if the Queen would not vow Religion, unleſs the King alſo did it,
"whether in that caſe would the Pope diſpence with his vow? or whe"ther if the Queen would hear of no ſuch propoſition, would not the "Pope diſpence with the Kings having two Wives? For which there "were divers precedents vouched from the Old Teſtament. They were to repreſent to the Pope that the King had laid out much of his beſt Treaſure in his Service, and therefore he expected the higheſt favours out of the deepeſt Treaſure of the Church. And Peter Vannes was commanded to tell the Pope as of himſelf, that if he did for partial reſpects and fears, refuſe the Kings deſires, he perceived it would not only alienate the King from him, but that many other Princes his Confederates, with their Realms, would withdraw their Devotion and Obedience from the Apoſtolick See.

New Ambaſſadors ſent to Rome.

Collect. Numb. 19th.

A Guard of 2000 men offered to the Pope.

By a diſpatch that followed them, the Cardinal tried a new project, which was an offer of 2000 men for a Guard to the Pope, to be maintained at the coſt of the King and his Confederates. And alſo propoſed an enterview of the Pope, the Emperor, the French King, and the Ambaſſadors of other Princes, to be either at Nice, Avignon, or in Savoy, and that himſelf would come thither from the King of England. But the Pope reſolved ſteadfaſtly to keep his ground, and not to engage himſelf too much to any Prince; therefore the motion of a Guard did not at all work upon him. To have Guards about him upon another Princes pay, was to be their Priſoner; and he was ſo weary of his late Impriſonment, that he would not put himſelf in hazard of it a ſecond time. Beſides, ſuch a Guard would give the Emperor juſt cauſe of jealouſie, and yet not ſecure him againſt his power. He had been alſo ſo unſucceſful in his conteſts with the Emperor, that he had no mind to give him any new provocation: And though the Kings of England and France gave him good words, yet they did nothing, nor did the King make War upon the Emperor, ſo that his Armies lying in Italy, he was ſtill under his power. Therefore the Pope reſolved to unite himſelf firmly to the Emperor; and and all the uſe he made of the Kings earneſtneſs in his Divorce, was only to bring the Emperor to better terms. The Lutherans in Germany were like to make great uſe of any deciſion he might make againſt any of his Predeceſſors Bulls. The Cardinal Elector of Mentz, had written to him to conſider well what he did in the Kings Divorce; for if it went on, nothing had ever fall'n out ſince the beginning of Luthers Sect, that would ſo much ſtrengthen it as that Sentence. He was alſo threatned on the other ſide from Rome, that the Emperor would have a General Council called, and whatſoever he did in this Proceſs ſhould be examined there, and he proceeded againſt accordingly. Nor did they forget to put him in mind of his Birth, that he was a Baſtard, and ſo by the Canon incapable of that Dignity, and that thereupon they would depoſe him. He having all theſe things in his proſpect, and being naturally of a fearful temper, which was at this time more prevalent in him by reaſon of his late Captivity, reſolved not to run theſe hazards, which ſeemed unavoidable, if he proceeded further in the Kings buſineſs. But his conſtant Maxim, being to promiſe and ſwear deepeſt, when he intended leaſt, he ſent Campana to England, with a Letter of Credence to the Cardinal, the effects of which meſſage will appear afterwards. And thus ended this year, in which it was believed that if the King had employed that Money, which was ſpent in a fruitleſs Negotiation at Rome, on a War in Flanders, it had ſo diſtracted the Emperors Forces, and encouraged the Pope, that he had ſooner granted that, which in a more fruitleſs way was ſought of him. 1528. Being frightned with the threats of the Imperialiſts.

In the beginning of the next year, Caſſali wrote to the Cardinal, that the Pope was much inclined to unite himſelf with the Emperor, and propoſed to go in Perſon to Spain, to ſollicite a general Peace; but intended to go privately, and deſired the Cardinal would go with him thither, as his Friend and Counſellor, and that they two ſhould go as Legates, But Caſſali, by Salviati's means, who was in great favour with the Pope, underſtood that the Pope was never in greater fear of the Emperor than at that time; for his Ambaſſador had threatned the Pope ſeverely, if he would not recal the Commiſſion that he had ſent to England; ſo that the Pope ſpoke oft to Salviati of the great Repentance that he had inwardly in his heart, for granting the Decretal: and ſaid, He was undone for ever, if it came to the Emperors knowledge. He alſo reſolved, that though the Legates gave Sentence in England, it ſhould never take effect, for he would not confirm it: Of which Gregory Caſſali gave Advertiſement by an expreſs Meſſenger, who as he paſſed through Paris, met Secretary Knight and Doctor Bennet, whom the King had diſpatched to Rome, to aſſiſt his other Ambaſſadors there, and gave them an account of his meſſage: and that it was the Advice of the Kings Friends at Rome, That he and his Confederates ſhould follow the War more vigorouſly, and preſs the Emperor harder, without which all their applications to the Pope would ſignifie nothing. Of this they gave the Cardinal an account, and went on but faintly in their Journey, judging that upon theſe Advertiſements they would be recalled, and other Counſels taken. 1529. Jan. 3. Repents his granting the Decretal. Kings Letter to the Cardinal, Jan. 8.

At the ſame time the Pope was with his uſual Arts cajoling the Kings Agents in Italy: For when Sir Francis Brian and Peter Vannes came to Bononia, the Proto-Notary Caſſali was ſurprized, to hear that the buſineſs was not already ended in England: ſince (he ſaid) he knew there were Jan. 9.

1529. sufficient Powers sent about it, and that the Pope assured him he would confirm their Sentence; but that he made a great difference between the confirming their judgment, by which he had the Legates between him and the Envy or Odium of it, and the granting a Bull, by which the Judgment should arise immediately from himself. This his best Friends dissuaded, and he seemed apprehensive, that in case he should do it, a Council would be called, and he should be deposed for it. And any such distraction in the Papacy, considering the footing which Heresie had already gotten, would ruin the Ecclesiastical State, and the Church: So dextrously did the Pope govern himself between such contrary tides. But all this Dissimulation was short of what he acted by Campana in England, whose true errand thither was to order Campegio to destroy the Bull; but he did so perswade the King and the Cardinal of the Popes sincerity, that by a dispatch to Sir Francis Brian, and Peter Vannes, and Sir Gregory Cassali, he chid the two former for not making more haste to Rome; for he believed it might have been a great advantage to the Kings Affairs, if they had got thither before the General of the Observants (then Cardinal Angel.) He ordered them to settle the business of the Guard about the Pope presently, and tells them that the Secretary was recalled, and Dr. Stephens again sent to Rome: And in a Letter to Secretary Knight, who went no further than Lions, he writt to him; "That Campana "had assured the King and him, in the Popes name, that the Pope was "ready to do, not only all that of Law, Equity, or Justice, could be de- "sired of him, but whatever of the fulness of his Power he could do or "devise, for giving the King content: And that although there were "three things, which the Pope had great reason to take care of; The "calling a General Council, The Emperors descent into Italy, and the "Restitution of his Towns, which were offered to be put in his hands "by the Emperors means; yet neither these, nor any other considerati- "on, should divert him from doing all that lay within his Authority, or "Power, for the King: And that he had so deep a sense of the Kings "merits, and the obligations that he had laid on him, that if his resig- "nation of the Popedom might do him any Service, he would readily "consent to it: And therefore in the Popes name he encouraged the Le- "gates to proceed and end the business.

But feeds the King with high promises

Upon these assurances the Cardinal ordered the Secretary to haste forward to Rome, and to thank the Pope for that kind message, to settle the Guard about him, and to tell him, that for a Council, none could be called but by himself with the consent of the Kings of England and France. And for any pretended Council or meeting of Bishops, which the Emperor by the Cardinals of his Party might call, he needed not fear that: For his Towns, they should be most certainly restored. Nor was the Emperors offering to put them in his hand to be much regarded; for though he restored them, if the Pope had not a better Guaranty for them, it would be easie for him, to take them from him when he pleased. He was also to propose a firmer League between the Pope, England, and France, in order to which, he was to move the Pope most earnestly to go to Nice; and if the Pope proposed the Kings taking a second Wife, with a Legitimation of the Issue, which she might have, so the Queen might be induced to enter into a state of Religion, to which the Pope inclined most, he was not to accept of that; both because the thing would take take up much time, and they found the Queen reſolved to do nothing, but as ſhe was adviſed by her Nephews. Yet if the Pope offered a Decretal about it, he might take it, to be made uſe of as the Occaſion might require. But by a Poſtſcript he is recalled, and it is ſignified to him, that Gardiner was ſent to Rome, to negotiate theſe affairs, who had returned to England with the Legate, and his being ſo ſucceſsful in his former Meſſage, made them think him the fitteſt Miniſter they could imploy in that Court; and to ſend him with the greater Advantage, he was made a Privy Councellor. 1529.

But an unlooked for Accident put a ſtop to all Proceedings in the Court of Rome: For on Epiphany-day the Pope was taken extreme ill at Maſs, and a great ſickneſs followed, of which it was generally believed he could not recover; and though his diſtemper did ſoon abate ſo much, that it was thought to be over, yet it returned again upon him, inſomuch that the Phyſicians did ſuſpect he was poiſoned. Then followed all the ſecret Caballings, and Intrigues, which are ordinary in that Court upon ſuch an occaſion. The Collonna's and the other Imperialiſts were very buſie, but the Cardinal of Mantua oppoſed them; and Farneſe who was then at his houſe in the Countrey, came to Rome and joyned with Mantua; and theſe of that Faction reſolved that if the Spaniſh Army marched from Naples toward them, they would diſpence with that Bull, which provides that the Succeeding Pope ſhould be choſen in the ſame place where the former died, and would retire to ſome ſafe place. Some of the Cardinals ſpoke highly in favour of Cardinal Wolſey, whom (if the Ambaſſadors did not flatter and lie groſly in their Letters, from which I draw theſe Informations) they reverenced as a Diety. And the Cardinal of Mantua, it ſeems, propoſing him as a Pattern, would needs have a Particular account of his whole Courſe of Life, and expreſſed great eſteem for him. When Gardiner was come as far as Lions he wrote the Cardinal word, that there went a Prophecy that an Angel ſhould be the next Pope, but ſhould die ſoon after. He alſo gave Advice that if the Pope died, the Commiſſion for the Legates muſt needs expire with him, unleſs they made ſome Step in their Buſineſs, by a Citation of Parties, which would keep it alive; but whether this was done or not I cannot find. The Cardinals Ambition was now fermenting ſtrongly, and he reſolved to lay his Project for the Popedom better than he had done before. His Letter about it to Gardiner, and the Kings Inſtructions to his Ambaſſadors, are Printed by Fox, and the Originals from which they are taken are yet extant. He wrote alſo another Letter to the Ambaſſadors, which the Reader will find in the Collection. But becauſe the Inſtructions ſhow what were the methods in chooſing Popes in theſe days, by which it may be eaſily gathered, how ſuch an Election muſt needs recommend a man to Infallibility, Supremacy, and all the other Appendages of Chriſts Vicar on Earth, I ſhall give a ſhort Summary of them.

"By his Letter to his confident Gardiner, he commits the thing "chiefly to his care, and orders him to employ all his parts, to bring "it to the deſired iſſue; ſparing neither Preſents, nor Promiſes; and that "as he ſaw mens inclinations or affections led them, whether to pub"lick or private Concerns, ſo he ſhould govern himſelf towards them "accordingly.

1529. The Kings Instructions for the Election.

"accordingly. The Instructions bear, that the King thought the Cardinal the fittest person to succeed to the Papacy; (they being advertized that the Pope was dead; that the French King did also of his own Motion offer his Assistance to him in it, and that both for publick and private ends, the Cardinal was the fittest. Therefore the Ambassadors are required with all possible earnestness and vigour, to promote his Election. A Schedule of the Cardinals names is sent them with marks to every one, whether he was like to be present or absent, favourable, indifferent, or opposite to them. It Numb. was reckoned there could be but 39 present, of which 26 were necessary to choose the Pope. Of these the two Kings thought themselves sure of 20. So 6 was all the number that the Ambassadors were to gain, and to that number, they were first to offer them good reasons, to convince them of the Cardinals fitness for the Papacy. But because humane frailty was such, that reason did not always take place, they were to promise Promotions, and Sums of Money, with other good Rewards, which the King gave them Commission to offer, and would certainly make them good: besides all the great Preferments which the Cardinal had, that should be shared among those who did procure his Election. The Cardinals of their party were first to enter into a firm bond, to exclude all others. They were also to have some Creatures of theirs to go into the conclave, to manage the Business. Sir Gregory Cassali, was thought fittest for that Service. And if they saw the adverse party too strong in the Conclave, so that they could carry nothing, then Gardiner was to draw a Protestation, which should be made in name of the two Crowns; and that being made, all the Cardinals of their Faction were to leave the Conclave. And if the fear of the Emperors Forces over-awed them, the Ambassadors were to offer a Guard of 2 or 3000 men to secure the Cardinals: and the French King Ordered his Armies to move, if the Spanish Troops did move either from Naples, or Millan. They were also to assure them, that the Cardinal would presently upon his Election come and live at Rome, and were to use all endeavours to gain the Cardinal de Medici to their Faction; but at the same time to assure the Florentines, that Wolsey would assist them to exclude the Medici out of the Government of their Town and State. They were also to have a strict eye upon the motions of the French Faction, lest if the Cardinal were excluded, they should consent to any other, and refuse to make the Protestation as it was desired. But to oblige Campegio the more it was added, that if they found all hopes of raising the Cardinal of York to vanish, then they should try if Campegio could be Elected; and in that case the Cardinals of their Faction were to make no Protestation.

These were the Apostolical Methods, then used for choosing a Successor to St. Peter; for though a Successor had been chosen to Judas by lot, yet more Caution was to be used in choosing one for the Prince of the Apostles. But when the Cardinal heard that the Pope was not dead, and that there was hope of his recovery, he wrote another long Letter to the Ambassadors (the Original of which is yet extant) "to keep all their Instructions about a new Pope very secret, to be gaining as many Cardinals as they could, and to take care that the Car-

"dinals ſhould not go into the Conclave, unleſs they were free, and "ſafe from any fears of the Imperial Forces. But if the Pope reco- "vered, they were to preſs him to give ſuch orders about the Kings "Buſineſs, that it might be ſpeedily ended: and then the Cardinal "would come and wait on the Pope over to Spain, as he had propo- "ſed. And for the Apprehenſions the Pope had of the Emperors be- "ing highly offended with him, if he granted the Kings deſire, or of "his coming into Italy, he needed not fear him. They knew what- "ever the Emperor pretended about his obligation to protect his Aunt, "it was only for reaſon of State: but if he were ſatisfied in other "things, that would be ſoon paſſed over. They knew alſo that his "deſign of going into Italy was laid aſide for that year, becauſe he "apprehended that France and England would make War on him in "other places. There were alſo many Precedents found, of Diſpen- "ſations granted by Popes in like caſes: And lately there had been "one granted by Pope Alexander the 6th, to the King of Hungary, a- "gainſt the Opinion of his Cardinals, which had never been queſti- "oned: and yet he could not pretend to ſuch Merits as the King had. And all that had ever been ſaid in the Kings Cauſe, was ſum'd up in a ſhort Breviate by Caſſali, and offered to the Pope; a Copy whereof taken from an Original under his own hand, the Reader will find in the Collection.

1529. Feb. 20. New propoſitions about the Divorce.

Collect. Numb. 21.

The King ordered his Ambaſſadors to make as many Cardinals ſure for his cauſe, as they could, who might bring the Pope to conſent to it, if he were ſtill averſe. But the Pope was at this time poſſeſſed with a new jealouſie, of which the French King was not free, as if the King had been tampering with the Emperor, and had made him great offers, ſo he would conſent to the Divorce; about which Francis wrote an anxious Letter to Rome, the Original of which I have ſeen. The Pope was alſo ſurprized at it, and queſtioned the Ambaſſadors about it; but they denied it, and ſaid the union between England and France was inſeparable, and that theſe were only the Practices of the Emperors Agents to create diſtruſt. The Pope ſeemed ſatisfied with what they ſaid, "and added that in the preſent conjuncture a firm union "between them was neceſſary. Of all this Sir Francis Brian wrote a long account in cipher.

But the Popes relapſe put a new ſtop to buſineſs, of which the Cardinal being informed, as he ordered the Kings Agents to continue their care about his Promotion, ſo he charged them to ſee if it were "poſſible to get Acceſs to the Pope, and though he were in the very "Agony of Death, to propoſe two things to him: the one, that he "would preſently command all the Princes of Chriſtendom to agree "to a Ceſſation of Arms, under pain of the Cenſures of the Church, "as Pope Leo and other Popes had done; and if he ſhould die, he "could not do a thing that would be more meritorious, and for the "good of his Soul, than to make that the laſt Act of his Life. The "other thing was concerning the Kings buſineſs, which he preſſeth as "a thing neceſſary to be done, for the clearing and eaſe of the Popes "Conſcience, towards God: And withal he orders them to gain as "many about the Pope, and as many Cardinals and Officers in the "Rota as they could, to promote the Kings deſires, whether in the

"Popes

1528. " Popes ſickneſs or health. The Biſhop of Verona had a great Intereſt " with the Pope, ſo by that, and another Diſpatch of the ſame Date, " (ſent another way) they were ordered to gain him, promiſing him " great Rewards, preſſing him to remain ſtill about the Popes Perſon: " to ballance the ill Offices which Cardinal Angell, and the Arch-bi- " ſhop of Capua did, who never ſtirred from the Pope: And to aſſure " that Biſhop, that the King laid this Matter more to heart, than any " thing that ever befel him; and that it would trouble him as much " to be overcome in this Matter by theſe two Friers, as to loſe both " his Crowns: and for my part (writes the Cardinal) I would expoſe " any thing to my life, yea life it ſelf, rather than ſee the Inconveni- " encies that may enſue upon diſappointing of the Kings deſire. For promoting the Buſineſs, the French King ſent the Biſhop of Bayon, to aſſiſt the Engliſh Ambaſſadors in his name, who was firſt ſent over to England, to be well inſtructed there. They were either to procure a Decretal for the Kings Divorce, or a new Commiſſion to the two Legates, with ampler Clauſes in it, than the former had; to judge as " if the Pope were in perſon, and to emit compulſorie Letters againſt " any, whether Emperor, King, or of what degree ſoever, to produce " all manner of Evidences or Records, which might tend towards the " clearing the matter, and to bring them before them. This was ſought becauſe the Emperor would not ſend over the pretended Original Breve, to England, and gave only an Atteſted Copy of it to the Kings Ambaſſadors: leſt therefore from that Breve, a new Suit might be afterwards raiſed, for Annulling any Sentence which the Legates ſhould give, they thought it needful to have the Original brought before them. In the penning of that new Commiſſion, Dr. Gardiner was ordered to have ſpecial care that it ſhould be done, by the beſt advice he could get in Rome. It appears alſo from this diſpatch, that the Popes Pollicitation to Confirm the Sentence which the Legates ſhould give, was then in Gardiner's hands; for he was ordered to take care that there might be no diſagreement between the date of it, and of the new Commiſſion. And when that was obtained, Sir Francis Brian was commanded to bring them with him to England. Or if neither a Decretal, nor a new Commiſſion could be obtained, then if any other expedient were propoſed, that upon good advice ſhould be found ſufficient and effectual, they were to accept of it, and ſend it away with all poſſible diligence. And the Cardinal conjured them " by " the Reverence of Almighty God, to bring them out of their Perplexity, " that this Virtuous Prince may have this thing ſped, which would be " the moſt joyous thing that could befal his heart upon Earth. But " if all things ſhould be denyed, then they were to make their Prote- " ſtations, not only to the Pope, but to the Cardinals, of the Injuſtice " that was done the King, and in the Cardinals name to let them know " that not only the King and his Realm would be loſt, but alſo the " French King and his Realm, with their other Confederates, would al- " ſo withdraw their Obedience from the See of Rome, which was more " to be regarded, than either the Emperors Diſpleaſure, or the Recove- " ry of two Cities. They were alſo to try what might be done in Law by the Cardinals in a Vacancy, and they were to take good Counſel upon ſome Chapters of the Canon-Law, which related to that: and Govern themſelves accordingly, either to hinder an Avocation, or Inhibition; or if it could be done, to obtain ſuch things, as they could grant, towards the Concluſion of the Kings Buſineſs. At this time alſo the Cardinals Bulls for the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter were expedited: they were rated high at 15000 Ducats; for though the Cardinal pleaded his great Merits, to bring the compoſition lower, yet the Cardinals at Rome, ſaid the Apoſtolick Chamber was very poor, and other Bulls were then coming from France, to which the favour they ſhould ſhew the Cardinal would be a Precedent. But the Cardinal ſent word that he would not give paſt 5, or 6000 Ducats, becauſe he was exchanging Wincheſter for Dureſme, and by the other they were to get a great Compoſition. And if they held his Bulls ſo high, he would not have them; for he needed them not, ſince he enjoyed already by the Kings Grant the Temporalities of Wincheſter; which it is very likely was all that he conſidered in a Biſhoprick. They were at laſt expedited, at what Rates I cannot tell; but this I ſet down to ſhew, how ſevere the Exactions of the Court of Rome were. 1529.

Govern

The Cardinals Bulls for the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter.

As the Pope recovered his health, ſo he inclined more to joyn himſelf to the Emperor than ever, and was more alienated than formerly from the King and the Cardinal; which perhaps were encreaſed by the diſtaſte he took at the Cardinals aſpiring to the Popedom. The firſt thing that the Emperor did in the Kings Cauſe, was to proteſt in the Queen of Englands name, that ſhe refuſed to ſubmit to the Legates. The one was the Kings chief Miniſter and her mortal Enemy: The other was alſo juſtly ſuſpected, ſince he had a Biſhoprick in England. The Kings Ambaſſador preſſed the Pope much, not to admit the Proteſtation; but it was pretended that it could not be denyed, either in Law or Juſtice. But that this might not offend the King, Salviati that was the Popes Favourite, wrote to Campegio, that the Proteſtation could not be hindred, but that the Pope did ſtill moſt earneſtly deſire to ſatisfie the King, and that the Ambaſſadors were much miſtaken, who were ſo diſtruſtful of the Popes good mind to the Kings Cauſe. But now good words could deceive the King no longer, who clearly diſcovered the Popes mind, and being out of all hopes of any thing more from Rome, reſolved to proceed in England, before the Legates: and therefore Gardiner was recalled, who was thought the fitteſt Perſon, to manage the Proceſs in England, being eſteemed the greateſt Canoniſt they had; and was ſo valued by the King, that he would not begin the Proceſs till he came. Sir Francis Brian was alſo recalled, and when they took leave of the Pope, they were ordered to Expoſtulate in the Kings name. "Upon the Partiality he expreſſed for "the Emperor, notwithſtanding the many aſſurances, that both the "Legates had given the King, that the Pope would do all he could to- "ward his Satisfaction; which was now ſo ill performed that he ex- "pected no more juſtice from him. They were alſo to ſay, as much "as they could deviſe in the Cardinals name, to the ſame purpoſe, up- "on which they were to try, if it were poſſible to obtain any Enlarge- "ment of the Commiſſion with fuller Power to the Legates; for they ſaw it was in vain to move for any new Bulls, or Orders from the Pope about it. And though Gardiner had obtained a Pollicitation from the Pope, by which he both bound himſelf not to recal the cauſe from the Legates, 1529. gates, and alſo to confirm their Sentence, and had ſent it over; they found it was ſo conceived, that the Pope could go back from it when he pleaſed. So there was a new Draught of a Pollicitation formed with more binding Clauſes in it, which Gardiner was to try if he could obtain by the following pretence. "He was to tell the Pope, "that the Courtier to whom he truſted it, had been ſo little careful "of it, that it was all wet and defaced, and of no more uſe; ſo "that he durſt not deliver it. And this might turn much to Gardiners "prejudice, that a matter of ſuch concern was through his neglect "ſpoiled: upon which he was to ſee if the Pope would renew it. "If that could be obtained, he was to uſe all his induſtry to get as "many pregnant and material words added, as might make it more "binding. He was alſo to aſſure the Pope, that though the Empe- "ror was gone to Barcellona, to give reputation to his affairs in Italy: "yet he had neither Army, nor Fleet ready, ſo that they needed not "fear him. And he was to inform the Pope of the Arts he was u- "ſing both in the Engliſh and French Court to make a ſeparated Trea- "ty: But that all was to no purpoſe, the two Kings being ſo firmly "linked together. But the Pope was ſo great a Maſter in all the Arts of Diſſimulation, and Policy, that he was not to be over-reached eaſily; and when he underſtood that his Pollicitation was defaced, he was in his heart glad at it, and could not be prevailed with to renew it. So they returned to England, and Dr. Bennet came in their place.

Collect. Numb. 24.

He carried with him one of the fulleſt and moſt important Diſpatches that I find in this whole matter, from the two Legates to the Pope, and the Conſiſtory, who wrote to them, "That they had in vain en- "deavoured to perſwade either party to yield to the other; That the "Breve being ſhewed to them by the Queen, they found great and e- "vident Preſumptions of it's being a meer forgery; and that they "thought it was too much for them to ſit and try the Validity, or "Authenticalneſs of the Popes Bulls, or Breves, or to hear his Pow- "er of Diſpenſing in ſuch caſes diſputed: therefore it was more ex- "pedient to Avocate the Cauſe, to which the King would conſent, if "the Pope obliged himſelf under his hand, to paſs Sentence ſpeedily "in his favour; but they rather adviſed the granting a Decretal Bull "which would put an end to the whole matter, in order to which "the bearer was inſtructed to ſhow very good Precedents. But in "the mean while, they adviſed the Pope to preſs the Queen moſt ef- "fectually, to enter into a Religious life, as that which would com- "poſe all theſe differencies in the ſofteſt and eaſieſt way. It pitied them "to ſee the rack and torments of Conſcience, under which the King "had ſmarted ſo many years: and that the Diſputes of Divines, and "the Decrees of Fathers, had ſo diſquieted him, that for clearing a "matter thus perplexed, there was not only need of Learning, but of "a more ſingular Piety and Illumination. To this were to be added "the deſire of Iſſue, Settlement of the Kingdom, with many other "preſſing reaſons: that as the matter did admit of no further delays, "ſo there was not any thing in the oppoſite ſcale to ballance theſe "Conſiderations. There were falſe Suggeſtions ſurmiſed abroad, as "if the hatred of the Queen, or the deſire of another wife (who was "not perhaps yet known, much leſs deſigned) were the true cauſes of "this

"this Suit. But though the Queen was of a rough Temper, and an unpleaſant Converſation, and was paſſed all hopes of Children; yet "who could imagine that the King, who had ſpent his moſt youthful "days with her, ſo kindly, would now in the decline of his Age, be "at all this trouble to be rid of her, if he had no other Motives? "But they by ſearching his ſore, found there was rooted in his heart, "both an Awe of God, and a reſpect to Law and Order; ſo that though "all his people preſſed him to drive the Matter to an Iſſue, yet he "would ſtill wait for the deciſion of the Apoſtolick See. Therefore "they moſt preſſingly deſire the Pope to grant the Cure which his di-"ſtemper required, and to conſider that it was not fit to inſiſt too "much on the Rigour of the Law; but ſince the Soul and life of all "the Laws of the Church was in the Popes Breaſt; in doubtful caſes, "where there was great hazard, he ought to molifie the ſeverity of "the Laws, which if it were not done, other Remedies would be found "out, to the vaſt prejudice of the Eccleſiaſtical Authority, to which "many about the King adviſed him: There was reaſon to fear they "ſhould not only loſe a King of England, but a Defender of the Faith. "The Nobility and Gentry were already enraged at the delay of a Mat-"ter, in which all their Lives and Intereſts were ſo nearly concerned; "and ſaid many things againſt the Popes Proceedings, which they "could not relate without horror. And they plainly complained, that "whereas Popes had made no ſcruple to make and change divine Laws, "at their Pleaſure; yet one Pope ſticks ſo much at the repealing what "his Predeceſſor did, as if that were more ſacred, and not to be med-"led with. The King betook himſelf to no ill Arts, neither to the "charms of Magitians, nor the Forgeries of Impoſtors, therefore they "expected ſuch an Anſwer as ſhould put an end to the whole mat-"ter. 1529.

But all theſe things were to no purpoſe: the Pope had taken his meaſures, and was not to be moved by all the Reaſons, or Remonſtrances, the Ambaſſador could lay before him. The King had abſolutely gained Campegio to do all he could for him without loſing the Popes favour. He led at this time a very diſſolute life in England, hunting and gaming all the day long, and following Whores all the night: and brought a Baſtard of his own over to England with him, whom the King Knighted; ſo that if the King ſought his pleaſure, it was no ſtrange thing, ſince he had ſuch a Copy ſet him by two Legates, who repreſenting his Holineſs ſo lively in their manners, it was no unuſual thing, if a King had a ſlight ſenſe of ſuch diſorders. The King wrote to his Ambaſſadors, that he was ſatisfied of Campegio's love and affection to him, and if ever he was gained by the Emperors Agents, he had ſaid ſomething to him which did totally change that Inclination. Campegio's ill life. Pelerin Ingleſe. April 6.

The Imperialiſts being Alarm'd at the recalling of ſome of the Engliſh Ambaſſadors, and being Informed by the Queens means, that they were forming the Proceſs in England, put in a Memorial for an Avocation of the Cauſe to Rome. The Ambaſſadors anſwered, that there was no Colour for asking it, ſince there was nothing yet done by the Legates. For they had ſtrickt orders to deny that there was any Proceſs forming in England, even to the Pope himſelf in private, unleſs he had a mind it ſhould go on; but were to uſe all their En- The Emperor preſſes for an Avocation.

And it would also be an high affront to the two Cardinals: and they were thereupon to protest, that the King would not obey, nor consider the Pope any more, if he did an Act of such high Injustice; as after he had granted a Commission, upon no Complaint of any Illegality, or Injust Proceedings of the Legates, but only upon surmises and suspicions, to take it out of their hands. But the Pope had not yet brought the Emperor to his Terms in other things, therefore to draw him on the faster, he continued to give the English Ambassador good words; and in discourse with Peter Vannes, did insinuate as if he had found a means to bring the whole matter to a good conclusion, and spoke it with an Artificial smile, adding, In the name of the Father, &c. But would not speak it out, and seemed to keep it up as a secret, not yet ripe. But all this did afterwards appear to be the deepest Dissimulation that ever was practised. And in the whole Process, though the Cardinal studied to make tricks pass upon him, yet he was always too hard for them all at it; and seemed as infallible in his Arts of Jugling, as he pretended to be in his Decisions. He wrote a Cajoling Letter to the Cardinal, but words went for nothing.

The Pope complains of the Florentines

June 5. Soon after this, the Pope complained much to Sir Gregory Cassali, of the ill usage he received from the French Ambassador, and that their Confederates, the Florentines, and the Duke of Ferrara used him so ill, that they would force him to throw himself into the Emperors hands: and he seemed inclined to grant an Avocation of the cause, and complained that there was a Treaty of Peace going on at Cambray, in which he had no share. But the Ambassador undertook that nothing should be done to give him just offence; yet the Florentines continued to put great affronts on him, and his Family: and the Abbot of Farfa their General, made excursions to the gates of Rome; so that the Pope, with June 13. " great signs of fear, said that the Florentines would some day seize on " him, and carry him with his hand, bound behind his back in Pro- " cession to Florence: and that all this while the Kings of England and " France did only entertain him with good words, and did not so much " as restrain the Insolencies of their Confederates. And whereas they " used to say, that if he joyned himself to the Emperor, he would treat " him as his Chaplain, he said with great Commotion, that he would not " only choose rather to be his Chaplain, but his horse-Groom, than suf- " fer such injuries from his own Rebellious Vassals and Subjects. This was perhaps set on by the Cardinals Arts, to let the Pope feel the weight of offending the King, and to oblige him to use him better: but it wrought a contrary effect, for the Treaty between the Emperor and him, was the more advanced by it. And the Pope reckoned that the Emperor being (as he was informed) ashamed and grieved for the taking and Sacking of Rome, would study to repair that by better usage for the future.

Great Contests about the Avocation.

June 23. Collect. Numb. 27. The Motion for the Avocation was still driven on, and pressed the more earnestly, because they heard the Legates were proceeding in the cause. But the Ambassadors were instructed by a Dispatch from the King, to obviate that carefully; for as it would reflect on the Legates, and defeat the Commiſſion, and be a groſs violation of the Popes Promiſe, which they had in writing; ſo it was more for the Popes Intereſt, to leave it in the Legates Hands, than to bring it before himſelf: for then, whatever Sentence paſſed, the ill effects of it would lye on the Pope without any Interpoſition. And as the King had very juſt exceptions to Rome where the Emperors Forces lay ſo near, that no ſafety could be expected there; ſo they were to tell the Pope that by the Laws of England, the Prerogative of the Crown Royal was ſuch, that the Pope could do nothing that was prejudicial to it: To which the citing the King to Rome, to have his Cauſe decided there, was contrary in a high degree. And if the Pope went on, notwithſtanding all the diligence they could uſe to the contrary they were by an other Diſpatch which Gardiner ſent, ordered to Proteſt and Appeal from the Pope as not the true Vicar of Chriſt, to a true Vicar. But the King upon ſecond thoughts, judged it not fit to proceed to this Extremity ſo ſoon. They were alſo ordered to advertiſe the Pope, that all the Nobility had aſſured the King, they would adhere to him, in caſe he were ſo ill uſed by the Pope, that he were conſtrained to withdraw his obedience from the Apoſtolick See; and that the Cardinals ruine was unavoidable, if the Pope granted the Avocation. The Emperors Agents had pretended they could not ſend the original Breve into England, and ſaid their Maſter would ſend it to Rome, upon which the Ambaſſadors had ſolicited for Letters Compulſory, to require him to ſend it to England; yet leſt that might now be made an Argument by the Imperialiſts for an Avocation, they were ordered to ſpeak no more of it, for the Legates would proceed to Sentence, upon the atteſted Copy that was ſent from Spain. 1529.

The Ambaſſadors had alſo orders to take the beſt Counſel in Rome, about the Legal ways of hindring an Avocation. But they found it was not fit to rely much on the Lawyers in that matter. For as on the one hand, there was no ſecrecy to be expected from any of them, they having ſuch expectations of preferments from the Pope, (which were beyond all the Fees that could be given them,) that they diſcovered all ſecrets to him: So none of them would be earneſt to hinder an Avocation, it being their Intereſts to bring all Matters to Rome, by which they might hope for much greater Fees. And Salviati whom the Ambaſſadors had gained, told them that Campana brought word out of England, that the Proceſs was then in a good forwardneſs. They with many Oaths denyed there was any ſuch thing, and Silveſter Darius who was ſent expreſs to Rome, for oppoſing the Avocation, confirmed all that they ſwore. But nothing was believed, for by a ſecret conveyance, Campana had Letters to the contrary. And when they objected to Salviati, what was promiſed by Campana, in the Popes name, that he would do every thing for the King, that he could do out of the fulneſs of his Power; He anſwered, that Campana, ſwore he had "never ſaid any ſuch thing. So hard is the caſe of Miniſters in ſuch "tickliſh Negotiations, that they muſt ſay, and unſay, ſwear, and forſwear, "as they are inſtructed, which goes of courſe, as a part of their Buſineſs. Jan. 28.

But now the Legates were proceeding in England: Of the ſteps in which they went, though a great deal be already publiſhed, yet conſiderable The Legates ſit in England.

1529. siderable things are passed over. On the 31st of May, the King by a Warrant under the Great Seal, gave the Legates leave to execute their Commission, upon which they sate that same day. The Commission was presented by Longland, Bishop of Lincoln, which was given to the Proto-Notary of the Court, and he read it publickly; then the Legates took it in their Hands, and said, they were resolved to Execute it: And first gave the usual Oaths to the Clerks of the Court, and ordered a peremptory Citation of the King and Queen to appear on the 18th of June, between 9 and 10 a Clock; and so the Court adjourned. The next Session was on the 18th of June, where the Citation being returned duly Executed, Richard Sampson, Dean of the Chappel, and Mr. John Bell, appeared as the Kings Proxies. But the Queen appeared in Person, and did protest against the Legates as incompetent Judges, alledging that the Cause was already Avocated by the Pope, and desired a competent time in which she might prove it. The Legates assigned her the 21st, and so Adjourned the Court till then.

A severe charge against the Queen.

About this time there was a severe Complaint exhibited against the Queen in Council, of which there is an Account given in a Paper, that has somewhat written at the conclusion of it, with the Cardinals own hand. "The substance of it is, That they were informed some designed "to kill the King, or the Cardinal; in which, if she had any hand, she "must not expect to be spared. That she had not shewed such Love to "the King, neither in Bed, nor out of Bed, as she ought. And now that "the King was very pensive, and in much grief, she shewed great signs "of joy, setting on all people to Dancings, and other Diversions. This "it seemed she did out of spight to the King, since it was contrary to her "temper and ordinary behaviour. And whereas she ought rather to pray "to God to bring this matter to a good conclusion, she seemed not at all "serious; and that she might corrupt the peoples affections to the King, "she shewed her self much abroad, and by civilities, and gracious bowing her head, which had not been her Custom formerly, did study "to work upon the people: and that having the pretended Breve in her "hands, she would not show it sooner. From all which the King concluded that she hated him. Therefore his Council did not think it advisable for him to be any more conversant with her, either in Bed or "at Board. They also in their Consciences thought his life was in such "danger that he ought to withdraw himself from her Company, and not "suffer the Princes to be with her. These things were to be told her, "to induce her to enter into a Religious Order, and to perswade her to "submit to the King. To which Paper, the Cardinal added in Latin, That she played the fool, if she contended with the King, that her Children had not been blessed, and somewhat of the evident suspitions that were of the Forgery of the Breve. But she had a constant mind, and was not to be threatned to any thing. On the 21st of June the Court sate, The King and Queen were present in Person. Campegio made a long Speech of the errand they were come about: * "That it was a new, unheard-of, vile, "and intolerable thing, for the King and Queen to live in Adultery, or "rather Incest; which they must now try, and proceed as they saw just cause. And both the Legates made deep protestations of the sincerity of their minds, and that they would proceed justly and fairly without any favour or partiality.

As

As for the formal Speeches which the King and Queen made, Hall, who never failed in trifles, ſets them down, which I incline to believe they really ſpoke; for with the Journals of the Court, I find thoſe Speeches written down, though not as a part of the Journal. 1529.

But here the Lord Herbert's uſual diligence fails him; for he fancies the Queen never appeared after the 18*th*. upon which, becauſe the Journal of the next Seſſions are loſt, he infers againſt all the Hiſtories of that time, That the King and the Queen were not in Court together. And he ſeems to conclude that the 25*th* of June, was the next Seſſion after the 18*th*, but in that he was miſtaken: For by an original Letter of the Kings to his Ambaſſadors, it is plain that both the King and Queen came in Perſon into the Court, where they both ſate, with their Council ſtanding about them: The Biſhops of Rocheſter, and St. Aſaph, and Doctor Ridley being the Queens Council. When the King a nd Qeen were called on, the King anſwered, Here; but the Queen left her ſeat and went and kneeled down before him, and made a Speech, that had all the Inſinuations in it to raiſe pity and compaſſion in the Court. She ſaid, "She "was a poor Woman, and a Stranger in his Dominions, where ſhe could "neither expect good Council, nor indifferent Judges; ſhe had been "long his Wife, and deſired to know wherein ſhe had offended him: "ſhe had been his Wife twenty years and more, and had born him ſeve-"ral Children, and had ever ſtudied to pleaſe him; and proteſted he "had found her a true Maid, about which ſhe appealed to his own Con-"ſcience. If ſhe had done any thing amiſs, ſhe was willing to be put a-"way with ſhame. Their Parents were eſteemed very wiſe Princes, "and no doubt had good Counſellors, and Learned Men about them, "when the Match was agreed: Therefore ſhe would not ſubmit to the "Court, nor durſt her Lawyers, who were his Subjects, and aſſigned "by him, ſpeak freely for her. So ſhe deſired to be excuſed till ſhe "heard from Spain. That ſaid, ſhe roſe up, and made the King a low Reverence, and went out of the Court. And though they called after her, ſhe made no anſwer, but went away and would never again appear in Court.

The Queen's Speech.

She being gone, the King did publickly Declare, what a true and obedient Wife ſhe had always beeen, and commended her much for her excellent Qualities. Then the Cardinal of York deſired the King would witneſs whether he had been the firſt or chief mover of that matter to him ſince he was ſuſpected to have done it. In which the King did vindicate him, and ſaid, That he had always rather oppoſed it, and proteſted it aroſe meerly out of a ſcruple in his Conſcience, which was occaſion'd by the Diſcourſe of the French Ambaſſador; who during the Treaty of a Match between his Daughter, and the Duke of Orleance, did except to her being Legitimate, as begotten in an unlawful Marriage: upon which he reſolved to try the lawfulneſs of it, both for the quiet of his Conſcience, and for clearing the Succeſſion of the Crown: And if it were found lawful, he was very well ſatisfied to live ſtill with the Queen. But upon that, he had firſt moved it in Confeſſion to the Biſhop of Lincoln; then he had deſired the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury to gather the Opinions of the Biſhops, who did all under their Hands and Seals Declare againſt the Marriage. This the Arch-Biſhop confirmed, but the Biſhop of Rocheſter denied his Hand was at it. And the Arch-Biſhop pretended 1529. tended he had his consent to make another write his name to the judgment of the rest, which he positively denied.

The Court adjourned to the 25*th*, ordering Letters Monitory to be issued out for Citing the Queen to appear under pain of Contumacy. But on the 25*th*, was brought in her Appeal to the Pope, the Original of which is extant, every Page being both Subscribed and Superscribed by her. She excepted both to the Place, to the Judges, and to her Council, in whom she could not confide; and therefore appealed and desired her Cause might be heard by the Pope, with many things out of the Canon-Law, on which he grounded it. This being read, and she not appearing was declared Contumax. Then the Legates being to proceed ex officio, drew up twelve Articles, upon which they were to examine Witnesses. The substance of them was, "That Prince Arthur and the King were Brothers; that Prince Arthur did Marry the Queen, and Consummated the Marriage; that upon his death the King by virtue of a Dispensation had Married her; that this Marrying his Brothers Wife was forbidden both by Humane and Divine Law; and that upon the complaints which the Pope had received, he had sent them now to try and judge in it. The Kings Council insisted most on Prince Arthur's having Consummated the Marriage, and that led them to say many things that seemed incident; of which the Bishop of Rochester complained, and said they were things detestable to be heard: but Cardinal Wolsey checkt him, and there passed some sharp words between them.

The Queens Appeal.

Articles drawn by the Legates.

Upon which witnesses are examined.

The Legates proceeded to the Examination of Witnesses, of which I shall say little, the substance of their Depositions, being fully set down with all their names by the Lord Herbert. The sum of what was most material in them, was, that many violent presumptions appeared by their Testimonies, that Prince Arthur did carnally know the Queen: And it cannot be imagined how greater Proofs could be made 27 years after their Marriage. Thus the Court went on several days Examining Witnesses: but as the matter was going on to a conclusion, there came an Avocation from Rome. Of which I shall now give an account.

The Proceedings at Rome about Avocation.

All this is drawn from the original Letters, June 28. and 30. July 8, and 9.

The Queen wrote most earnestly to her Nephews to procure an Avocation; protesting she would suffer any thing, and even death it self, rather than depart from her Marriage: that she expected no justice from the Legates, and therefore lookt for their assistance, that her Appeal being admitted by the Pope, the Cause might be taken out of the Legates hands. Campegio did also give the Pope an account of their Progress, and by all means advised an Avocation; for by this he thought to excuse himself to the King, to oblige the Emperor much, and to have the reputation of a man of Conscience.

The Emperor, and his Brother Ferdinand, sent their Ambassadors at Rome orders, to give the Pope no rest till it were procured; and the Emperor said, He would look on a Sentence against his Aunt, as a dishonour to his Family, and would loose all his Kingdoms sooner than endure it. And they plied the Pope so warmly, that between them and the English Ambassadors he had for some days very little rest. To the one he was kind, and to the other he resolved to be civil. The English Ambassadors met oft with Salviati, and studied to perswade him, that the Process went not on in England; but he told them their Intelligence was so good, that whatever they said on that head would not be believed.

They

They next ſuggeſted, that it was viſible Campegio's adviſing an Avocation was only done to preſerve himſelf from the envy of the Sentence, and to throw it wholly on the Pope: for were the matter once called to Rome, the Pope muſt give Sentence one way or another, and ſo bear the whole burden of it. There were alſo ſecret ſurmiſes of Depoſing the Pope, if he went ſo far; for ſeeing that the Emperor prevailed ſo much by the terrors of that, The Cardinal reſolved to try what operation ſuch threatnings in the Kings Name might have. But they had no Armies near the Pope, ſo that big words did only provoke and alienate him the more. 1529.

The matter was ſuch, that by the Canon-Law it could not be denied. For to grant an Avocation of a Cauſe upon good reaſon, from the Delegated to the Supream Court, was a thing which by the courſe of Law was very uſual: And it was no leſs apparent that the Reaſons of the Queens Appeal were juſt and good. But the ſecret and moſt convincing Motives that wrought more on the Pope than all other things, were, that the Treaty between him and the Emperor was now concerted: Therefore this being to be publiſhed very ſpeedily, the Pope thought it neceſſary to avocate the matter to Rome, before the publication for the Peace, leſt if he did it after, it ſhould be thought that it had been one of the ſecret Articles of the Treaty, which would have caſt a foul blot upon him. Yet on the other hand he was not a little perplexed with the fears he had of loſing the King of England; he knew he was a Man of an high Spirit, and would reſent what he did ſeverely. "And the Cardinal now again order- "ed Dr. Bennet in his name, and as with tears in his eyes, lying at the "Popes feet, to aſſure him, that the King and Kingdom of England were "certainly loſt, if the Cauſe were Avocated: Therefore he beſought "him to leave it ſtill in their hands, and aſſured him, that for himſelf, "he ſhould rather be torn in pieces Joynt by Joynt, than do any thing in "that matter contrary to his Conſcience or to Juſtice. Theſe things had been oft ſaid, and the Pope did apprehend that ill effects would follow: for if the King fell from his Obedience to the Apoſtolick See, no doubt all the Lutheran Princes, who were already bandying againſt the Emperor, would joyn themſelves with him; and the Intereſts of France would moſt certainly engage that King alſo into the Union, which would diſtract the Church, give encouragement to Hereſie, and end in the utter ruine of the Popedom, But in all this the crafty Pope comforted himſelf, that many times threatnings are not intended to be made good, but are uſed to terrifie; and that the King who had written for the Faith againſt Luther, and had been ſo ill uſed by him, would never do a thing that would ſound ſo ill, as becauſe he could not obtain what he had a mind to, therefore to turn Heretick: he alſo reſolved to careſs the French King much, and was in hopes of making Peace between the Emperor and him.

Collection Number 29.

Yet is in great perplexities.

But that which went neareſt the Popes heart of all other things, was the ſetting up of his Family at Florence: and the Emperor having given him aſſurance of that, it weighed down all other conſiderations. Therefore he reſolved he would pleaſe the Emperor, but do all he could not to loſe the King: So on the 9*th* of July he ſent for the Kings Ambaſſadors, and told them, the Proceſs was now ſo far ſet on in England, and the Avocation ſo earneſtly preſſed, that he could deny it no longer; for all the Lawyers in Rome had told him, the thing could not be denied in the com-1529. Therefore he was under all the disorders, which a Fear that was heightned by Ambition and Covetousness could produce.

But the King govern'd himself upon this occasion, with more temper than could have been expected from a Man of his humour: Therefore as he made no great shew of disturbance, so to divert his uneasie thoughts he went his Progress. Soon after, he received his Agents Letter from Rome, and made Gardiner (who was then Secretary of State) write to the Cardinal, to put Campegio to his Oath, whether he had revealed the Kings Secrets to the Pope, or not? And if he swore he had not done it, to make him swear he should never do it. A little after that, the Messenger came from Rome with a Breve to the Legates, requiring them to proceed no further, and with an Avocation of the Cause to Rome; together with Letters Citatory to the King and Queen to appear there in Person, or by their Proxies. Of which when the King was advertised, Gardiner wrote to the Cardinal by his order, That the King would not have the Letters Citatory executed, or the Commission discharged by vertue of them; but that upon the Popes Breve to them, they should declare their Commission void: For he would not suffer a thing so much to the prejudice of his Crown, as a Citation be made to appear in another Court, nor would he let his Subjects imagine that he was to be Cited out of his Kingdom. This was the first step that he made for the lessening of the Popes Power: Upon which the two Cardinals (for they were Legates no longer) went to the King at Grafton. It was generally expected that Wolsey should have been disgraced then; for not only the King was offended with him, but he received new Informations of his having juggled in the business, and that he secretly advised the Pope to do what was done. This was set about by some of the Queens Agents, as if there was certain knowledge had of it at Rome; and it was said, that some Letters of his to the Pope were by a trick found and brought over to England. The Emperor lookt on the Cardinal as his inveterate Enemy, and designed to ruin him if it was possible; nor was it hard to perswade the Queen to concur with him to pull him down. But all this seems an Artifice of theirs only to destroy him. For the earnestness the Cardinal expressed in this matter, was such, that either he was sincere in it, or he was the best at dissembling that ever was. But these suggestions were easily infused in the Kings angry mind: so strangely are men turned by their affections, that sometimes they will believe nothing, and at other times they believe every thing. Yet when the Cardinal with his Colleague came to Court, they were received by the King with very hearty expressions of kindness; and Wolsey was often in private with him, sometimes in presence of the Council, and sometimes alone: once he was many hours with the King alone, and when they took leave he sent them away very obligingly, But that which gave Cardinal Wolsey the most assurance, was, that all those who were admitted to the Kings Privacies, did carry themselves towards him as they were wont to do; both the Duke of Suffolk, Sir Thomas Boleyn, then made Viscount of Rochford, Sir Brian Tuke and Gardiner: concluding that from the motions of such Weather-cocks the Air of the Princes affections was best gathered.

Aug. 4.

Sept. 23. in a Letter from the Cardinal, Secretary to Cromwell.

Anne Boleyn was now brought to the Court again, out of which she had been dismissed for some time, for silencing the noise that her being at Court, during the Process, would have occasioned. It is said, Anne Boleyn returns to Court.

ſaid, that ſhe took her diſmiſſion ſo ill, that ſhe reſolved never again to return; and that ſhe was very hardly brought to it afterwards, not without Threatnings from her Father. But of that nothing appears to me; only this I find, that all her former kindneſs to the Cardinal, was now turned to enmity, ſo that ſhe was not wanting in her endeavours to pull him down. 1529.

But the King being reconciled to her, and as it is ordinary after ſome intermiſſion and diſorder between Lovers, his affection encreaſing, he was caſting about for Overtures, how to compaſs what he ſo earneſtly deſired. Sometimes he thought of procuring a new Commiſſion; but that was not adviſable, for after a long dependance it might end as the former had done. Then he thought of breaking off with the Pope; but there was great danger in that; for beſides that in his own perſwaſion he adhered to all the moſt Important parts of the Roman Religion, his Subjects were ſo addicted to it, that any ſuch a Change could not but ſeem full of hazard. Sometime he inclined to confederate himſelf with the Pope and the Emperor, for now there was no dividing of them, till he ſhould thereby bring the Emperor to yield to his deſires. But that was againſt the Intereſts of his Kingdom, and the Emperor had already proceeded ſo far in his Oppoſition, that he could not be eaſily brought about.

Cranmers Propoſition about the Kings Divorce.

While his thoughts were thus divided, a new Propoſition was made to him that ſeemed the moſt reaſonable and feaſible of them all. There was one Dr. Cranmer, who had been a Fellow of Jeſus Colledge in Cambridge; but having Married, forfeited his Fellowſhip; yet continued his ſtudies, and was a Reader of Divinity in Buckingham Colledge. His Wife dying, he was again choſen Fellow of Jeſus Colledge; and was much eſteemed in the Univerſity for his Learning, which appeared very eminently on all publick occaſions. But he was a man that neither courted Preferment, nor did willingly accept of it, when offered. And therefore though he was invited to be a Reader of Divinity in the Cardinals Colledge at Oxford, he declined it. He was at this time forced to fly out of Cambridge, from a Plague that was there, and having the Sons of one Mr. Creſſy of Waltham-Croſs committed to his Charge, he went with his Pupils to their Fathers Houſe at Waltham. There he was when the King returned from his Progreſs, who took Waltham in his way, and lay a night there. The Harbingers having appointed Gardiner and Fox, the Kings Secretary, and Almoner, to lie at Mr. Creſſy's Houſe, it ſo happened that Cranmer was with them at Supper. The whole diſcourſe of England being then about the Divorce, theſe two Courtiers, knowing Cranmer's Learning and ſolid Judgment, entertained him with it, and deſired to hear his opinion concerning it. He modeſtly declined it; but told them, that he judged it would be a ſhorter and ſafer way once to clear it well, if the Marriage was unlawful in it ſelf, by vertue of any Divine Precept: For if that were proved, then it was certain, that the Popes Diſpenſation could be of no force to make that lawful, which God had declared to be unlawful. Therefore he thought that inſtead of a long fruitleſs Negotiation at Rome, it were better to conſult all the Learned Men, and the Univerſities of Chriſtendom; for if they once declared it in the Kings favours, then the Pope muſt needs give judgment, or otherwiſe 1529. wiſe the Bull being of it ſelf null and void, the Marriage would be found ſinful, notwithſtanding the Popes Diſpenſation. This ſeemed a very good Motion, which they reſolved to offer to the King; ſo next night when he came to Greenwich, they propoſed it to him; but with this difference, that Gardiner had a mind to make it paſs for their own Contrivance; but Fox, who was of a more ingenuous Nature, told the King from whom they had it. He was much affected with it, ſo ſoon as he heard it, and ſaid, had he known it ſooner, it would have ſaved him a vaſt expence, and much trouble; and would needs have Cranmer ſent for to Court, ſaying in his coarſe way of ſpeaking, That he had the Sow by the right Ear. So he was ſent for to Court, and being brought before the King, he carried himſelf ſo, that the King conceived an high opinion of his Judgment, and Candour, which he preſerved to his death, and ſtill payed a reſpect to him, beyond all the other Church-men that were about him: and though he made more uſe of Gardiner in his Buſineſs, whom he found a Man of great dexterity and cunning; yet he never had any reſpect for him. But for Cranmer, though the King knew that in many things he differed from him, yet for all his being ſo impatient of Contradiction, he always Reverenced him.

Approved by the King.

He was ſoon looked on as a Riſing Church-man, and the rather becauſe the Cardinal was now declining; for in the following Michaelmas-Term, the King ſent for the great Seal, which the Cardinal at firſt was not willing to part with. But the next day the King wrote to him, and he preſently delivered it to the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk. It was offered back again to Warham, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; but he being very old, and forſeeing great difficulties in the keeping of it, excuſed himſelf. So it was given to Sir Thomas More, who was not only eminent in his own Profeſſion, but in all other Learning: and was much eſteemed for the ſtrictneſs of his Life, and his Contempt of Money. He was alſo the more fit to be made uſe of, having been in ill terms with the Cardinal. Soon after, Hales the Attorney-General put in an Information againſt the Cardinal, in the Kings-Bench; bearing, that notwithſtanding the Statute of Richard the ſecond, againſt the procuring Bulls from Rome, under the pains of Premunire, yet he had procured Bulls for his Legantine Power, which he had for many years executed; and ſome particulars, for form, were named out of a great many more. To this he put in his anſwer, by his Attorney, and confeſſed the Indictment, but pleaded his ignorance of the Statute, and ſubmitted himſelf to the Kings mercy. Upon this it was declared, that he was out of the Kings protection, and that he had forfeited his Goods and Chattels to the King, and that his Perſon might be ſeized on. Then was his rich Palace of York-houſe (now Whitehall) with all that vaſt Wealth, and Royal Furniture that he had heaped together, (which was beyond any thing that had ever been ſeen in England before,) ſeized on for the King. But it ſeems the King had not a mind to deſtroy him out-right, but only to bring him lower, and to try if the terror of that would have any influence on the Pope: Therefore on the 21*ſt* of November, the King granted him firſt his Protection, and then his Pardon, and reſtord him to the Arch-biſhoprick of York, and the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, and gave him back in Money, ney, Goods, and Plate, that which amounted to 6374 l. 3 s. 7 d. and many kind Meſſages were ſent him, both by the King, and Anne Boleyn 1529.

And he much eſteemed by him.

But as he had carried his Greatneſs with moſt extravagant pride, ſo he was no leſs baſely caſt down with his misfortune; and having no ballaſt within himſelf, but being wholly guided by things without him, he was lifted up, or caſt down, as the Scales of Fortune turned: yet his Enemies had gone too far, ever to ſuffer a man of his parts or temper, to return to favour. And therefore they ſo ordered it, that an high Charge of many Articles was brought againſt him, into the Houſe of Lords, in the Parliament that ſate in November following; and it paſſed there, where he had but few Friends, and many and great Enemies. But when the Charge was ſent down to the Houſe of Commons, it was ſo managed by the induſtry of Cromwell, who had been his Servant, that it came to nothing. The Heads of it have been oft printed, therefore I ſhall not repeat them; they related chiefly to his Legantine Power, contrary to Law, to his Inſolence and Ambition, his lewd life, and other things that were brought to defame, as well as deſtroy him. The meanneſs of his Temper.

All theſe things did ſo ſink his proud mind, that a deep melancholy overcame his Spirits. The King ſent him frequent aſſurances of his favour, which he received with extravagant tranſports of joy, falling down on his Knees in the dirt, before the Meſſenger that brought one of them, and holding up his hands for joy, which ſhewed how mean a Soul he had, and that as himſelf afterwards acknowledged, he preferred the Kings favour, to God Almighties. But the King found they took little notice of him at Rome; the Emperor hated him, and the Pope did not love him, looking on him as one that was almoſt equal to himſelf in Power: and though they did not love the Precedent to have a Cardinal ſo uſed, yet they were not much troubled at Rome, to ſee it fall on him. So in Eaſter-week, he was ordered to go North, though he had a great mind to have ſtayed at Richmond, which the King had given him in exchange for Hampton-Court, that he had alſo built. But that was too near the Court, and his Enemies had a mind to ſend him further from it. Accordingly he went to Cawood in Yorkſhire, in which Journey it appears, that the ruines of his ſtate were conſiderable, for he travelled thither with an 160 Horſe in his Train, and 72 Carts following him, with his houſhold-ſtuff. The King ſtill favoured him.

To conclude his Story all at once, he was in November the next year, ſeized on by the Earl of Northumberland, who attached him for high Treaſon, and committed him to the keeping of the Lieutenant of the Tower, who was ordered to bring him up to London. And even then he had gracious Meſſages from the King; but theſe did not work much on him, for whether it was that he knew himſelf guilty of ſome ſecret Practiſes with the Pope, or with the Emperor, which yet he denied to the laſt; or whether he could no longer ſtand under the Kings diſpleaſure, and that change of condition; he was ſo caſt down, that on his way to London, he ſickened at Sheffield Park, in the Earl of Shrewsburies Houſe, from whence by ſlow Journeys he went as far as Leiceſter, where after ſome days languiſhing he died; and at the laſt made great Proteſtations of his having ſerved the King faithfully, and He is afterwards attached for Treaſon.

And he desired the King to reflect on all his past Services, and in particular, in his weighty matter,* (for by that Phrase, they usually spoke of the Kings Divorce) and then he would find in his Conscience whether he had offended him or not. He died the 28*th* of November 1530. and was the greatest Instance that several Ages had shown of the Variety and Inconstancy of Humane things, both in his rise and fall; and by his temper in both, it appears he was unworthy of his greatness, and deserved what he suffered. But to conclude all that is to be said of him, I shall add what the Writer of his Life ends it with.

His Character. Here is the end and fall of Pride and Arrogancy; for I assure you, in his time he was the haughtiest man in all his proceedings alive, having more respect to the honour of his Person, than he had to his Spiritual Profession, wherein should be shewed all meekness and charity,

A Parliament called. But now with the change of this great Minister, there followed a change of Counsels, and therefore the King resolved to hold a Parliament, that he might meet his People, and establish such a good understanding between himself and them, that he might have all secured at home; and then he resolved to proceed more confidently abroad. There had been no Parliament for seven years but the blame of that, and of every other miscarriage, falling naturally on the disgraced Minister, he did not doubt, that he should be able to give his People full satisfaction in that, and in every thing else. So a Parliament was summoned to meet the third of November. And there, among several other Laws that were made for the publick good of the Kingdom, there were Bills sent up by the House of Commons, against some of the most exorbitant abuses of the Clergy: one was against the Exactions for the Probates of Wills; another was for the Regulating of Mortuaries; a third was about the Plurality of Benefices, and Non-residence, and Church-mens being Farmers of Lands. In the passing of these Bills there were severe reflections made on the vices and corruptions of the Clergy of that time, which were believed to flow from Men that favoured Luthers Doctrine in their hearts.

Hall. When these Bills were brought up to the House of Lords, the Bishop of Rochester speaking to them, did reflect on the House of Commons: saying, That they were resolved to bring down the Church, and he desired they would consider the miserable state of the Kingdom of Bohemia, to which it was reduced by Heresie, and ended, That all this was for lack of Faith. But this being afterwards known to the House of Commons, they sent their Speaker, Sir Thomas Audley, with 30 of their Members, to complain to the King of the Bishop of Rochester, for saying, that their Acts flowed from the want of Faith, which was an high Imputation on the whole Nation, when the Representative of the Commons was so charged, as if they had been Infidels and Heathens. This was set on by the Court, to mortifie that Bishop, who was unacceptable to them, for his adhering so firmly to the Queens Cause. The King sent for the Arch-bishop of Canterbury and six other Bishops, and before them told the complaint of the Commons. But the Bishop of Rochester excused himself, and said, he only meant of the Kingdom of Bohemia, when he said, all flowed from the want of Faith, and did not at all intend intend the Houſe of Commons. This Explanation the King ſent by the Treaſurer of his Houſhold, Sir Will. Fitz-Williams. But though the matter was paſſed over, yet they were not at all ſatisfied with it, ſo that they went on, laying open the abuſes of the Clergy. 1529.

In the Houſe of Peers, great oppoſition was made to the Bills, and the Clergy both within and without doors did defame them, and ſaid, theſe were the ordinary beginnings of Hereſie, to complain of Abuſes, and pretend Reformation, on purpoſe to diſgrace the Clergy, from which Hereſie took its chief ſtrength. And the Spiritual Lords did generally oppoſe them, the Temporal Lords being no leſs earneſt to have them paſſed. The Cardinal was admitted to ſit in the Houſe, where he ſhowed himſelf as ſubmiſſive in his fauning, as he had formerly done in his ſcorn and contempt of all who durſt oppoſe him. But the King ſet the Bills forward, and in the end, they were agreed to by the Lords, and had the Royal Aſſent. Some Bills paſſ, reforming the abuſes of the Clergy.

The King intended by this, to let the Pope ſee what he could do if he went on to offend him, and how willingly his Parliament would concur with him, if he went to extremities. He did alſo endear himſelf much to the People, by relieving them from the oppreſſions of the Clergy. But the Clergy loſt much by this means; for theſe Acts did not only leſſen their preſent Profits, but did open the way for other things that were more to their detriment afterward. Their oppoſing of this, and all other motions for Reformation, did very much encreaſe the Prejudices that were conceived againſt them: whereas if ſuch motions had either riſen from themſelves, or had at leaſt been cheriſhed by them, their Adverſaries had not perhaps been ſo favourably heard; ſo fatally did they miſtake their true Intereſt, when they thought they were concerned, to link with it all Abuſes and Corruptions.

But there paſt another Bill in this Parliament, which becauſe of its ſingular nature, and that it was not printed with the other Statutes, ſhall be found in the Collection of Inſtruments at the end. The Bill bore in a Preamble the higheſt flattery that could be put in Paper, of the great things the King had done for the Church and Nation, in which he had been at vaſt Charges; and that divers of the Subjects had lent great Sums of Money, which had been all well employed in the publick Service: and whereas they had Security for their Payment, the Parliament did offer all theſe Sums ſo lent to the King; and diſcharged him of all the Obligations or Aſſignations made for their Payment, and of all Suits that might ariſe thereupon. One Act diſcharging the King of his Debts. Collection Number 31.

This was brought into the Houſe by the Kings Servants, who enlarged much on the Wealth and Peace of the Nation, notwithſtanding the Wars, the King always making his Enemies Country the Scene of them; and ſhew'd that for fourteen years the King had but one Subſidy from his People; that now he asked nothing for any other purpoſe, but only to be diſcharged of a Debt contracted for the publick, the accounts whereof were ſhewn, by which they might ſee to what uſes the Money ſo raiſed had been applied. But there were ſeveral ends in paſſing this Bill: thoſe of the Court did not only intend to deliver the King from a charge by it, but alſo to ruine all the Cardinals Friends and Creatures, whom he had cauſed every where to advance great Sums, 1529. for an Example to others. Others in the Houſe that were convinced that the Act was unjuſt in it ſelf, yet did eaſily give way to it, that they might effectually for the future diſcredit that way of raiſing Money by Loans, as judging it to be the publick Intereſt of the Kingdom, that no Sums of Money ſhould be raiſed but by Parliament. So this Act paſſed, and occaſioned great Murmuring among all them that ſuffered by it. But to qualifie the general diſcontent, the King gave a free Pardon to his Subjects for all Offences, ſome capital ones only excepted, as is uſual in ſuch caſes; and to keep the Clergy under the Laſh, all Tranſgreſſions againſt the Statutes of Proviſors and Premunire were excepted, in which they were all involved, as will afterwards appear. There are two other exceptions in this Pardon, not fit to be omitted: the one is of the pulling or digging down Croſſes on the High-ways, which ſhews what a Spirit was then ſtirring among the People; the other is of the Forfeitures that accrued to the King, by the Proſecution againſt Cardinal Wolſey, that is, the Cardinals Colledge in Oxford, with the Lands belonging to it, which are excepted, upon which, the Dean and Canons reſigned their Lands to the King, the Original of which is yet extant: But the King founded the Colledge a-new ſoon after. All this was done both to keep the Clergy quiet, and to engage them to uſe what Intereſt they had in the Court of Rome, to diſpoſe the Pope to uſe the King better in his great Suit. After thoſe Acts were paſſed, on the 17*th.* of December, the Parliament was prorogued till April following; yet it did not ſit till January after that, being continued by ſeveral Prorogations.

There had been great induſtry uſed in carrying Elections for the Parliament, and they were ſo ſucceſsful, that the King was reſolved to continue it for ſome time. This great buſineſs being happily over, the Kings thoughts turned next to Affairs beyond Sea. The whole World was now at Peace. The Pope and the Emperor (as was ſaid before) had made an Alliance on terms of ſuch advantage to the Pope, that as the Emperor did fully repair all paſt Injuries, ſo he laid new and great Obligations on him: for he engaged that he would aſſiſt him in the recovery of his Towns, and that he would reſtore his Family to the Government of Florence, and inveſt his Nephew in it with the Title of Duke, to whoſe Son he would marry his own natural Daughter; and that he would hold the Kingdom of Naples of the Papacy. Theſe were the Motives that directed the Popes Conſcience, ſo infallibly in the Kings buſineſs. Not long after that, in Auguſt, another Peace was made in Cambray, between the Emperor and the French King, and Lady Margaret the Emperors Aunt, and the Regent of Flanders: where the King firſt found the hollowneſs of the French Friendſhip and Alliance; for he was not ſo much conſidered in it as he expected, and he clearly perceived that Francis would not embroyl his own Affairs to carry on his Divorce.

The Womens Peace. Aug. 5.

1530. The Emperor went over into Italy, and met the Pope at Bononia, where he was Crowned with great Magnificence. The Pope and he lodged together in the ſame Palace, and there appeared ſuch ſigns of a familiar Friendſhip between them, that the Kings Ambaſſadors did now clearly perceive that they were firmly united. The Emperor did alſo by a rare mixture of Generoſity and Prudence, reſtore the Dutchy of Milan

Milan to Francis Sforza. By this he ſetled the Peace of Italy, nothing holding out but Florence, which he knew would be ſoon reduced, when there was no hope of ſuccour from France; and accordingly after eleven months Siege it was taken, and within a year after, Alexander de Medici was made Duke of it. About the time that the Emperor came to Bononia, news was brought, that the Turk was forced to raiſe the Siege of Vienna; ſo that all things concurred to raiſe his glory very high. At Bononia he would needs receive the two Crowns of the Roman Empire, that of Milan, and that of Rome, which was done with all the Magnificence poſſible, the Pope himſelf ſaying Maſs, both in Latin and Greek. There is one Ceremony of the Coronation fit to be taken notice of in this Work; that the Emperor was firſt put in the Habit of a Canon of Sancta Maria de la Torre in Rome, and after that, in the Habit of a Deacon, to make him be look'd on as an Eccleſiaſtical Perſon. This had riſen out of an extravagant Vanity of the Court of Rome, who deviſed ſuch Rites to raiſe their Reputation ſo high, that on the greateſt Solemnity, the Emperor ſhould appear in the Habit of the loweſt of the Sacred Orders, by which he muſt know, that Prieſts and Biſhops are above him. When the Pope and he firſt met, the Ceremony of kiſſing the Popes Foot was much look'd for, and the Emperor very gently kneel'd to pay that ſubmiſſion; but the Pope (whether it was that he thought it was no more ſeaſonable to expect ſuch Complements, or more ſignally to oblige the Emperor) did humble himſelf ſo far as to draw in his Foot, and kiſs his Cheek.

But now the Divorce was to be managed in another method, and therefore Cranmer, after he had diſcourſed with the King about that Propoſition which was formerly mentioned, was commanded by him to write a Book for his Opinion, and confirm it with as much Authority as he could; and was recommended to the care of the Earl of Wiltſhire and Ormond (to which honour the King had advanced Sir Thomas Boleyn in the Right of his Mother) and in the beginning of the next year he publiſhed his Book about it. Richard Crook (who was Tutor to the Duke of Richmond) was ſent into Italy, and others were ſent to France and Germany, to conſult the Divines, Canoniſts, and other Learned Men in the Univerſities, about the Kings Buſineſs. How the reſt managed the matter, I have not yet been able to diſcover; but from a great number of Original Letters of Doctor Crooks, I ſhall give a full account of his Negotiation. It was thought beſt to begin at home, and therefore the King wrote to the two Univerſities in England, to ſend him their Concluſions about it. The matters went at Oxford thus. The Biſhop of Lincoln being ſent thither with the Kings Letters for their Reſolution, it was by the major Vote of the Convocation of all the Doctors and Maſters, as well Regents as non-Regents, committed to 33 Doctors and Batchelors of Divinity (who were named by their own Faculty) or to the greater number of them, to determine the Queſtions, that were ſent with the Kings Letters, and to ſet the common Seal of the Univerſity to their Concluſions: and by vertue of that Warrant, they did on the eighth of April put the common Seal of the Univerſity to an Inſtrument, declaring the Marriage of the Brothers Wife to be both contrary to the Laws of God and Nature. The Collector of the Antiquities of Oxford, informs us of the uneaſineſs that was in 1530. the University in this matter, and of the several Messages the King sent, before that Instrument could be procured, so that from the 12*th.* of February to the eighth of April, the matter was in agitation, the Masters of Arts generally opposing it, though the Doctors and Heads were (for the greatest part) for it. But after he has set down the Instrument, he gives some Reasons (upon what design, I cannot easily imagine) to shew that this was extorted by force; and being done without the consent of the Masters of Arts, was of it self void, and of no force: and as if it had been an ill thing, he takes pains to purge the University of it, and lays it upon the fears and corruptions of some aspiring men of the University: and without any proof, gives credit to a lying Story set down by Sanders, of an Assembly called in the night, in which the Seal of the University was set to the Determination. But it appears that he had never seen or considered the other Instrument, to which the University set their Seal, that was agreed on in a Convocation of all the Doctors and Masters, as well Regents as non-Regents; giving Power to these Doctors and Batchelors of Divinity, to determine the Matter, and to set the Seal of the University to their Conclusion. The Original whereof the Lord Herbert saw, upon which the Persons so deputed, had full Authority to set the University Seal to that Conclusion without a new Convocation. Perhaps that Instrument was not so carefully preserved among their Records, or was in Queen Maries days taken away, which might occasion these mistakes in their Historian.

There seems to be also another mistake in the Relation he gives: for he says, those of Paris had determined in this matter before it was agreed to at Oxford. The Printed Decision of the Sorbone contradicts this: for it bears date the second of July, 1530. whereas this was done the eighth of April, 1530. But what passed at Cambridge, I shall set down more fully, from an Original Letter written by Gardiner and Fox to the King in February (but the day is not marked.) When they came to Cambridge, they spake to the Vice-Chancellor, whom they found very ready to serve the King; so was also Bonner (whom they call Doctor Edmonds) and several others, but there was a contrary Party that met together, and resolved to oppose them. A meeting of the Doctors, Batchelors of Divinity, and Masters of Arts, in all about 200, was held. There the Kings Letters were read, and the Vice-Chancellor calling upon several of them to deliver their Opinions about it, they answered as their affections led them, and were in some disorder. But it being proposed, that the answering the Kings Letter, and the Questions in it, should be referred to some indifferent men; great exceptions were made to Doctor Salcot, Doctor Reps, and Crome, and all others who had approved Doctor Cranmers Book, as having already declared themselves partial. But to that it was answered, that after a thing was so much discoursed of, as the Kings matter had been, it could not be imagined, that any number of men could be found, who had not declared their Judgment about it one way or another. Much time was spent in the debate, but when it grew late, the Vice-Chancellor commanded every man to take his place, and to give his Voice, whether they would agree to the Motion of referring it to a select Body of Men: but that night they would not agree to it.

Collect. Numb. 32.

The

The Congregation being adjourned till next day, the Vice-Chancellor offered a Grace (or Order) to refer the matter to 29 persons (himself, 10 Doctors, and 16 Batchelors, and the 2 Proctors) That (the Questions being publickly disputed) what two parts of three agreed to, should be read in a Congregation, and without any further debate the Common Seal of the University should be set to it. Yet it was at first denied; then being put to the Vote, it was carried equally on both sides. But being a third time proposed, it was carried for the Divorce. Of which an account was presently sent to the King, with a Schedule of their Names to whom it was committed, and what was to be expected from them; so that it was at length determined, though not without opposition, That the Kings Marriage was against the Law of God. 1530.

It is thought strange, that the King who was otherwise so absolute in England, should have met with more difficulty in this matter at home than he did abroad. But the most reasonable account I can give of it, is, That at this time there were many in the Universities (particularly at Cambridge) who were addicted to Luthers Doctrine. And of those Cranmer was lookt on as the most Learned: So that Crome, Shaxton, Latimer, and others of that Society favoured the Kings Cause; besides that, Anne Boleyn had in the Dutchess of Alancon's Court (who inclined to the Reformation) received such impressions as made them fear, that her Greatness and Cranmers Preferment would encourage Heresie; to which the Universities were furiously averse, and therefore they did resist all Conclusions that might promote the Divorce. Though with great difficulty.

But as for Crooke in Italy, he being very Learned in the Greek Tongue, was first sent to Venice, to search the Greek Manuscripts that lay in the Library of St. Mark, and to examine the Decrees of the Ancient Councils: He went incognito without any Character from the King, only he had a Letter recommending him to the Care of John Cassali, then Ambassador at Venice, to procure him an admittance into the Libraries there. But in all his Letters he complained mightily of his Poverty, that he had scarce whereby to live and pay the Copiers who he imployed to Transcribe Passages out of MSS. He stayed sometime at Venice, from whence he went to Padua, Bononia, and other Towns, where he only talked with Divines and Canonists about these Questions: Whether the Precepts in Leviticus, of the Degrees of Marriage, do still oblige Christians? And whether the Popes Dispensation could have any force against the Law of God? These he proposed in Discourse, without mentioning the King of England, or giving the least intimation, that he was sent by him, till he once discovered their Opinions. But finding them generally inclining to the Kings Cause, he took more courage and went to Rome; where he sought to be made a Penitentiary Priest, that he might have the freer access into Libraries, and be lookt on as one of the Popes Servants. But at this time the Earl of Wiltshire and Stokesley, (who was made Bishop of London, Tonstall being translated to Duresm) were sent by the King into Italy, Amassadors both to the Pope and Emperor. Cranmer went with them to justifie his Book in both these Courts. Stokesley brought full Instructions to Crooke to search the Writings of most of the Fathers on a great many passages of the Scripture; and in particular, to try what they wrote on that Law in Deuteronomy, which provided, that when one Crooke employed in Venice. Crooks Negotiation, taken from many of his Original Letters. *Cott. died

1530. died without Children, his Brother should marry his Wife to raise up Children to him. This was most pressed against the King by all that were for the Queen, as either an Abrogation of the other Law in Leviticus, or at least a Dispensation with it in that particular Case. He was also to consult the Jews about it; and was to Copy out every thing that he found in any Manuscript of the Greek or Latin Fathers, relating to the Degrees of Marriage. Of this labour he complained heavily, and said, That though he had a great Task laid on him, yet his Allowance was so small, that he was often in great straits. This I take notice of, because it is said by others, That all the Subscriptions that he procured were bought. At this time there were great Animosities between the Ministers whom the King imployed in Italy; the two Families of the Cassali, and the Ghinucci, hating one another. Of the former Family were the Ambassadors at Rome and at Venice. Of the other Hierome was Bishop of Worcester, and had been in several Ambassies into Spain. His Brother Peter was also imployed in some of the little Courts of Italy as the Kings Agent. Whether the King out of Policy kept this hatred up to make them Spies one on another, I know not. To the Ghinucci was Crook gained, so that in all his Letters he complained of the Cassali, as men that betrayed the Kings Affairs; and said that John, then Ambassador at Venice, not only gave him no Assistance, but used him ill: and publickly discovered, That he was imployed by the King; which made many, who had formerly spoken their minds freely, be more reserved to him. But as he wrote this to the King, he begged of him, that it might not be known, otherwise he expected either to be Killed, or Poisoned by them: Yet they had their Correspondents about the King, by whose means they understood what Crook had informed against them. But they wrote to the King, that he was so morose and ill-natured, that nothing could please him: and to lessen his Credit, they did all they could to stop his Bills. All this is more fully set down, than perhaps was necessary, if it were not to shew that he was not in a condition to corrupt so many Divines, and whole Universities, as some have given out. He got into the acquaintance of a Frier at Venice, Franciscus Georgius, who had lived 49 years in a Religious Order, and was esteemed the most Learned man in the Republick, not only in the vulgar Learning, but in the Greek and Hebrew, and was so much accounted of by the Pope, that he called him the Hammer of Hereticks. He was also of the Senatorian Quality, and his Brother was Governour of Padua, and payed all the Readers there. This Frier had a great Opinion of the King: and having studied the Case, wrote for the Kings Cause, and endeavoured to satisfie all the other Divines of the Republick, among whom he had much credit. Thomas Omnibonus a Dominican, Philippus de Cremis a Doctor of the Law, Valerius of Bergamo, and some others, wrote for the Kings Cause. Many of the Jewish Rabbins, did give it under their hands in Hebrew, That the Laws of Leviticus and Deuteronomy, were thus to be reconciled. That Law of Marrying the Brothers Wife when he dyed without Children, did only bind in the Land of Judæa, to preserve Families and maintain their Successions in the Land, as it had been divided by Lot. But that in all other places of the World, the Law of Leviticus, of not Marrying the Brothers Wife was obligatory. He also searched all the Greek MSS. of Councils, and Nazianzens and Chrysostoms Works. After that, he

he run over Macarius, Acacius, Apollinaris, Origen, Gregory Nyſſen, Cyril, Severian, and Gennadius; and copied out of them all that which was pertinent to his purpoſe. He procured ſeveral Hands to the Concluſions, before it was known that it was the Kings buſineſs, in which he was employed. But the Government of Venice was ſo ſtrict, that when it was known whoſe Agent he was, he found it not eaſie to procure Subſcriptions: Therefore he adviſed the King to order his Miniſter to procure a Licence from the Senate, for their Divines to declare their Opinions in that matter. Which being propoſed to the Senate, all the anſwer he could obtain, was, that they would be Neutrals; and when the Ambaſſador preſſed, as an evidence of Neutrality, that the Senate would leave it free to their Divines, to declare of either ſide as their Conſciences led them; he could procure no other anſwer, the former being again repeated. Yet the Senate making no Prohibition, many of their Divines put their Hands to the Concluſions. And Crook had that Succeſs, that he wrote to the King, he had never met with a Divine that did not favour his Cauſe: but the Concluſions touching the Popes Power, his Agents did every where diſcourage, and threaten thoſe who ſubſcribed them. And the Emperors Ambaſſador at Venice, did threaten Omnibonus for writing in prejudice of the Popes Authority; and aſſerting Concluſions, which would make moſt of the Princes of Europe Baſtards. He anſwered, he did not conſider things as a States-man, but as a Divine. Yet to take off this fear, Crook ſuggeſted to the King, to order his Miniſter at the Court of Rome, to procure a Breve, "That Divines or Canoniſts might without fear or hazard, "deliver their Opinions according to their Conſciences, requiring them "under the pain of Excommunication, that they ſhould write nothing "for gain or Partial affections, but ſay the pure and ſimple truth, "without any artifice, as they would anſwer to God in the great day "of Judgment. This ſeemed ſo fair, that it might have been expected the Succeſſor of St. Peter would not deny it; yet it was not eaſily obtained, though the King wrote a very earneſt Letter to the Biſhop of Verona, to aſſiſt his Miniſter in procuring it. And I find by another Diſpatch, that the Breve was at length gained, not without much oppoſition made to it by the Emperors Ambaſſadors: For at Rome, though they knew not well how to oppoſe this method becauſe it ſeem'd ſo very reaſonable; yet they had great apprehenſions of it, becauſe they thought it was deſigned to force the Pope to determine as the King pleaſed: and they abhorred the Preſident, that a company of poor Friars ſhould dictate to them in matters of this nature. Crook reports out of a Letter of Cranmers to him from Rome, theſe words. As for our Succeſſes here, they be very little, nor dare we attempt to know any mans mind, becauſe of the Pope, nor is he content with what you have done; and he ſays, no Friars ſhall diſcuſs his Power: and as for any favour in this Court, I look for none, but to have the Pope with all his Cardinals declare againſt us. But Crook, as he went up and down procuring Hands, told theſe he came to, he deſired they would write their Concluſions, according to Learning and Conſcience, without any reſpect or favour, as they would anſwer it at the laſt day; and proteſted he never gave, nor promiſed any Divine any thing, till he had firſt freely written his mind, and that what he then gave, was rather an honourable Preſent than a Reward. And in another Septemb. 7. nother Leter to the King he writes: Upon pain of my Head, if the contrary be proved, I never gave any man one half-penny, before I had his Conclusion to your Highness, without former Prayer, or Promise of Reward for the same. From whence it appears, that he not only had no Orders from the King to corrupt Divines, but that his Orders were expres to the contrary.

As for the Money he gave, the Reader will be best able to judge by the following account, whether it was such as could work much on any man. There is an Original Bill of his accounts yet extant, audited and signed by Peter a Ghinuccis, out of which I have extracted these particulars: Item, to a Servite Frier when he subscribed, one Crown. To a Jew, one Crown. To the Doctor of the Servites, two Crowns. To the Observant Friars, two Crowns. To the Prior of St. John and St. Pauls, who wrote for the Kings Cause, fifteen Crowns. To that Convent four Crowns. Item, Given to John Maria for his Expence of going to Milan from Venice, and for rewarding the Doctors there, thirty Crowns. Item, to John Marino, Minister of the Franciscans, who wrote a Book for the Kings Cause, twenty Crowns. This shews that they must have had very prostituted Consciences, if they could be hired so cheap. It is true, Crook in many of his Letters says, That if he had Money enough, he did not doubt but he should get the Hands of all the Divines in Italy, for he found the greatest part of them all Mercenary. But the Bishop of Worcester, in his Letters to him, ordered him only to promise Rewards to those who expected them, and lived by them, that is, to the Canonists, who did not use to give their Opinion without a Fee.

Feb. 8. Only some small acknowledgments. Feb. 22. Feb. 9.

But at the same time, the Emperor did reward and fee Divines at another rate, for Crook informed the King, that one Friar Felix having written for the validity of the Marriage against the King, there was a Benefice of 500 Duckats a year given him in reward. And the Emperors Ambassador offered a thousand Duckats to the Provincial of the Gray-Friars in Venice, if he would inhibit all within his Province to write or subscribe for the Kings Cause. But the Provincial refused it, and said, he neither could nor yet would do it. And another that wrote for the Queen, had a Benefice of 600 Crowns. So that it was openly said at Ferrara, that they who wrote for the King had but a few Crowns a-piece, but they who wrote on the other side had good Benefices. They also tryed what could be done at Padua, both by Threatnings, Entreaties and Rewards, to induce them to reverse the determination they had made in the matter; but with no success. And though Francis Georgius the Venetian Friar, did greatly promote the Kings Cause, both by his Writings and Authority; yet Crook wrote that he could not prevail to make either him or his Nephew accept one farthing of him. By such fair means it was, that Crook procured so many Subscriptions.

Septemb. 16. But great Rewards given by the Emperor. Septemb. 29. Feb. 28.

First, of particular Divines, many Franciscans, Dominicans, and Servites, set their Hands to the Conclusions; though even in that, there was opposition made by the Popes Agents. Campegio was now engaged in the Emperors Faction, and did every where misrepresent the Kings Cause. Being at Venice, he so wrought on the Minister of the Franciscans, that though he had declared for the King, and engaged to bring the Hands of 24 Doctors and Learned men of his Order for for it, and had received a ſmall Preſent of ten Crowns; yet after he had kept the Money three weeks, he ſent it back, and ſaid, he would not meddle more in it: But they procured moſt of theſe hands without his help. At Milan, a Suffragan Biſhop, and ſixteen Divines Subſcribed. Nine Doctors Subſcribed at Vincenza, but the Popes Nuntio took the writing out of his hands that had it, and ſuppreſſed it. At Padua all the Franciſcans, both Obſervants and Conventuals, Subſcribed, and ſo did the Dominicans, and all the Canoniſts; and though the Popes and Emperors Emiſſaries did threaten all that Subſcribed, yet there were got eighty hands at Padua. Next the Univerſities determined. 1530. May 26. June 27.

At Bononia, though it was the Popes Town, many Subſcribed. The Governour of the Town did at firſt oppoſe the granting of any Determination; but the Popes Breve being brought thither, he not without great difficulty gave way to it, So on the 10 of June, the matter being publickly debated, and all Cajetans Arguments being examined, who was of Opinion, That the Laws of Marriage in Leviticus did not bind the Chriſtian Church; they determined, That theſe Laws are ſtill in force, and that they bind all both Chriſtians and Infidels, being parts of the Law of Nature, as well as of the Law of God; and that therefore they judged Marriage in theſe degrees unlawful, and that the Pope had no Authority to diſpence with them. They Determined for the King at Bononia. June 10th.

The Univerſity of Padua after ſome days publick Diſpute, on the 1ſt of July, determined to the ſame purpoſe; about which Crooks Letter will be found among the Inſtruments at the end of this Book. At Padua. July 1. Collect. Numb. 33.

At Ferrara, the Divines did alſo confirm the ſame concluſion, and ſet their Seal to it; but it was taken away violently by ſome of the other Faction, yet the Duke made it be reſtored. The profeſſion of the Canon-Law was then in great credit there, and in a Congregation of 72 of that profeſſion, it was determined for the King; but they asked 150 Crowns for ſetting the Seal to it, and Crook would not give more than an hundred; the next day he came and offered the Money, but then it was told him they would not meddle in it, and he could not afterwards obtain it. And Ferrara, Sept. 29.

In all, Crook ſent over by Stokeſley an hundred ſeveral Books, Papers and Subſcriptions, and there were many hands ſubſcribed to many of thoſe Papers. But it ſeems Crook died before he could receive a reward of this great Service he did the King, for I do not find him mentioned after this. I hope the Reader will forgive my inſiſting ſo much on this Negotiation; for it ſeemed neceſſary to give full and convincing Evidences of the ſincerity of the Kings proceedings in it, ſince it is ſo confidently given out that theſe were but mercenary Subſcriptions.

What difficulties or oppoſition thoſe who were employed in France found, does not yet appear to me; but the Seals of the chief Univerſities there were procured. The Univerſity of Orleance determined it on the 7th of April. The factulty of the Canon-Law at Paris, did alſo conclude that the Pope had no Power to diſpence in that Caſe, on the 25th of May. But the great and celebrated faculty of the Sorbon, (whoſe Concluſions had been lookt on for ſome Ages as little inferior to the Decrees of Councils) made their Deciſion with all poſſible Solemnity and Decency. They firſt met at the Church of St. Mathurin, where there was a Maſs of the H. Ghoſt, and every one took an Oath to ſtudy the Queſtion, and reſolve it according to his Conſcience, and from the 8th of June, to And in Orleance. April 7. At Paris of the Canoniſts. May. 25.

1530. Of the Sorbon, July 2. the 2d of July, they continued searching the matter with all possible diligence, both out of the Scriptures, the Fathers, and the Councils; and had many Disputes about it. After which, the greater part of the Faculty did Determine, That the King of Englands Marriage was unlawful, and that the Pope had no Power to dispence in it; and they set their common Seal to it, at St. Mathurin's, the 2d of July, 1530. To the same purpose did both the Faculties of Law, Civil and Canon at Angiers, Determine the 7th of May. On the 10th of June, the Faculty of Divinity, at Bourges, made the same Determination. And on the 1st of October the whole University of Tholose, did all with one consent give their judgment, agreeing with the former Conclusions. More of the Decisions of Universities were not Printed, though many more were obtained to the same effect. In Germany, Spain, and Flanders, the Emperors Authority was so great, that much could not be expected except from the Lutherans, with whom Cranmer conversed; and chiefly with Osiander, whose Neece he then Married. Osiander upon that wrote a Book about Incestuous Marriages, which was published; but was called in by a Prohibition Printed at Ausburg, because it Determined in the Kings cause, and on his side.

But now I find the King did likewise deal among those, in Switzerland that had set up the Reformation. The Duke of Suffolk did most set him on to this, so one who was imployed in that time writes, for he often asked him, how he could so humble himself, as to submit his Cause to such a vile, vitious, stranger, Priest as Campegio was? To which the King answered, He could give no other reason, but that it seemed to him, Spiritual men should judge Spiritual things; yet, he said, he would search the matter further, but he had no great mind to seem more curious than other Princes. But the Duke desired him to discus the matter secretly amongst Learned men, to which he consented; and wrote to some Foreign Writers that were then in great estimation. Erasmus was much in his favour, but he would not appear in it. He had no mind to provoke the Emperor, and live uneasily in his own Country. But Simon Grineus was sent for, whom the King esteemed much for his Learning. The King informed him about his Process, and sent him back to Basil, to try what his Friends in Germany and Switzerland thought of it. He wrote about it to Bucer, Oecolampadius, Zuinglius, and Paulus Phrygion.

The Opinions of Oecolompadius.

Oecolampadius, as it appears by three Letters, one dated the 10th of August, 1531. another the last of the same Month, another to Bucer the 10th of September; was positively of Opinion, That the Law in Leviticus did bind all mankind, and says, That Law of a Brothers Marrying his Sister-in-Law, was a Dispensation given by God to his own Law, which belonged only to the Jews; and therefore he thought that the King might without any scruple put away the Queen. But Bucer was of another mind, and thought the Law in Leviticus did not bind, and could not be Moral, because God had dispensed with it in one Case, of raising up seed to his Brother: Therefore he thought these Laws belonged only to that Dispensation, and did no more bind Christians, than the other Ceremonial or Judiciary Precepts; and that to Marry in some of these Degrees, was no more a sin, than it was a sin in the Disciples to pluck Ears of Corn on the Sabbath-day. There are none of Bucers Letters remaining on this Head, but by the answers that Grineus wrote to him, one on the 29th of August, another ther of the 10th of September, I gather his Opinion, and the reaſons for it. But they all agreed, That the Popes Diſpenſation was of no force to alter the nature of a thing. Paulus Phrygion was of Opinion, That the Laws in Leviticus did bind all Nations, becauſe it is ſaid in the Text, That the Canaanites were puniſhed for doing contrary to them, which did not conſiſt with the Juſtice of God, if thoſe Prohibitions had not been parts of the Law of Nature. Dated Baſil the 10th of September. In Grineus's Letter to Bucer, he tells him, that the King had ſaid to him, That now for ſeven years he had perpetual trouble upon him about this Marriage, Zuinglius's Letter is very full. Firſt, he largely proves that neither the Pope, nor any other Power could diſpence with the Law of God: Then, that the Apoſtles had made no new Laws about Marriage, but had left it as they found it: That the Marrying within near degrees was hated by the Greeks, and other Heathen Nations. But whereas Grineus ſeemed to be of opinion, that though the Marriage was ill made, yet it ought not to be diſſolved, and inclined rather to adviſe that the King ſhould take another Wife, keeping the Queen ſtill; Zuinglius confutes that, and ſays, if the Marriage be againſt the Law of God, it ought to be diſſolved: But concludes the Queen ſhould be put away honourably, and ſtill uſed as a Queen; and the Marriage ſhould only be diſſolved for the future, without Illegitimating the Iſſue begotten in it, ſince it had gone on in a publick way, upon a received error. But adviſes, that the King ſhould proceed in a Judiciary way, and not eſtabliſh ſo ill a Preſident as to put away his Queen, and take another without due form of Law. Dated Baſil, 17th of Aug. There is a ſecond Letter of his to the ſame purpoſe from Zurick, the firſt of September. There is alſo with theſe Letters a long paper of Oſianders, in the form of a Direction how the Proceſs ſhould be managed. 1530. Phrygion. Zuinglius.

There is alſo an Epiſtle of Calvins, publiſhed among the reſt of his. Neither the date nor the perſon to whom it was directed are named. Yet I fancie it was written to Grineus, upon this occaſion: Calvin was clear in his judgment that the Marriage was null, and that the King ought to put away the Queen, upon the Law of Leviticus. And whereas it was objected, that the Law is only meant of Marrying the Brothers Wife while he is yet alive; he ſhews that could not be admitted, for all the prohibited degrees being forbidden in the ſame ſtyle, they were all to be underſtood in one ſenſe: Therefore ſince it is confeſſed, that it is unlawful to Marry in the other degrees, after the death of the Father, Son, Uncle, or Nephew, ſo it muſt be alſo a ſin, to Marry the Brothers Wife after his death. And for the Law in Deuteronomy of Marrying the Brothers Wife to raiſe up ſeed to him; he thought, that by Brother there, is to be underſtood a near Kinſman, according to the uſual phraſe of the Hebrew tongue: and by that he reconciles the two Laws which otherwiſe ſeem to differ, illuſtrating his Expoſition by the Hiſtory of Ruth and Boaz. It is given out that Melanchon adviſed the Kings taking another Wife, juſtifying Polygamy from the old Teſtament; but I cannot believe it. It is true the lawfulneſs of Polygamy was much controverted at this time. And as in all controverſies newly ſtarted, many crude things are ſaid; ſo ſome of the Helvetian and German Divines ſeem not ſo fierce againſt it; though none of them went ſo far as the Pope did, who did plainly offer to grant the King Licence to have two Wives: and it was a motion the Imperialiſts conſented to, and pro- And Calvin Epiſt. 384. The Pope forbad him to write about it to the King, perhaps as Whiſperers enjoyn ſilence, as the moſt effectual way to make a thing publick. But for Melanchons being of that mind, great evidences appear to the contrary; for there is a Letter of Oſianders to him, giving him many reaſons to perſwade him to approve of the Kings putting away the Queen, and Marrying another: the Letter alſo ſhews he was then of opinion, that the Law in Leviticus was Diſpenſable.

The opinion of the Lutheran Divines.

And after the thing was done, when the King deſired the Lutheran Divines to approve his ſecond Marriage; they begged his excuſe in a writing, which they ſent over to him; ſo that Melanchon not allowing the thing, when it was done, cannot be imagined to have adviſed Polygamy beforehand. And to open at once all that may clear the ſenſe of the Proteſtants in the Queſtion, when ſome years after this, Fox being made Biſhop of Hereford, and much inclined to their Doctrine, was ſent over to get the Divines of Germany, to approve of the Divorce, and the ſubſequent Marriage of Anne Boleyn; he found the Melanchon and others had no mind to enter much into the Diſpute about it, both for fear of the Emperor, and becauſe they judged the King was led in it by diſhoneſt affections: they alſo thought the Laws in Leviticus were not Moral, and did not oblige Chriſtians, and ſince there were no Rules made about the Degrees of Marriage in the Goſpel, they thought Princes and States might make what Laws they pleaſed about it: yet after much Diſputing they were induced to change their minds, but could not be brought to think that a Marriage once made, might be annulled, and therefore demurred upon that; as will appear by the Concluſion they paſſed upon it, to be found at the end of this volume. All this I have ſet together here, to give a right repreſentation of the judgments of the ſeveral parties of Chriſtendom about this matter.

Inſtructions ſent by Dr. Barns to Cromwel. Cott. Lib. Vitel. B. 13.

They condemn the Kings firſt Marriage, but are againſt a ſecond. Collect. Numb. 35.

It cannot be denyed, that the Proteſtants did expreſs great ſincerity in this matter: ſuch as became men of conſcience, who were acted by true Principles, and not by maxims of Policie. For if theſe had governed them, they had ſtruck in more compliantly with ſo great a Prince, who was then alienated from the Pope, and in very ill terms with the Emperor: ſo that to have gained him by a full Compliance to have protected them, was the wiſeſt thing they could do; and their being ſo cold in the matter of his Marriage, in which he had engaged ſo deeply, was a thing, which would very much provoke him againſt them. But ſuch meaſures as theſe, though they very well became the Apoſtolick See, yet they were unworthy of men, who deſigned to reſtore an Apoſtolick Religion.

Fox.

The Earl of Wiltſhire with the other Ambaſſadors, when they had their Audience of the Pope at Bononia, refuſed to pay him the ſubmiſſion of Kiſſing his foot, though he graciouſly ſtretched it out to them; but went to their Buſineſs, and expoſtulated in the Kings name, and in high words: and in Concluſion told the Pope, that the Prerogative of the Crown of England was ſuch, that their Maſter would not ſuffer any Citation to be made of him, to any foreign Court; and that therefore the King would not have his cauſe tryed at Rome. The Pope anſwered swered, that though the Queens Sollicitor had pressed him to proceed in the Citation; both that her Marriage being further examined, might receive a new Confirmation, for silencing the Disputes about it, and because the King had withdrawn himself from her; yet if the King did not go further, and did not innovate in Religion, the Pope was willing to let the matter rest. They went next to the Emperor, to justifie the Kings Proceedings in the Suit of the Divorce. But he told them he was bound in honour and justice to support his Aunt, and that he would not abandon her. Cranmer offered to maintain what he had written in his Book, but whether they went so far, as to make their Divines enter into any Discourse with him about it, I do not know. This appears that the Pope, to put a Complement on the King, declared Cranmer his Pœnitentiary in England. He having stayed some months at Rome, after the Ambassadors were gone, went into Germany: where he became acquainted with Cornelius Agrippa, a man very famous for great and curious Learning, and so satisfied him in the Kings cause, that he gave it out, that the thing was clear and indisputable, for which he was afterwards hardly used by the Emperor, and dyed in Prison. 1530.

Cranmer offers to maintain the Kings cause.

But when the King received the Determinations and Conclusions of the Universities, and other Learned men beyond Sea, he resolved to do two things. First, to make a new attempt upon the Pope, and then to publish those Conclusions to the World, with the arguments upon which they were grounded. But to make his address to the Pope carry more terror with it, he got a Letter to be signed by a great many Members of Parliament, to the Pope. The Lord Herbert saith, it was done by his Parliament; but in that, he had not applyed his ordinary diligence, the Letter bears date the 13 of July. Now by the Records of Parliament, it appears, there could be no Session at that time, for there was a Prorogation from the 21 of June, till the 1st of October that year: But the Letter was sent about to the chief Members, for their hands; and Cavendish tells how it was brought to the Cardinal, and with what chearfulness he set his hand to it. It was subscribed by the Cardinal, and the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, 4 Bishops, 2 Dukes, 2 Marquesses, 13 Earls, 2 Viscounts, 23 Barons, 22 Abbots, and 11 Commoners, most of these being the Kings Servants.

The Contents of the Letter were, "that their near Relation to the "King, made them address thus to the Pope. The Kings cause was "now in the opinion of the Learned men, and Universities both in "England, France, and Italy found just, which ought to prevail so far "with the Pope, that though none moved in it, and notwithstanding "any Contradiction, he ought to confirm their judgment; especially "it touching a King and Kingdom, to whom he was so much obliged. "But since neither the justice of the cause, nor the Kings most earnest "desires had prevailed with him, they were all forced to complain of "that strange usage of their King; who both by his Authority, and "with his Pen, had supported the Apostolick See, and the Catholick "Faith, and yet was now denyed justice. From which they appre"hended great mischief aud Civil Wars, which could only be prevent"ed by the Kings Marrying another Wife, of whom he might have "issue. The Popes anſwer. To this the Pope made anſwer, the 27 of September. " He took no" tice of the vehemency of their Letter, which he forgave them, im-
" puting it to their great affection to their King: they had charged him
" with ingratitude and injuſtice; two grievous Imputations. He ac" knowledged all they wrote of the obligations he owed to their King,
" which were far greater than they called them, both on the Apoſto-
" lick See, and himſelf in particular. But in the Kings Cauſe he had " been ſo far from denying juſtice, that he was oft charged as having " been too partial to him. He had granted a Commiſſion to two Le-
" gates to hear it, rather out of favour, than in Rigor of Law; upon " which the Queen had appealed: he had delayed the admitting of it,
" as long as was poſſible; but when he ſaw it could not be any longer

" the Kings Ambaſſadors. It was true ſome of them had been brought " to him another way; but in them there were no reaſons given, but " only bare Concluſions, and he had alſo ſeen very important things for " the other ſide; and therefore he muſt not precipitate a Sentence, in
" a cauſe of ſuch high Importance, till all things were fully heard and

A Proclamation againſt Bulls from Rome. Lord Herb. But the King either ſeeing the Pope reſolved to grant nothing, or apprehending that ſome Bull might be brought into England, in behalf of the Queen, or the diſgraced Cardinal, did on the Nineteenth of September, put forth a Proclamation againſt any " who purchaſed any thing " from Rome, or elſewhere, contrary to his Royal Prerogative and Au" thority, or ſhould publiſh or divulge any ſuch thing, requiring them
" not to do it, under the pains of incurring his indignation, Impriſon-
" ment, and other puniſhments on their perſons. This was founded on the Statute of Proviſors and Premunires. But that being done, he reſolved reſolved next to publiſh, to the World, and to his Subjects the juſtice of his cauſe: Therefore ſome Learned men were appointed to compare all that had been written on it, and out of all the Tranſcripts of the Manuſcripts, of Fathers and Councils, to gather together whatſoever did ſtrengthen it. Several of theſe Manuſcripts I have ſeen, one is in Mr. Smiths Library, where are the Quotations of the Fathers, Councils, Schoolmen, and Canoniſts, written out at length. There are three other ſuch MSS. in the Cotton Library, of which one contains a large vindication of theſe Authorities, from ſome Exceptions made to them; another is an anſwer to the Biſhop of Rocheſter's Book for the Queens cauſe. A Third digeſts the Matter into Twelve Articles, which the Reader will find in my Appendix, and theſe are there enlarged on and proved. But all theſe, and many more were ſum'd up in a ſhort Book, and Printed firſt in Latine, then in Engliſh, with the Determinations of the Univerſities before it. Theſe are of ſuch weight and Importance, and give ſo great a light to the whole Matter, that I hope the Reader will not be ill pleaſed to have a ſhort abſtract of them laid before him. 1530.

An Abſtract of thoſe things which were written for the Divorce.

"The Law of Marriage was originally given by God, to Adam in "the ſtate of Innocence, with this Declaration, that Man and Wife "were one Fleſh; but being afterwards corrupted by the Inceſtuous "commixtures of thoſe which were of Kin, in the neareſt degrees, "the Primitive Law was again revived by Moſes. And he gives many "Rules and Prohibitions about the Degrees of Kindred and Affinity, "which are not to be looked on, as new Laws and judiciary Precepts, "but as a Reſtoring of the Law of Nature, originally given by God, "but then much corrupted. For as the Preface which is ſo oft repeated before theſe Laws, I am the Lord, inſinuates that they were conform to the Divine Nature; ſo the conſequences of them ſhow they "were Moral and Natural. For the Breaches of them are called Wickedneſs and Abomination, and are ſaid to defile the Land; and the Violation of them is charged on the Canaanites, by which the Land was polluted, and for which it did vomit out the Inhabitants. From whence "it muſt be concluded, that theſe were not poſitive Precepts, which "did only bind the Jews, but were parts of the Law of Mankind and "Nature; otherwiſe thoſe Nations could contract no Guilt by their "Violating them. Among the forbidden Degrees, one is, Thou ſhalt "not diſcover the Nakedneſs of thy Brothers Wife, it is thy Brothers "Nakedneſs. And it is again repeated, If a man ſhall take his Brothers "wife, it is an unclean thing, he hath uncovered his Brothers Nakedneſs, "they ſhall be childleſs. Theſe are clear and expreſs Laws of God, "which therefore muſt needs oblige all perſons of what rank ſoever, "without exception.

"and calls it a Fornication, not so much as named among the Gentiles. "From whence it is inferred, that these forbidden degrees are excluded "by the Law of Nature, since the Gentiles did not admit them. St. "Paul also calling it by the common name of Fornication, within which, "according to that place, all undue Commixtures of Men and Women "are included; Therefore those places in the New Testament, that "condemn Fornication, do also condemn Marriages in forbidden de- "grees; our Saviour did also assert the foundation of affinity, by say- "in, that Man and Wife are one Flesh.

"But in all Controverted things, the sense of the Scriptures must "be taken from the Tradition of the Church, which no good Catho- "lick can deny: and that is to be found in the Decrees of Popes and "Councils, and in the writings of the Fathers and Doctors of the "Church: against which, if any argue from their private understand- "ing of the Scriptures, it is the way of Heresie, and savours of Luthe- "ranism. The first of the Fathers, who had occasion to write of this "Matter, was Tertullian, who lived within an Age after the Apostles. "He in expres words says, that the Law of not Marrying the Bro- "thers Wife, did still oblige Christians.

The Authorities of Popes.

"The first Pope, whose decision was sought in this Matter, was "Gregory the Great, to whom Austin the Apostle of England wrote "for his resolution of some things, in which he desired direction, "and one of these is, Whether a man may Marry his Brothers Wife? (who in "the Language of that time was called his Kinswoman) The Pope an- "swered Negatively, and proved it by the Law of Moses, and there- "fore Defined, that if any of the English Nation, who had Marryed "within that degree, were converted to the Faith, he must be admonished "to abstain from his wife, and to look on such a Marriage as a most gric- "vous Sin. From which it appears, that that good Pope did judge "it a thing, which by no means could be dispensed with, otherwise "he had not pressed it so much under such Circumstances; since in "the first Conversion of a Nation to the Christian Faith, the Insisting "too much upon it, might have kept back many from receiving the "Christian Religion, who were otherwise well inclined to it. [a] Ca- "lixtus, [b] Zacarias, and [c] Innocent the Third, have plainly asserted the "obligation of these Precepts in the Law of Moses, the last particu- "larly, who treats about it with great vehemency: So that the Apo- "stolick See has already judged the Matter.

"Several Provincial Councils have also declared the obligation of "the Precepts, about the degrees of Marriage in Leviticus, by the "Council at Neocesarea; If a woman had been Marryed to two Brothers, "she was to be cast out of the Communion of the Church till her death, and "the man that Marryed his Brothers wife, was to be Anathematized, which "was also confirmed in a Council held by Pope Gregory the Second. "In the Council of Agde, where the Degrees that make a Marriage "incestuous are reckoned; this of Marrying the Brothers wife is one "of them: and there it was Decreed, that all Marriages within these "Degrees were Null, and the Parties so Contracting, were to be cast out of "the Communion of the Church, and put among the Catechumens, till they "separated themselves from one another. And in the second Council of "Toledo, the Authority of the Mosaical Prohibitions about the De-

There were "also many Quotations brought out of Petrus de Tarentasia, Durandus, "Stephanus Brulifer, Richardus de Media Villa, Guido Briancon, Gerson, "Paulus Ritius, and many others, to confirm the same Opinion, who did "all unanimously assert, That those Laws in Leviticus are parts of the "Law of Nature, which oblige all mankind, and that Marriages con-

All the Canonists were al-"so of the same mind, Joannes Andreas, Joannes de Imola, Abbas Pa-"normitanus, Matthæus Nern, Vincentius, Innocentius, and Ostiensis, all "concluded that these Laws were still in force, and could not be dis-"pensed with.

Marriage compleated by consent. "There was also a great deal alledged, to prove that a Marriage is "compleated by the Marriage-Contract, though it be never Consum-"mated. Many Authorities were brought to prove that Adonijah could "not marry Abishag, because she was his Fathers Wife, though never "know by him. And by the Law of Moses, a Woman espoused to a Man, "if she admitted another to her Bed, was to be stoned as an Adultress; "from whence it appears, that the validity of Marriage is from the mu-"tual Covenant. And though Joseph never knew the Blessed Virgin, "yet he was so much her Husband by the Espousals, that he could not "put her away, but by a Bill of Divorce: and was afterwards called her "Husband and Christs Father. Affinity had been also defined by all "Writers, a Relation arising out of Marriage, and since Marriage was a "Sacrament of the Church, its Essence could only consist in the Contract; "and therefore as a man in Orders has the Character, though he never "consecrated any Sacrament: So Marriage is compleat, though its ef-"fect never follow. And it was shewed that the Canonists had only "brought in the Consummation of Marriage as essential to it by Eccle-"siastical Law. But that as Adam and Eve were perfectly married before "they knew one another, so Marriage was compleat upon the Contract; "and what followed, was only an effect done in the right of the Marriage. "And there was a great deal of filthy stuff brought together, of the "different Opinions of the Canonists concerning Consummation, to what "Degree it must go, to shew that it could not be essential to the Mar-"riage Contract, which in modesty were suppressed. Both Hildebert "of Mans, Ivo Carnotensis, and Hugo de Sto. Victore, had delivered this "Opinion, and proved it out of St. Chrysostom, Ambrose, Austin, and "Isidore. Pope Nicholas, and the Council of Tribur, defined, that Mar-"riage was compleated by the Consent, and the Benediction. From all "which they concluded, that although it could not be proved that Violent presumptions of the Consummation of Prince Arthur's Marriage. "Prince Arthur knew the Queen, yet that she being once lawfully mar-"ried to him, the King could not afterwards marry her.

"It was also said, that violent Presumptions were sufficient in the Opi-"nion of the Canonists to prove Consummation. Formal proofs could "not be expected; and for Persons that were of Age, and in good health,

"to

" to be in Bed together, was in all Trials about Conſummation, all that " the Canoniſts ſought for. And yet this was not all in this Caſe, for " it appeared, that upon her Husbands death, ſhe was kept with great " care by ſome Ladies, who did think her with Child; and ſhe never " ſaid any thing againſt it. And in the Petition offered to the Pope in " her name (repeated in the Bull that was procured for the ſecond Mar- " riage) it is ſaid, ſhe was perhaps known by Prince Arthur, and in the " Breve, it is plainly ſaid, ſhe was known by Prince Arthur, and though " the Queen offered to purge her ſelf by Oath, that Prince Arthur ne- " ver knew her, it was proved by many Authorities out of the Canon- " Law, That a Partie's Oath ought not to be taken, when there were " violent preſumptions to the contrary.

" As for the validity of the Popes Diſpenſation, it was ſaid, That " though the School-men and Canoniſts did generally raiſe the Popes " Power very high, and ſtretch it as far as it was poſſible; yet they all " agree that it could not reach the Kings Caſe: Upon this received " Maxim, That only the Laws of the Church are ſubject to the Pope, and may " be diſpenced with by him; but that the Laws of God are above him, and that " he cannot diſpence with them in any caſe. This Aquinas delivers in ma- " ny places of his Works, Petrus de Palude, ſays, The Pope cannot diſ- " pence with Marriage in theſe Degrees, becauſe it is againſt nature. But " Joannes de Turre Cremata, reports a ſingular Caſe, which fell out when " he was a Cardinal. A King of France deſired a Diſpenſation to Marry " his Wives Siſter. The matter was long conſidered of and debated in " the Rota, himſelf being there, and bearing a ſhare in the Debate; but " it was concluded, That if any Pope, either out of Ignorance, or being Cor- " rupted, had ever granted ſuch a Diſpenſation, that could be no precedent or " warrant for doing the like any more, ſince the Church ought to be governed " by Laws, and not by ſuch Examples. Antonin, and Johannes de Tabia, held " the ſame. And one Bacon an Engliſh-man, who had taught the contra- " ry, was cenſured for it even at Rome, and he did detract his Opinion, " and acknowledged, that the Pope could not diſpence with the Degrees " of Marriage forbidden by the Law of God.

The Popes Diſpenſation of no force.

" And for the Power of diſpencing even with the Laws of the Church, " by Popes; it was brought in, in the latter Ages. All the Fathers with " one conſent believed, That the Laws of God could not be diſpenced " with by the Church, for which many places were cited out of St. Cy- " prian, Baſil, Ambroſe, Iſidore, Bernard, and Urban, Fabian, Marcellus, and " Innocent, that were Popes; beſides an infinite number of latter Wri- " ters. And alſo the Popes Zoſimus, Damaſcus, Leo, and Hilarius did free- " ly acknowledge they could not change the Decrees of the Church, nor " go againſt the Opinions or Practices of the Fathers. And ſince the A-1530. "postles confessed, they could do nothing against the truth, but for the truth; "the Pope being Christs Vicar, cannot be supposed to have so great a "Power, as to abrogate the Law of God: though it is acknowledged, "that he is Vested with a fulness of Power, yet the Phrase must be restrain- "ed to the matter of it, which is the Pastoral care of Souls. And though "there was no Court Superior to the Popes, yet as St. Paul had with- "stood St. Peter to his face; so in all Ages upon several occasions, holy "Bishops have refused to comply with, or submit to Orders sent from "Rome, when they thought the matter of them unlawful.

Several Bishops refuse to submit to the Popes Decrees. Gul. Malmesbur. Lib. 1.

"Laurence that succeeded Austin the Monk in the See of Canterbury, "having excommunicated King Edbald for an incestuous Marriage, "would not absolve him, till he put away his Wife; though the Pope "plied him earnestly, both by Intreaties and Threatnings, to let it alone, "and Absolve him. Dunstan did the like to Count Edwin for another "Incestuous Marriage; nor did all the Popes Interposition make him "give over. They found many other such instances which occurred in "the Ecclesiastical History of Bishops proceeding by Censures and other "Methods, to stop the course of Sin, notwithstanding any encourage- "ment the Parties had from Popes.

"And it is certain that every man when he finds himself engaged in "any course, which is clearly sinful, ought presently to forsake it, ac- "cording to the Opinion of all Divines. And therefore the King upon "these Evidences of the unlawfulness of his Marriage ought to abstain "from the Queen; and the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, with the other "Bishops, ought to require him to do it, otherwise they must proceed "Church Censures. Many things were also brought from reason (or "at least the Maxims of the School Philosophy, which passed for true "reasons in those days) to prove Marriage in the degrees forbidden by "Moses to be contrary to the Law of Nature; and much was alledged "out of Profane Authors, to show what an abhorrency some Heathen "Nations had of Incestuous Marriages.

The Authority of Tradition.

"And whereas the chief strength of the Arguments for the contrary "Opinion, rested in this, That these Laws of Moses were not confirmed "by Christ or his Apostles in the New Testament. To that they answer- "ed, That if the Laws about Marriage were Moral, as had been proved, "then there was no need of a particular Confirmation, since those "Words of our Saviour: I came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfil it; do "confirm the whole Moral Law. Christ had also expressly asserted the "Relation of Affinity, saying, That Man and Wife are one Flesh. St. Paul "also condemned a Match as Incestuous for affinity. But though it "were not expressly set down in the Gospel, yet the Traditions of the "Church, are received with equal Authority to written Verities. This "the Court of Rome, and all the Learned Writers for the Catholick Faith, "lay down as a Fundamental Truth. And without it, how could the "Seven Sacraments (some of which are not mentioned in the New Te- "stament) with many other Articles of Catholick Belief be maintained "against the Hereticks? The Tradition of the Church being so full "and formal in this particular, must take place: And if any Corruptions "have been brought in by some Popes within an Age or two, which "have never had any other Authority from the Decrees of the Church, "or the Opinions of Learned men, they are not to be maintained in oppo- "sition to the Evidence that is brought on the other side. This

This I have ſummed up in as ſhort and Comprehenſive words as I could, Being the Subſtance of what I gathered out of the Printed Books and Manuſcripts for the Kings Cauſe. But the Fidelity of an Hiſtorian leads me next to open the Arguments that were brought againſt it, by thoſe who wrote on the other ſide for the Queens Cauſe, to prove the validity of the Marrriage, and the Popes Power of diſpenſing with a Marriage in that degree of Affinity. 1530.

I could never by all the ſearch I have made, ſee either MSS. or Printed Books that defended their Cauſe, except Cajetans and Victorias Books that are printed in their Works. But from an Anſwer that was written to the Biſhop of Rocheſters Book, and from ſome other Writings on the other ſide, I gather the Subſtance of their Arguments to have been what follows.

The Arguments for the Marriage.

" Cardinal Cajetan, had by many Arguments endeavoured to prove, " that the Prohibitions in Leviticus, were not parts of the Moral Law. " They were not obſerved before the Law, no not by the holy ſeed. " Adams Children married one another, Abraham married his Siſter, " Jacob married two Siſters, Judah gave his two Sons to Tamar, and " promiſed to give her the third for her Husband. By the Law of " Moſes, a Diſpenſation was granted in one caſe, for marrying the " Brothers Wife, which ſhows the Law was not Moral, otherwiſe it " could not not be diſpenced with; and if Moſes diſpenced with it, why " might not the Pope as well do it, nor was there are force in the " places cited from the New Teſtament. As for that of Herod, both " Joſephus and Euſebius witneſs, that his Brother Philip was alive when " he took his Wife, and ſo his Sin was Adultery and not Inceſt. We " muſt alſo think that the Inceſtuous Perſon in Corinth, took his Fathers " Wife when he was yet living, otherwiſe if he had been dead, St. " Paul could not ſay it was a Fornication not named among the Gentiles: " for we not only find both among the Perſians and other Nations, the " Marriage of Step-Mothers allowed, but even among the Jews, Adonijah " deſired Abiſhag in Marriage, who had been his Fathers Concubine.

From all which they concluded, " That the Laws about the Degrees " of Marriage, were only Judiciary Precepts, and ſo there was no o- " ther obligation on Chriſtians to obey them, than what flowed from " the Laws of the Church, with which the Pope might diſpenſe. " They alſo ſaid, that the Law in Leviticus of not taking the Brothers " Wife, muſt be underſtood of not taking her while he was alive; for " after he was dead, by another Law, a man might marry his Brothers " Wife.

" They alſo pleaded, that the Popes Power of Diſpenſing, did reach " further than the Laws of the Church, even to the Law of God; for " he daily diſpenced with the breaking of Oaths and Vows, though " that was expreſly contrary to the ſecond Commandment: and though " the fifth Commandment, Thou ſhalt do no Murther, be againſt killing, " yet the Popes diſpenced with the putting Thieves to death, and in ſome " caſes, where the reaſon of the Commandment does not at all times " hold, he is the only Judge according to Summa Angelica. They Con- " cluded the Popes Power of Diſpenſing was as neceſſary as his Power " of Expounding the Scriptures, and ſince there was a Queſtion made " concerning the Obligation of theſe Levitical Prohibitions, whether 1530. "they were Moral, and did oblige Christians or not? the Pope must "be the only Judge: There were also some late Precedents found, one "of P. Martin, who in the case of a Mans having married his own Sister, "who had lived long with her, upon a Consultation with Divines and "Lawyers, confirm'd it, to prevent the Scandal, which the dissolv- "ing of it would have given. Upon which St. Antonin of Florence says, "that since the thing was dispensed with, it was to be referred to the "Judgment of God, and not to be condemned.

"The Pope had granted this Dispensation, upon a very weighty "Consideration, to keep peace between two great Crowns: it had "now stood above twenty years: it would therefore raise an high Scan- "dal, to bring it under debate; besides that it would do much hurt, and "bring the Titles to most Crowns into Controversie.

The Answers made to these. "But they concluded, that whatever Informalities or Nullities were "pretended to be in the Bulls or Breves, the Pope was the only com- "petent Judge of it, and that it was too high a Presumption for inferior "Prelates to take upon them to examine or discuss it.

But to these Arguments it was answered by the Writers for the Kings Cause, "that it was strange to see men, who pretended to be "such Enemies to all Heretical Novelties, yet be guilty of that, which "Catholick Doctors hold to be the foundation of all Heresie; which "was the setting up of private senses of Scripture, and Reasonings "from them, against the Doctrine and Tradition of the Church. It "was fully made out, that the Fathers and Doctors of the Church did "universally agree in this, that the Levitical Prohibitions of the De- "grees of Marriage are Moral, and do oblige all Christians. Against "this Authority, Cajetan was the first that presumed to write, oppo- "sing his private conceits to the Tradition of the Church: which is "the same thing, for which Luther and his followers are so severely "condemned. May it not then be justly said of such men that they "plead much for Tradition, when it makes for them, but reject it "when it is against them? Therefore all these exceptions are over- "thrown with this one Maxim of Catholick Doctrine, That they are "Novelties against the constant Tradition of the Christian Church, in all "Ages. But if the force of them be also examined, they will be found "as weak as they are new. That before the Law, these degrees "were not observed, proves only, that they are not evidently contra- "ry to the common sense of all men; But as there are some Moral "Precepts, which have that natural evidence in them, that all men "must discern it, so there are others that are drawn from publick "inconvenience and dishonesty, which are also parts of the Law of "Nature: These Prohibitions are not of the first, but of the second "sort, since the Immorality of them appears in this, that the Fami- "liarities and Freedoms amongst near Relations are such, that if an hor- "ror were not struck in men at conjunctures in these degrees, Fami- "lies would be much defiled. This is the Foundation of the Prohibi- "tions of Marriages in these degrees: Therefore it is not strange if "men did not apprehend it, before God made a Law concerning it. "Therefore all examples before the Law, show only the thing is not so "evident, as to be easily collected by the light of Nature. And for "the Story of Judah and Tamar, there is so much wickedness in all the "parts

" parts of it, that it will be very hard to make a Precedent out of any 1531.
" part of it. As for the Proviſion about marrying the Brothers Wife, " that only proves, the ground of the Law is not of its own Nature
" Immutable, but may be diſpenſed with by God in ſome caſes. And " all theſe Moral Laws, that are founded on publick conveniency and " honeſty, are diſpenſable by God in ſome caſes; but becauſe Moſes
" did it by Divine Revelation, it does not follow, that the Pope can do " it by his ordinary Authority.

" For that about Herod, it is not clear from Joſephus, that Philip
" was alive when Herod married his Wife. For all that Joſephus
" ſays, is, that ſhe ſeparated from her Husband when he was yet alive,
" and divorced her ſelf from him. But he does not ſay, that he lived
" ſtill after ſhe married his Brother. And by the Law of Divorce
" Marriage was at an end, and broken by it as much, as if the Party " had been dead, ſo that in that caſe ſhe might have married any " other: Therefore Herods ſin in taking her, was from the Relation of " having been his Brothers Wife. And for the Inceſtuous Perſon in Co- " rinth, it is as certain, that though ſome few inſtances of a King of " Syria and ſome others, may be brought of Sons marrying their Step-" Mothers, yet theſe things were generally ill looked on, even where " they were practiſed by ſome Princes, who made their pleaſure their " Law. Nor could the Laws of Leviticus be underſtood, of not mar" rying the Brothers Wife when he was alive; for it was not lawful " to take any mans Wife from him living. Therefore that cannot be

The Queen ſtill intractable.

Theſe Reaſons on both ſides being thus opened, the Cenſures of them, it is like, will be as different now, as they were then: for they prevailed very little on the Queen, who ſtill perſiſted to juſtifie her Marriage, and to ſtand to her Appeal. And though the King carried it very kindly to her in all outward appearance, and employed every body that had credit with her, to bring her to ſubmit to him, and to paſs from her Appeal, remitting the Deciſion of the matter to any four Prelates, and four Secular men in England, ſhe was ſtill unmovable and would hearken to no propoſition. In the Judgments that people paſſed, the Sexes were divided; the Men generally approved the Kings Cauſe, and the Women favoured the Queen. But now the Seſſion of Parliament came on the ſixteenth of January, and there the King firſt brought into the Houſe of Lords, the Determination of the Univerſities, and the Books that were written for his Cauſe by Foreigners. After they were read and conſidered there, the Lord Chancellor did on the 20th. of March, with twelve Lords both of the Spiritualty and Temporalty 1531. Temporalty go down to the House of Commons, and shewed them what the Universities and Learned men beyond Sea, had written for the Divorce, and produced twelve Original Papers, with the Seals of the Universities to them, which Sir Brian Tuke took out of his hand, and read openly in the House, Translating the Latin into English. Then about an hundred Books written by Foreign Divines, for the Divorce, were also shewed them; none of which were read, but put off to another time, it being late. When that was done, the Lord Chancellor desired they would report in their Countries, what they had heard and seen, and then all men should clearly perceive, that the King hath not attempted this matter of Will and Pleasure, as strangers, say, but only for the Discharge of his Conscience, and the Security of the Succession to the Crown. Having said that, he left the House. The matter was also brought before the Convocation; and they having weighed all that was said on both sides, seemed satisfied that the Marriage was unlawful, and that the Bull was of no force; more not being required at that time.

Convocation.

The whole Clergy used in a Premunire.

But it is not strange, that this matter went so easily in the Convocation, when another of far greater consequence passed there, which will require a full and distinct account. Cardinal Wolsey by exercising his Legantine Authority had fallen into a Premunire, as hath been already shown, and now those who had appeared in his Courts, and had Sutes there, were found to be likewise in the same Guilt by the Law; and this matter, being excepted out of the Pardon that was granted in the former Parliament, was at this time set on foot: Therefore an Indictment was brought into the Kings Bench, against all the Clergy of England, for breaking the Statutes against Provisions or Provisors. But to open this more clearly,

The Prerogatives of the Kings of England, in Ecclesiastical affairs.

It is to be considered, that the Kings of England having claimed in all Ages, a Power in Ecclesiastical Matters, equal to what the Roman Emperors had in that Empire, they exercised this Authority both over the Clergy and Laity: and did at first erect Bishopricks, grant Investures in them, call Synods, make Laws, about Sacred as well as Civil Concerns: and in a word, they governed their whole Kingdom. Yet when the Bishops of Rome did stretch their Power beyond either the limits of it in the Primitive Church, or what was afterward granted them by the Roman Emperors; and came to assume an Authority in all the Churches of Europe; as they found some Resistance every where, so they met with a gareat deal in this Kingdom; and it was with much difficulty that they gained the Power of giving Investures, receiving Appeals to Rome, and of sending Legates to England, with several other things, which were long contested, but were delivered up at length, either by feeble Princes, or when Kings were so engaged at home or abroad, that it was not safe for them to offend the Clergy. For in the first Contest between the Kings and the Popes, the Clergy were generally on the Popes side, because of the Immunity and Protection they enjoyed from that See, but when Popes became ambitious and warlike Princes, then new Projects and Taxes were every where set on foot, to raise a great Treasure. The Pall, with many Bulls and high Compositions for them, Annates or first Fruits, and Tenths were the standing Taxes of the Clergy, besides many many new ones upon emergent occaſions. So that they finding themſelves thus oppreſſed by the Popes, fled again back to the Crown for Protection, which their Predeceſſors had abandoned. 1531.

From the days of Edward the firſt, many Statutes were made to reſtrain the Exactions of Rome. For then the Popes not ſatisfied with their other oppreſſions, (which a Monk of that time lays open fully, and from a deep ſenſe of them) did by Proviſions, Bulls, and other Arts of that See, diſpoſe of Biſhopricks, Abbeys, and leſſer Benefices to Foreigners, Cardinals, and others that did not live in England. Upon which the Commonalty of the Realm, did repreſent to the King in Parliament, That the Biſhopricks, Abbeys, and other Benefices were founded by the Kings and People of England, To inform the People of the Law of God, and to make Hoſpitality, Alms, and other works of Charity, for which end they were endowed by the King and People of England; and that the King, and his other Subjects who endowed them, had upon Voidances the Preſentment and Collations of them, which now the Pope had Uſurped and given to Aliens, by which the Crown would be diſinherited, and the ends of their Endowments deſtroyed, with other great Inconveniences: Therefore it was ordained, That theſe Oppreſſions ſhould not be ſuffered in any manner. But notwithſtanding this, the abuſe went on, and there was no effectual way laid down in the Act, to puniſh theſe Tranſgreſſions. The Court of Rome was not ſo eaſily driven out of any thing, that either increaſed their Power or their Profits; Therefore by another Act in his Grand-Child Edward the 3d's time, the Commons complained that theſe abuſes did abound, and that the Pope did daily reſerve to his Collation Church-Preferments in England, and raiſed the Firſt-Fruits with other great Profits, by which the Treaſure of the Realm was carried out of it, and many Clerks advanced in the Realm, were put out of their Benefices, by thoſe Proviſors; therefore the King being bound by Oath to ſee the Laws kept, did with the aſſent of all the great Men and the Commonalty of the Realm, ordain, That the free Elections, Preſentments, and Collations of Benefices, ſhould ſtand in the Right of the Crown, or of any of his Subjects as they had formerly enjoyed them, notwithſtanding any Proviſions from Rome. And if any did diſturb the Incumbents by vertue of ſuch Proviſions, thoſe Proviſors or others employed by them, were to be put in Priſon, till they made Fine and Ranſom to the King at his Will; or if they could not be apprehended, Writs were to be iſſued out to ſeize them, and all Benefices poſſeſſed by them, were to fall into the Kings hands, except they were Abbeys or Priories, that fell to the Canons or Colledges. By another Act the Proviſors were put out of the Kings Protection, and if any man offended againſt them, in Perſon or Goods, he was excuſed, and was never to be impeached for it. And two years after that upon another Complaint, of their Suing the Kings Subjects in other Courts, or beyond Sea, it was ordained, That any who Sued either beyond Sea, or in any other Court, for things that had been Sued, and about which judgment had been given in former times, in the Kings Courts, were to be Cited to anſwer for it in the Kings Courts within two Months; and if they came not, they were to be put out of the Kings Protection, and to forfeit their Lands, Goods, and Chattels to the King, and to be impriſoned and ranſomed at the Kings Will. Both theſe Statutes received a new Confirmation Eleven years after that. But thoſe Statutes proved ineffectual, and in the 1531. beginning of the Reign of Richard the 2*d*, the former Acts were confirmed by another Statute, and appointed to be Executed; and not only the Provisors themselves, but all such as took Procuratories, Letters of Attorney, or Farms from them, were involved in the same Guilt. And in the 7th year of that King, Provisions were made against Aliens, having Benefices without the Kings Licence, and the King promised to abstain from granting them Licences: for this was another Artifice of the Roman Court, to get the King of their side, by accepting his Licence, which by this Act was restrained. This failing, they betook themselves to another Course, which was to prevail with the Incumbents that were presented in England according to Law, to take Provisions for their Benefices from Rome, to Confirm their Titles. This was also forbidden under the former pains. As for the Rights of Presentations, by the Law they were tryed and judged in the Kings Courts, and the Bishops were to give Institution according to the Title declared in these Judgments: This the Popes had a mind to draw to themselves, and to have all Titles to Avousons tryed in their Courts; and Bishops were Excommunicated, who proceeded in this matter according to the Law. Of which great complaint was made in the 16*th* year of the Reign of Richard the 2*d*. And it was added to that, that the Pope intended to make many Translations of Bishops, some to be within, and some out of the Realm, which among other inconveniences reckoned in the Statute, would produce this effect, That the Crown of England, which had been so free at all times, should be subjected to the Bishop of Rome, and the Laws and Statutes of the Realm by him defeated and destroyed at his Will. They also found those things to be against the Kings Crown, and Regality, used and approved in the time of his Progenitors: Therefore all the Commons resolved to live and dye with him and his Crown, and they required him by way of Justice, to examine all the Lords, Spiritual and Temporal, what they thought of those things, and whether they would be with the Crown to uphold the Regality of it? To which all the Temporal Lords answered, they would be with the Crown. But the Spiritual Lords being asked, said, they would neither deny nor affirm that the Bishop of Rome might, or might not, Excommunicate Bishops, or make Translations of Prelates: But upon that Protestation, they said, that if such things were done, they thought it was against the Crown, and said they would be with the King, as they were bound by their Leageance; whereupon it was ordained that if any did purchase Translations, Sentences of Excommunication, Bulls, or other Instruments from the Court of Rome, against the King or his Crown, or whosoever brought them to England, or did receive, or execute them, they were out of the King Protection, and that they should forfeit their Goods and Chattels to the Kings, and their Persons should be imprisoned. And becaufe the Proceedings were to be upon a Writ, called from the most material words of it, Præmunire facies, this was called the Statute of Præmunire.

When Henry the 4*th* had Treasonably Usurped the Crown, all the Bishops (Carliste only excepted) did assist him in it, and he did very gratefully oblige them again in other things; yet he kept up the force of the former Statutes. For the Cistercian Order having procured Bulls, discharging them of paying Tithes, and forbidding them to let their Farms to any, but to possess them themselves, and those Bulls were declared to be of no force, and if any did put them in Execution, or procured other such Bulls, they were to be proceeded against, upon the Statutes made in the 13th year of the former Kings Reign, against Provisors. 2 Hen. 4. cap. 4. But all this while though they made Laws for the future, yet they had not the Courage to put them in execution. And this Feebleness in the Government, made them so much despised, and so oft broken; whereas the severe execution of one Law in one instance would more effectually have prevented the Mischief, than all these Laws did without execution. In the 6th year of his Reign, Complaints being made 6 Hen. 4. cap. 1. of the excessive Rates of Compositions for Arch-bishopricks and Bishopricks in the Popes Chamber, which were raised to the treble of what had been formerly payed; it was Enacted, That they should pay no more, than had been formerly wont to be payed. In the 7th year of his Reign, the 7 Hen. 4. cap. 6. 8. Statute made in the second year was confirmed, and by another Act, The Licences which the King had granted for the Executing any of the Popes Bulls, are declared of no force, to prejudice any Incumbent in his Right. Yet the abuses and Encroachments of the Court of Rome still encreasing, all former Statutes against Provisors were Confirmed again, and all Elections declared free, and not to be interrupted, either by 17 Hen. 4. cap 8. the Pope, or the King. But at the same time, the King pardoned all the former transgressions against these Statutes. By those Pardons the Court of Rome was more encouraged, then terrified by the Laws; therefore there was a necessity of making another Law in the Reign of Henry 5th, against Provisors, That the Incumbents Lawfully Invested in their Livings, should not be molested by them, though they had the Kings Pardon; and both Bulls and Licences were declared void and of no value, and those who did upon such grounds molest them, should incur the pains of the Statutes against Provisors. 4 Hen. 5. cap. 4.

Our Kings took the best opportunity that ever could have been found to depress the Papal Power; for from the beginning of Richard the Seconds Reign, till the Fourth year of Henry the Fifth, the Popedom was broken by a long and great Schism; and the Kingdoms of Europe were divided in their Obedience: Some holding for those that sate at Rome, and others for the Popes of Avignon: England in opposition to France, that chiefly supported the Avignon Popes, did adhere to the Roman Popes. The Papacy being thus divided, the Popes were as much at the mercy of Kings for their Protection, as Kings had formerly been at theirs; so that they durst not thunder as they were wont to do, otherwise this Kingdom had certainly been put under Excommunications and Interdicts for these Statutes, as had been done formerly upon less Provocations.

But now that the Schism was healed, Pope Martin the Fifth, began to re-assume the Spirit of his Predecessors, and sent over threatning messages to England, in the beginning of Henry the Sixth's Reign. None of our Books have taken any notice of this piece of out History: The Manuscript out of which I draw it, has been written near that time, and contains many of the Letters, that passed between Rome and England, upon this occasion. Ex MSS. D. Petyt.

The first Letter is to Henry Chichely, then Arch-bishop of Canterbury, who had been promoted to that See by the Pope, but had made 1530. no opposition to the Statute against Provisions in the Fourth year of Henry the Fifth; and afterwards in the Eighth year of his Reign, when the Pope had granted a Provision of the Arch-bishoprick of York, to the Bishop of Lincoln, the Chapter of York rejected it, and pursuant to the former Statute, made a Canonical Election. Henry the Fifth being then the greatest King in Christendom, the Pope durst not offend him: So the Law took place without any further contradiction, till the Sixth year of his Sons Reign, that England was both under an Infant King, and had fallen from its former greatness: Therefore the Pope who waited for a good conjuncture, laid hold on this, and first expostulated severely with the Arch-bishop for his remisness, that he had not stood up more for the Right of St. Peter and the See of Rome, that had bestowed on him the Primacy of England; and then says many things against the Statute of Præmunire, and exhorts him to imitate the Example of his Predecessor St. Thomas of Canterbury the Martyr, in asserting the Rights of the Church; requiring him, under the pain of Excommunication, to declare at the next Parliament to both House the unlawfulness of that Statute, and that all were under Excommunication who obeyed it. But to make sure work among the People, he also commands him, to give orders under the same pains, that all the Clergy of England should preach the same Doctrine to the People. This bears date the Fifth day of December 1426. and will be found in the Collection of Papers.

Reg. Chichel. Fol. 30.

But it seems the Pope was not satisfied with his Answer, for the next Letter in that MSS. is yet more severe, and in it, his Legantine Power is suspended. It has no date added to it, but the Paper that follows, bearing date the Sixth of April 1427. leads us pretty near the date of it. It contains an Appeal of the Arch-bishops, from the Popes Sentence, to the next general Council; or if none met, to the Tribunal of God and Jesus Christ.

Collection Number 37.

There is also another Letter, dated the sixth of May, directed to the Arch-bishop, and makes mention of Letters written to the whole Clergy to the same purpose, requiring him to use all his Endeavours, for repealing the Statute, and chides him severely because he had said, That the Popes zeal in this matter was only, that he might raise much Money out of England; which he resents as an high Injury, and protests that he designed only to maintain those Rights, that Christ himself had granted to his See, which the Holy Fathers, the Councils, and the Catholick Church has always acknowledged. If this does not look like Teaching ex Cathedra it is left to the Readers Judgment.

But the next Letter is of an higher strain. It is directed to the two Arch-bishops only, and it seems, in despite to Chichely, the Arch-bishop of York is named before Canterbury. By it the Pope annuls the Statutes made by Edward the Third and Richard the Second, and commands them to do no Act in pursuance of them: and declares, if they, or any other gave obedience to them, they were ipso facto Excommunicated, and not to be relaxed, unless at the point of death, by any but the Pope. He charges them also to intimate that his Monitory Letter to the whole Nation, and cause it to be affixed in the several places, where there might be occasion for it. This is dated the 8*th* of December, the tenth year of his Popedom. Then follow Letters from from the Univerſity of Oxford, the Arch-biſhop of York, the Biſhops of London, Dureſme, and Lincoln, to the Pope; all to mitigate his diſpleaſure againſt the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, in which they gave him the higheſt teſtimony poſſible, bearing date the 10*th* and the 25*th* day of July. Theſe the Arch-biſhop ſent by an Expreſs to Rome, and wrote the humbleſt ſubmiſſion poſſible to the Pope; proteſting that he had done, and would do all that was in his power, for repealing theſe Statutes. One thing in this Letter is remarkable, he ſays, He hears the Pope had proceeded to a Sentence againſt him, which had never been done from the days of St. Auſtin to that time: but he knew that only by report, for he had not opened, much leſs read the Bulls, in which it was contained; being commanded by the King, to bring them with the Seals entire, and lay them up in the Paper-Office, till the Parliament was brought together. 1531.

There are two other Letters to the King, and one to the Parliament, for the Repeal of the Statute. In thoſe to the King, the Pope writes, that he had often preſſed both King and Parliament to it; and that the King had anſwered, that he could not repeal it without the Parliament. But he excepts to that, as a delaying the buſineſs, and ſhews it is of it ſelf unlawful, and that the King was under Excommunication, as long as he kept it; therefore he expects that at the furtheſt, in the next Parliament, it ſhould be repealed. It bears date the 13*th* of October, in the 10*th* year of his Popedom. In his Letter to the Parliament, he tells them, that no Man can be ſaved, who is for the obſervation of that Statute. Therefore he requires them, under pain of Damnation to repeal it, and offers to ſecure them from any abuſes, which might have crept in formerly with theſe Proviſions. This is dated the third of October, Decimo Pontificat. But I believe it is an error of the Tranſcriber, and that its true date was the 13*th* of October. And to the King and Parliament. Collection Number 38. Collection Number 38

The Parliament ſate in January 1427. being the ſixth year of King Henry the ſixth, during which on the 30*th* of January, the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, accompanied by the Arch-biſhop of York, the Biſhops of London, St. Davids, Ely, and Norwich, and the Abbots of Weſtminſter and Reading, went from the Houſe of Lords, to the place where the Houſe of Commons ordinarily ſate, which was the Refectory of the Abbey of Weſtminſter, where the Arch-biſhop made a long Speech, in the form of a Sermon, upon that Text; render to Cæſar the things which are Cæſars, and to God the things that are Gods. He began with a Proteſtation, that he and his Brethren intended not to ſay any thing, that might derogate from the King, the Crown, or the People of England. Then he alledged many things, for the Popes Power in granting Proviſions, to prove it was of Divine Right, and admoniſhed and required them to give the Pope ſatisfaction in it, otherwiſe he laid out to them with Tears, what miſchiefs might follow, if he proceeded to cenſures; which will appear more fully from the Inſtrument, that will be found in the Collection at the end. But it ſeems the Parliament would do nothing for all this, for no Act neither of Repeal nor Explanation was paſſed. But to no purpoſe. Collection Number 40.

Yet it appears the Pope was ſatisfied with the Arch-biſhops carriage in this matter; for he ſoon after reſtored him to the Exerciſe of his Legantine Power, as Godwin has it; only he by a miſtake ſays, he was made 1531. made Legate, Anno 1428. whereas it was only a Reſtitution after a Cenſure.

The Clergy excuſe themſelves.

Thus ſtood the Law of England in that matter, which was neither Repealed nor well Executed; for the Popes Uſurpations ſtill encreaſing, thoſe Statutes lay dead among the Records, and ſeveral Cardinals had procured and executed a Legantine Power, which was clearly contrary to them. And as Cardinal Wolſey was already brought under the laſh for it, ſo it was now made uſe of; partly to give the Court of Rome apprehenſions of what they were to expect from the King, if they went on to uſe him ill; and partly to proceed ſeverely againſt all thoſe of the Clergy, who adhered obſtinately to the Intereſts of that Court; and to make the reſt compound the matter, both by a full Submiſſion and a conſiderable Subſidy. It was in vain to pretend, it was a publick and allowed Error, and that the King had not only connived at the Cardinals Proceedings, but had made him all that while his chief Miniſter: That therefore they were excuſable in ſubmitting to an Authority to which the King gave ſo great encouragement, and that if they had done otherwiſe they had been unavoidably ruined. For to all this it was anſwered, that the Laws were ſtill in force, and that their Ignorance could not excuſe them, ſince they ought to have known the Law; yet ſince the violation of it was ſo publick, though the Court proceeded to a Sentence, That they were all out of the Kings protection, and were liable to the pains in the Statutes; the King was willing, upon a reaſonable Compoſition, and a full Submiſſion, to pardon them.

Yet they compound.

So in the Convocation of Canterbury, a Petition was brought in to be offered to the King. In the Kings Title, he was called, the Protector and Supreme Head of the Church, and Clergy of England. To this ſome oppoſition was made, and it was put off to another day; but by the Interpoſition of Cromwell, and others of the Kings Council, who came to the Convocation, and uſed Arguments to perſwade them to it, they were prevailed with to paſs it with that Title, at leaſt none ſpeaking againſt it: For when Warham Arch-biſhop of Canterbury ſaid, That ſilence was to be taken for conſent, They cried out, they were then all ſilent: Yet it was moved by ſome to add theſe words to the Title, in ſo far as is lawful by the Law of Chriſt. But Parker ſays, The King diſliked that Clauſe, ſince it left his Power ſtill diſputable; therefore it was caſt out, and the Petition paſſed ſimply, as it was firſt brought in. Yet in that he was certainly miſinformed; for when the Convocation of the Province of York demurred about the ſame Petition, and ſent their Reaſons to the King, why they could not acknowledge him Supreme Head, which (as appears by the Kings Anſwer to them) were chiefly founded on this, that the term Head was improper, and did not agree to any under Chriſt; the King wrote a long and ſharp Anſwer to them, and ſhowed them, that words were not always to be underſtood in their ſtrict ſenſe, but according to the common acceptation. And among other things he ſhowed what an Explanation was made in the Convocation of Canterbury, That it was in ſo far as was agreeable to the Law of Chriſt; by which it appears, that at that time the King was ſatisfied to have it paſs any way, and ſo it was agreed to by nine Biſhops (the Biſhop of Rocheſter being one) and 52 Abbots and Priors, and the Major part of the lower Houſe of Convocation in the Province of Canterbury. Of which number it is very probable

Reginald

Reginald Pool was, for in his Book to the King, he says, he was then in England, and adds, that the King would not accept of the Sum the Clergy offered unless they acknowledged him Supream Head; he being then Dean of Exeter, was of the lower House of Convocation; and it is not likely the King would have continued the Pensions, and other Church-Preferments he had, if he had refused to sign that Petition and Submission. By it they prayed the King to accept of 100000 l. in lieu of all punishments which they had incurred, by going against the Statutes of Provisors, and did promise for the future, neither to make, nor execute any Constitu ion without the Kings Licence; upon which he granted them a general Pardon: And the Convocation of the Province of York offering 18840 l. with another Submission of the same nature afterwards, though they met with more opposition, they were also pardoned. 1531.

When the Kings Pardon for the Clergy was brought into the House of Commons they were much troubled to find themselves not included within it; for by the Statutes of Provisors, many of them were also liable, and they apprehended, that either they might be brought in trouble, or at least it might be made use of to draw a Subsidy from them: so they sent their Speaker with some of their Members, to represent to the King, the great grief of his Commons to find themselves out of his favour, which they concluded from the Pardon of the Pains of Præmunire to his Spiritual Subjects, in which they were not included; and therefore prayed the King that they might be comprehended within it. But the King answered them, That they must not restrain his Mercy, nor yet force it; it was free to him either to execute, or mitigate the severity of the Law: That he might well grant his Pardon by his Great Seal without their assent, but he would be well advised before he pardoned them, because he would not seem to be compelled to it. So they went away, and the House was in some trouble: many blamed Cromwell, who was growing in favour, for this rough answer; yet the Kings Pardon was passed. The Commons desire to be included in the Kings Pardon. Hall.

But his other concerns made him judge it very unfit to send away his Parliament discontented, and since he was so easie to them as to ask no Subsidy, he had no mind to offend them; and therefore when the thing was over, and they out of hopes of it, he on his own accord sent another Pardon to all his Temporal Subjects, of their Transgressions of the Statutes of Provisors and Præmunire; which they received with great joy, and acknowledged there was a just Temperature of Majesty and Clemency in the Kings Proceedings. Which the King afterwards grants.

During this Session of Parliament, an unheard-of Crime was committed by one Richard Rouse a Cook, who on the 16*th* of February, Poysoned a Vessel of Yest that was to be used in Porridge, in the Bishop of Rochester's Kitchin, with which 17 Persons of his Family were mortally infected, and one of the Gentlemen died of it; and some poor People that were charitably fed with the remainder of it, were also infected, one Woman dying. The Person was apprehended, and by Act of Parliament, Poysoning was declared Treason, and Rouse was attainted, and Sentenced to be Boiled to death, which was to be the punishment of Poysoning for all times to come: That the Terror of this unheard of Punishment might strike a Horror in all Persons at such an unexampled Crime. And the Sentence was executed in Smithfield soon after. One Attainted for Poysoning. 22 Hen. 8. Act. 16. Hall.

Of this I take notice, the rather because of Sander's Malice, who says, this 1531. this Rouse was set on by Anne Boleyn, to make away the Bishop of Rochester, of which there is nothing on Record, nor does any writer of that time so much as insinuate it. But Persons that are set on to commit such Crimes, are usually, either conveyed out of the way, or secretly dispatched, that they may not be brought to an open Trial. And it is not to be imagined, that a Man that was employed by them that might have preferred him, and found himself given up and adjudged to such a death, would not have published their Names who set him on to have lessened his own Guilt, by casting the load upon them that had both employed and deserted him. But this must pass among the many other vile Calumnies, of which Sanders has been the Inventer, or Publisher, and for which he had already answered to his Judge.

When the Session of Parliament was over, the King continued to ply the Queen with all the applications he could think of, to depart from her Appeal. He grew very Melancholy, and used no sort of Diversion, but was observed to be very pensive. Yet nothing could prevail with the Queen. She answered the Lords of the Council, when they pressed her much to it, That she prayed God to send the King a quiet Conscience, but that she was his lawful Wife, and would abide by it, till the Court of Rome declared the contrary. Upon which the King forbore to see her, or to receive any Tokens from her, and sent her word, to choose where she had a mind to live, in any of his Mannours. She answered, that to which place soever she were removed, nothing could remove her from being his Wife. Upon this answer the King left her at Windsor, the 14*th* of July and never saw her more. She removed first to Moor, then to Easthamstead, and at last to Amphthill, where she stayed longer.

A disorder among the Clergy of London about the Subsidy. Hall.

The Clergy went now about the raising of the 100000 l. which they were to pay in five years; and to make it easier to themselves, the Prelates had a great mind to draw in the Inferiour Clergy to bear a part of the burden. The Bishop of London called a meeting of some Priests about London, on the first of September, to the Chapter-House at St. Pauls: He designed to have had at first only a small number, among whom he hoped it would easily pass, and that being done by a few, others would more willingly follow. But the matter was not so secretly carried, but that all the Clergy about the City hearing of it, went thither. They were not a little encouraged by many of the Laity, who thought it no unpleasant diversion to see the Clergy fall out among themselves. So when they came to the Chapter-House on the day appointed, the Bishops Officers would only admit some few to enter, but the rest forced the Door and rushed in, and the Bishops Servants were beaten and ill used. But the Bishop seeing the Tumult was such, that it could not be easily quieted, told them all, That as the State of Men in this life was frail, so the Clergy through frailty and want of Wisdom, had misdemeaned themselves towards the King, and had fallen in a Præmunire, for which the King of his great Clemency was pleased to pardon them, and to accept of a little, in stead of the whole of their Benefices, which by the Law had fallen into his hand: Therefore he desired they would patiently bear their share in this burden. But they answered, They had never medled with any of the Cardinals Faculties, and so had not fallen in the Præmunire; and that their Livings were so small, that they could hardly subsist by them. Therefore since the Bishops and Abbots were only Guilty, and had good Preferments, they only ought to

to be punished, and pay the Tax; but that for themselves they needed not the Kings Pardon, and so would pay nothing for it. Upon which the Bishop's Officers threatned them, but they on the other hand (being encouraged by some Lay-men that came along with them) persisted in their denyal to pay any thing; so that from high words the matter came to blows, and several of the Bishop's Servants were ill handled by them. But he to prevent a further Tumult, apprehending it might end upon himself, gave them good words, and dismissed the meeting with his blessing, and promised that nothing should be brought in Question that was then done. Yet he was not so good as his word; for he complained of it to the Lord Chancellor, who was always a great Favourer of the Clergy; by whose order fifteen Priests and five Lay-men were committed to several Prisons; but whether the Inferiour Clergy pay'd their proportion of the Tax or not, I have not been able to discover. 1531.

This year the State of Affairs beyond-Sea, changed very considerably. The Pope expected not only to recover Floence to his Family by the Emperors means, but also to wrest Modena and Reggio from the Duke of Ferrara, to which he pretended, as being Fiefs of the Papacy; and the Emperor having engaged by the former Treaty to restore them to him. But now that the Popes pretensions were appointed to be examined by some Judges delegated by the Emperor, they determined against the Pope, for the Duke of Ferrara: which so disgusted the Pope, that he fell totally from the Emperor, and did unite with the King of France, a Match being also projected between the Duke of Orleance (afterwards Henry the 2d.) and his Neece Catharina de Medici: which did work much on the Popes ambition, to have his Family Allied to so mighty a Monarch. So that now he became wholly French. The Pope falls off to the French Faction.

The French King was also on account of this Marriage to resigne all the pretensions he had to any Territory in Italy to his younger Son; which as it would give less Umbrage to the other Princes of Italy, who liked rather to have a King's younger Son among them, than either the Emperor or the French King; so the Pope was wonderfully pleased to raise another great Prince in Italy out of his own Family. On these grounds was the Match at this time designed, which afterwards took effect; but with this difference, that by the Dolphin's death, the Duke of Orleance became King of France, and his Queen made the greatest Figure that any Queen of France, had done for many Ages. A Match projected between the Pope's Neece and the Duke of Orleance.

This change in the Popes mind might have produced another in the Kings Affairs, if he had not already gone so far, that he was less in fear of the Pope than formerly. He found the Credit of his Clergy was so low, that to preserve themselves from the contempt and fury of the people, they were forced to depend wholly on the Crown. For Lutheranism was then making a great progress in England, of which I shall say nothing here, being resolved at the end of this Book to give an account of the whole Course of it in those years that fall within this time. But what by the means of the new Preachers, what by the scandals cast on the Clergy, they were all at the Kings Mercy; so he did not fear much from them, especially in the Southern parts, which were the richest and best peopled. Therefore the King went on resolutely. The Pope on the other hand was in great perplexity; he saw England ready to be lost, and knew not what to do to rescue or preserve it. If he gave way to 1531. what was lately done in the buſineſs of the Præmunire, he muſt thereby loſe the greateſt advantages he drew from that Nation; and it was not likely that after the King had gone ſo far, he would undo what was done.

The Emperor is engaged in a War with the Turk.

The Emperor was more remiſs in proſecuting the Queens Appeal at Rome, for at that time the Turk with a moſt numerous and powerful Army was making an impreſſion on Hungary, (which to the great ſcandal of the moſt Chriſtian King was imputed to his Councils and Preſents at the Port) and all the Emperor's thoughts were taken up with this. Therefore as he gave the Proteſtant Princes of Germany ſome preſent ſatisfaction in Religion and other matters; ſo he ſent over to England, and deſired the Kings aſſiſtance againſt that vaſt Army of 300000 men that was falling in upon Chriſtendom. To this the King made a general anſwer, that gave ſome hopes of aſſiſting him. But at the ſame time the Proteſtant Princes, reſolving to draw ſome advantage from that conjuncture of Affairs, and being courted by the French King, entred into a League with him, for the defence of the Rights of the Empire. And to make this firmer, the King was invited by the French King to joyn in it; to which he conſented, and ſent over to France a ſum of Money to be employed for the ſafety of the Empire. And this provoked the Emperor to renew his endeavours in the Court of Rome for proſecuting the Queens Appeal,

The French King encouraged the King to go on with his Divorce, that he might totally Alienate him from the Emperor. The French Writers alſo add another Conſideration, which ſeems unworthy of ſo great a King, that he himſelf being at that time ſo publick a Courtier of Ladies, was not ill pleaſed to ſet forward a thing of that nature. "But though "Princes allow themſelves their pleaſures, yet they ſeldom Govern their "Affairs by ſuch Maxims.

1532. In the beginning of the next year a new Seſſion of Parliament was held, in which the Houſe of Commons went on to complain of many other grievances they lay under from the Clergy, which they put in a writing, and preſented it to the King. In it they complained of the proceedings in the Spiritual Courts, and eſpecially their calling men before them, ex officio, and laying Articles to their charge, without any Accuſer; and then admitting no Purgation, but cauſing the Party Accuſed, either to abjure, or to be burnt; which they found very grievous and intolerable. This was occaſioned by ſome violent proceeding againſt ſome reputed Hereticks, of which an account ſhall be given afterwards. But thoſe complaints were ſtifled, and great miſunderſtandings aroſe between the King and the Houſe of Commons upon this following occaſion.

Hall.

But reject a Bill about Wards.

There was a common practice in England of mens making ſuch Settlements of their Eſtates by their Laſt Wills, or other Deeds, that the King and ſome great Lords were thereby defrauded of the advantages they made by Wards, Marriages, and Primer Seaſon. For regulating which, a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Peers, and aſſented to there; but when it was ſent down to the Houſe of Commons, it was rejected by them, and they would neither paſs the Bill, nor any other Qualification of that Abuſe. This gave the King great offence, and the Houſe when they addreſſed to him about the proceedings of the Clergy, alſo prayed,

The Commons Petition that they may be diſſolved.

That he would conſider what Coſt, Charge, and Pains they had been at ſince the beginning of the Parliament, and that it would pleaſe his Grace of his Princely by Benignity to Diſſolve his Court of Parliament, and that his Subjects might return into their Countries. To which the King anſwered, "That for "their complaints of the Clergy, he muſt hear them alſo before he could "give Judgment, ſince in Juſtice he ought to hear both Parties; but "that they deſiring the Redreſs of ſuch Abuſes, was contrary to the other "part of their Petition; for if the Parliament were diſſolved how could "thoſe things they complained of be amended? And as they complain-"ed of their long attendance, ſo the King had ſtayed as long, as they had "done, and yet he had ſtill patience, and ſo they muſt have, otherwiſe "their grievances would be without Redreſs. But he did expoſtulate "ſeverely upon their rejecting the Bill about Deeds in prejudice of the "Rights of the Crown. He ſaid, he had offered them a great mitiga-"tion of what by the rigour of the Law he might pretend to; and if they "would not accept of it, he would try the outmoſt ſeverity that the Law "allowed, and would not offer them ſuch a favour again. Yet all this did not prevail, for the Act was rejected, and their complaint againſt the Clergy was alſo laid aſide, and the Parliament was Prorogued till April next. 1532. The King's Anſwer.

In this Parliament the Foundation of the Breach that afterwards followed with Rome, was laid, by an Act for reſtraining the payment of Annates to that Court, which ſince it is not Printed with the other Statutes, ſhall be found in the end of this Volume: The ſubſtance of it is as follows.

An Act againſt Annates. Collect. Numb. 41.

That great Sums of Money had been conveyed out of the King-"dom, under the Title of Annates or Firſt-Fruits to the Court of Rome, "which they extorted by reſtraint of Bulls and other Writs; that it "happened often by the frequent deaths of Arch-biſhops, and Biſhops, "to turn to the utter undoing of their Friends, who had advanced "thoſe Sums for them. Theſe Annates were founded on no Law; for "they had no other way of obliging the Incumbents of Sees to pay "them, but by reſtraining their Bulls. The Parliament therefore "conſidering that theſe were firſt begun to be payed, to defend Chri-"ſtendom againſt Infidels, but were now turned to a duty claimed "by that Court againſt all Right and Conſcience, and that vaſt Sums "were carryed away upon that account, which from the Second year of "King Henry the 7th to that preſent time amounted to 800000 Ducats, "beſides many other heavy Exactions of that Court, did declare that the "King was bound by his Duty to Almighty God, as a good Chriſtian "Prince to hinder theſe oppreſſions. And that the rather, becauſe "many of the Prelates were then very Aged, and like to die in a ſhort "time, whereby vaſt Sums of Money ſhould be carryed out of En-"gland, to the great Impoveriſhing of the Kingdom. And therefore "all payments of Firſt-Fruits to the Court of Rome were put down "and for ever reſtrained, under the pains of the forfeiture of the Lands, "Goods, and Chattels of him that ſhould pay them any more, together "with the Profits of his See, during the time that he was veſted with it. "And in caſe Bulls were reſtrained in the Court of Rome, any perſon "preſented to a Biſhoprick, ſhould be notwithſtanding Conſecrated by "the Arch-biſhop of the Province; or if he were preſented to an "Arch-biſhoprick, by any two Biſhops in the Kingdom, whom the "King ſhould appoint for that end; and that being ſo Conſecrated, 1532. "they should be Invested, and enjoy all the Rights of their Sees in full "and ample manner; yet that the Pope and Court of Rome might "have no just cause of Complaint, the persons presented to Bishopricks "are allowed to pay them 5 lib. for the Hundred, of the clear Profits "and Revenues of their several Sees. But the Parliament not willing "to go to extremities, Remitted the final ordering of that Act to the "King, that if the Pope would either charitably and reasonably put "down the payment of Annates, or so moderate them, that they might "be a tolerable burden, the King might at any time before Easter 1533. "or before the next Session of Parliament, declare by his Letters Pa- "tents whether the premisses or any part of them should be observed "or not, which should give them the full force and Authority of a "Law. And that if upon this Act the Pope should vex the King, or "any of his Subjects by Excommunications or other Censures, these not- "withstanding the King should cause the Sacraments, and other Rites "of the Church to be administred, and that none of these Censures "might be published or Executed.

This Bill began in the House of Lords, from them it was sent to the Commons, and being agreed to by them, received the Royal Assent, but had not that final Confirmation mentioned in the Act before the 9th of July 1533. and then by Letters Patents (in which the Act is at length recited) it was confirmed.

Parl. Rolls.

The Pope writes to the King about the Queens Appeal.

But now I come to open the final Conclusion of the Kings Suit at Rome. On the 25th of January "the Pope wrote to the King, that he "heard reports, which he very unwillingly believed, that he had put "away his Queen, and kept one Anne about him as his Wife; which "as it gave much Scandal, so it was an high Contempt of the Apo- "stolik See, to do such a thing while his Suit was still depending, "notwithstanding a Prohibition to the contrary. Therefore the Pope "remembring his former merits, which were now like to be clouded "with his present Carriage, did exhort him to take home his Queen, "and to put Anne away; and not to continue to provoke the Empe- "ror and his Brother by so high an Indignity, nor to break the Gene- "ral peace of Christendom, which was its only security against the "Power of the Turk. What answer the King made to this I do not "find, but instead of that I shall set down the Substance of a Dispatch, which the King sent to Rome about this time, drawn from a Copy of it; to which the date is not added. But it being an answer to a Let- ter he received from the Pope the 7th of October, it seems to have been written about this time, and it concluding with a Credence to an Ambassador, I judge it was sent by Doctor Bennet, who was dispatch- ed to Rome in January 1532. to shew the Pope the Opinions of Learn- ed men, and of the Universities, with their Reasons. The Letter will be found in the end of this Volume, the Contents of it are to this pur- pose.

Collect. Numb. 24.

A Dispatch of the King to the Pope.

"The Pope had writ to the King, in order to the Clearing all his "scruples, and to give him quiet in his Conscience; of which the King "takes notice, and is sorry that both the Pope and himself were so "deceived in that matter; the Pope by trusting to the judgments of "others, and writing whatever they suggested; and the King by de- "pending so much on the Pope, and in vain expecting remedy from "him

" him ſo long. He imputes the miſtakes that were in the Popes Let- 1532.
" ters, (which he ſays had things in them contrary both to Gods Law " and Mans Law,) to the Ignorance and raſhneſs of his Councellors:
" for which himſelf was much to be blamed, ſince he reſted on their " advice, and that he had not carried himſelf as became Chriſts Vi" car, but had dealt both unconſtantly and deceitfully: for when the " Kings Cauſe was firſt opened to him, and all things that related to it
" were explained; he had Granted a Commiſſion, with a promiſe
" not to recal it, but to confirm the Sentence which the Legates ſhould
" give: and a Decretal was ſent over defining the cauſe. If theſe " were juſtly granted, it was Injuſtce to revoke them, but if they " were juſtly revoked, it was unjuſt to grant them. So he preſſes the " Pope, that either he could grant theſe things, or he could not; If " he could do it, where was the Faith which became a Friend, much " more a Pope ſince he had broke theſe promiſes: But if he ſaid he could " not do them, had he not then juſt cauſe to diſtruſt all that came " from him, when at one time he condemned what he had allowed at " another. So that the King ſaw clearly he did not conſider the eaſe
" of his Conſcience, but other worldly reſpects; that had put him
" on Conſulting ſo many Learned men, whoſe judgments differed " much from thoſe few that were about the Pope, who thought the " Prohibition of ſuch Marriages was only Poſitive, and might be di-" ſpenced with by the Pope: whereas all other Learned men thought
" the Law was Moral and indiſpenſable. He perceived the Apoſtolick
" See was deſtitute of that Learning, by which it ſhould be directed:
" and the Pope had oft profeſſed his own Ignorance, and that he ſpake
" by other mens mouths; but many Univerſities in England, France,
" and Italy, had declared the Marriage unlawful, and the Diſpenſation
" null. None honoured the Apoſtolick See more than he had done,
" and therefore he was ſorry to write ſuch things if he could have " been ſilent. If he ſhould obey the Popes Letters, he would offend
" God and his own Conſcience, and give ſcandal to thoſe who con" demned his Marriage: he did not willingly diſſent from him with" out a very urgent cauſe, that he might not ſeem to deſpiſe the A-" poſtolick See; therefore he deſired the Pope would forgive the free" dom that he uſed, ſince it was the Truth that drew it from him. And " he added, that he intended not to Impugn the Popes Authority fur" ther, except he compelled him; and what he did was only to bring " it within its firſt and Ancient Limits, to which it was better to re" duce it, than to let it always run on headlong and do amiſs; therefore
" he deſired the Pope would Conform himſelf to the opinions of ſo
" many Learned men, and do his Duty and Office. The Letter ends " with a Credence to the Ambaſſador.

The Pope ſeeing his Authority was declining in England, reſolved now to do all he could to recover it, either by force or Treaty: and ſo ordered a Citation to be made of the King to appear in Perſon or by Proxie at Rome, to anſwer to the Queens appeal: upon which Sir Edward Karne was ſent to Rome, with a new Character of Excuſator.

Sir Edward Karne ſent to Rome.

" His Inſtructions were to take the beſt Counſel for pleading an Ex-
" cuſe of the Kings appearance at Rome. Firſt, upon the grounds that " might be found in the Canon-Law; and thoſe being not ſufficient, 1532. "he was to insist on the Prerogative of the Crown of England. Doctor Bonner went with him, who had expressed much zeal in the Kings cause, though his great zeal was for Preferment, which by the most servile ways he always Courted. He was a forward bold man, and since there were many Threatnings to be used to the Pope and Cardinals, he was thought fittest for the employment, but was neither Learned nor discreet.

" he

His Negotiation there taken from the Original Letters. Cott. lib. Vitell. B. 13.

They came to Rome in March, where they found great heats in the Consistory about the Kings business. The Imperialists pressed the Pope to proceed, but all the wise and indifferent Cardinals were of another mind. And when they understood what an Act was passed about Annates, they saw clearly, that the Parliament was resolved to adhere to the King in every thing he intended to do against their Interests. The Pope expostulated with the Ambassadors about it, but they told him the Act was still in the Kings Power; and except he provoked him, he did not intend to put it in execution. The Ambassadors finding the Cardinal of Ravenna of so great reputation, both for Learning and Vertue, that in all matters of that kind his opinion was heard as an Oracle, and gave Law to the whole Consistory; they resolved to gain him by all means possible. And Doctor Benn made a secret address to him, and offered him what Bishoprick either in France or England he would desire, if he would bring the King matter to a good issue. He was at first very shie; at length he said he had been oft deceived by many Princes, who had made him great Promises, but when their business was ended, never thought of performing them; therefore he would be sure: and so drave a Bargain, and got under Doctor Bennets hand a promise, (of which a Copy being sent to the King, written by Bennet himself will be found at the end of this Volume;) Bearing, that he having Powers from the King for that effect, dated the 29th of December last, did promise (the Cardinal for his help in the Kings affair, Monasteries or other Benefices in France, to the value of 6000 Ducats a year: and the first Bishoprick that fell vacant in England; and if it were not Ely; that whenever that See was vacant, upon his resigning the other, he should be provided with the Bishoprick of Ely; dated at Rome the 7th of February 1532. This I set down as one of the most Considerable Arguments that could be used to satisfie the Cardinals Conscience about the justice of the Kings Cause. This Cardinal was the fittest to work secretly for the King, for he had appeared visible against him. I find also by other Letters, that both the Cardinals of Ancona and Monte (afterwards Pope Julius the 3d) were prevailed with, by arguments of the same nature, though I cannot find out what the Bargains were. Providellus, that was accounted the greatest Canonist in Italy, was brought from Bononia, and entertained, by the Ambassadors, to give Councel in the Kings Cause, and to plead his Excuse, from appearing at Rome. The plea was summed up in 28 Articles, which were offered to the Pope; and he admitted them to be examined in the Consistory, appointing three of them to be opened at a Session. But the Imperialists opposed that, and after fifteen of them had been heard, procured a new order that they should be heard in a Congregation of Cardinals before the Pope; petending that a Consistory sitting but but once a week, and having a great deal of other Buſineſs, it would be long before the matter could be brought to any iſſue. So Kerne was ſerved with a new Order to appear in the Congregation the 3d. of April with this Certification, That if he appeared not they would proceed. Upon which he proteſted, that he would adhere to the former Order: yet being warned the ſecond time, he went firſt and proteſted againſt it, which he got entred in the Datary. This being conſidered in the Congregation, they renewed the Order of hearing it in the Conſiſtory on the 10th. of April, and then Providellus opened three Concluſions. Two of them related to Kern's Powers, the third was concerning the Safety of the place to both parties. But the Imperialiſts and the Queens Council being diſſatisfied with this order would not appear. Upon which Kerne complained of their Contumacy, and ſaid, By that it was viſible they were diſtruſtful of their Cauſe. On the 14th. of April a new intimation was made to Kerne to appear on the 17th. with his Advocates, to open all the reſt of the Concluſions, but he according to the firſt Order would only plead to three of them, and ſelected the 19, 20, and 21; (what theſe related to I find not.) Upon which Providellus pleaded and anſwered the Objections that did ſeem to militate againſt them, but neither would the Imperialiſts appear that Seſſion. 1532. Collect. Numb. 45.

In June news were brought to Rome, which gave the Pope great offence: A Prieſt had Preached for the Popes Authority in England, and was for that caſt into Priſon. And another Prieſt being put in Priſon by the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, upon ſuſpition of Hereſie, had appealed to the King as the Supream Head: upon which he was taken out of the Arch-biſhops hands, and being examined in the Kings Courts was ſet at liberty. This the Pope reſented much, but the Embaſſadors ſaid, all ſuch things might have been prevented, if the King had got Juſtice at the Popes hands.

The King alſo at this time deſired a Bull for a Commiſſion to erect ſix new Biſhopricks, to be endowed by Monaſteries that were to be ſuppreſſed. This was expedited and ſent away at this time: And the old Cardinal of Ravenna was ſo jealous, that the Ambaſſadors were forced to promiſe him the Biſhoprick of Cheſter; (one of the new Biſhopricks) with which he was well ſatisfied, having ſeen by a particular ſtate of the Endowment that was deſigned for it, what advantage it would yield him. But he had declared himſelf ſo openly before againſt the Reaſons for the Excuſe, that he could not ſerve the King in that matter, but in the main Cauſe he undertook to do great ſervice, and ſo did the Cardinals De Monte and Ancona. A Bull for erecting new Biſhopricks.

Upon the 27th. of June the Debate was brought to a Concluſion about the Plea Excuſatory; and when it was expected, that the Pope ſhould have given ſentence againſt the Articles, he admitted them all Si & prout de jure. Upon which the Imperialiſts made great Complaints: The Cardinals grew weary of the length of the Debate, ſince it took up all their time; but it was told them, the matter was of great importance, and it had been better for them not to have proceeded ſo precipitately at firſt, which had now brought them into this trouble, and that the King had been at much pains and trouble on their account; therefore it was unreaſonable for them to complain, who were put to no other trouble, but to ſit in their Chairs two or three hours in a week to hear the Kings De-1532. Defences. The Imperialists had also occasioned the Delays, though they complained of them, by their Cavils, and Allegations of Laws and Decisions that never were made, by which much time was spent. But it was objected, That the Kings Excuse for not coming to Rome, because it was too remote from his Kingdom, and not safe, was of no force, since the place was safe to his Proxy. And the Cardinal of Ravenna pressed the Ambassadors much to move the King, instead of the Excusatory Process to send a Proxy, for examining and discussing the Merits of the Cause, in which it would be much easier to advance the Kings matter; and that he having appeared against the King in this Process, would be the less suspected in the other.

The Pope desires the King would submit to him. Collect. Numb. 46.

The business being further considered in three Sessions of the Consistory, it was resolved, that since the Vacation was coming on, they would neither allow of, nor reject the Kings Excusatory Plea; but the Pope and Colledge of Cardinals would write to the King, intreating him to send a Proxy for judging the Cause against the Winter. And with this Bonner was sent over, with Instructions from the Cardinals that were gained to the King, to represent to him that his Excusatory Plea could not be admitted; for since the Debate was to be, whether the Pope could grant the Dispensation or not, it could not be committed to Legates, but must be judged by the Pope and the Consistory. He was also ordered to assure the King, that the Pope did now lean so much to the French Faction, that he needed not fear to refer the matter to him.

A Session of Parl.

But while these things were in debate at Rome, there was another Session of Parliament in April; and then the King sent for the Speaker of the House of Commons, and gave him the Answer which the Clergy had drawn to the Addresses they made in the former Session about their Courts. The King himself seemed not at all pleased with it, but what the House did in it does not appear, further than that they were no way satisfied with it. But there happened another thing that offended the King much: One Themse of the House of Commons moved, that they should address to the King to bring the Queen back to the Court, and ran out upon the Inconveniences that were like to follow if the Queen were put away, particularly the ill consequence of the Illigitimation of the Princess. Upon this the King took occasion (when he gave them the Clergies Answer) to tell them, that he wondered at that motion made in their House, for the matter was not to be determined there. It touched his Soul; he wished his marriage were good, but the Doctors and Learned men had determined it to be null and detestable; and therefore he was obliged in Conscience to abstain from her, which he assured them flowed from no lust or foolish Appetite. He was then 41 years old, and at that Age those Heats abate. But except in Spain or Portugal it had not been heard of, that a man married two Sisters; and that he never heard, that any Christian man before himself had married his Brothers Wife: Therefore he assured them his Conscience was troubled, which he desired them to report to the House. In this Session the Lord Chancellour came down to the Commons, with many of the Nobility about him, and told them the King had considered the Marches between England and Scotland, which were uninhabited on the English side, but well peopled on the Scottish; and that laid England open to the Incurſion of the Scots; therefore the King intended to build Houſes there, for planting the Engliſh ſide. This the Lords liked very well, and thought it convenient to give the King ſome Aids for the Charges of ſo neceſſary a Work, and therefore deſired the Commons to conſult about it. Upon which the Houſe voted a Subſidy of a Fifteenth: But before the Bill could be finiſhed, the Plague broke out in London, and the Parliament was prorogued till February following. On the 11*th.* of May (three days before the Prorogation) the King ſent for the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, and told him, "That he found upon In- "quiry, that all the Prelates, whom he had looked on as wholly his Sub- "jects, were but half Subjects; for at their Conſecration they ſwore "an Oath quite contrary to the Oath they ſwore to the Crown; ſo "that it ſeemed they were the Popes Subjects rather than his. Which "he referred to their care, that ſuch order might be taken in it, that the "King might not be deluded. Upon which the two Oaths that the Clergy ſwore to the King and the Pope, were read in the Houſe of Commons, but the Conſequence of them will be better underſtood by ſetting them down.

More laid down his Office.

The Contradiction that was in these was so visible, that it had soon produced a severe Censure from the House, if the Plague had not hindered both that and the Bill of Subsidy. So on the 14*th.* of May the Parliament was prorogued. Two days after, Sir Thomas More Lord Chancellor, having oft desired leave to deliver up the great Seal, and be discharged of his Office, obtained it; and Sir Thomas Audley was made Lord Chancellor. More had carried that Dignity with great temper, and lost it with much joy. He saw now how far the Kings Designs went; and though he was for cutting off the Illegal Jurisdiction which the Popes exercised in England, and therefore went cheerfully along with the Sute of Præmunire; yet when he saw a total Rupture like to follow, he excused himself, and retired from Business with a Greatness of Mind, that was equal to what the ancient Philosophers pretended in such cases. He also disliked Anne Boleyn, and was prosecuted by her Father, who studied to fasten some Criminal Imputation on him, about the discharge of his Imployment; but his Integrity had been such, that nothing could be found to blemish his Reputation.

An Enterview with the French King.

In September following, the King created Anne Boleyn Marchioness of Pembroke, to bring her by degrees up to the Heighth for which he had designed her. And in October he passed the Seas, and had an Enterview with the French King; where all the most obliging Complements that were possible passed on both sides with great Magnificence, and a firm Union was concerted about all their Affairs. They published a League that they made to raise a mighty Army next year against the Turk; but this was not much considered, it being generally believed that the French King and the Turk were in a good Correspondence. As for the matter of the Kings Divorce, Francis encouraged him to go on in it, and in his intended Marriage with Anne Boleyn, promising if it were questioned to assist him in it: And as for his appearance at Rome, as it was certain he could not go thither in Person, so it was not fit to trust the secrets of his Conscience to a Proxie. The French King seemed also resolved to stop the Payments of Annates and other Exactions of the Court of Rome, and said he would send an Ambassador to the Pope, to ask Redress of these, and to protest, that if it were not granted, they would seek other remedies by Provincial Councils: And since there was an Interview designed between the Pope and the Emperor at Bononia in December, the French King was to send two Cardinals thither to procure Judges for ending the business in England. There was also an Interview proposed between the Pope and the French King, at Nice or Avignon. To this the King of England had some Inclinations to go for ending all differences, if the Pope were well disposed to it. 1532.

Upon this Sir Thomas Eliot was sent to Rome with answer to a Message the Pope had sent to the King, from whose Instructions, both the substance of the Message and of the Answer may be gathered. "The Pope "had offered to the King, that if he would name any different place out "of his own Kingdom, he would send a Legate and two Auditors of the "Rota thither, to form the Process, reserving only the Sentence to himself. The Pope also proposed a Truce of three or four years, and promised that in that time he would call a general Council. For this Message the King sent the Pope thanks, but for the Peace he could receive "no propositions about it without the concurrence of the French King; "and though he did not doubt the Justice of a general Council, yet considering the state of the Emperors Affairs at that time, with the Lutherans, he did not think it was seasonable to call one. That as for "sending a Proxy to Rome, if he were a private Person he could do it, "but it was a part of the Prerogative of his Crown, and of the Priviledges "of his Subjects, That all Matrimonial Causes should be originally "judged within his Kingdom by the English Church, which was consonant to the general Councils and Customs of the Ancient Church, "whereunto he hoped the Pope would have regard: And that for keeping up his Royal Authority, to which he was bound by Oath, he could "not without the consent of the Realm, submit himself to a Foreign "Jurisdiction, hoping the Pope would not desire any violation of the "Immunities of the Realm, or to bring these into publick Contention, "which had been hitherto enjoyed without intrusion or molestation. The "Pope had confessed, that without an urgent cause, the Dispensation "could not be granted. This the King laid hold on, and ordered his Ambassador to shew him that there was no War nor appearance of any "between England and Spain when it was granted. To verifie that he "sent an attested Copy of the Treaty between his Father and the Crown "of Spain at that time: By the words of which it appeared that it was "then taken for granted, that Prince Arthur had consummated the "Marriage, which was also proved by good Witnesses. In fine, since the "thing did so much concern the Peace of the Realm, it was fitter to judge "it within the Kingdom than any where else; therefore he desired the "Pope would remit the discussing of it to the Church of England, and "then confirm the Sentence they should give. To the obtaining of this, "the Ambassador was to use all possible diligence; yet if he found real "intentions in the Pope to satisfie the King, he was not to insist on that 1532. " as the Kings final Resolution: And to let the Cardinal of Ravenna see, " that the King intended to make good what was promised in his name, " the Bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield falling vacant, he sent him the " offer of it, with a promise of the Bishoprick of Ely when it should be " void.

The King married Anne Boleyn, Nov. 14. Cowper, Holinshed and Sanders.

Soon after this he married Anne Boleyn, on the 14*th.* of November, upon his landing in England, but Stow says without any ground, that it was on the 25*th.* of January. Rowland Lee (who afterward got the Bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield) did officiate in the Marriage. It was done secretly in the presence of the Duke of Norfolk and her Father, her Mother, and Brother, and Dr. Cranmer. The grounds on which the King did this, were, That his former Marriage being of it self null, there was no need of a Declarative Sentence after so many Universities and Doctors had given their Judgments against it. Soon after the Marriage she was with Child, which was looked on as a signal Evidence of her Chastity, and that she had till then kept the King at a due distance.

An Enterview between Pope and Emperor.

But when the Pope and the Emperor met at Bononia, the Pope expressed great Inclinations to favour the French King, from which the Emperor could not remove him, nor engage him to accept of a Match for his Neice Katherine de Medici with Francis Sforza Duke of Milan. But the Pope promised him all that he desired as to the King of England; and so that matter was still carried on. Dr. Bennet made several Propositions to end the matter, either that it should be judged in England, according to the Decree of the Council of Nice, and that the Arch-bishop of Canterbury with the whole Clergy of his Province should determine it, or that the King should name one, either Sir Thomas More or the Bishop of London, the Queen should name another, the French King should name a third, and the Arch-bishop of Canterbury to be the fourth; or that the Cause should be heard in England; and if the Queen did Appeal, it should be referred to three Delegates, one of England, another of France, and a third to be sent from Rome, who should sit and judge the Appeal in some indifferent place. But the Pope would hearken to none of these Overtures, since they were all directly contrary to that height of Authority, which he resolved to maintain: Therefore he ordered Capisucci the Dean of the Rota, to cite the King to answer to the Queens Appeal. Kane at Rome protested against the Citation, since the Emperor's Power was so great about Rome, that the King could not expect justice there; and therefore desired they would desist, otherwise the King would Appeal to the Learned Men in Universities; and said there was a nullity in all their Proceedings, since the King was a Soveraign Prince, and the Church of England a free Church, over which the Pope had no just Authority.

Some Overtures about the Divorce. Lord Herbert.

1533. A Session of Parliament.

But while this depended at Rome, another Session of Parliament was held in England, which began to sit on the 4*th.* of February. In this the Breach with Rome was much forwarded by the Act they passed against all Appeals to Rome. " The Preamble bears, That the Crown of England

An Act against Appeals to Rome. 24. Hen. 8. Act 22.

" was Imperial, and that the Nation was a compleat Body within it self, " with a full Power to give Justice in all Cases, Spiritual as well as Temporal; and that in the Spiritualty as there had been at all times, so " there were them men of that sufficiency and integrity, that they might " declare and determine all doubts within the Kingdom; and that several

" ral

" ral Kings, as Edward the first, Edward the third, Richard the second, 1533.
" and Henry the fourth, had by several Laws preserved the Liberties of " the Realm, both Spiritual and Temporal, from the annoyance of the " See of Rome, and other foreign Potentates; yet many inconveniences
" had risen by Appeals to the See of Rome in Causes of Matrimony, Di" vorces, and other Cases, which were not sufficiently provided against
" by these Laws; by which, not only the King and his Subjects were put " to great Charges, but Justice was much delayed by Appeals, and Rome
" being at such a distance, Evidences could not be brought thither, nor " Witnesses so easily as within the Kingdom: Therefore it was enacted, " That all such Causes, whether relating to the King, or any of his Subjects, " were to be determined within the Kingdom in the several Courts to " which they belonged, notwithstanding any Appeals to Rome, or Inhi" bitions and Bulls from Rome; whose Sentences should take effect, and
" be fully executed by all Inferior Ministers; and if any Spiritual Persons " refused to execute them because of Censures from Rome, they were to " suffer a years Imprisonment, and Fine and Ransom at the Kings Will;
" and if any Persons in the Kings Dominions procured or executed any " Process or Censures from Rome, they were declared liable to the pains " in the Statute of Provisors in the 16th. of Richard the second. But that " Appeals should only be from the Arch-Deacon or his Official to the Bi" shop of the Dioceſs, or his Commissary, and from him to the Arch-bishop " of the Province, or the Dean of the Arches, where the final Determi" nation was to be made without any further Process; and in every Pro" cess concerning the King or his Heirs and Successors, an Appeal should " lie to the upper House of Convocation, where it should be finally De" termined, never to be again called in question.

As this Bill passed, the sense of both Houses of Parliament about the Kings Marriage did clearly appear, but in the Convocation, the business was more fully debated. The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury was at this time destitute of its Head and principal Member. For Warham Arch-bishop of Canterbury was dead since August last year. He was a great Canonist, an able States-man, a dextrous Courtier, and a favourer of Learned Men. He always hated Cardinal Wolsey, and would never stoop to him, esteeming it below the Dignity of his See. He was not so peevishly engaged to the Learning of the Schools as others were, but set up and encouraged a more generous way of Knowledge; yet he was a severe persecutor of them whom he thought Hereticks, and enclined to believe idle and Fanatical People, as will afterwards appear, when the Impostors of the Maid of Kent shall be related.

Warhams Death, Aug. 23.

The King saw well of how great importance it was to the designs he was then forming, to fill that See, with a Learned, Prudent, and Resolute man; but finding none in the Episcopal Order that was qualified to his mind, and having observed a native simplicity joyned with much courage, and tempered with a great deal of wisdom in Dr. Cranmer, who was then Negotiating his business among the Learned men of Germany, he of his own accord, without any addresses from Cranmer, designed to raise him to that Dignity, and gave him notice of it, that he might make hast and come home to enjoy that Reward which the King had appointed for him. But Cranmer having received this, did all he could to excuse himself from the burden which was coming upon him; and therefore he returned

Fox.

1533. turned very slowly to England, hoping that the Kings thoughts cooling, some other person might step in between him and a Dignity, of which having a just and primitive sense, he did look on it with fear and apprehension, rather than joy and desire. This was so far from setting him back, that the King, (who had known well what it was to be importuned by ambitious and aspiring Church-men, but had not found it usual that they should decline and fly from Preferment) was thereby confirmed in his high opinion of him; and neither the delays of his Journey, nor his intreaties to be delivered from a Burden, which his Humility made him imagine himself unable to bear, could divert the King. So that though six months elapsed before the thing was setled, yet the King persisted in his Opinion, and the other was forced to yield.

Cranmers Bulls from Rome. In the end of January the King sent to the Pope for the Bulls for Cranmers Promotion; and though the Statutes were passed against procuring more Bulls from Rome, yet the King resolved not to begin the breach till he was forced to it by the Pope. It may be easily imagined, that the Pope was not hearty in this Promotion, and that he apprehended ill consequences from the Advancement of a Man, who had gone over many Courts of Christendom, disputing against his Power of Dispensing, and had lived in much Familiarity with Osiander and the Lutherans in Germany: Yet on the other hand he had no mind to precipitate a Rupture with England; therefore he consented to it, and the Bulls were expedited, though instead of Annates there was only 900 Duckats paid for them.

They were the last Bulls that were received in England in this Kings Reign; and therefore I shall give an account of them, as they are set down in the beginning of Cranmers Register. By one Bull he is upon the Kings Nomination, promoted to be Arch-bishop of Canterbury, which is directed to the King. By a second directed to himself, he is made Arch-bishop. By a third he is absolved from all Censures. A fourth is to the Suffragans. A fifth to the Dean and Chapter. A sixth to the Clergy of Canterbury. A seventh to all the Laity in his See. An eighth to all that held Lands of it, requiring them to receive and acknowledge him as Arch-bishop. All these bear date the 21*st.* of February, 153$\frac{3}{4}$. By a ninth Bull dated the 22*d.* of February, he was ordained to be consecrated, taking the Oath that was in the Pontifical. By a tenth Bull dated the second of March, the Pall was sent him. And by an eleventh of the same Date, the Arch-bishop of York and the Bishop of London were required to put it on him. These were the several Artifices to make Compositions high, and to enrich the Apostolical Chamber; for now that about which St. Peter gloried, that he had none of it (neither Silver nor Gold) was the Thing in the World for which his Successors were most careful.

When these Bulls were brought into England, Thomas Cranmer was on the 13*th.* of March consecrated by the Bishops of Lincoln, Exeter, and St. Asaph. But here a great Scruple was moved by him concerning the Oath that he was to swear to the Pope, which he had no mind to take; and Writers near that time say, the dislike of that Oath was one of the motives that made him so unwillingly accept of that Dignity. He declared, that he thought there were many things setled by the Laws of the Popes, which ought to be reformed, and that the Obligation tion which that Oath brought upon him, would bind him up from doing his Duty, both to God, the King, and the Church. But this being communicated to ſome of the Canoniſts and Caſuiſts, they found a temper that agreed better with their Maxims, than Cranmers ſincerity; which was, that before he ſhould take the Oath, he ſhould make a good and formal Proteſtation, That he did not intend thereby to reſtrain himſelf from any thing that he was bound to, either by his Duty to God, or the King, or the Country; and that he renounced every thing in it that was contrary to any of theſe. This Proteſtation he made in St. Stephens Chappel at Weſtminſter, in the hands of ſome Doctors of the Canon Law before he was conſecrated, and he afterwards repeated it when he took the Oath to the Pope; by which if he did not wholly ſave his Integrity, yet it was plain he intended no Cheat, but to act fairly and above board. 1533. His Proteſtation about his Oath to the Pope.

As ſoon as he was conſecrated, and had performed every thing that was neceſſary for his Inveſtiture, he came and ſate in the upper Houſe of Convocation. There were there at that time hot and earneſt Debates upon theſe two Queſtions; whether it was againſt the Law of God, and indiſpenſable by the Pope, for a man to marry his Brothers Wife, he being dead without Iſſue, but having conſummated the Marriage? And whether Prince Arthur had conſummated his Marriage with the Queen? As for the firſt, it was brought firſt into the Lower Houſe of Convocation, and when it was put to the Vote, 14 were for the Affirmative, 7 for the Negative; one was not clear, and another voted the Prohibition to be Moral, but yet diſpenſable by the Pope. In the Upper Houſe it was long debated, Stokeſly Biſhop of London arguing for the Affirmative, and Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter for the Negative. The Opinions of 19 Univerſities were read for it, and the one Houſe being as full as the other was empty, 216 being preſent either in perſon or by Proxy, it was carried in the Affirmative Nemine Contradicente; thoſe few of the Queens Party that were there it ſeems going out. For the other Queſtion about the Matter of Fact, it was remitted to the Faculty of the Canon Law (it being a matter that lay within their Studies) whether the Preſumptions were violent, and ſuch as in the courſe of Law muſt be look'd on as good Evidences of a thing that was ſecret, and was not capable of formal proof? They all except five or ſix were for the Affirmative, and all the Upper Houſe confirmed this, the Biſhop of Bath and Wells only excepted. Antiq. Brit. in vita Cranmer.

In this account it may ſeem ſtrange, that there were but 23 perſons in the Lower Houſe of Convocation, and 216 in the Upper Houſe. It is taken from an unqueſtioned Authority, ſo the matter of Fact is not to be doubted. The moſt Learned Sir Henry Spelman has in no place of his Collection of our Councils, conſidered the Conſtitution of the two Houſes of Convocation; and in none of our Records have I been able to diſcover of what perſons they were made up in the Times of Popery: and therefore ſince we are left to conjecture, I ſhall offer mine to the Learned Reader. It is, that none ſate in the Lower Houſe, but thoſe who were deputed by the Inferior Clergy; and that Biſhops, Abbots Mitred and not Mitred, and Priors, Deans and Arch-deacons ſate then in the Upper Houſe of Convocation. To which I am induced by theſe two Reaſons: It is probable that all who were declared Prelates by the 1532. the Pope, and had their Writ to sit in a General Council, had likewise a right to come to the Upper House of Convocation, and sit with the other Prelates. And we find in the Tomes of the Councils, that not only Abbots and Priors, but Deans and Arch-deacons were summoned to the fourth Council in the Lateran, and to that at Vienna. Another Reason is, that their sitting in two Houses (for in all other Nations they sit together) looks as if it had been taken from the Constitution of our Parliament, in which all that have Writs personally sit in the Lords House; and those who come upon an Election sit in the Lower House. So it is not improbable, that all who were summoned personally sate in the Upper House, and those who were returned with an Election, sate in the Lower House of Convocation.

This Account of that Convocation I take from that Collection of the British Antiquities, which is believed to have been made by Matthew Parker, who lived at that time, and was afterwards Arch-bishop of Canterbury. But the Convocation Books being burnt, there are no Records to be appealed to; yet it is not to be supposed, that in a Matter of Fact that was so publick and well known, any man (especially one of that high Rank) would have delivered Falshoods, while the Books were yet extant that would have disproved them.

New Endeavours to make the Queen submit.

The Church of England having in her Representative made such a full Decision, nothing remained but to give Judgment, and to declare the Marriage Null. The thing was already determined, only the Formality of a Sentence Delarative was wanting. But before they proceeded to that, a new Message was sent to the Queen, to lay all that had passed before her, and to desire her to acquiesce in the Opinions of so many Universities and Learned Men. But she still persisted in her Resolution to own her Marriage, and to adhere to her Appeal till the Pope should judge in it. And when it was told her, that the King would settle the Joynture that she was to have by his Brother, and that the Honour of Princess of Wales should still be paid her, she rejected it. But the new Queen was now with Child, and brought forth Queen Elizabeth the 7th of September this year; from which looking backwards nine months, to the beginning of December, it shews that she must have been married in or before that time: for all the Writers of both sides agree, that she was married before she conceived with Child. The King therefore thought not fit to conceal it much longer, so on Easter Eve she was declared Queen of England. It seems it was not thought needful at that time to proceed to any further Sentence about the former Marriage, otherwise I cannot see what made it be so long delayed, since the thing was in their power now, as well as after. And it was certainly a preposterous Method to judge the first Marriage Null, after the second was published. So that it seems more probable, they did not intend any Sentence at all, till afterwards perhaps upon Advertisements from beyond Sea, they went on to a formal Process. Nor is it unlikely that the King remembring the old Advice that the Pope sent him, once to marry a second Wife, and then to send for a Commission to try the matter, which the Pope was willing to confirm, though he would not seem to allow it originally, resolved to follow this Method; for the Pope was now closing with Francis, from which Union the King had reason to expect great Advantages.

But in vain.

What

Whatſoever were the Reaſons of the Delay, the Proceſs was framed in this Method. Firſt, Cranmer wrote to the King, that the World had been long ſcandalized with his Marriage, and that it lay on him as his Duty to ſee it tryed and determined; therefore craved his Royal Leave to proceed in it. Which being obtained, both the King and Queen were cited to appear before the Arch-biſhop, at Dunſtable the 20*th.* of May, and the Arch-biſhop went thither with the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter (Gardiner,) Bath and Wells, and Lincoln, and many Divines and Canoniſts. That place was choſen becauſe the Queen lay then very near it at Ampthill, and ſo ſhe could not pretend ignorance of what was done; and they needed not put many days in the Citation, but might end the Proceſs ſo much the ſooner. On the 10*th.* of May the Arch-biſhop ſate in Court, and the King appeared by Proxy, but the Queen appeared not. Upon which ſhe was declared Contumax, and a ſecond Citation was iſſued out, and after that a third: But ſhe intended not to appear, and ſo ſhe was finally declared Contumax. Then the Evidences that had been brought before the Legates, of the Conſummation of the Marriage with Prince Arthur, were read. After that the Determinations of the Univerſities, and Divines, and Canoniſts, were alſo produced and read. Then the Judgments of the Convocations of both Provinces were alſo read, with many other Inſtruments, and the whole merits of the Cauſe were opened. Upon which after many Seſſions, on the 23*d* of May Sentence was given with the Advice of all that were there preſent, declaring it only to have been a Marriage de facto, but not de jure, pronouncing it Null from the beginning. One thing is to be obſerved, That the Arch-biſhop in the Sentence is called, The Legate of the Apoſtolick See. Whether this went of Courſe as one of his Titles, or was put in to make the Sentence firmer, the Reader may judge. Sentence being given, the Arch-biſhop with all the reſt returned to London; and five days after on the 28*th.* of May, at Lambeth, by another Judgment he in general words (no reaſons being given in the Sentence) confirmed the Kings Marriage with the new Queen Anne, and the firſt of June ſhe was crowned Queen.

Cranmer proceeds to a Sentence of Divorce taken from the Originals. Cot. lib. Otho. C. 10.

Collect. Numb. 47.

When this great buſineſs, which had been ſo long in agitation, was thus concluded, it was variouſly cenſured as men ſtood affected. Some approved the Kings Proceedings as Canonical and Juſt, ſince ſo many Authorities, which in the intervall of a general Council were all that could be had, (except the Pope be believed Infallible) had concurred to ſtrengthen the Cauſe; and his own Clergy had upon a full and long examination judged it on his ſide. Others, who in the main agreed to the Divorce, did very much diſlike the Kings ſecond Marriage before the firſt was diſſolved; for they thought it againſt the common courſe of Law, to break a Marriage without any publick Sentence; and ſince one of the chief politick Reaſons that was made uſe of in this Suit, was to ſettle the Succeſſion of the Crown, this did embroil it more, ſince there was a fair colour given to except to the Validity of the ſecond Marriage; becauſe it was contracted before the firſt was annulled. But to this others anſwered, That the firſt Marriage being judged by the Interpreters of the Doctrine of the Church, to have been Null from the beginning, there was no need of any Sentence, but only for Form. And all concluded, it had been better there had been no Sentence at all, than one ſo late.

The cenſures paſt at that time.

1533. Some excepted to the Archbishop of Canterbury's being Judge, who by his former Writings and Disputes had declared himself partial. But to this it was answered, that when a Man changes his Character, all that he did in another Figure is no just Exception: so Judges decide Causes in which they formerly gave Counsel; and Popes are not bound to the Opinions they held when they were Divines or Canonists. It was also said, That the Archbishop did only declare in Legal Form, that which was already judged by the whole Convocation of both Provinces. Some wondered at the Popes stifness, that would put so much to hazard, when there wanted not as good Colours to justifie a Bull, as they had made use of to excuse many other things. But the Emperors Greatness, and the fear of giving the Lutherans advantages in disputing the Popes Authority, were on the other hand so prevalent Considerations, that no wonder they wrought much on a Pope, who pretended to no other knowledge but that of Policy; for he had often said, He understood not the matter, and therefore left it in other Mens Hands. All Persons excused Queen Katharine for standing so stifly to her ground; only her denying so confidently that Prince Arthur consummated the Marriage, seems not capable of an excuse. Every body admired Queen Annes Conduct, who had managed such a Kings Spirit so long, and had neither surfeited him with great freedom, nor provoked him by the other Extreme: for the King, who was extremely nice in these matters, conceived still an higher Opinion of her; and her being so soon with child after the Marriage, as it made people conclude she had been chaste till then, so they hoped for a Blessing upon it, since there were such early appearances of Issue. Those that favoured the Reformation expected better days under her protection, for they knew she favoured them: But those who were in their hearts for the established Religion did much dislike it; and many of the Clergy, especially the Orders of Monks and Friers, condemned it both in their Sermons and Discourses.

But the King little regarding the Censures of the Vulgar, sent Embassadors to all the Courts of Europe, to give notice of his new Marriage, and to justifie it by some of those Reasons, which have been opened in the former parts of this History. He also sent the Lord Mountjoy to the Divorced Queen, to let her know what was done, and that she was no more to be treated as Queen, but as Princess Dowager. He was to mix Promises with Threatnings, particularly concerning her Daughters being put next the Queens Issue in the Succession. But the afflicted Queen would not yield, and said she would not damn her Soul, nor submit to such an Infamy: That she was his Wife, and would never call her self by any other Name, whatever might follow on it, since the Process still depended at Rome. That Lord having written a Relation of what had passed between him and her, shewed it to her; but she dashed with a Pen all those places in which she was called Princess Dowager; and would receive no Service at any ones hands, but of those who called her Queen: and she continued to be still served as Queen by all about her. Against which though the King used all the Endeavours he could, not without both threatning and violence to some of the Servants, yet he could never drive her from it: and what he did in that, was thought far below that Height of Mind which appeared in his other Actings; for since he had stript her of the real

Greatneſs of a Queen, it ſeemed too much, to vex her for keeping up the Pageantry of it. 1533.

But the news of this made great impreſſions elſewhere. The Emperor received the Kings juſtification very coldly, and ſaid he would conſider what he was to do upon it, which was looked on as a Declaration of War. The French King, though he expreſſed ſtill great Friendſhip to the King, yet was now reſolved to link himſelf to the Pope; for the crafty Pope apprehending that nothing made the King of England ſo confident, as that he knew his Friendſhip was neceſſary to the French King, and fearing they had reſolved to proceed at once to the putting down the Papal Authority in their Kingdoms, (which it appears they had once agreed to do) reſolved by all means to make ſure of the French King, which as it would preſerve that Kingdom in his obedience, ſo would perhaps frighten the King of England from proceeding to ſuch extremities; ſince that Prince, in whoſe conjunction he truſted ſo much, had forſaken him: Therefore the Pope did ſo vigorouſly purſue the Treaty with Francis, that it was as good as ended at this time, and an Interview was projected between them at Marſeilles. The Pope did alſo grant him ſo great Power over his own Clergy, that he could ſcarce have expected more, if he had ſet up a Patriarch in France; ſo that Francis did reſolve to go on in the deſigns, which had been concerted between him and the King of England, no further; but ſtill he conſidered his alliance ſo much, that he promiſed to uſe his moſt effectual interceſſion with the Pope to prevent all Cenſures and Bulls againſt the King; and if it were poſſible to bring the matter to an amicable Concluſion. And the Emperour was not ill pleaſed to ſee France and England divided. Therefore though he had at firſt oppoſed the Treaty between the Pope and Francis; yet afterwards he was not troubled that it took effect, hoping that it would diſ-unite thoſe two Kings, whoſe conjunction had been ſo troubleſom to him.

The Pope unites himſelf to the French King.

But when the news was brought to Rome of what was done in England with which it was alſo related that Books were coming out againſt the Popes Supremacy, all the Cardinals of the Imperial Faction preſſed the Pope to give a definitive Sentence, and to preceed to Cenſures againſt the King. But the more moderate Cardinals thought, England was not to be thrown away with ſuch precipitation: And therefore a Temper was found, that a Sentence ſhould be given upon what had been attempted in England, by the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury (which in the Stile of the Canon-Law were called the Attentates,) for it was pretended that the matter depending in the Court of Rome, by the Queens Appeal and the other ſteps that had been made, it was not in the Arch-biſhop's Power to proceed to any Sentence. Therefore in general it was declared, that all that had been attempted or done in England about the Kings Suit of Divorce was null, and that the King by ſuch attempts was liable to Excommunication, unleſs he put things again in the State they were in, and that before September next, and that then they would proceed further; and this Sentence was affixed in Dunkirk ſoon after.

And condemns the Kings proceedings in England.

The King reſolving to follow the thing as far as it was poſſible, ſent a great Embaſſy to Francis, who was then on his Journey to Marſeilles, to diſſwade the Interview and Marriage, till the Pope gave the King ſatisfaction. But the French King was engaged in honour to go forward; yet he pro-

1533. teſted he would do all that lay in his Power to compoſe the matter, and that he would take any injury that were done to the King as highly, as if it were done to himſelf; and he deſired the King would ſend ſome to Marſeilles, who thereupon ſent Gardiner and Sir Francis Brian.

Queen Elizabeth Born, Sep. 7.

But at this time the Queen brought forth a Daughter who was Chriſtened Elizabeth (the renowned Queen of England) the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury being her God-Father. She was ſoon after declared Princeſs of Wales; though Lawyers thought that againſt Law, for ſhe was only Heir preſumptive, but not apparent to the Crown, ſince a Son coming after, he muſt be preferred. Yet the King would juſtifie what he had done in his Marriage with all poſſible reſpect, and having before declared the Lady Mary Princeſs of Wales, he did now the ſame in favour of the Lady Elizabeth.

An Interview between the Pope and French King at Marſeilles.

The Interview between the Pope and the French King was at Marſeilles in October, where the Marriage was made up between the Duke of Orleance and Katherine de Medici; to whom beſides 100000 Crowns Portion, the Principality of many Towns in Italy, as Milan, Reggio, Piſa, Legorn, Parma, and Piacenza, and the Dutchy of Urbio were given. To the former, the Pope pretended in the Right of the Popedom, and to the laſt in the Right of the Houſe of Medici. But the French King was to clear all thoſe Titles by his Sword. As for the Kings buſineſs the Pope referred it to the Conſiſtory. But it ſeems there was a ſecret Tranſaction between him and Francis, that if the King would in all other things return to his wonted obedience to the Apoſtolick See, and ſubmit the matter to the judgment of the Conſiſtory, (excepting only to the Cardinals of the Imperial Faction as partial and incompetent Judges) the Deciſion ſhould be made to his hearts content. This I collect from what will afterwards appear. The King upon the Sentence that was paſſed againſt him, ſent Bonner to Marſeilles, who procuring an Audience of the Pope, delivered to him the Authentick Inſtrument of the Kings Appeal from him to the next general Council lawfully called. At this the Pope was much incenſed, but ſaid he would conſider of it in Conſiſtory; and having conſulted about it there, he anſwered that the Appeal was unlawful, and therefore he rejected it; and for a general Council, the calling of it belonged to him, and not to the King. About the ſame time the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury being threatned with a Proceſs from Rome, put in alſo his Appeal to the next general Council. Upon which Bonner delivered the threatnings which he was ordered to make, with ſo much vehemency and fury, that the Pope talked of throwing him in a Cauldron of melted Lead, or of Burning him alive; and he apprehending ſome danger made his eſcape. About the middle of November the Interview ended, the Pope returning to Rome, and the French King to Paris, a firm Alliance being eſtabliſhed between them. But upon the Duke of Orleance his Marrying the Pope's Neece, I ſhall add one obſervation, that will neither be unpleaſant and impertinent. The Duke of Orleance was then but Fourteen Years and Nine Months old, being born on the laſt of March, 1518. and yet was believed to have conſummated his Marriage the very firſt night after: ſo the Popes Hiſtorians tell us with much Triumph; though they repreſented that improbable, if not impoſſible in Prince Arthur, who was nine Months elder when he died.

The Pope promiſes to give Sentence for the King of England's Divorce.

Brevius.

The French King prevalls with the King of England to ſubmit to the Pope.

Upon the French Kings return from Marſeilles, the Biſhop of Paris was was ſent over to the King; which (as may be reaſonably collected) followed upon ſome Agreement made at Marſeilles, and he prevailed with the King to ſubmit the whole matter to the Pope and the Conſiſtory, on ſuch terms that the Imperialiſts ſhould not be allowed a Voice, becauſe they were Parties, being in the Emperor's Power. None that has obſerved the genius of this King, can think that after he had proceeded ſo far, he would have made this Submiſſion without very good aſſurances; and if there had not been great grounds to expect good effects from it, the Biſhop of Paris would not in the middle of Winter have undertaken a Journey from England to Rome. But the King, it ſeems, would not abaſe himſelf ſo far as to ſend any Submiſſion in writing, till he had fuller aſſurances. The Lord Herbert has publiſhed a Letter (which he tranſcribed from the Original, written by the Arch-biſhop of York and the Biſhop of Dureſme, to the King the 11*th* of May, 1534.) giving an account of a Conference they had with a Queen Katharine; in which, among other motives they uſed, this was one, to perſwade her to comply with what the King had done: That the Pope had ſaid at Marſeilles, that if the King would ſend a Proxy to Rome, he would give the Cauſe for him againſt the Queen, becauſe he knew his Cauſe was good and juſt. Which is a great preſumption, that the Pope did really give ſome engagements to the French King about the Kings buſineſs. 1533.

When the Biſhop of Paris came to Rome, the Motion was liked, and it was promiſed, that if the King ſent a promiſe of that under his Hand, with an order to his Proxies to appear in Court, there ſhould be Judges ſent to Cambray to form the Proceſs, and then the matter ſhould be Determined for him at Rome. This was ſent to the King, with the Notice of the day that was prefixed for the return of his Anſwer, and with other Motives which muſt have been very great, ſince they prevailed ſo much. For in anſwer there was a Courier diſpatcht from the King, with a formal promiſe under his hand. And now the matter ſeemed at a point, the French Intereſt was great in the Court of Rome; four new Cardinals had been made at Marſeilles, and there were ſix of that Faction before, which with the Popes Creatures, and the indifferent or venal Voices, ballanced the Imperial Faction, ſo that a wound that was looked on as fatal, was now almoſt healed. But God in his wiſe and unſearchable Providence had deſigned to draw other great ends out of this Rupture, and therefore ſuffered them that were the moſt concerned to hinder it, to be the chief Inſtruments of driving it on. For the Cardinals of the Imperial Faction were now very active, they liked not the Precedent of excluding the Cardinals of the Nation concern'd, out of any buſineſs. But above all things they were to hinder a Conjunction between the Pope and the King of England; for the Pope being then allied to France, there was nothing the Emperor feared more than the cloſing the Breach with England, which would make the union againſt him ſo much ſtronger. Therefore when the day that had been prefixed for the return of the Courier from England, was elapſed, they all preſſed the Pope to proceed to a Sentence Definitive and to Cenſures. Bellay the Biſhop of Paris repreſented the injuſtice of proceeding with ſo much Precipitation, ſince, where there were Seas to croſs, in ſuch a Seaſon, many accidents might occaſion the delay of the Expreſs. The King of England had followed this Suit ſix years, and had patience ſo long; therefore he deſired the delay of ſix days,

Hiſt. Council of Trent by Padre Paulo.

But the Imperialiſts oppoſed it.

1531. days, and if in that time no return came, they might proceed. But the Imperialists represented, that those were only delays to gain time; and that the King of England was still proceeding in his contempt of the Apostolick See, and of the Cardinals, and publishing Books and Libels against them. This so wrought on the angry Pope, that without consulting his ordinary prudence, he brought the business into the Consistory, where the Plurality of voices carried it to proceed to a Sentence. And though the Process had been carryed on all that Winter in their usual Forms, yet it was not so ripe, but by the Rules of the Consistory, there ought to have been three Sessions before Sentence was given. But they concluded all in one day, and so on the 23*d* of March, the Marriage between the King and Queen Katherine was declared good, and the King required to take her as his Wife; otherwise Censures were to be denounced against him.

And with great preparation procure a Sentence against the King.

Two days after that, the Courier arrived from England with the Kings Submission under his hand in due Form, and earnest Letters from the French King to have it accepted, that so the business might be composed. When this was known at Rome, all the indifferent and wise Cardinals (among whom was Farnese, that was afterwards Pope Paul the 3*d*) came to the Pope, and desired that it might be again considered before it went further. So it was brought again into the Consistory. But the secret reason of the Imperialists opposing it, was now more pressing, since there was such an appearance of a settlement, if the former Sentence were once recalled. Therefore they so managed the matter, that it was confirmed a-new by the Pope and the Consistory, and they ordered the Emperour to execute the Sentence.

The King resolves to abolish the Popes Power in England.

The King was now in so good hope of his business, that he sent Sir Edward Karne to Rome to prosecute his Suit; who on his way thither, met the Bishop of Paris, coming back with his Melancholick account of his unprosperous Negotiation. When the King heard it and understood that he was was used with so much Scorn and contempt at Rome, being also the more vexed, because he had come to such a submission, he resolved then to break totally from Rome. And in this he was before-hand with that Court. For judging it the best way to procure a peace, to manage the War vigorously, he had held a Session of Parliament from the 15*th* of January, till the 30*th* of March, in which he had procured a great change of the whole constitution of the Government of the Church. But before I give an account of that, I shall first open all the Arguments and Reasons, upon which I find they proceeded in this Matter.

Which had been much disputed there

The Popes Power had been then for four years together much examined and disputed in England; in which they went by these steps, one leading to another. They first controverted his Power of Dispensing with the Law of God. From that they went to examine what Jurisdiction he had in England, upon which followed the Convicting the Clergy of a Præmunire with their Submission to the King. And that led them to controvert the Popes right to Annates, and other Exactions, which they also condemned. The Condemning all Appeals to Rome followed that naturally. And now so many Branches of that Power were cut off, the Root was next struck at, and the Foundations Foundations of the Papal Authority were examined. For near a year together there had been many publick debates about it; and both in the Parliament and Convocation the thing was long disputed, and all that could be alledged on both sides was considered. The Reader will be best able to judge of their reasons, (and thereby of the ripeness of their judgments, when they Enacted the Laws that passed in this Parliament,) when he sees a full account of them; which I shall next set down; not drawn from the Writings and Apologies that have been published since, but from these that came out about that time. For then were written the The Institution for the necessary Erudition of a Christian Man, Concluded in the Convocation, and published by Authority; And Another Book, De Differentia Regiæ & Ecclesiasticæ Potestatis. The former of these was called the Bishops, and the latter the Kings Book. Gardiner also wrote a Book, De vera Obedientia, to which Bonner prefixed a Preface upon the same Subject. Stokesly Bishop of London, and Tonstal Bishop of Duresme, wrote a long Letter in defence of the Kings proceedings in this matter to Reginald (soon after, Cardinal) Pool: from these Writings, and the Sermons preached by some Bishops at this time, with other Authentick pieces, I have extracted the Substance of the Arguments upon which they grounded their Laws, which I shall divide in two heads. The one of the reasons for rejecting the Popes pretended Power. The other for setting up the Kings Supremacy with the Explanations and Limitations of it. 1532. Pelerine Inglese. Hall.

"First, of the Popes Power, they declared that they found no ground "for it in the Scripture. All the Apostles were made equal by Christ, "when he committed the Church to their care in Common. And "he did often declare, there was no Superiority of one above another. "St. Paul claimed an equality with the chief Apostles both Peter, "James, and John; and when he thought St. Peter blame-worthy, "he withstood him to his Face. But whatsoever Preheminence St. Peter "might have, that was only Personal, and there was no reason to af- "fix it to his Chair at Rome, more than at Antioch. But if any See be to "be preferred before another, it should be Jerusalem where Christ di- "ed, and out of which the Faith was propagated over all Nations, Christ "Commanding his Disciples to begin their Preaching in it; so that "it was truly the Mother Church, and is so called by St. Paul, where- "as in the Scripture, Rome is called Babylon, according to Tertullian and "St. Jerome. The Arguments upon which it was rejected.

"For the places brought from Scripture in favour of the Papacy, "they jndged that they did not prove any thing for it. That Thou "art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church, if it prove any "thing in this matter, would prove too much; even that the Church "was founded on St. Peter, as he was a private Person, and so on "the Popes in their Personal Capacity. But both St. Ambrose, St. "Jerome, and St. Austin, think, that by the Rock, the Confession he "had made was only to be meant. Others of the Fathers thought "by the Rock, Christ himself was meant, who is the only true Foun- "dation of the Church; though in another Sense all the Apostles are "also called Foundations by St. Paul. That, Tell the Church, is thought "by Gerson and Æneas Silvius, (afterwards Pope Pius the 2*d*.) ra-1533. "ther to make againſt the Pope and for a general Council. And "the Fathers have generally followed St. Chryſoſtom and St. Auſtin, "who thought that, the giving of the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, "and the Charge, Feed my Sheep, were addreſſed to St. Peter, in "behalf of all the reſt of the Apoſtles. And that, I have prayed for "thee, that thy Faith fail not, was only perſonal, and related to his "Fall, which was then Imminent. It is alſo clear by St. Paul, that "every Apoſtle had his peculiar Province, beyond which he was not "to ſtretch himſelf; and St. Peters Province was the Circumciſion, and "his, the Uncircumciſion, in which he plainly declares his equality with "him.

"This was alſo clear from the conſtant Tradition of the Church "St. Cyprian was againſt Appeals to Rome, and would not ſubmit to "P. Stephens definition in the point of Re-baptizing of Hereticks; and "expreſly ſays, That all the Apoſtles were equal in Power and that all "the Biſhops were alſo equal, ſince the whole Office and Epiſcopate was "one entire thing, of which every Biſhop had a compleat and equal ſhare. "And though ſome places are brought out of him concerning the "Unity of the Roman Church, and of other Churches with it; yet "thoſe places have no relation to any Authority that the Roman "Church had over other Churches, but were occaſioned by a Schiſm "that Novation had made there at Rome, being Elected in oppoſition "to the Biſhop that was rightly choſen; and of that unity only St. "Cyprian writes in thoſe place. But from all his Epiſtles to the Bi- "ſhops of Rome, it is viſible he look't on himſelf as their Equal, "ſince he calls them Brother, Collegue, and Fellow-Biſhop. And what- "ſoever is ſaid by any Ancient Writer of St. Peters Chair, is to be "underſtood of the pure Goſpel, which he delivered, as St. Auſtin "obſerves, that by Moſes Chair, is to be underſtood The delivering of "Moſes Law. But though St. Peter ſate there, the ſucceeding Popes "have no more right to pretend to ſuch Authority, than the Kings "of Spain to claim the Roman Empire, becauſe he that is now their "King, is Emperor. When Conſtantine turned Chriſtian, the Digni- "ty of the chief City of the Empire made Rome to be accounted "the firſt See, but by the General Council of Nice it was declared, "that the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Antioch had the ſame Autho- "rity over the Countries round about them, that he of Rome had "over thoſe that lay about that City. It is true, at that time the "Arrian Hereſie, having ſpread Generally over the Eaſtern Churches, "from which the Weſtern were free; the oppreſſed Catholick Biſhops "of the Eaſt made appeals to Rome, and extolled that See by a na- "tural Maxim in all Men, who magnifie that from which they have "Protection. But the Second General Council took care, that that "ſhould not grow a Preſident, for they decreed that every Province, "ſhould be governed by its own Synod, and that Biſhops when they "were accuſed, muſt firſt be judged by the Biſhops of their own Pro- "vince, and from them they might appeal to the Biſhops of the Dio- "ceſs, but no higher appeal was allowed: and by that Council it ap- "pears, what was the Foundation of the greatneſs of the Biſhop of "Rome; for when Conſtantinople was made the Seat of the Empire "and New Rome, it had the ſame Priviledges that Old Rome had, and "was

" was ſet next to it in order and dignity. In a Council at Milevi, in 1534.
" which St. Auſtin ſate, they appointed that every Clerk, that ſhould " appeal to any Biſhop beyond the Sea, ſhould be excommunicated.
" And when Fauſtianus was ſent by the Pope to the African Churches, " to claim the Right of receiving Appeals, and pretended a Canon of " the Council of Nice for it, the Pretenſion was rejected by the African " Fathers, who acknowledged no ſuch Right, and had never heard of " that Canon. Upon which they ſent to the Eaſtern Churches, and " ſearch was every where made for the Copies of the Canons of that " Council, but it was found that it was a Forgery. From whence two " things were obſervable: The one, that the Church in that Age had " no Tradition of any Divine Inſtitution for the Authority of that See,
" ſince as the Popes, who claimed it, never pretended to any ſuch
" thing; ſo the African Biſhops by their rejecting that Power, ſhew, " that they knew nothing of any Divine Warrant; all the Conteſt being " only about a Canon of the Church. It alſo appeared how early the " Church of Rome aſpired to Power, and did not ſtick at making uſe
" of Forged Writings to ſupport it. But Pope Agatho more modeſtly " writing to the Emperor in his own Name, and in the Name of all the " Synods that were Subject to his See, calls them a few Biſhops in the " Northern and Weſtern Parts. When afterwards the Patriarch of Con-
" ſtantinople was declared by the Emperor Mauritius, The Univerſal Bi-
" ſhop, Gregory the Great did exclaim againſt the Ambition of that Ti" tle, as being equal to the Pride of Lucifer, and declared, that he who " aſſumed it was the Fore-runner of Antichriſt; ſaying that none of his " Predeceſſors had ever claimed ſuch a Power. And this was the more
" obſervable, ſince the Engliſh were converted by thoſe whom he ſent
" over; ſo that this was the Doctrine of that See, when this Church re" ceived the Faith from it.

" But it did not continue long within thoſe limits; for Boniface
" the Third aſſumed that Title, upon the Grant of Phocas. And as " that Boniface got the Spiritual Sword put in his hand, ſo the Eighth
" of that Name pretended alſo to the Temporal Sword; but they owe " theſe Powers to the Induſtry of thoſe Popes, and not to any Do" nation of Chriſts. The Popes when they are Conſecrated promiſe " to obey the Canons of the Eight firſt General Councils, which if " they obſerve, they will receive no Appeals, nor pretend to any higher " Juriſdiction than theſe give to them, and the other Patriarchs e" qually.

" As for the Decrees of Latter Councils, they are of leſs Authori" ty. For thoſe Councils conſiſted of Monks and Friers in great part,
" whoſe exemptions obtained from Rome obliged them to ſupport the " Authority of that Court, and thoſe who ſate in them knew little of " the Scriptures, Fathers, or the Tradition of the Church, being only " converſant in the Diſputes and Learning of the Schools. And for the " Florentine Council, the Eaſtern Churches, who ſent the Greek Biſhops " that ſate there, never received their Determination, neither then, nor
" at any time ſince.

" Many places were alſo brought out of the Fathers to ſhow, that they " did not look on the Biſhops of Rome as ſuperior to other Biſhops;
" and that they underſtood not thoſe places of Scripture, which were 1534. " afterwards brought for the Popes Supremacy, in that ſenſe; ſo that if " Tradition be the beſt Expounder of Scripture, thoſe latter gloſſes muſt " give place to the more ancient. But that paſſage of St. Jerome, in " which he equals the Biſhops of Eugubium and Conſtantinople to the " Biſhop of Rome, was much made uſe of, ſince he was a Preſbyter of " Rome, and ſo likely to underſtand the Dignity of his own Church " beſt. There were many things brought from the Conteſts that other " Sees had with Rome, to ſhow, that all the Privileges of that and o- " ther Sees, were only founded on the practice and Canons of the Church, " but not upon any Divine Warrant. Conſtantinople pretended to equal " Priviledges. Ravenna, Milan, and Aquileia, pretended to a Patriar- " chal Dignity and Exemption. Some Arch-biſhops of Canterbury con- " tended, that Popes could do nothing againſt the Laws of the Church; " ſo Laurence and Dunſtan. Robert Groſteſt Biſhop of Lincoln, aſſert- " ed the ſame, and many Popes confeſſed it. And to this day no Con- " ſtitution of the Popes is binding in any Church, except it be recei- " ved by it; and in the daily practice of the Canon-Law, the Cuſtoms " of Churches are pleaded againſt Papal Conſtitutions; which ſhows " their Authority cannot be from God; otherwiſe all muſt ſubmit to their " Laws. And from the latter Conteſts up and down Europe, about giv- " ing Inveſtitures, receiving Appeals, admitting of Legates, and Papal " Conſtitutions, it was apparent, that the Papal Authority was a Ty- " ranny, which had been managed by cruel and fraudulent Arts, but was " never otherwiſe received in the Church, than as a Conqueſt to which " they were conſtrained to yield. And this was more fully made out in " England, from what paſſed in William the Conqueror, and Henry " the Second's time, and by the Statutes of Proviſors in many King " Reigns, which were ſtill renewed, till within an hundred years of the " preſent time.

Upon theſe Grounds they Concluded, that the Popes Power in England had no Foundation, neither in the Law of God, nor in the Law of the Church, or of the Land.

The Arguments for the Kings Supremacy. From the old Teſtament.

" As for the Kings Power over Spiritual Perſons, and in Spiritual Cau- " ſes, they proved it from the Scriptures. In the old Teſtament they " found the Kings of Iſrael intermedled in all matters Eccleſiaſtical. Sa- " muel, though he had been Judge, yet acknowledged Sauls Authority: " So alſo did Abimelech the High-Prieſt, and appeared before him when " cited to anſwer upon an Accuſation. And Samuel (1 Sam. 15. 18.) " ſays, he was made the Head of all the Tribes. Aaron, in that, was an " Example to all the following High-Prieſts who ſubmitted to Moſes. " David made many Laws about Sacred things, ſuch as, the Order of " the Courſes of the Prieſts and their Worſhip; and when he was dying, " he declared to Solomon how far his Authority extended. He told him, " 1 Chron. 28. 21. That the Courſes of the Prieſts and all the People were " to be wholly at his commandment: purſuant to which Solomon. 2 Chron. " 8. 14, 15. did appoint them their charges in the Service of God, and " both the Prieſts and Levites departed not from his commandment in any " matter: and though he had turned out Abiathar from the High-Prieſt- " hood, yet they made no oppoſition. Jehoſophat, Hezekiah and Joſias " made likewiſe Laws about Eccleſiaſtical Matters.

" In

"In the New Teſtament, Chriſt himſelf was obedient, he payed Taxes, 1533.
"he declared that he pretended to no earthly Kingdom, he charged the "People to render to Cæſar the things that were Cæſars, and his Diſciples And the New.
"not to affect temporal Dominion, as the Lords of the Nations did.
"And though the Magiſtrates were then Heathens, yet the Apoſtles
"wrote to the Churches to obey Magiſtrates, to ſubmit to them, to pay "Taxes, they call the King Supream, and ſay he is Gods Miniſter to en-

"For the great Objection from thoſe Offices that are peculiar to their

"From that, they proceeded to ſhow, that in England, the Kings And from the Laws of Eng-land.

1534. "have always assumed a Supremacy in Ecclesiastical matters. They "began with the most Ancient Writing that relates to the Christian "Religion in England then extant, Pope Eleutherius's Letter to King "Lucius, in which he is twice called by him Gods Vicar in his King- "dom, and he writ in it, that it belong'd to his Office, to bring his Sub- "jects to the Holy Church, and to maintain, protect, and govern them "in it. Many Laws were cited, which Canutus, Ethelred, Edgar, "Edmond, Athelstan and Ina had Enacted concerning Church-men, "many more Laws since the Conquest were also made, both against "Appeals to Rome, and Bishops going out of the Kingdom without the "Kings leave.

"The whole business of the Articles of Clarendon, and the Contests "that followed between King Henry the second, and Thomas Becket, were "also opened. And though a Bishops Pastoral care be of Divine In- "stitution, yet as the Kings of England had divided Bishopricks as they "pleased, so they also converted Benefices from the Institution of the "Founders, and gave them to Cloisters and Monasteries as King Edgar "did; all which was done by the Consent of their Clergy and Nobi- "lity, without dependance on Rome; They had also granted these "Houses Exemption from Episcopal Jurisdiction, so Ina exempted Gla- "stenbury, and Offa St. Albans, from their Bishops Visitation: and "this continued even till the days of William the Conqueror, for he to "perpetuate the Memory of the Victory he obtained over Harald, and "to endear himself to the Clergy, founded an Abbey in the Field where "the Battel was fought, and called it Battel-Abbey, and in the Charter "he granted them, these words are to be found. It shall be also free "and quiet for ever, from all subjection to Bishops, or the Dominion of "any other Persons, as Christs Church in Canterbury is, Many other "things were brought out of King Alfreds Laws, and a Speech of King "Edgars, with several Letters written to the Popes from the Kings, the "Parliaments, and the Clergy of England, to show, that their Kings "did always make Laws about Sacred matters, and that their Power "reach'd to that, and to the Persons of Church-men, as well as to their "other Subjects.

The Qualification of that Supremacy.

But at the same time that they pleaded so much for the Kings Supremacy, and Power of making Laws for Restraining and Coercing his Subjects, it appeared that they were far from vesting him with such an absolute Power, as the Popes had pretended to, for they thus defined the extent of the Kings Power. *To them specially and principally, it pertaineth to defend the Faith of Christ and his Religion, to conserve and maintain the true Doctrine of Christ, and all such as be true Preachers and setters forth thereof; and to abolish Abuses, Heresies, and Idolatries, and to punish with corporal pains such as of Malice be the occasion of the same. And finally to oversee and cause that the said Bishops and Priests do execute their Pastoral Office truly and faithfully, and specially in these Points, which by Christ and his Apostles was given and committed to them; and in case they shall be negligent in any part thereof, or would not diligently execute the same, to cause them to redouble and supply their lack: and if they obstinately withstand their Princes kind monition, and will not amend their faults, then and in such case to put others in their rooms and places. ſhops and Prieſts to obey with all humbleneſs and Reverence, both Kings, and Princes, and Governours, and all their Laws, not being contrary to the Laws of God, whatſoever they be: and that not only propter Iram, but alſo propter Conſcientiam, that is to ſay, not only for fear of puniſhment, but alſo for diſcharge of Conſcience. 1534.

Thus it appears, that they both limited obedience to the Kings Laws, with the due Caution of their not being contrary to the Law of God, and acknowledged the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction in the diſcharge of the Paſtoral Office, committed to the Paſtors of the Church by Chriſt and his Apoſtles; and that the Supremacy then pretended to, was no ſuch Extravagant Power as ſome imagine.

"Upon the whole matter, it was Concluded, that the Popes Pow- "er in England had no good Foundation, and had been managed "with as much Tyranny, as it had begun with Uſurpation; the Ex- "actions of their Courts were every where heavy, but in no Place ſo "intolerable as in England: and though many complaints were made "of them in theſe laſt 300 years, yet they got no eaſe, and all "the Laws about Proviſors were ſtill defeated and made ineffectual; "Therefore they ſaw it was impoſſible to moderate their proceedings; "ſo that there was no other Remedy, but to extirpate their pre- "tended Authority, and thenceforth to acknowledge the Pope only "Biſhop of Rome, with the Juriſdiction about it, defined by the An- "cient Canons: and for the King to re-aſſume his own Authority, and "the Prerogatives of his Crown, from which the Kings of England had "never formally departed, though they had for this laſt Hundred years "connived at an Invaſion and Uſurpation upon them, which was no "longer to be endured. The neceſſity of extirpating the Popes Power.

Theſe were the Grounds of caſting off the Popes Power, that had been for two or three years ſtudied and enquired into by all the Learned men in England, and had been debated both in Convocation and Parliament; and except Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, I do not find that any Biſhop appeared for the Popes Power: and for the Abbots and Priors, as they were generally very ignorant, ſo what the Cardinal had done in ſuppreſſing ſome Monaſteries, and what they now heard, that the Court had an eye on their Lands, made them to be as complyant as could be. But Fiſher was a man of great reputation, and very ancient, ſo that much pains was taken to ſatisfie him. A week before the Parliament ſate down, the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury propoſed to him, that he and any Five Doctors, ſuch as he ſhould chooſe, and the Biſhop of London, and Five Doctors with him might confer about it, and examine the Authorities of both ſides, that ſo there might be an Agreement among them, by which the ſcandal might be removed, which otherwiſe would be taken from their Janglings and Conteſts among themſelves. Fiſher accepted of this, and Stokeſley wrote to him on the eighth of January, that he was ready whenever the other pleaſed, and deſired him to name time and place; and if they could not agree the matter among themſelves, he moved to refer it to two Learned men whom they ſhould chooſe, in whoſe determination they would both acquieſce. How far this Overture went, I cannot diſcover, and perhaps Fiſhers ſickneſs hindred the progreſs of it. But now on the 15*th* of January, the Parliament ſate down: by the Journals I find no Pains taken to ſatisfie Fiſher about it. The Original is in the Cott. lib. Otho C. 10.

1534. no other Biſhops preſent but the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, Lincoln, Bath and Wells, Landaffe and Carliſle. There were alſo twelve Abbots preſent, but upon what pretences the reſt excuſed their attendance, I do not know; perhaps ſome made a difference between ſubmitting to what was done, and being active and concurring to make the Change. During the Seſſion a Biſhop preached every Sunday at Pauls-Croſs, and declared to the People, That the Pope had no Authority at all in England. In the two former Seſſions the Biſhops had preached, that the General Council was above the Pope, but now they ſtruck a Note higher. This was done to let the People ſee, what juſtice and reaſon was in the Acts that were then paſſing, to which I now turn, and ſhall next give an account of this great Seſſion of Parliament, which I ſhall put rather in the natural Method according to the matter of the Acts, than in the order of time as they paſſed.

On the 9*th* of March a Bill came up from the Commons for diſcharging the Subjects of all dependance on the Court of Rome; it was read the Journal, Procer. firſt time in the Houſe of Lords the 13*th* of March, and on the 14*th* was read the ſecond time, and Committed. The Committee reported it on the 19*th*, by which it appears there was no ſtiff nor long oppoſition, and he that was likeſt to make it, was both obnoxious and abſent, as will afterwards appear. On the 19*th* it was read the third time, and on the 20*th* the fourth time, and then paſſed without any proteſtation. Some Proviſo's were added to it by the Lords, to which the Commons agreed, and ſo it was made ready for the Royal Aſſent.

The offenders againſt " this Act were to be puniſhed according to the Statutes of Proviſors " and Præmunire. 1534.

This Act, as it gave great eaſe to the Subject, ſo it cut off that baſe trade of Indulgences about Divine Laws, which had been ſo gainful to the Church of Rome, but was of late fatal to it. All in the Religious Houſes ſaw their Priviledges now ſtruck at, ſince they were to be reformed as the King ſaw cauſe, which put them in no ſmall confuſion. Thoſe that favoured the Reformation rejoyced at this Act, not only becauſe the Popes Power was rooted out, but becauſe the Faith that was to be adhered to, was to be taken from thoſe things, which the Scriptures declared neceſſary to Salvation; ſo that all their fears were now much qualified, ſince the Scripture was to be the Standard of the Catholick Faith. On the ſame day that this Bill paſſed in the Houſe of Lords, another Bill was read for confirming the Succeſſion to the Crown in the Iſſue of the Kings preſent Marriage with Queen Anne. It was read the ſecond time on the 21*ſt* of March, and Committed. It was reported on the 23*d*, and read the third time and paſſed, and ſent down to the Commons, who ſent it back again to them on the 26*th*; ſo ſpeedily did this Bill go through both Houſes without any oppoſition. The Judgments paſt on that Act.

The Preamble of it was, " The diſtractions that had been in England " about the Succeſſion to the Crown, which had occaſioned the effuſi- " on of much Blood, with many other miſchiefs, all which flowed from " the want of a clear Deciſion of the true Title, from which the Popes " had Uſurped a Power of inveſting ſuch as pleaſed them in other Prin- " ces Kingdoms, and Princes had often maintained ſuch Donations for " their other ends; therefore to avoid the like Inconveniences, the " Kings former Marriage with the Princeſs Katharine, is judged con- " trary to the Laws of God, and void and of no effect, and the Sentence " paſſed by the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury annulling it, is confirmed, and " the Lady Katharine is thenceforth to be reputed only Princeſs Dow- " ager, and not Queen, and the Marriage with Queen Anne is eſtabliſh- " ed and confirmed: and Marriages within the degrees prohibited by " Moſes (which are enumerated in the Statute) are declared to be un- " lawful, according to the Judgment of the Convocations of this Realm, " and of the moſt famous Univerſities and Learned men abroad, any Diſ- " penſations to the contrary notwithſtanding, which are alſo declared " null, ſince contrary to the Laws of God; and all that were Married " within theſe degrees are appointed to be Divorced, and the Children " begotten in ſuch Marriages were declared Illegitimate: And all the " Iſſue that ſhould be between the King and the preſent Queen is de- " clared Lawful, and the Crown was to deſcend on his Iſſue Male by " her, or any other Wife; or in default of Iſſue Male, to the Iſſue Female " by the Queen; and in default of any ſuch, to the right Heirs of the " Kings An Act about the Succeſſion to the Crown; 22 in the Statute Books, 34 in the Record, 26 in the Journal.

1534. " Kings Highneſs for ever: and any that after the firſt of May ſhould malici-

" would maintain the Contents of this Act, and whoever being required,
" did refuſe it, was to be judged guilty of miſpriſion of Treaſon, and pu-" niſhed accordingly. The Oath it ſeems was likewiſe agreed on in the Houſe of Lords, for the Form of it is ſet down in their Journal as follows.

The Oath about the Succeſſion. " Ye ſhall Swear to bear Faith, Truth, and Obedience alonely to the " Kings Majeſty, and to his Heirs of his Body of his moſt dear and en" tirely beloved lawful Wife Queen Anne, begotten and to be begotten.
" And further, to the Heirs of our ſaid Soveraign Lord according to the " limitation in the Statute made for ſurety of his Succeſſion in the " Crown of this Realm mentioned and contained, and not to any other
" within this Realm, nor Foreign Authority or Potentate. And in caſe " any Oath be made, or hath been made, by you to any Perſon or Per-" ſons, that then ye to repute the ſame as vain and annihilate. And that " to your cunning, wit, and uttermoſt of your Power, without guile, " fraud, or other undue means, ye ſhall obſerve, keep, maintain, and " defend the ſaid Act of Succeſſion, and all the whole Effects and Con" tents thereof, and all other Acts and Statutes made in Confirmation, or " for Execution of the ſame, or of any thing therein contained. And " this ye ſhall do againſt all manner of Perſons of what Eſtate, Dignity,
" Degree, or Condition ſoever they be; and in no wiſe to do or attempt,
" nor to your power ſuffer to be done or attempted, directly or indi" rectly, any thing or things, privily or apartly, to the let, hindrance, da" mage, or derogation thereof, or of any part of the ſame, by any man" ner of means, or for any manner of pretence. So help you God, and
" all Saints, and the holy Evangeliſts.

And thus was the Kings Marriage confirmed. But when the Commons returned this Bill to the Lords, they ſent them another with it, concerning the proceedings againſt Hereticks. There had been complaints made formerly, as was told before, of the ſevere and intolerable proceedings in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts againſt Hereticks: And on the 4*th* of February, the Commons ſent up a Complaint made by one Thomas Philips againſt the Biſhop of London, for uſing him cruelly in Priſon, upon the ſuſpition of Hereſie; but the Lords doing nothing in it, on the firſt of March the Houſe of Commons ſent ſome of their number to the Biſhop, requiring him to make anſwer to the Complaints exhibited againſt him, who acquainted the Houſe of Lords with it the next day: but as they had formerly laid aſide the Complaint as not worthy of their time, ſo they all with one conſent anſwered, That it was not fit for any of the Peers to appear or anſwer at the Barr of the Houſe of Commons. Upon this the Houſe of Commons finding they could do nothing in that particular caſe, reſolved to provide an effectual remedy for ſuch abuſes for the future: And therefore ſent up a Bill about the puniſhment of Hereticks, which was read that day for the firſt time, and the ſecond and third time on the 27*th* and 28, in which it paſſed.

Journal Procer.

" The

"The Acts was a Repeal of the Statute of 2*d* of Henry the 4*th* by "which Bishops upon suspicion of Heresy might commit any to Prison, "as was before told, but in that Act there was no Declaration made, "what was Heresie, except in the general words of what was contrary "to Scriptures, or Canonical Sanctions. This was liable to great Ambi- "guity, by which Men were in much danger, and not sufficiently in- "structed what was Heresie. They also complained of their proceedings "without Presentment or Accusation, contrary to what was practised "in all other Cases, even of Treason it self; and many Canonical Sanctions had been established only by Popes without any Divine Precept, therefore they repealed the Act of Henry the 4*th*, but left the "Statutes of Richard the 2*d* and Henry the 5*th* still in force, with the following Regulation: That Hereticks should be proceeded against upon "Presentments, by two Witnesses at least, and then be committed, but "brought to answer to their Enditements in open Court; and if they "were found guilty, and would not abjure, or were relapse, to be adjudged to death; the King's Writ De Haretico comburendo being first "obtained. It was also declared, that none should be troubled upon "any of the Popes Canons or Laws, or for speaking or doing against "them. It was likewise provided that Men committed for Heresie "might be bailed. 1534. Act about punishing Hereticks, 14 in the Statute Book. 33 in the Record, 31 in the Journal.

It may easily be imagined how acceptable this Act was to the whole Nation, since it was such an effectual limitation of the Ecclesiastical Power, in one of the uneasiest parts of it; and this Regulation of the Arbitrary Proceedings of the Spiritual Courts, was a particular Blessing to all that favoured Reformation. But as the Parliament was going on with these good Laws, there came a Submission from the Clergy then sitting in Convocation, to be passed in Parliament. With what opposition it went through the two Houses of Convotion, and the House of Commons, is not known; for as the Registers of the Convocation are burnt, so it does not appear that there were any Journals kept in the House of Commons at that time. On the 27*th* of March it was sent up to the Lords, and since the Spiritual Lords had already consented to it, there was no reason to apprehend any opposition from the Temporal Lords. The Session was now near an end, so they made haste and read it twice that day, and the third time the next day, and passed it. The Contents of it were: "The Clergy acknowledged that all Convocati- "ons had been and ought to be assembled by the King's Writ; and pro- "mised in verbo Sacerdotii, that they would never make nor execute "any new Canons or Constitutions, without the Royal Assent to them; "and since many Canons had been received that were found prejudicial "to the King's Prerogative, contrary to the Laws of the Land, and hea- "vy to the Subjects, That therefore there should be a Committee of "thirty two Persons, sixteen of the two Houses of Parliament, and as "many of the Clergy to be named by the King, who should have full "power to abrogate or confirm Canons as they found it expedient; the "King's Assent being obtained. This was confirmed by Act of Parliament, "and by the same Act all Appeals to Rome were again condemned. If "any party found themselves agrieved in the the Arch-bishops Courts, an "Appeal might be made to the King in the Court of Chancery; and "the Lord Chancellor was to grant a Commission under the Great The Submission made by the Clergy to the King, 19 in the Statute Book, 25 in the Record.

1534. "Seal for ſome Delegates, in whoſe determination all muſt acquieſce.
"All exempted Abbots were alſo to appeal to the King; and it concluded with a Proviſo, that till ſuch Correction of the Canons was made, "all thoſe which were then received ſhould ſtill remain in force, except "ſuch as were contrary to the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Realms, or "were to the damage or hurt of the King's Prerogative.

This Proviſo ſeemed to have a fair colour, that there might ſtill be ſome Canons in force to govern the Church by; but ſince there was no day prefixed to the Determination of the Commiſſion, this Proviſo made that the Act never took effect; for now it lay in the Prerogative, and in the Judges Breaſt, to declare what Canons were contrary to the Laws, or the Rights of the Crown: and it was judged more for the King's Greatneſs to keep the matter undetermined, than to make ſuch a Collection of Eccleſiaſtical Laws as ſhould be fixed and unmoveable. The laſt of the publick Acts of this Seſſion that related to the Church, was about the Election and Conſecration of Biſhops. On the fourth of February the Commons ſent up a Bill to the Lords about the Conſecration of Biſhops; it lay on the Table till the 27*th* of February, and was then caſt out, and a new one drawn. On what reaſon it was caſt out, is not mentioned, and the Journal does not ſo much as ſay that it was once read. The new Bill had its ſecond reading the third of March, and on the fifth it was ordered to be engroſſed; and on the ninth it was read the third time, and agreed to, and ſent down to the Commons, who returned it to the Lords on the 16*th* of March. "The firſt part of it is "a confirmation of their former Act againſt Annates, to which they add- "ded, that Biſhops ſhould not be any more preſented to the Biſhop of "Rome, or ſue out any Bulls there, but that all Biſhops ſhould be pre- "ſented to the Arch-biſhop, and Arch-biſhops to any Arch-biſhop in "the King's Dominions, or to any four Biſhops whom the King ſhould "name; and that when any See was vacant, the King was to grant a "Licence for a new Election, with a Letter miſſive, bearing the name "of the Perſon that was to be choſen: and twelve days after theſe were "delivered, an Election was to be returned by the Dean and Chapter, "or Prior and Convent, under their Seals. Then the Perſon elected "was to ſwear Fealty to the King, upon which a Commiſſion was to "be iſſued out, for conſecrating and inveſting him with the uſual Ce- "remonies; after which he was to do Homage to the King, and be re- "ſtored both to the Spiritualities and Temporalities of his See, for "which the King granted Commiſſions during the vacancy: and whoſo- "ever refuſed to obey the Contents of the Act, or acted contrary to it, "were declared within the Statute of Premunire. There paſſed a pri- vate Act for depriving the Biſhops of Saliſbury and Worceſter, who were Cardinal Campegio and Jerome de Ghinuccii; the former deſerved greater Severities at the King's hand, but the latter ſeems to have ſerved him faithfully, and was recommended both by the King and the French King about a year before to a Cardinals Hat. "The Preamble of the Act "bears, That Perſons promoted to Eccleſiaſtical Benefices ought to re- "ſide within the Kingdom for preaching the Laws of Almighty God, "and for keeping Hoſpitality; and ſince theſe Prelates did not that, but "lived at the Court of Rome, and neglected their Dioceſſes, and made "the Revenues of them be carried out of the Kingdoms, contrary to the "in "being at leaſt carried yearly out of the Kingdom; therefore their Di-

But now I come to the Act of the Attainder of Elizabeth Barton, and her Complices, which I ſhall open fully, ſince it was the firſt ſtep that was made to Rebellion, and the firſt occaſion of putting any to death upon this Quarel; and from it one will clearly ſee, the Genius of that part of the Clergy that adhered to the Intereſts of the Court of Rome. On the 21*ſt* of February the Bill was ſent up to the Lords, and read the firſt time; on the 26*th* it was read the ſecond time, and committed; then the Witneſſes and other Evidences were brought before them, but chiefly ſhe with all her Complices, who confeſſed the Crimes charged on her. It was reported and read the ſixth of March the third time, and then the Lords addreſſed to the King to know his pleaſure, whether Sir Thomas More, and othes mentioned in the Act as Complices, or at leaſt Concealers, might not be heard to ſpeak for themſelves in the Star-Chamber: As for the Biſhop of Rocheſter he was ſick, but he had written to the Houſe all that he had to ſay for his own excuſe. What preſumptions lay againſt Sir Thomas More, I have not been able to find out, only that he wrote a Letter to the Nun, at which the King took great Exceptions; yet it appears he had a mean opinion of her, for in diſcourſe with his beloved Daughter Miſtreſs Roper, he called her commonly the ſilly Nun. But for juſtifying himſelf, he wrote a full acount of all the entercourſe he had with the Nun and her Complices to Cromwell; but tho by his other printed Letters, both to Cromwell and the King, it ſeems ſome ill Impreſſions remained in the King's Mind about it, he ſtill continued to juſtifie not only his Intentions, but his Actions in that particular. One thing is not unworthy of obſervation, that Raſtal, who publiſhed his Works in Queen Maries time, printed the ſecond Letter he wrote to Cromwell, yet did not publiſh that account which he ſent firſt to him concerning it, to which More refers himſelf in all his following Letters; though it is more like a Copy of that would have been perſerved, than of thoſe other Letters that refer to it. But perhaps it was kept up on deſign; for in Queen Maries time they had a Mind to magnify that ſtory of the Nun's, ſince ſhe was thought to have ſuffered on her Mothers account: and among the other things ſhe talked, one was that the Lady Mary ſhould one day Reign in England, for which Sanders has ſince thought fit to make a Propheteſs of her. And it is certain, More had a low opinion of her, which appears in many places of his printed Letters; but that would have been much plainer, if that full account he wrote of that Affair had been publiſhed; and therefore that one of their Martyrs might not leſſen the eſteem of another, it was fit to ſuppreſs it. Whether my Conjectures in this be well grounded or not, is left to the Readers Judgment. In Concluſion, More's Juſtifications ſeconded with the good Offices that the Lord Chancellor Audley, and Cromwell did him, (who, as appears by his Letters, ſtood his Friends in that matter) did ſo work on the King, that his Name was put out of the Bill, and ſo the Act was agreed on by both Houſes, and the Royal Aſſent followed. The matter was this, "Elizabeth Barton of Kent, in the Pariſh of Aldington, "being ſick and diſtempered in her Brain, fell in ſome Trances, (It

"But she had forgot all she had said in her Fits, yet the crafty Priest "would not let it go so, but perswaded her, that what she had said, "was by the Inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and that she ought to "own that it was so. Upon which he taught her to counterfeit such "Trances, and to utter such Speeches as she had done before; so "that after a whiles Practice, she became very ready at it. The "thing was much noised abroad, and many came to see her, but the "Priest had a mind to raise the reputation of an Image of the Blessed "Virgin, that was in a Chappel within his Parish, that so Pilgrim-"ges being made to it, he might draw these advantages from it, that "others made from their famed Images, but chose for his Associ-"ate one Doctor Bocking, a Canon of Christ-Church in Canterbury: "Upon which they instructed her to say in her counterfeited Tran-"ces, that the Blessed Virgin had appeared to her, and told her she "could never recover, till she went and visited her Image in the "Chappel. They had also taught her in her Fits to make strange "motions with her Body, by which she was much disfigured, and "to speak many Godly Words against Sin, and the new Doctrine, "which were called Heresies, as also against the King's Suit of Divorce. "It was also noised abroad, on what day she intended to go and visit "the Image of the Virgin, so that about 2000 People were gather-"ed together, and she being brought to the Chappel, fell into her "Fits, and made many strange Grimaces and Alterations of her Body, "and spake many words of great Piety, saying, that by the Inspi-"ration of God, she was called to be a Religious Woman, and that "Bocking was to be her Ghostly Father. And within a little while "she seemed by the intercession of our Lady, to be perfectly recon-"red of her former Distempers, and she afterwards professed a Relig-"ous Life. There were also violent suspicions of her Incontinency, "and that Bocking was a Carnal, as well as a Spiritual Father. She "fell in many raptures and pretended she saw strange Visions, heard "Heavenly Melady, and had the Revelation of many things that "were to come, so that great credit was given to what she said, and "People generally looked on her as a Propheteſs, and among those "the late Arch-bishop of Canterbury was led away with the rest. "A Book was writ of her Revelations and Prophecies by one Dering "another Monk, who was taken in to the Conspiracy with many "others. It was also given out that Mary Magdalen gave her a Let-"ter that was writ in Heaven, which was shewed to many, being all "writ in Golden Letters. She pretended when the King was last at "Calais, that he being at Mass, an Angel brought away the Sacra-"ment and gave it to her, being then invisibly present, and that she "was presently brought over the Sea to her Monastery again. But "the design of all these Trances was to alienate the People from their

The Inſolence of ſome of the Friars.

This appeared moſt ſignally at Greenwich, where the King lived moſt in Summer, for one Peto being to preach in the King's Chappel, denounced heavy Judgments upon him to his face, and told him, that many lying Prophets had deceived him, but he as a true Michajah warned him that the Dogs ſhould lick his Blood as they had done Ahabs (for that Prophecy about Ahab was his Text) with many other bitter words, and concluded, that it was the greateſt miſery of Princes, to be daily ſo abuſed by Flatterers as they were. The King bore it patiently, and expreſſed no ſigns any of Commotion, but to undeceive the People, he took care that Dr. Corren or Curwin ſhould preach next Sunday, who juſtified the King's Proceedings, and condemned Peto as a Rebel, a Slanderer, a Dog, and a Traytor. Peto was gone to Canterbury, but another obſervant Frier of the ſame Houſe, Elſton interrupted him: and ſaid he was one of the lying Prophets, that ſought by Adultery to eſtabliſh the Succeſſion to the Crown, and that he would juſtify all that Peto had ſaid, and ſpake many other things with great vehemency, nor could they ſilence him, till the King himſelf commanded him to hold his Peace. And yet all that was done either to him, or Peto, was, that being called before the Privy Council, they were rebuked for their inſolence, by which it appears, that King Henry was not very eaſily inflamed againſt them, when a Crime of ſo high a Nature was ſo ſlightly paſſed over. Stow.

" Nor was this all, but the Fathers that were in the Conſpiracy, " had confederated to publiſh theſe Revelations in their Sermons, up " and down the Kingdom. They had alſo given notice of them to the " Popes Ambaſſadors, and had brought the Maid to declare her Reve" lations to them, they had alſo ſent an account to Queen Katherine
" for encouraging her to ſtand out and not ſubmit to the Laws, of " which Confederacy Thomas Abel was likewiſe one. The thing that was in ſo many hands could not be a Secret, therefore the King who had Stow.
deſpiſed it long, ordered that in November the former year the Maid and her Complices, Richard Maſter, Doctor Bocking, Richard Deering, Henry Gold, a Parſon in London, Hugh Rich an obſervant Frier, Richard Risby, Thomas Gold and Edward Twaites Gentlemen, and Thomas Laurence ſhould be brought into the Star-Chamber, where there was a great appearance of many Lords, they were examined upon

1534. the premiſes, and did all without any rack or torture confeſs the whole Conſpiracy, and were adjudged to ſtand in Pauls all the Sermon time; and after Sermon, the King's Officers were to give every one of them his Bill of Confeſſion to be openly read before the People, which was done next Sunday, the Biſhop of Bangor preaching, they being all ſet in a Scaffold before him. This publick manner was thought upon good grounds, to be the beſt way to ſatisfie the People of the Impoſture of the whole matter, and it did very much convince them, that the cauſe muſt needs be bad, where ſuch methods were uſed to ſupport it. From thence they were carried to the Tower, where they lay till the Seſſion of Parliament, but when they lay there, ſome of their Complices ſent Meſſages to the Nun, to encourage her to deny all that ſhe had ſaid; and it is very probable, that the reports that went abroad of her being forced or cheated into a Confeſſion, made the King think it neceſſary to proceed more ſeverely againſt her. The thing being conſidered in Parliament, it was judged a Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life and Crown. So the Nun and Maſter, Bocking, Deering, Rich, Risby, and Henry Gold, were attainted of High Treaſon. And the Biſhop of Rocheſter, Thomas Gold, Thomas Laurence, Edward Twaites, John Addeſon, and Thomas Abel, were judged guilty of miſpriſion of Treaſon, and to forfeit their Goods and Chattels to the King, and to be impriſoned during his Pleaſure, and all the Books that were written of her Revelations, were ordered to be ſent in, to ſome of the chief Officers of State, under the pains of Fine and Impriſonment. It had been alſo found, that the Letter which ſhe pretended to have got from Mary Magdalen, was written by one Hankherſt of Canterbury, and that the Door of the Dormitorie, which was given out to be made open by Miracle, that ſhe might go into the Chappel for Converſe with God, was opened by ſome of her Complices, for beaſtly and carnal Ends. But in the Concluſion of the Act, all others who had been corrupted in their Allegiance by theſe Impoſtures, except the Perſons before named, were at the earneſt interceſſion of Queen Anne pardoned.

The Two Houſes of Parliament (having ended their buſineſs) were prorogued on the 29*th* of March, to the third of November, and before they broke up, all the Members of both Houſes, that they might give a good example to the King's other Subjects, ſwore the Oath of Succeſſion, as appears from the Act made about it in the next Seſſion of Parliament. The Execution of theſe Perſons was delayed for ſome time, it is like, till the King had a return from Rome, of the Meſſenger he had ſent thither with his Submiſſion.

Soon after that, on the 20*th* of April, the Nun and Bocking, Maſter, Deering, Risby and Gold (Rich is not named, being perhaps either dead or pardoned) were brought to Tiburn. The Nun ſpake theſe words. Hither I am come to die, and I have not been only the cauſe of mine own Death, which moſt juſtly I have deſerved, but alſo I am the cauſe of the Death of all thoſe Perſons, which at this time here ſuffer. And yet to ſay the truth, I am not ſo much to be blamed, conſidering that it was well known to theſe Learned Men, that I was a poor Wench without Learning, and therefore they might eaſily have perceived, that the things that were done by me, could not proceed in no ſuch ſort; but their Capacities and Learning could right well judg, from whence they proceeded, and that they were altogether feigned; but because the thing which I feigned was profitable to them, therefore they much praised me, and bore me in hand, that it was the Holy Ghost and not I, that did them; and then I being puffed up with their Praises, fell into a certain pride and foolish Fantasie with my self, and thought I might feign what I would, which thing hath brought me to this case: and for the which now, I cry God and the Kings Highness most heartily Mercy, and desire you all good People, to pray to God to have Mercy on me, and on all them that here suffer with me. 1534.

On all this I have dwelt the longer, both because these are all called Martyrs by Sanders, and that this did first provoke the King against the Regular Clergy, and drew after it all the Severities that were done in the rest of his Reign. The foulness and the wicked designs of this Imposture, did much alienate People from the Interest of Rome, and made the other Acts both pass more easily, and the better received by the People. It was also generally believed, that what was now discovered was no new Practice, but that many of the Visions and Miracles, by which Religious Orders had raised their Credit so high, were of the same Nature: and it made way for the destroying of all the Monasteries in England, tho all the Severity which at this time followed on it, was, that the Observant Friers of Richmont, Greenwich, Canterbury, Newark, and Newcastle, were removed out of their Houses, and put with the other Gray-Friers, and Augustin-Friers were put in their Houses. Stow.

But because of the great name of Fisher Bishop of Rochester, and since this was the first step to his ruin, it is necessary to give a fuller account of his Carriage in this matter. When the Cheat was first discovered, Cromwell, then Secretary of State, sent the Bishops Brother to him, with a sharp reproof for his Carriage in that business; but withal advised him to write to the King, and acknowledge his Offence, and desire his Pardon, which he knew the King, considering his Age and Sickness, would grant. But he wrote back, excusing himself, that all he did, was only to try whether her Revelations were true: He confessed, he conceived a great Opinion of her Holiness, both from common Fame, and her entring into Religion; from the report of her Ghostly Father, whom he esteemed Learned and Religious, and of many other Learned and Vertuous Priests; from the good opinion the late Arch-Bishop of Canterbury had of her, and from what is in the Prophet Amos, That God will do nothing without revealing it to his Servants. That upon these grounds, he was induced to have a good opinion of her; and that to try the truth about her, he had sometimes spoken with her, and sent his Chaplains to her, but never discovered any Falshood in her. And for his concealing what she had told him about the King, which was laid to his charge, he thought it needless for him to speak of it to the King, since she had said to him, that she had told it to the King her self: She had named no Person who should kill the King, which by being known, might have been prevented. And as in Spiritual Things, every Church-man was not bound to denounce Judgments against those that could not bear it; so in Temporal Things, the case may be the same; and the King had on other occasions spoken so sharply to him that

But is obstinate and intractable.

1534. that he had reason to think, the King would have been offended with him for speaking of it, and would have suspected that he had a hand in it; therefore he desired for the passion of Christ to be no more troubled about that matter, otherwise he would speak his Conscience freely. To all which, Cromwell wrote a long Letter, which the Reader will find in the Collection, copied from the rude draught of it, written with his own hand. In which he charges the Matter upon him heavily, and shews him, that he had not proceeded as a grave Prelate ought to have done; for he had taken all that he had heard of her upon trust, and had examined nothing; that if every Person that pretends to Revelations were believed on their own word, all Government would be thereby destroyed. He had no reason to conclude from the Prophecy of Amos, that every thing that is to fall out, must be revealed to some Prophet, since many notable things had fallen out, of which there was no Revelation made before hand. But he told him the true reason that made him give credit to her, was the matter of her Prophecies: to which he was so addicted, as he was to every other thing in which he once entred, that nothing could come amiss that served to that end. And he appealed to his Conscience, whether if she had prophecied for the King, he would have given such easie credit to her, and not have examined the matter further. Then he shows how guilty he was, in not revealing what concerned the King's Life, and how frivolous all his excuses were. And after all, tells him, that though his excusing the matter had provoked the King, and that if it came to a Trial, he would certainly be found guilty; yet again he advises him to beg the King's Pardon for his Negligence, and Offence in that matter; and undertakes that the King would receive him into his favour, and that all matters of Displeasure past before that time, should be forgiven and forgotten. This shows that though Fisher had in the progress of the King's Cause, given him great Offence, yet he was ready to put it all over, and not to take the advantage which he now had against him. But Fisher was still obstinate, and made no submission, and so was included within the Act for misprision of Treason; and yet I do not find, that the King proceeded against him upon this Act, till by new provocations he drew a heavier storm of Indignation upon himself.

When the Session of Parliament was at an end, Commissioners were sent every where to offer the Oath of the Succession to the Crown, to all, according to the Act of Parliament, which was universally taken by all sorts of Persons. Gardiner wrote from Winchester the sixth of May to Cromwell, that in the presence of the Lord Chamberlain, the Lord Audley, and many other Gentlemen, all Abbots, Priors, Wardens, with the Curates of all Parishes and Chappels within the Shire, had appeared and taken the Oath very obediently; and had given in a List of all the Religious Persons in their Houses of 14 years of Age and above, for taking whose Oaths some Commissioners were appointed. The forms in which they took the Oath are not known, and it is no wonder, for though they were enrolled, yet in Queen Maries time there was a Commission given to Bonner and others, to examine the Records, and raze out of them all things that were were done either in contempt of the See of Rome, or to the defamation of Religious Houſes, purſuant to which, there are many things taken out of the Rolls, which I ſhall ſometimes have occaſion afterwards to take notice of; yet ſome Writings have eſcaped their Diligence, ſo there remains but two of the Subſcriptions of Religious Orders, both bearing date the 4th of May 1534. One is by the Prior and Convent of Langley Regis, that were Dominicans, the Franciſcans of Ailesbury, the Dominicans of Dunſtable, the Franciſcans of Bedford, the Carmelites of Hecking, and the Franciſcans de Mare. The other is by the Prioreſs and Convent of the Dominican Nuns at Deptford. 1534.

But Sir Thomas More and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, refuſed to take the Oath as it was conceived: Whoſe Fall being ſo remarkable, I ſhall ſhew the ſteps of it. There was a meeting of the Privy Council at Lambeth, to which many were cited to appear, and take the Oath. Sir Thomas More was firſt called, and the Oath was tendred to him under the great Seal: then he called for the Act of Succeſſion, to which it related, which was alſo ſhewed him: having conſidered of them, he ſaid he would neither blame theſe that made the Act, nor thoſe that ſwore the Oath, but for his part, though he was willing to ſwear to the Succeſſion, if he might be ſuffered to draw an Oath concerning it, yet for the Oath that was offered him, his Conſcience ſo moved him, that he could not without hazarding his Soul take it. Upon this, the Lord Chancellour told him, that he was the firſt who had refuſed to ſwear it, and that the King would be highly offended with him for denying it, and ſo he was deſired to withdraw and conſider better of it. Several others were called upon, and did all take the Oath, except the Biſhop of Rocheſter, who anſwered upon the matter as More had done. When the Lords had diſpatched all the reſt, More was again brought before them: they ſhewed him how many had taken it: he anſwered, he judged no Man for doing it, only he could not do it himſelf. Then they asked the Reaſons why he refuſed it: He anſwered, he feared it might provoke the King more againſt him, if he ſhould offer Reaſons which would be called a diſputing againſt Law: but when he was further preſſed to give his Rea- More and Fiſher refuſe the Oath.

1534. sons, he said if the King would command him to do it, he would put them in Writing.

The Arch-bishop of Canterbury urged him with this Argument, That since he said he blamed no other Person for taking it, it seemed he was not perswaded it was a Sin, but was doubtful in the matter: but he did certainly know, he ought to obey the King, and the Law, so there was a certainty on the one hand, and only a doubt on the other; therefore he was obliged to do that about which he was certain, notwithstanding these his doubtings. This did shake him a little, especially (as himself writes,) coming out of so Noble a Prelats Mouth: but he answered, that, though he had examined the matter very carefully, yet his Conscience leaned positively to the other side; and he offered to purge himself by his Oath, that it was purely out of a Principle of Conscience, and out of no light Fantasie or Obstinacy that he thus refused it. The Abbot of Westminster pressed him, that however the matter appeared to him, he might see his Conscience was erronious, since the great Council of the Realm was of another mind; and therefore he ought to change his Conscience. (A Reasoning very fit for so rich an Abbot, which discovers of what temper his Conscience was.) But to this More answered, that if he were alone against the whole Parliament, he had reason to suspect his own Understanding; but he thought he had the whole Council of Christendom on his side, as well as the great Council of England was against him. Secretary Cromwell, who (as More writes) tenderly favoured him, seeing his Ruine was now inevitable, was much affected at it; and protested with an Oath, he had rather his own only Son had lost his Head, than that he should have refused the Oath. Thus both he and the Bishop of Rochester refused it, but both offered to swear another Oath for the Succession of the Crown to the Issue of the King's present Marriage, because that was in the Power of the Parliament to determine it. Cranmer, who was a moderate and wise Man, and foresaw well the ill effects that would follow on contending so much, with Persons so highly esteemed over the World, and of such a temper, that Severity would bend them to nothing, did by a earnest Letter to Cromwell, dated the 27*th* of April, move, that what they offered might be accepted; for if they once swore to the Succession, it would quiet the Kingdom, for they acknowledging it, all other Persons would acquiesce and submit to their Judgments. But this sage Advice was not accepted.

And are proceeded against.

This King was much irritated against them, and resolved to proceed with them according to Law, and therefore they were both indicted upon the Statute, and committed Prisoners to the Tower. And it being apprehended, that if they had Books and Paper given them, they would write against the King's Marriage or his Supremacy, these were denied them. The old Bishop was hardly used, his Bishoprick was seized on, and all his Goods taken from him, only some old Rags were left to cover him; and he was neither supplied well in Diet or other Necessaries, of which he made sad Complaints to Cromwell. But the remainder of the Tragical Business, which left one of the greatest blots on this Kingdom's Proceedings, falling within the limits of the next Book; I haste on to the Conclusion of this.

The

The Separation from Rome was made in the former Seſſion of Parliament, but the King's Supremacy was not yet fully ſetled. This was reſerved for the next Seſſion that ſate in November from the third of that month, to the 18th of December, about which we can have no light from the Journals, they being loſt. The firſt Act confirmed what had been already acknowledged by the Clergy, "That the King was "the Supreme Head in Earth of the Church of England, which was to "be annexed to his other Titles. It was alſo enacted that the King and "his Heirs and Succeſſors ſhould have Power to viſit and reform all "Hereſies, Errors, and other Abuſes, which in the Spiritual Juriſdicti-"on ought to be reformed. 1534. Another Seſſion of Parliament. The King's Supremacy declared.

By the ſecond Act they confirmed the Oath about the Succeſſion, concerning which ſome doubts had been made, becauſe there was no Oath ſpecified in the former Act, though both Houſes had taken it: it was now enacted, That all the Subjects were obliged to take it when offered to them, under the pains contained in the Act paſſed in the former Seſſion. By the third Act, the Firſt-Fruits and Tenths of all Eccleſiaſtical Benefices were given to the King, as the Supreme Head of the Church. The Clergy were eaſily prevailed on, to conſent to the putting down of the Annates, payed to the Court of Rome; for all Men readily concur to take off any Impoſition: but at that time it had perhaps abated much of their heartineſs, if they had imagined that theſe Duties ſhould have been ſtill payed; therefore that was kept up till they had done all that was to be done againſt Rome. And now as the Commons and the Secular Lords would no doubt eaſily agree to lay a Tax on the Clergy; ſo the others having no foreign ſupport, were not in a condition to wreſtle againſt it. The Oath about the Succeſſion confirmed. The First-Fruits of Benefices given to the King.

In the thirteenth Act, among other things that were made Treaſon, one was the denying the King the Dignity, Title, or Name, of his Eſtate Royal; or the calling the King Heretick, Schiſmatick, Tyrant, Infidel, or Uſurper of the Crown. This was done to reſtrain the Inſolencies of ſome Friars; and all ſuch Offenders were to be denied the Priviledge of Sanctuaries. By the fourteenth Act, proviſion was made for Suffragan Biſhops, which, as is ſaid, had been accuſtomed to be had within this Realm, for the more ſpeedy adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and other good wholeſome and devout things, and laudable Ceremonies, to the encreaſe of God's Honour, and for the commodity of good and devout People: therefore they appointed for Suffragans Sees, the Towns of Thetford, Ipſwich, Colcheſter, Dover, Gilford, Southampton, Taunton, Shaftsbury, Molton, Marlborough, Bedford, Leiceſter, Gloceſter, Shrewsbury, Briſtol, Penreth, Bridgwater, Notingham, Grantham, Hull, Huntington, Cambridg, and the Towns of Pereth and Barwick, St. Germans in Cornwall, and the Iſle of Wight. For theſe Sees, the Biſhop of the Dioceſs was to preſent two to the King, who might chooſe either of them, and preſent the Perſon ſo named, to the Arch-biſhop of the Province, to be conſecrated; after which, they might exerciſe ſuch Juriſdiction as the Biſhop of the Dioceſs ſhould give to them, or as Suffragans had been formerly uſed to do, but their Authority was to laſt no longer than the Biſhop continued his Commiſſion to them. But that the Reader may more clearly ſee how this Act was executed, he ſhall find in the Collection, a Writ for making Sundry things are declared Treaſon. An Act for Suffragan Biſhops. 1534. a Suffragan Bishop. These were believed to be the same with the Chorepiscopi in the Primitive Church, which as they were begun before the first Council of Nice, so they continued in the Western Church till the Ninth Century, and then a Decretal of Damascus being forged, that condemned them, they were put down every-where by degrees, and now revived in England. Then followed the grant of a Subsidy to the King: it was now twelve years since there was any Subsidy granted. A Fifthteenth and a Tenth were given, to be paid in three Years, the final Payment being to be at Allhallowtide, in the Year 1537. The Bill began with a most glorious Preamble "of the King's high Wisdom and Policy in the Government of "the Kingdom these twenty four Years in great Wealth and Quiet- "ness, and the great Charges he had been at in the last War with "Scotland, in fortifying Calais, and in the War of Ireland, and that "he intended to bring the wilful, wild, and unreasonable, and savage "People of Ireland, to Order and Obedience, and intended to build "Forts on the Marches of Scotland, for the Security of the Nation, to "amend the Haven of Calais, and make a new one at Dover. By all "which they did perceive the entire Love and Zeal which the King bore "to his People, and that he sought not their Wealth and Quietness on- "ly for his own time, being a Mortal Man, but did provide for it in "all time coming: therefore they thought that of very Equity, Rea- "son, and good Conscience, they were bound to show like cor- "spondence of Zeal, Gratitude and Kindness. Upon this the King for a general Pardon with some exceptions, ordinary in such cases.

More and Fisher attainted. Act. 3. and 4. Rot. Parl.

Fisher and More, were not only excluded from this Pardon by general Clauses, but by two particular Acts they were attainted of misprision of Treason. By the third Act according to the Record, John Bishop of Rochester, Christopher Plummer, Nicholas Wilson, Edward Powel, Richard Fetherstone, and Miles Willyr Clerks, were attainted for refusing the Oath of Succession, and the Bishoprick of Rochester, with the Benefices of the other Clerks were declared void from the 2d of January next, yet it seems few were fond of succeeding him in the See; for John Hilsey the next Bishop of Rochester was not consecrated before the Year 1537. By the fourth Act, Sir Thomas More is by an invidious Preamble charged with Ingratitude, for the great Favours he had received from the King, and for studying to sow and make Sedition "among the King's Subjects, and refusing to take the Oath of Succession: "therefore they declared the King's Grants to him to be void, and at- "taint him of misprision of Treason.

The Proceedings against them variously censured.

This Severity though it was blamed by many, yet others thought it was necessary in so great a Change; since the Authority of these two Men was such, that if some signal notice had not been taken of them, many might by their Endeavours, especially encouraged by that Impunity, have been corrupted in their Affections to the King. Others thought the prosecuting them in such a manner, did rather raise their Reputation higher, and give them more Credit with the People, who are naturally inclined to pity those that suffer; and to think well of those Opinions, for which they see Men resolved to endure all Extremities. But others observed the Justice of God, in retaliating thus upon them their own Severities to others: for as Fisher did grievously proſecute the Preachers of Luther's Doctrine; ſo More's hand had been very heavy on them as long as he had Power, and he had ſhewed them no Mercy, but the extremity of the Law, which himſelf now felt to be very heavy. Thus ended the Seſſion of Parliament, with which this Book is alſo to conclude, for now I come to a third Period of the King's Reign, in which he did govern his Subjects without any Competitor: but I am to ſtop a little, and give an account of the Progreſs of the Reformation in theſe Years that I have paſt through. 1534.

The Progreſs of the Reformation.

The Cardinal was no great perſecutor of Hereticks, which was generally thought to flow from his hatred of the Clergy, and that he was not ill pleaſed to have them depreſſed. During the agitation of the King's Proceſs, there was no proſecution of the Preachers of Luther's Doctrine: whether this flowed from any Intimation of the King's Pleaſure to the Biſhop or not, I cannot tell, but it is very probable it muſt have been ſo, for theſe Opinions were received by many, and the Popiſh Clergy were ſo inclined to Severity, that as they wanted not Occaſions, ſo they had a good mind to uſe thoſe Preachers cruelly, ſo that it is likely the King reſtrained them, and that was always mixed with the other Threatnings to work upon the Pope, that Hereſie would prevail in England, if the King got not Juſtice done him, ſo that till the Cardinal fell, they were put to no further trouble.

But as ſoon as More came into favour, he preſſed the King much, to put the Laws againſt Hereticks in execution, and ſuggeſted that the Court of Rome would be more wrought upon, by the King's ſupporting the Church, and defending the Faith vigorouſly, than by Threatnings: and therefore a long Proclamation was iſſued out againſt the Hereticks, many of their Books were prohibited, and all the Laws againſt them were appointed to be put in execution, and great care was taken to ſeize them as they came into England, but many eſcaped their Diligence. Hall.

There were ſome at Antwerp, Tindal, Jove, Conſtantine, with a few more, that were every year writing and printing new Books chiefly againſt the Corruptions of the Clergy, the Superſtition of Pilgrimages, of worſhipping Images, Saints, and Relicks; and againſt relying on theſe things, which were then called in the common ſtile, Good Works, in oppoſition to which they wrote much about Faith in Chriſt, with a true Evangelical Obedience, as the only means by which Men could be ſaved. The Book that had the greateſt Authority and Influence, was Tindal's Tranſlation of the New Teſtament, of which the Biſhops made great Complaints, and ſaid, it was full of Errors. But Tonſtall, then Biſhop of London, being a Man of invincible Moderation, would do no body hurt, yet endeavoured as he could, to get their Books into his hands: So being at Antwerp, in the Year 1529, as he returned from his Embaſſie at the Treaty of Cambray, he ſent for one Packington an Engliſh Merchant there, and deſired him to ſee how many New Teſtaments of Tindal's Tranſlation he might have for Money. Packington, who was a ſecret favourer of Tindal, told him, what the Biſhop propoſed. Tindal was very glad of it, for being convinced of ſome faults in his Works, 1534. Work, he was a designing a new and more correct Edition; but he was poor, and the former Impression not being sold off, he could not go about it: so he gave Packington all the Copies that lay in his hands, for which the Bishop payed the price, and brought them over, and burnt them publickly in Cheapside. This had such an hateful apperance in it, being generally called a burning of the Word of God, that People from thence concluded there must be a visible contrariety, between that Book and the Doctrines of those who so handled it; by which both their prejudice against the Clergy, and their desire of reading the New Testament was encreased. So that next year when the second Edition was finished, many more were brought over, and Constantine being taken in England, the Lord Chancellor in a private examination, promised him that no hurt should be done him, if he would reveal who encouraged and supported them at Antwerp; which he accepted of, and told that the greatest Encouragement they had, was from the Bishop of London, who had bought up half the Impression. This made all that heard of it, laugh heartily, though more judicious Persons discerned the great temper of that Learned Bishop in it. When the Clergy condemned Tindal's Translation of the New Testament, they declared they intended to set out a true Translation of it; which many thought was never truly designed by them, but only pretended, that they might restrain the Curiosity of seeing Tindals Work, with the hopes of one that should be authorized: and as they made no progress in it, so at length on the 24th of May, Anno 1530, there was a Paper drawn and agreed to by Arch-Bishop Warham, Chancellour More, Bishop Tonstal, and many Canonists and Divines, which every Incumbent was commanded to read to his Parish, as a warning to prevent the Contagion of Heresie. The Contents of which were, "That the King having called "together many of the Prelates, with other Learned Men out of "both Universities, to examine some Books lately set out in the Eng- "lish Tongue, they had agreed to condemn them, as containing se- "veral points of Heresie in them; and it being proposed to them "whether it was necessary to set forth the Scriptures in the vulgar "Tongue, they were of opinion, that tho it had been sometimes done, "yet it was not necessary, and that the King did well, not to set it out "at that time in the English Tongue. So by this all the hopes of a Translation of the Scriptures vanished.

The New Testament burnt.

The last Paper in Sir Henry Spelman's 2d vol.

Supplication of the Beggars.

There came out another Book which took mightily, it was entituled, The Supplication of the Beggars, written by one Simon Fish of Grayes-Inn. In it the Beggars complained to the King, that they were reduced to great Misery, the Alms of the People being intercepted by companies of strong and idle Friars; for supposing that each of the five Mendicant Orders, had but a Peny a quarter from every household, it did rise to a vast Sum, of which the Indigent and truly Necessitous Beggars were defrauded. Their being unprofitable to the Common-wealth, with several other things, were also complained of. He also taxed the Pope for Cruelty and Covetousness, that did not deliver all persons out of Purgatory, and that none but the Rich, who payed well for it, could be discharged out of that Prison. This was written in a witty and taking style, and the King had it put in his his Hands by Anne Boleyn, and lik'd it well, and would not ſuffer any thing to be done to the Author. 1534.

Chancellor More was the moſt zealous Champion the Clergy had, for I do not find that any of them wrote much, only the Biſhop of Rocheſter wrote for Purgatory; but the reſt left it wholly to him, either becauſe few of them could write well, or that he being much eſteemed, and a diſintereſſed Perſon, things would be better received from him, than from them who were look'd on as Parties. So he anſwered this Supplication by another, in the name of the Souls that were in Purgatory; repreſenting the Miſeries they were in, and the great Relief they found by the Maſſes the Friars ſaid for them, and brought in every Man's Anceſtors calling earneſtly upon him to befriend thoſe poor Friars now, when they had ſo many Enemies. He confidently aſſerted it had been the Doctrine of the Church for many Ages, and brought many places out of the Scriptures to prove it, beſides ſeveral reaſons that ſeemed to confirm it. This, being writ of a Subject that would allow of a great deal of popular and moving Eloquence, in which he was very eminent, took with many. More anſwers it.

But it diſcovered to others what was the Foundation of thoſe Religious Orders; and that if the belief of Purgatory were once rooted out, all that was built on that Foundation muſt needs fall with it. So John Frith wrote an Anſwer to More's Supplication, to ſhew, that there was no ground for Purgatory in Scripture; and that it was not believed in the Primitive Church. He alſo anſwered the Biſhop of Rocheſter's Book, and ſome Dialogues that were written on the ſame Subject, by Raſtal a Printer, and Kinſman of Mores: He diſcovered the Fallacy of their Reaſonings, which were built on the weakneſs, or defects of our Repentance in this Life; and that therefore there muſt be another State in which we muſt be further purified. To this he anſwered, That our Sins were not pardoned for our Repentance, or the Perfection of it, but only for the Merits and Sufferings of Chriſt; and that if our Repentance is ſincere, God accepts of it; and Sin being once pardoned, it could not be further puniſhed. He ſhewed the difference between the Puniſhments we may ſuffer in this Life, and thoſe in Purgatory; the one are either Medicinal Corrections for reforming us more and more, or for giving Warning to others: The other are terrible Puniſhments, without any of theſe ends in them: therefore the one might well conſiſt with the free Pardon of Sin, the other could not. So he argued from all theſe places of Scripture, in which we are ſaid to be freely pardoned our Sins by the Blood of Chriſt, that no Puniſhment in another State could conſiſt with it: He alſo argued from all thoſe places in which it is ſaid, that we ſhall at the day of Judgment receive according to what we have done in the Body, that there was no State of Purgatory beyond this Life. For the places brought out of the Old Teſtament, he ſhewed they could not be meant of Purgatory, ſince according to the Doctrine of the School-men, there was no going to Purgatory before Chriſt. For the places in the New Teſtament he appealed to More's great Friend, Eraſmus, whoſe Expoſition of theſe places differed much from his Gloſſes. That place in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians about the Fire, that was to try every Man's Work, he ſaid, was plainly Allegorical; and ſince the Foundation, the Building of Gold, Silver, and precious Stone; of Wood, Frith replies.

Hay

1534. Hay and Stubble, were figuratively taken, there was no reason to take the Fire in a literal sense: therefore by Fire was to be understood the Persecution then near at hand; called in other places, the fiery Trial.

For the Ancient Doctors, he shewed, that in the fourth Century, St. Ambrose, Jerome, and St. Austin, the three great Doctors of that Age, did not believe it, and cited several Passages out of their Writings. It is true, St. Austin went farther than the rest, for though in some Passages he delivered his Opinion against it, yet in other places he spake of it more doubtfully as a thing that might be enquired into, but that it could not be certainly known; and indeed before Gregory the Great's time, it was not received in the Church, and then the Benedictine Monks were beginning to spread and grow numerous, and they to draw Advantages from it, told many Stories of Visions and Dreams, to possess the World with the belief of it; then the trade grew so profitable, that ever since it was kept up, and improved: and what succeeded so well with one Society and Order, to enrich themselves much by it, was an encouragement to others to follow their tract in the same way of Traffick. This Book was generally well received, and the Clergy were so offended at the Author, that they resolved to make him feel a real Fire whenever he was catched, for endeavouring to put out their imaginary one.

That from which More and others took greatest advantage, was that the new Preachers prevailed only on simple Tradesmen, and Women, and other illiterate Persons: but to this the others answered, That the Pharisees made the same objection to the Followers of Christ, who were Fisher-men, Women, and rude Mechanicks; but Christ told them that to the Poor the Gospel was preached; and when the Philosophers and Jews objected that to the Apostles: They said God's Glory did the more appear, since not many rich, wise, or noble, were called, but the poor and despised were chosen: that Men who had much to lose, had not that Simplicity of Mind, or that Disingagement from Worldly Things that was a necessary Disposition to fit them for a Doctrine, which was like to bring much Trouble and Persecution on them.

The cruel Proceedings against the Reformers.

Thus I have opened some of these things, which were at that time disputed by the Pen, in which Opposition new things were still started and examined. But this was too feeble a Weapon for the defence of the Clergy, therefore they sought out sharper Tools. So there were many brought into the Bishop's Courts, some for teaching their Children the Lord's-Prayer in English, some for reading the forbidden Books, some for harbouring the Preachers, some for speaking against Pilgrimages, or the worshipping and adorning of Images, some for not observing the Church Fasts, some for not coming to Confession and the Sacrament, and some for speaking against the Vices of the Clergy. Most of these were simple and illiterate Men, and the terrors of the Bishops Courts, and Prisons, and of a Faggot in the end wrought so much on their Fears and Weakness, that they generally abjured and were dismissed. But in the end of the year 1530, one Thomas Hitton, who had been Curate of Maidstone, and had left that place, going oft to Antwerp; he bringing over some of the Books that were printed there, was taken at Gravesend, and brought before Warham and Fisher, who, after he had suffered much by a long and cruel Imprisonment, condemned him to be burnt.

Tindal.

The

The moſt eminent perſon that ſuffered about this time, was Thomas Bilney, of whoſe Abjuration an account was given in the firſt Book; he after that went to Cambridge, and was much troubled in his Conſcience for what he had done, ſo that the reſt of that Society at Cambridge, were in great apprehenſions of ſome violent effect, which that deſperation might produce, and ſometimes watched him whole nights. This continued about a year, but at length his mind was more quieted, and he reſolved to expiate his Abjuration, by as publick and ſolemn a Confeſſion of the truth: and to prepare himſelf the better both to defend and ſuffer for the Doctrines, which he had formerly through fear denied; he followed his ſtudies for two years. And when he found himſelf well fortified in this reſolution, he took leave of his Friends at Cambridge, and went to his own Country of Norfolk, to whom he thought he owed his firſt endeavours. 1534. Bilney's Trial. Latimers Sermons.

He preached up and down the Country, confeſſing his former ſin of denying the Faith, and taught the people to beware of Idolatry, or truſting to Pilgrimages, to the Cowle of St. Francis, to the prayers of Saints, or to Images; but exhorted them to ſtay at whom, to give much Alms, to believe in Jeſus Chriſt, and to offer up their Hearts, Wills, and Minds, to him in the Sacrament. This being noiſed about, he was ſeized on by the Biſhops Officers, and put in priſon at Norwich, and the Writ was ſent for to burn him as a Relapſe, he being firſt condemned and degraded from his Prieſthood: while he was in Priſon the Friars came oft about him to perſwade him to recant again, and it was given out that he did read a Bill of Abjuration. The things objected to him. Fox.

More not being ſatisfied to have ſent the Writ for his burning, ſtudied alſo to defame him, publiſhing this to the World; yet in that he was certainly abuſed, for if he had ſigned any ſuch Paper, it had been put in the Biſhops Regiſter, as all things of that nature were; but no ſuch writing was ever ſhewn, only ſome ſaid they heard him read it, and others who denied there was any ſuch thing, being queſtioned for it, ſubmitted and confeſſed their fault. But at ſuch a time it was no ſtrange thing, if a lye of that nature was vented with ſo much Authority, that men were afraid to contradict it; and when a man is a cloſe Priſoner, thoſe who only have acceſs to him, may ſpread what report of him they pleaſe, and when once ſuch a thing is ſaid, they never want officious Vouchers to lie and ſwear for it. But ſince nothing was ever ſhew'd under his hand, it is clear there was no truth in theſe reports, which were ſpread about to take away the honour of Martyrdom from the new Doctrines. It is true he had never enquired into all the other Tenets of the Church of Rome, and ſo did not differ from them about the preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, and ſome other things. But when men durſt ſpeak freely, there were ſeveral perſons, that witneſſed the Conſtancy and Sincerity of Bilney in theſe his laſt Conflicts; and among the reſt, Matthew Parker, afterwards Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, was an eye-witneſs of his ſufferings, which from his relation were publiſhed afterwards: he took his death patiently and conſtantly, and in the little time that was allowed him to live after his Sentence, he was obſerved to be chearful; and the poor Victuals that were brought him, Bread and Ale, he eat up heartily, of which when one took notice, he ſaid he muſt It is given out that he abjured. The Falſhood of which afterwards appeared. Fox.

1534. keep up that ruinous Cottage till it fell; and often repeated that passage in Isaiah, When thou walk'st through the fire thou shalt not be burnt; and putting his finger in the flame of the Candle, he told those about him, that he well knew what a pain burning was, but that it should only consume the Stubble of his Body, and that his Soul should be purged by it.

The manner of his Suffering.

When the day of Execution came, being the 10th of November, as he was led out, he said to one that exhorted him to be patient and constant, that as the Mariners endured the tossing of the Waves, hoping to arrive at their desired Port, so though he was now entring into a Storm, yet he hop'd he should soon arrive at the Haven, and desired their Prayers. When he came to the Stake, he repeated the Creed, to shew the People that he dyed in the Faith of the Apostles; then he put up his Prayers to God with great shews of inward devotion; which ended, he repeated the 143 Psalm, and paus'd on these words of it, Enter not into judgment with thy Servant, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified, with deep recollection: and when Doctor Warner, that accompanied him to the Stake, took leave of him with many tears, Bilney with a cheerful countenance exhorted him, to feed his flock, that at his Lord's coming he might find him so doing. Many of the begging Friars desired him to declare to the People, that they had not procured his death; for that was got among them, and they feared the People would give them no more Alms: so he desired the Spectators not to be the worse to these men for his sake, for they had not procur'd his death. Then the fire was set to, and his Body consum'd to ashes.

Thus it appears, both what Opinion the People had of him, and in what charity he dyed even towards his Enemies, doing them good for evil. But this, though it perhaps struck terror in weaker minds, yet it no less encourag'd others to endure patiently all the severities that were used to draw them from this Doctrine. Soon after, one Richard Byfield suffered, he was a Monk of St. Edmundsbury, and had been instructed by Doctor Barnes, who gave him some Books; which being discovered, he was put in Prison, but through fear abjured, yet afterward he left the Monastery and came to London. He went oft over to Antwerp, and brought in forbidden Books; which being smell'd out, he was seized on, and examined about these Books; he justified them, and said, he thought they were good and profitable, and did openly exclaim against the dissolute lives of the Clergy; so being judged an Heretick, he was burnt in Smithfield the 11*th* of November.

And Tewksburies.

In December, one John Tewksbury a Shop-keeper in London, who had formerly abjured, was also taken and tryed in Sir Thomas Mores House at Chelsey, where Sentence was given against him by Stokesley Bishop of London, (for Tostall was translated the former year to Duresme) and was burnt in Smithfield. There were also three burnt at York this year, two men and one woman.

These proceedings were complain'd of in the following Session of Parliament, as was formerly told, and the Ecclesiastical Courts being found both Arbitrary and Cruel, the House of Commons desired a Redress of that from the King; but nothing was done about it till

Three

Three years after that, the new Act againſt Hereticks was made, as was already told. The Clergy were not much moved at the Addreſs which the Houſe of Commons made, and therefore went on in their extream Courſes, and to ſtrike a Terror in the Gentry, they reſolved to make an example of one James Bainham a Gentleman of the Temple: he was carried to the Lord Chancellor's Houſe, where much pains was taken to perſwade him to diſcover ſuch as he knew in the Temple, who favour'd the new Opinions; but fair means not prevailing, More made him be whipt in his own preſence, and after that, ſent him to the Tower, where he look'd on, and ſaw him put to the Rack. Yet it ſeems nothing could be drawn from him, that might be made uſe of, to any other perſons hurt; yet he himſelf afterwards overcome with fear, abjured and did penance, but had no quiet in his Conſcience, till he went publickly to Church, with a New Teſtament in his hand, and confeſs'd with many tears, that he had denied God, and prayed the People not to do as he had done, and ſaid, that he felt an Hell in his own Conſcience, for what he had done. So he was ſoon after carried to the Tower, (for now the Biſhops, to avoid the Imputation of uſing men cruelly in their Priſons did put Hereticks in the Kings Priſons) he was charged for having ſaid, "That Thomas Becket was a Murderer, and damned in Hell if he did "not repent, and for ſpeaking contemptuouſly of praying to Saints, and "ſaying that the Sacrament of the Altar was only Chriſts Myſtical Body, and that his Body was not chew'd with the Teeth, but "received by Faith. So he was judged an obſtinate and relaps'd Heretick, and was burnt in Smithfield about the end of April 1532. There were alſo ſome others burnt a little before this time, of whom a particular account could not be recovered by Fox with all his Induſtry. But with Bainham, More's perſecution ended; for ſoon after he laid down the Great Seal, which ſet the poor Preachers at eaſe.

Crome and Latimer were brought before the Convocation, and accus'd of Hereſie. They both ſubſcribed the Articles offered to them, "That there was a Purgatory: That the Souls in it were profited "by Maſſes ſaid for them: That the Saints are now in Heaven, and "as Mediators pray for us: That men ought to pray to them, and honour them: That Pilgrimages were Pious and Meritorious: That "men who vowed Chaſtity might not Marry without the Pope's Diſpenſation: That the Keys of binding and looſing were given to St. "Peter, and to his Succeſſors, though their lives were bad, and not at "all to the Laity: That men merited by Prayers, Faſting, and other "good Works: That Prieſts prohibited by the Biſhop, ſhould not "preach, till they were purged and reſtored: That the Seven Sacra"ments conferr'd Grace: That Conſecrations and Benedictions uſed by "the Church were good: That it was good and profitable to ſet up "the Images of Chriſt and the Saints in the Churches, and to adorn "them and burn Candles before them, and that Kings were not ob"liged to give their People the Scriptures in a Vulgar Tongue. By theſe Articles it may be eaſily collected, what were the Doctrines then preach'd by the Reformers. There was yet no diſpute about the Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, which was firſt called in queſtion by Frith, for the Books of Zuinglius and Oecolampadius came Tracy's Testament. But in the year 1532, there was another memorable instance of the Clergies cruelty against the dead bodies of those whom they suspected of Heresie. The common stile of all Wills and Testaments at that time was, First, "I bequeath my Soul to Almighty God, and to our "Lady St. Mary, and to all the Saints in Heaven: but one William Tra- "cie of Worcester-shire dying, left a Will of a far different strain, for he "bequeathed his Soul only to God through Jesus Christ, to whose "intercession alone he trusted, without the help of any other Saint, "therefore he left no part of his Goods to have any pray for his Soul. This being brought to the Bishop of Londons Court, he was condemned as an Heretick, and an Order was sent to Parker Chancellor of Worcester to raise his Body. The Officious Chancellor went beyond his Order, and burnt the Body; but the Record bears, that though he might by the Warrant he had, raise the Body according to the Law of the Church, yet he had no Authority to burn it. So two years after Tracy's Heirs sued him for it, and he was turn'd out of his Office of Chancellor, and fined in 400 Pound.

Harding's Sufferings. There is another Instance of the Cruelty of the Clergy this year. One Thomas Harding of Buckingham-shire, an Ancient man, who had abjured in the year 1506, was now observed to go often into Woods, and was seen sometimes reading. Upon which his House was searched, and some parcels of the New Testament in English were found in it. So he was carried before Longland Bishop of Lincoln, who as he was a cruel Persecutor, so being the King's Confessor, acted with the more Authority. This Aged man was judged a Relapse, and sent to Chesham, where he lived, to be burnt, which was Executed on Corpus Christi Eve. At this time there was an Indulgence of 40 days pardon proclaimed to all that carried a Faggot to the Burning of an Heretick: So dextrously did the Clergy endeavour to infect the Laity with their own cruel Spirit; and that wrought upon this occasion a signal effect, for as the fire was kindled, one flung a Faggot at the old Man's Head, which dash'd out his Brains.

1533. In the year 1533, it was thought fit by some signal evidence to convince the World, that the King did not design to change the established Religion, though he had then proceeded far in his breach with Rome; and the crafty Bishop of Winchester, Gardiner, as he complyed with the King in his second Marriage and separation from Rome, so being an inveterate Enemy to the Reformation, and in his heart addicted to the Court of Rome, did by this Argument often prevail with the King, to punish the Hereticks, That it would most effectually justifie his other proceedings, and convince the World that he was still a good Catholick King; which at several times drew the King to what he desired. And at this time, the steps the King had made in his Separation from the Pope, had given such heart to the new Preachers, that they grew bolder and more publick in their Assemblies.

Friths Sufferings.

John Frith, as he was an excellent Scholar, which was so taken notice of, some years before, that he was put in the List of those whom the Cardinal intended to bring from Cambridge, and put in his Colledge ledge at Oxford; ſo he had offended them by ſeveral writings, and by a Diſcourſe which he wrote againſt the Corporal Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, had provoked the King, who continued to his death to believe that firmly. 1533.

His Arguments againſt the Corporal Preſence.

" The ſubſtance of his Arguments was, " That Chriſt in the Sacrament gave Eternal Life, but the receiving " the bare Sacrament did not give Eternal Life, ſince many took it to " their damnation; therefore Chriſt's Preſence there was only felt by " Faith. This he further proved by the Fathers before Chriſt, who " did eat the ſame Spiritual Food, and drink of the Rock, which was " Chriſt, according to St. Paul. Since then, they and we communicate " in the ſame thing, and it was certain that they did not eat Chriſt's " Fleſh corporally, but fed by Faith on a Meſſias to come, as Chriſti- " ans do on a Meſſias already come: therefore we now do only com- " municate by Faith. He alſo inſiſted much on the ſignification of " the word Sacrament, from whence he concluded, that the Elements " muſt be the Myſtical Signs of Chriſt's Body and Blood; for if they " were truly the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt, they ſhould not be Sacra- " ments. He concluded, that the ends of the Sacrament were theſe three, " by a viſible action to knit the Society of Chriſtians together in one " body, to be a means of conveying Grace upon our due participa- " ting of them, and to be Remembrances to ſtir up men to bleſs God " for that unſpeakable Love, which in the death of Chriſt appeared to " mankind. To all theſe ends the Corporal Preſence of Chriſt availed " nothing, they being ſufficiently anſwered by a Myſtical Preſence: yet " he drew no other Concluſion from theſe Premiſſes, but that be- " lief of the Corporal Preſence in the Sacrament, was no neceſſary Arti- " cle of our Faith. This either flowed from his not having yet arrived at a ſure perſwaſion in the matter, or that he choſe in that modeſt ſtile, to encounter an Opinon of which the World was ſo fond, that to have oppoſed it in down-right words, would have given prejudices againſt all that he could ſay.

Frith upon a long converſation with one upon this Subject, was deſired to ſet down the Heads of it in writing, which he did. The Paper went about, and was by a falſe Brother conveyed to Sir Thomas More's hands, who ſet himſelf to anſwer it in his ordinary ſtile, treating Frith with great contempt, calling him always the young-man. Frith was in Priſon before he ſaw Mores Book, yet he wrote a Reply to it, which I do not find was then publiſhed; but a Copy of it was brought afterwards to Cranmer, who acknowledged when he wrote his Apology againſt Gardiner, that he had received great light in that matter from Frith's Book, and drew moſt of his Arguments out of it. It was afterwards printed with his Works Anno 1573. And by it may appear, how much Truth is ſtronger than Error. For though More wrot with as much Wit and Eloquence as any Man in that Age did, and Frith wrote plainly without any Art; yet there is ſo great a difference between their Books, that whoever compares them, will clearly perceive the one to be the Ingenious Defender of an ill Cauſe, and the other a ſimple aſſerter of Truth. Frith wrote with all the diſadvantage that was poſſible, being then in the Jayl, where he could have no Books, but ſome Notes he might have collected formerly; he was alſo ſo loaded with Irons, that he could 1534. scarce sit with any ease. He began with confirming what he had delivered about the Fathers before Christ, their feeding on his Body in the same manner that Christians do since his death: This he proved from Scripture, and several places of St. Austins Works; he proved also from Scripture, that after the Consecration, the Elements were still Bread and Wine, and were so called both by our Saviour and his Apostles; that our Senses shew they are not changed in their Natures, and that they are still subject to Corruption, which can no way be said of the Body of Christ. He proved that the eating of Christ's Flesh in the sixth of St. John, cannot be applied to the Sacrament; since the wicked receive it, who yet do not eat the Flesh of Christ, otherwise they should have Eternal Life. He shewed also, that the Sacrament coming in the room of the Jewish Paschal Lamb, we must understand Christ's words, This is my Body, in the same sence in which it was said, that the Lamb was the Lord's Passover. He confirmed this by many passages, cited out of Tertullian, Athanasius, Chrysostome, Ambrose, Jerome, Austin, Fulgentius, Eusebius, and some later Writers, as Beda, Bertram and Druthmar, who did all assert that the Elements retained their former Natures, and were only the Mysteries, Signs, and Figures of the Body and Blood of Christ. But Gelasius's words seemed so remarkable, that they could not but determine the Controversie, especially considering he was Bishop of Rome: he therefore writing against the Eutychians, who thought the humane nature of Christ was changed into the divine, says, That as the Elements of Bread and Wine being Consecrated to be the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of Christ, did not cease to be Bread and Wine in Substance, but continued in their own proper natures; so the Humane Nature of Christ continued still, though it was united to the Divine Nature: this was a manifest Indication of the belief of the Church in that Age, and ought to weigh more than a hundred high Rhetorical Expressions. He brought likewise several Testimonies out of the Fathers, to shew that they knew nothing of the Consequences that follow Transubstantiation; of a Body being in moe places at once, or being in no place after the manner of a Spirit, or of the Worship to be given to the Sacrament. Upon this he digresses, and says, that the German Divines believed a Corporal Presence; yet since that was only an Opinion that rested in their minds, and did not carry along with it any Corruption of the Worship, or Idolatrous practice, it was to be born with, and the peace of the Church was not to be broken for it: but the case of the Church of Rome was very different, which had set up gross Idolatry, building it upon this Doctrine.

Thus I have given a short Abstract of Friths Book, which I thought fit the rather to do, because it was the first Book that was written on this Subject in England by any of the Reformers. And from hence it may appear, upon what solid and weighty Reasons they then began to shake the received Opinion of Transubstantiation: and with how much learning this Controversie was managed by him who first undertook it.

One thing was singular in Frith's Opinion, that he thought there should be no contest made about the manner of Christ's presence in the Sacrament; for what ever Opinion men held in Speculation, if it it went not to a practical error (which was the Adoration of it, for that was Idolatry in his Opinion) there were no disputes to be made about it, therefore he was much against all heats between the Lutherans and Zuinglians; for he thought in such a matter that was wholly speculative, every man might hold his own Opinion without making a breach in the Unity of the Church about it. 1534.

He was apprehended in May 1533. and kept in Prison till the 20th of June, and then he was brought before the Bishop of London, Gadiner, and Longland sitting with him. They objected to him his Opinions about the Sacrament and Purgatory. He answered, that for the first he did not find Transubstantiation in the Scriptures, nor in any approved Authors; and therefore he would not admit any thing as an Article of Faith, without clear and certain grounds: for he did not think the Authority of the Church reached so far. They argued with him upon some passages out of St. Austin and St. Chrysostome: to which he answered, by opposing other places of the same Fathers, and shew'd how they were to be reconciled to themselves; when it came to a Conclusion, these words are set down in the Register as his Confession. Register Stokes. Fol. 71. and a Letter of his in Fox.

"Frith thinketh and judgeth, that the natural Body of Christ is not "in the Sacrament of the Altar, but in one place only at once. Item, he "saith, that neither part is a necessary Article of our Faith, whether the "Natural Body be there in the Sacrament, or not. His opinion of the Sacrament.

As for Purgatory, he said a man consisted of two parts, his Body and Soul; his Body was purged by sickness and other pains, and at last by death, and was not by their own Doctrin sent to Purgatory. And for the Soul, it was purged through the Word of God received by Faith. So his Confession was written down in these words. Item, "Frith thinketh and judgeth that there is no Purgatory for the Soul, "after that it is departed from the Body, and as he thinketh herein, "so hath he said, written, and defended; howbeit he thinketh neither "part to be an Article of Faith, necessarily to be believed under pain of "Damnation. And of Purgatory.

The Bishops with the Doctors that stood about them, took much pains to make him change; but he told them, that he could not be induced to believe, that these were Articles of Faith. And when they threatned to proceed to a Final Sentence, he seemed not moved with it, but said, Let Judgment be done in Righteousness. The Bishops, though none of them were guilty of great tenderness, yet seemed to pity him much; and the Bishop of London professed, he gave Sentence with great grief of heart. In the end he was judged an Obstinate Heretick, and was delivered to the Secular Power: there is one Clause in this Sentence, which is not in many others, therefore I shall set it down. He is Condemned.

"Most earnestly requiring in the Bowels of our Lord Jesus Christ, "that this Execution and Punishment worthily to be done upon thee, "may be so moderate, that the rigor thereof be not too extreme, "nor yet the gentleness too much mitigated, but that it may be to "the Salvation of thy Soul, to the extirpation, terror, and conversi-"on of Hereticks, and to the Unity of the Catholick Faith. This was thought a scorning of God and Men, when those, who knew that 1534. that he was to be burnt, and intended it should be so, yet used such an Obtestation by the Bowels of Jesus Christ, that the rigor might not be extreme. This being certified, the Writ was issued out, and as the Register bears, he was burnt in Smithfield the fourth of July, and one Andrew Hewet with him, who also denyed the Presence of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar. This Hewet was an Apprentice, and went to the Meetings of these Preachers, and was twice betrayed by some Spies whom the Bishops Officers had among them, who discovered many. When he was examined, he would not acknowledge the Corporal Presence, but was illiterate, and resolved to do as Frith did, so he was also condemned and burnt with him.

His Constancy in his Sufferings.

When they were brought to the Stake, Frith expressed great joy at his approaching Martyrdom, and in a Transport of it, hugged the Faggots in his Arms, as the Instruments that were to send him to his Eternal Rest. One Doctor Cook a Parson of London called to the People, that they should not pray for them any more than they would do for a Dog. At which Frith smiled, and prayed God to forgive him; so the fire was set to, and they were consumed to Ashes.

This was the last Act of the Clergies Cruelty against mens lives, and was much condemned: it was thought an unheard-of barbarity, thus to burn a moderate and learned young man, only because he would not acknowledge some of their Doctrines to be Articles of Faith; and though his private judgment was against their tenet, yet he was not positive in it, any further, than that he could not believe the contrary to be necessary to Salvation. But the Clergy were now so bathed in blood, that they seemed to have stript themselves of those impressions of pity and compassion, which are natural to mankind; they therefore held on in their severe courses, till the Act of Parliament did effectually restrain them.

Philip's Sufferings.

In the Account that was given of that Act, mention was made of one Thomas Philips, who put in his complaint to the House of Commons against the Bishop of London. The proceedings against him had been both extreme and illegal; he was first apprehended, and put in the Tower upon suspicion of Heresie; and when they searched him a Copy of Tracy's Testament was found about him, and Butter and Cheese were found in his Chamber, it being in the time of Lent. There was also another Letter found about him, exhorting him to be ready to suffer constantly for the truth. Upon these presumptions the Bishop of London proceeded against him, and required him to abjure. But he said, he would willingly swear to be obedient as a Christian man ought, and that he would never hold any Heresie during his life, nor favour Hereticks; but the Bishop would not accept of that, since there might be Ambiguities in it: therefore he required him to make the Abjuration in common form, which he refused to do, and appealed to the King as the Supreme Head of the Church. Yet the Bishop pronounced him Contumax, and did excommunicate him; but whether he was released on his Appeal, or not, I do not find; yet perhaps this was the man of whom the Pope complained to the English Ambassadors 1532. that an Heretick having appealed to the King as the Supreme Head of the Church, was taken out of the Bishops hands, and judged and acquitted in the King's Courts. It is probable this this was the Man, only the Pope was informed, that it was from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury that he appealed, in which there might be a miſtake for the Biſhop of London. But whatever ground there may be for that Conjecture, Philips got his Liberty, and put in a Complaint to the Houſe of Commons, which produced the Act about Hereticks. 1534.

A ſtop is put to their cruel Proceedings.

And now that Act being paſſed, together with the Extirpation of the Pope's Authority, and the Power being lodged in the King to correct and reform Hereſies, Idolatries, and Abuſes, the Standard of the Catholick Faith being alſo declared to be the Scriptures, the perſecuted Preachers had Eaſe and Encouragement every where. They alſo ſaw that the neceſſity of the King's Affairs would conſtrain him to be gentle to them, for the Sentence which the Pope gave againſt the King, was committed to the Emperor to be executed by him, who was then aſpiring to an univerſal Monarchy; and therefore as ſoon as his other Wars gave him leiſure to look over to England and Ireland, he had now a good colour to juſtify an Invaſion both from the Pope's Sentence, and the Intereſts and Honour of his Family in protecting his Aunt and her Daughter: Therefore the King was to give him work elſewhere, in order to which his Intereſt obliged him to joyn himſelf to the Princes of Germany, who had at Smalcald entred into a League offenſive and defenſive, for the liberty of Religion, and the Rights of the Empire. This was a Thorn in the Emperor's ſide, which the King's Intereſt would oblige him by all means to maintain. Upon which the Reformers in England concluded, that either the King, to recommend himſelf to theſe Princes, would relax the Severities of the Law againſt them; or otherwiſe, that their Friends in Germany would ſee to it: for in theſe firſt fervours of Reformations, the Princes made that always a Condition in their Treaties, that thoſe who favoured their Doctrine, might be no more perſecuted.

The Queen favoured the Reformers.

But their chief Encouragement was from the Queen, who reigned in the King's Heart, as abſolutely as he did over his Subjects; and was a known favourer of them. She took Shaxton and Latimer to be her Chaplains, and ſoon after promoted them to the Biſhopricks of Salisbury and Worceſter, then vacant by the deprivation of Campegio and Ghinuccii; and in all other things cheriſhed and protected them, and uſed her moſt effectual Endeavours with the King to promote the Reformation. Next to her, Cranmer Arch-biſhop of Canterbury was a profeſſed Favourer of it, who beſides the Authority of his Character and See, was well fitted for carrying it on, being a very Learned and Induſtrious Man. He was at great pains to collect the ſenſe of Ancient Writers, upon all the Heads of Religion, by which he might be well directed in ſuch an Important Matter. I have ſeen two Volumes in Folio written with his own Hand, containing upon all the Heads of Religion, a vaſt heap both of places of Scripture, and Quotations out of Ancient Fathers, and later Doctors, and School-men; by which he governed himſelf in that Work. There is alſo an Original Letter of the Lord Burghly's extant, which I have ſeen, in which he writes that he had ſix or ſeven Volumes of his Writings, all which, except two other, that I have ſeen, are loſt, for ought I can underſtand. From which it will appear in the Sequel of this Work, that he neither copied from Foreign Writers, nor proceeded raſhly in the Reformation. He was a Man of great Temper; and as I have ſeen in ſome of his Letters to Oſiander, and ſome of Oſian-

Cranmer promoted the Reformation.

1534. der's answers to him, he very much disliked the violence of the German Divines. He was gentle in his whole behaviour, and though he was a Man of too great candor and simplicity to be refined in the Arts of Policy, yet he managed his Affairs with great prudence; which did so much recommend him to the King, that no ill Offices were ever able to hurt him. It is true, he had some singular Opinions about Ecclesiastical Functions and Offices, which he seemed to make wholly dependent on the Magistrate, as much as the Civil were; but as he never studied to get his Opinion in that made a part of the Doctrine of the Church, reserving only to himself the freedom of his own Thoughts, which I have reason to think he did afterwards, either change, or at least was content to be over-ruled in it: So it is clear that he held not that Opinion to get the King's Favour by it; for in many other things, as in the business of the six Articles, he boldly and freely argued, both in the Convocation and the House of Peers, against that which he knew was the King's Mind, and took his Life in his hands, which had certainly been offered at a Stake, if the King's esteem of him had not been proof against all Attempts.

Assisted by Cromwell.

Next him, or rather above him, was Cromwell, who was made the King's Vice-gerent in Ecclesiastical Matters. A Man of mean Birth, but noble Qualities, as appeared in two signal Instances, the one being his Pleading in Parliament so zealously and successfully for the fallen and disgraced Cardinal, whose Secretary he was, when Gardiner, though more obliged by him, had basely forsaken him. This was thought so just and generous in him, that it did not at all hinder his Preferment, but raised his Credit higher: Such a demonstration of Gratitude and Friendship in misfortune, being so rare a thing in a Court. The other was his remembring the Merchant of Lucca, that had pitied and relieved him, when he was a poor Stranger there, and expressing most extraordinary Acknowledgments and Gratitude, when he was afterwards in the top of his Greatness; and the other did not so much as know him, much less pretend to any returns for passed Favours, which shew'd that he had a noble and generous Temper; only he made too much haste to be great and rich. He joyned himself in a firm Friendship to Cranmer, and did promote the Reformation very vigorously.

The Duke of Norfolk and Gardiner opposed it.

But there was another Party in the Court, that wrestled much against it; the Head of it was the Duke of Norfolk, who though he was the Queens Uncle, yet was her mortal Enemy. He was a dextrous Courtier, and complied with the King, both in his Divorce and Separation from Rome, yet did upon all occasions perswade the King to innovate nothing in Religion: His great Friend that joyned all along with him in those Counsels, was Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, who was a crafty and politick Man, and understood the King well, and complied with his Temper in every thing; he despised Cranmer, and hated all Reformation. Longland, that had been the King's Confessor, was also managed by them, and they had a great Party in the Court, and almost all the Churchmen were on their side.

Reasons against the Reformation.

That which prevailed most with the King, was, that himself had writ a Book in Defence of the Faith, and they said, would he now retract that, which all Learned Men admired so much? or would he encourage Luther and his Party, who had treated him with so little respect? If he went went to change the Doctrines that were formerly received, all the World would say he did it in spite to the Pope, which would cast a great dishonour on him, as if his passion govern'd his Religion. Foreign Princes, who in their hearts did not much blame him for what he had hitherto done, but rather wished for a good opportunity to do the like, would now condemn him if he medled with the Religion: And his own Subjects, who complied with that which he had done, and were glad to be delivered from Foreign Jurisdiction, and the Exactions of the Court of Rome, would not bear a change of the Faith, but might be thereby easily set on, by the Emissaries of the Pope or Emperor, to break out in Rebellion. These things being managed skilfully, and agreeing with his own private opinion, wrought much on him: and particularly, what was said about his own Book, which had been so much commended to him, that he was almost made believe, it was written by a special Inspiration of the Holy Ghost. 1534.

But on the other side, Cranmer represented to him, that since he had put down the Popes Authority, it was not fit to let those Doctrines be still taught, which had no other Foundation but the Decrees of Popes: And he offered upon the greatest hazard to prove, that many things, then received as Articles of Faith, were no better grounded; therefore he pressed the King to give order, to hear and examine things freely, that when the Popes Power was rejected, the People might not be obliged to belive Doctrines which had no better warrant. And for Political Councils, he was to do the duty of a good Christian Prince, and leave the event to God; and things might be carried on with that due care, that the justice and reasonableness of the King's proceedings should appear to all the World. And whereas it was objected, that the Doctrines of the Catholick Church ought not to be examined by any particular Church: It was answered, that when all Christendom were under one Emperor, it was easie for him to call General Councils, and in such circumstances it was fit to stay for one; and yet even then, particular Churches did in their National Synods condemn Heresies, and reform Abuses. But the State of Christendom was now altered, it was under many Princes, who had different Interests, and therefore they thought it a vain expectation to look for any such Council. The Protestants of Germany had now for above ten years desired the Emperor to procure one, but to no effect; for sometimes the Pope would not grant it, and at other times the French King protested against it. The former year the Pope had sent to the King to offer a General Council, to be held at Mantua this year; but the King found that was but an illusion; for the Marques of Mantua protested, he would not admit such a number of strangers, as a Council would draw together, into his Town: yet the King promised to send his Ambassadors thither, when the Council met. But now the King consulting his Prelates, whether the Emperor might by his Authority summon a General Council, as the Roman Emperors had done: some of them gave the following answer, copied from the Original that is yet extant, which might have been written any time between the year 1534, in which Thomas Goodrick was made Bishop of Ely, and the year 1540, in which John Clark, Bishop of Bath and Wells, died: but I incline to think from other circumstances, that it was written about the end of the year 1534.

For the General Council.

Ex MSS. DD. Stillingfleet.

" Though that in the Old time, when the Empire of Rome had his " ample dominion over the moſt part of the World, the Firſt Four Gene- " ral Councils (the which at all times have been of moſt eſtimation in " the Church of Chriſt) were called and gathered by the Emperors Com- " mandment, and for a Godly intent: That Hereſies might be extinct, " Schiſms put away, good Order and manners in the Miniſters of the " Church and the People of the ſame eſtabliſhed. Like as many Coun- " cils more were called: till now of late by the negligence, as well of " the Emperor, as other Princes, the Biſhop of Rome hath been ſuffered " to uſurp this Power; yet now, for ſo much that the Empire of Rome, " and the Monarchy of the ſame, hath no ſuch general Dominion; but " many Princes have abſolute Power in their own Realms, and a whole " and entire Monarchy, no one Prince may by his Authority call any " General Council, but if that any one or more of theſe Princes for the " eſtabliſhing of the Faith, for the extirpation of Schiſms, &c. Loving- " ly, Charitably, with a good ſincere Intent, to a ſure place, require any " other Prince, or the reſt of the great Princes, to be content to agree, " that for the Wealth, Quietneſs, and Tranquillity of all Chriſtian People " by his or their free conſent, a General Council might be aſſembled: that " Prince, or thoſe Princes ſo required, are bound by the Order of Chari- " ty, for the good Fruit that may come of it, to condeſcend and agree " thereunto, having no lawful Impediment, nor juſt Cauſe moving to the " contrary. The chief Cauſes of the General councils are before expreſſed.

" In all the Ancient Councils of the Church, in matters of the Faith " and interpretation of the Scripture, no man made definitive Subſcripti- " on, but Biſhops and Prieſts, for ſo much as the Declaration of the " Word of God pertaineth unto them.

But beſides this Reſolution, I have ſeen a long Speech of Cranmers, written by one of his Secretaries. It was ſpoken ſoon after the Parliament had paſſed the Acts formerly mentioned, for it relates to them as lately done; it was delivered either in the Houſe of Lords, the upper Houſe of Convocation, or at the Council Board; but I rather think, it was in the Houſe of Lords, for it begins, My Lords; The matter of it does ſo much concern the buſineſs of Reformation, that I know the Reader will expect I ſhould ſet down the Heads of it. It appears he had been Ordered to Inform the Houſe about theſe things. The Preamble of his Speech

A Speech of Cranmers about a General Council.

Speech runs upon this conceit. "That as Rich men flying from their "Enemies, carry away all they can with them, and what they cannot "take away, they either hide or deſtroy it; ſo the Court of Rome had "deſtroyed ſo many Ancient Writings, and hid the reſt, having carefully "preſerved every thing that was of advantage to them, that it was not "eaſie to diſcover what they had ſo artificially concealed: Therefore in "the Canon Law, ſome honeſt Truths were yet to be found, but ſo miſ- "layed, that they are not placed where one might expect them, but are "to be met with in ſome other Chapters, where one would leaſt look for "them. And many more things ſaid by the Ancients of the See of Rome, "and againſt their Authority, were loſt, as appears by the Fragments yet "remaining. He ſhew'd that many of the Ancients called every thing "which they thought well done, of Divine Inſtitution, by a large ex- "tent of the Phraſe, in which ſenſe the paſſages of many Fathers that "magnified the See of Rome, were to be underſtood. 1534. Ex MSS. DD. Stillingfleet.

"Then he ſhew'd for what end General Councils were called, to de- "clare the Faith, and reform Errors, not that ever any Council was truly "General, for even at Nice there were no Biſhops almoſt, but out of "Egypt, Aſia, and Greece; but they were called General, becauſe the "Emperor Summon'd them, and all Chriſtendom did agree to their "Definitions, which he prov'd by ſeveral Authorities: therefore though "there were many more Biſhops in the Council of Arimini, than at Nice "or Conſtantinople, yet the one was not received as a General Council, "and the others were: ſo that it was not the number, nor Authority of "the Biſhops, but the matter of their Diciſions, which made them be "received with ſo general a Submiſſion.

"As for the Head of the Council. St. Peter and St. James had the "chief derection of the Council of the Apoſtles, but there were no Con- "teſt then about Head-ſhip. Chriſt named no Head, which could be "no more called a defect in him, than it was one in God, that had named "no Head to Govern the World. Yet the Church found it convenient "to have one over them, ſo Arch-Biſhops were ſet over Provinces. And "though St. Peter had been Head of the Apoſtles, yet as it is not certain "that he was ever in Rome, ſo it does not appear, that he had his Head- "ſhip for Romes ſake, or that he left it there; but he was made Head for "his Faith, and not for the Dignity of any See: Therefore the Biſhops "of Rome could pretend to nothing from him, but as they followed his "Faith; and Liberius and ſome other Biſhops there, had been condemn- "ed for Hereſie; and if according to St. James, Faith be to be tryed "by Works, the Lives of the Popes for ſeveral Ages gave ſhrewd pre- "ſumptions, that their Faith was not good. And though it were grant- "ed, that ſuch a Power was given to the See of Rome, yet by many in- "ſtances, he ſhew'd that poſitive Precepts in a matter of that nature, "were not for ever Obligatory. And therefore Gerſon wrote a Book, "De Auferibilitate Papæ. So that if a Pope with the Cardinals be cor- "rupted, they ought to be tryed by a General Council, and ſubmit to "it. St. Peter gave an account of his Baptizing Cornelius, when he was "queſtioned about it. So Damaſus, Sixtus, and Leo, purged them- "ſelves of ſome ſcandals.

"Then he ſhewed how Corrupt the preſent Pope was, both in his "Perſon and Government, for which he was abhorred, even by ſome of his 1534. " his Cardinals, as himſelf had heard and ſeen at Rome. It is true, there " was no Law to proceed againſt a vitious Pope, for it was a thing not " foreſeen, and thought ſcarcely poſſible; but new diſeaſes required new " remedies: and if a Pope that is an Heretick may be judged in a Coun- " cill, the ſame reaſon would hold againſt a Symoniacal, Covetous and " Impious Pope, who was Salt that had loſt its ſavour. And by ſeveral " Authorities, he proved, that every man who lives ſo, is thereby out of " the Communion of the Church; and that as the Preheminence of the " See of Rome flowed only from the Laws of men, ſo there was now " good cauſe to repeal theſe, for the Pope, as was ſaid in the Council of " Baſil, was only Vicar of the Church, and not of Chriſt, ſo he was ac- " countable to the Church. The Council of Conſtance, and the Divines " of Paris had, according to the Doctrine of the Ancient Church, de- " clared the Pope to be ſubject to a General Council, which many Popes " in former Ages had confeſſed. And all that the Pope can claim ever " by the Canon Law, is only to call and preſide in a General Council, " but not to over-rule it, or have a Nagative Vote in it.

" The Power of Councils did not extend to Princes, Dominions, or " Secular Matters, but only to Points of Faith, which they were to de- " clare, and to condemn Hereticks: nor were their Decrees Laws, till " they were Enacted by princes. Upon this, he enlarged much to ſhew, " that though a Council did proceed againſt a King (with which they " then threatned the King) that their Sentence was of no force, as being " without their Sphere. The determination of Councils ought to be " well conſidered and examined by the Scriptures, and in matters indif- " ferent, men ought to be left to their freedom. He taxed the ſeverity of " Victor's Proceedings againſt the Churches of the Eaſt, about the day " of Eaſter. And concluded, that as a Member of the Body is not cut " off, except a Gangrene comes in it; ſo no part of the Church ought to " be cut off, but upon a great and inevitable cauſe. And he very large- " ly ſhewed, with what Moderation and Charity the Church ſhould pro- " ceed even againſt thoſe that held errors. And the Standard of the " Councils definitions, ſhould only be taken from the Scriptures, and not " from mens Traditions.

" He ſaid, ſome General Councils had benn rejected by others, and it " was a tender Point, how much ought to be deferred to a Council; " ſome Decrees of Councils were not at all obeyed. The Divines of " Paris held, that a Council could not make a new Article of Faith, that " was not in the Scriptures. And as all God's promiſes to the People of " Iſrael, had this condition implyed within them, If they keept his Com- mandments; ſo he thought the promiſes to the Chriſtian Church, had " this condition in them, If they keept the Faith. Therefore he had much " doubting in himſelf as to General Councils, and he thought that only " the Word of God was the Rule of Faith, which ought to take place " in all Controverſies of Religion. The Scriptures were called Canonical, " as being the only Rules of the Faith of Chriſtians; and theſe by ap- " pointment of the Ancient Council, were only to be read in the Chur- " ches. The Fathers SS. Ambroſe, Jerome, and Auſtin, did in many " things differ from one another, but always appealed to the Scriptures, " as the common and certain Standard. And he cited ſome remarkable " paſſage out St. Auſtin, to ſhew, what difference he put between the

" Scriptures

" Scriptures, and all the other Writings even of the beſt and holieſt Fa- 1534.
" thers. But when all the Fathers agreed in the Expoſition of any place " of Scripture, he acknowledged he looked on that as flowing from the " Spirit of God, and it was a moſt dangerous thing to be wiſe in our " own Conceit: Therefore he thought Councils ought to found their " Deciſions on the Word of God, and thoſe Expoſitions of it that had " been agreed on by the Doctors of the Church.

" Then he diſcourſed very largely what a Perſon a Judg ought to be,
" he muſt not be Partial, nor a Judg in his own Cauſe, nor ſo much as
" ſit on the Bench when it is tried, leſt his Preſence ſhould over-awe o" thers. Things alſo done upon a common Error cannot bind, when the " Error upon which they were done comes to be diſcovered; and all
" humane Laws ought to be changed, when a publick viſible Inconve-

Theſe were the Heads of that Diſcourſe, which it ſeems he gave them in Writing after he had delivered it; but he promiſed to entertain them with another Diſcourſe, of the Power the Biſhops of the Chriſtian Church have in their Sees, and of the Power of a Chriſtian Prince to make them do their Duty; but that I could never ſee, and I am afraid it is loſt.

All this I thought neceſſary to open, to ſhew the State of the Court, and the Principles that the ſeveral Parties in it went upon, when the Reformation was firſt brought under Conſideration in the third Period of this King's Reign, to which I am now advanced.

THE HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION OF THE Church of England.

BOOK III.

Of the other Tranſactions about Religion and Reformation, during the reſt of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth.

1535. The reſt of the King's reign grows troubleſome.

THE King having paſſed through the Traverſes and toſſings of his Suit of Divorce, and having with the concurrence, both of his Clergy and Parliament, brought about what he had projected, ſeem'd now at eaſe in his own Dominions. But though matters were carried in Publick Aſſembles ſmoothly and ſucceſsfully, yet there were many ſecret diſcontents, which being fomented, both by the Pope, and the Emperors Agents, wrought him great trouble; ſo that the reſt of his life, was full of vexation and diſquiet.

All that were zealouſly addicted to that which they called the Old Religion, did conclude, that whatever firmneſs the King expreſſed to it now, was either pretended out of Policy, for avoiding the Inconveniences, which the fears of a Change might produce: or though he really intended to perform what he profeſſed; yet the Intereſts in which he muſt embarque, with the Princes of Germany againſt the Pope and the Emperor, together with the Power that the Queen had over him, and the credit Cranmer and Cromwell had with him, would prevail on him to change ſome things in Religion. And they look'd on theſe things, as ſo complicated together, that the change of any one muſt needs make way for change in more, ſince that ſtruck at the Authority of the Church, and left people at liberty to diſpute the Articles of Faith. This they thought was a Gate opened 1535. to Heresie. And therefore they were every-where meeting together, and consulting, what should be done for suppressing Heresie, and preserving the Catholick Faith.

By the practises of the Monks and Friars.

That zeal was much inflamed by the Monks and Friars, who clearly saw the Acts of Parliment were so levelled at their Exemptions and Immunities, that they were now like to be at the King's mercy. They were no more to plead their Bulls, or claim any Priviledges further than it pleased the King to allow them. No new Saints from Rome could draw more Riches or Honour to their Orders. Priviledges and Indulgences were out of doors; so that the Arts of drawing in the People, to enrich their Churches and Houses, were at an end. And they had also secret Intimations, that the King and the Courtiers, had an eye on their Lands, and they gave themselves for lost, if they could not so embroyl the King's Affairs, that he should not adventure on so invidious a thing: Therefore both in Confessions and Conferences they infused into the people a dislike of the King's Proceedings; which though for some time it did not break out into an open Rebellion, yet the humor still fermented, and people only waited for an opportunity: So that if the Emperor had not been otherwise distracted, he might have made War upon the King, with great advantages. For many of his discontented Subjects would have joyned with the Enemy. But the King did so dextrously manage his Leagues with the French King, and the Princes of the Empire, that the Emperor could never make any impressions on his Dominions.

Which provoked the King to great severities.

But those factious Spirits, seeing nothing was to be expected from any foreign Power, could not contain themselves, but broke out into open Rebellion. And this provoked the King to great severities: His Spirit was so fretted, by the tricks the Court of Rome had put on him, and by the Ingratitude and seditious practices of Reginald Pool; that he thereby lost much of his former temper and patience; and was too ready upon slight grounds, to bring his Subjects to the Bar. Where though the matter was always so ordered that according to Law they were indicted and judged; yet the severity of the Law bordering sometimes on rigor and cruelty, he came to be called a cruel Tyrant. Nor did his severity, lie only on one side: but being addicted to some Tenets of the Old Religion; and impatient of Contradiction; or perhaps blown up, either with the vanity of his new Title, of Head of the Church, or with the praises which Flatterers bestowed on him; he thought all persons were bound to regulate their Belief by his Dictates, which made him prosecute Protestants, as well as proceed against Papists. Yet it does not appear, that Cruelty was Natural to him. For in twenty five years Reign, none had suffered for any Crime against the State; but Pool Earl of Suffolk, and Stafford Duke of Buckingham. The former he prosecuted in Obedience to his Father's last Commands at his death. His severity to the other was imputed to the Cardinals Malice. The Proceedings were also legal. And the Duke of Buckingham, had by the knavery of a Priest, to whom he gave great credit, been made believe he had a Right to the Crown; and practises of that nature, touch Princes so nearly, that no wonder the Law was executed in such a case. This ſhows that the King was not very jealous, nor deſirous of the Blood of his Subjects. But though he always proceeded upon Law; yet in the laſt Ten Years of his Life, many inſtances of Severity occurred, for which he is rather to be pitied, than either imitated or ſharply cenſured. 1535.

The former Book was full of Intrigues and forreign Tranſactions; the greateſt part of it being an account of a tedious Negotiation, with the ſubtleſt and moſt refined Court in Chriſtendom, in all the Arts of humane Policy. But now my work is confined to this Nation; and except in ſhort touches by the way, I ſhall meddle no further with the Myſteries of State; but ſhall give as clear an account of thoſe things that relate to Religion and Reformation, as I could poſſibly recover. The Suppreſſion of Monaſteries, The advance and declenſion of Reformation, and the Proceedings againſt thoſe, who adhered to the Intereſt of the Court of Rome, muſt be the chief Subjects of this Book. The two former ſhall be opened, in the ſeries of time as they were tranſacted. But the laſt ſhall be left to the end of the Book, that it may be preſented in one full view.

The Biſhops ſwear the King's Supremacy.

After the Parliment had ended their Buſineſs, the Biſhops did all renew their Alliance to the King, and ſwore alſo to maintain his Supremacy in Eccleſiaſtical Matters; acknowledging that he was the Supreme Head of the Church of England, though there was yet no Law for the requiring of any ſuch Oath. The firſt act of the King's Supremacy was, his naming Cromwell Vicar-General, and Generall Viſitor of all the Monaſteries and other Priviledged Places. This is commonly confounded with his following Dignity of Lord Vice-Gerent in Eccleſiaſtical Matters; but they were two different Places, and held by different Commiſſions. By the one he had no Authority over the Biſhops, nor had he any Precedence; but the other, as it gave him the Precedence next the Royal Family, ſo it cloathed him with a compleat Delegation of the King's whole Power in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. For Two Years he was only Vicar-General; But the tenour of his Commiſſions, and the nature of the Power devolved on him by them, cannot be fully known: For neither the one, nor the other are in the Rolls, though there can be no doubt made, but Commiſſions of ſuch Importance were enrolled; therefore the loſs of them can only be charged on that ſearch and raſure of Records made by Bronner, upon the Commiſſion granted to him by Queen Mary, of which I have ſpoken in the Preface of this Work. In the Prerogative-Office there is a ſubaltern Commiſſion granted to Doctor (afterwards Secretary) Petre, on Jan. 13. in the Twenty Seventh Year of the King's Reign, by which it appears, that Cromwell's Commiſſion was at firſt conceived in very general words, for he is called the King's Vice-Gerent in Eccleſiaſtical cauſes, his Vicar-General, and Official-Principal. But becauſe he could not himſelf attend upon all theſe affairs, therefore Doctor Petre is deputed under him, for receiving the Probates of Wills: from thence likewiſe it appears, that all Wills, where the Eſtate was 200 lib. or above, were no more to be tryed or proved in the Biſhops Courts, but in the Vicar-Generals Court. Yet though he was called Vice-Gerent in that Commiſſion, he was ſpoken of, and writ to, by the name of Vicar-General; but 1535. after the second Commission, seen and mentioned by the Lord Herbert, in July 1536. he was always designed Lord Vice-Gerent.

The next thing that was every-where laboured with great industry, was, to engage all the rest of the Clergy, chiefly the Regulars, to own the Kings Supremacy; To which they generally submitted. In Oxford the Question being put, Whether the Pope had any other Jurisdiction in England than any other forreign Bishop? it was referred to Thirty Doctors and Batchelors, who were impowred to set the University-Seal to their Conclusion. They all agreed in the Negative, and the whole University being examined about it Man by Man, assented to their determination. All the difficulty that I find made, was at Richmond, by the Franciscan Friars, where the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield (Rowland Lee) and Thomas Bedyl, tendred some Conclusions to them, among which, this was one, That the Pope of Rome has no greater Jurisdiction in this Kingdom of England, by the Law of God, than any other Forreign Bishop. This they told them was already subscribed, by the two Arch-Bishops, the Bishops of London, Winchester, Duresm, Bath, and all the other Prelates, and Heads of Houses, and all the famous Clerks of the Realm. And therefore they desired that the Friars would refer the matter to the Four Seniours of the House, and acquiesce in what they should do. But the Friars said, it concerned their Consciences, and therefore they would not submit it to a small part of their House: they added, that they had sworn to follow the Rule of St. Francis, and in that they would live and die; and cited a Chapter of their Rule, "That their Order should have a Cardinal for their Protector, by whose direction "they might be governed in their obedience to the Holy See. But to this the Bishop answered, That St. Francis lived in Italy, when the Monks and other Regulars that had Exemptions, were subject to the Pope, as they were in England to the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury. And for the Chapter which they cited, it was showed them, that it was not written by St. Francis, but made since his time; and though it were truly a part of his Rule, it was told them that no particular Rule, ought to be preferred to the Laws of the Land, to which all Subjects were bound to give Obedience, and could not be excused from it, by any voluntary obligation under which they brought themselves. Yet all this could not prevail on them, but they said to the Bishop, they had professed St. Francis's Rule, and would still continue in the Observance of it.

The Franciscan Friars refuse it.

But though I do not find such resistance made elsewhere, yet it appears that some secret practices of many of those Orders against the State were discovered; therefore it was resolved, that some effectuall means must be taken for lessening their Credit and Authority with the People, and so a general Visitation of all Monasteries and other Religious Houses was resolved on. This was chiefly advised by Doctor Leighton, who had been in the Cardinals service with Cromwell, and was then taken notice of by him, as a dextrous and diligent Man, and therefore was now made use of on this Occasion. He by a Letter to Cromwell advertised him, that upon a long Conference with the Dean of the Arches, he found the Dean was of Opinion, that it was not fit to make any Visitation in the Kings name yet, for Two or Three

Three years, till his Supremacy were better received; and that he apprehended a ſevere Viſitation ſo early, would make the Clergy more averſe to the King's Power. But Leighton on the other hand, thought nothing would ſo much recommend the Supremacy, as to ſee ſuch good effects of it, as might follow upon a ſtrict and exact Viſitation. And the Abuſes of Religious Perſons were now ſo great and viſible, even to the Laity, that the Correcting and Reforming theſe, would be a very popular thing. He writ further, That there had been no Viſitation in the Northern parts, ſince the Cardinal ordered it: Therefore he adviſed one, and deſired to be employed in York-ſhire. And by another Letter, dated the 4th of June, he wrote to Cromwell, deſiring that Doctor Lee and he might be imployed in Viſiting all the Monaſteries, from the Dioceſs of Lincoln Northwards: which they could manage better than any body elſe, having great kindred, and a large acquaintance in thoſe parts: ſo that they would be able to diſcover all the diſorders or ſeditious practices in theſe Houſes. He complained that former Viſitations had been ſlight and inſignificant, and promiſed great faithfulneſs and diligence both from himſelf and Doctor Lee. 1535.

The Arch-Biſhop of Canturbury was now making his Metropolitical Viſitation, having obtained the King's Licence for it, which ſays, That he having deſired, that according to the Cuſtom, and the Prerogative of his Metropolitical See, he might make his Viſitation; The King granted him Licence to do it, and required all to aſſiſt and obey him; dated the 28th of April. Things were not yet ripe for doing great matters; ſo that which he now look'd to, was to ſee that all ſhould ſubmit to the King's Supremacy; and renounce any dependance on the Pope, whoſe name was to be ſtruck out of all the Publick Offices of the Church. This was begun in May 1535. Stokesley Biſhop of London, ſubmitted not to this Viſitation, till he had entered three Proteſtations, for keeping up of Privileges. Cranmer makes his Metropolitical Viſitation. Rot. Pat. Regn. 26. Part. 1. Regiſt. Stokſ. Fol. 44.

In October began the great Viſitation of Monaſteries, which was committed to ſeveral Commiſſioners. Leighton, Lee, and London, were moſt imployed. But many others were alſo empowered to viſit. For I find Letters from Robert Southwell, Ellice Price, John Ap-price, Richard Southwell, John Gage, Richard Bellaſis, Walter Hendle, and ſeveral others, to Cromwell, giving him an account of the Progreſs they made in their ſeveral Provinces. Their Commiſſions, if they were paſſed under the great Seal, and enrolled, have been taken out of the Rolls; for there are none of them to be found there. Yet I encline to think, they were not under the great Seal. For I have ſeen an Original Commiſſion for the Viſitation, that was next year, which was only under the King's Hand and Siguet. From which it may be inferred, that the Commiſſions this year, were of the ſame nature: yet whether ſuch Commiſſions could Authorize them to grant Diſpenſations, and diſcharge Men out of the Houſes they were in, I am not skill'd enough in Law to determine. And by their Letters to Cromwell, I find they did aſſume Authority for theſe things. So what their Power was, I am not able to diſcover. But beſides their Power and Commiſſions, they got Inſtructions to direct them in their Viſitations, and Injunctions to be left in every Houſe, of which, though I could The King's Viſitation begun. But if this Copy be compleat they were only to view their Writings and Papers, to ſee what could be gathered out of them, about the Reformation of Monaſtical Orders. And as they were to viſit according to theſe Inſtructions, ſo they were to give ſome Injunctions in the King's Name.

Injunctions for all Religious Houſes.

"That they ſhould endeavour, all that in them lay, that the Act of "the Kings Succeſſion ſhould be obſerved, (where it is ſaid, that they had under their Hands and Seals confirmed it. This ſhows, that all the Religious Houſes of England had acknowledged it:) and they ſhould teach "the people, that the King's Power was Supreme on Earth, under God, "and that the Biſhop of Rome's Power was Uſurped by Craft and Po-"licy, and by his ill Canons and Decretals, which had been long tole-"rated by the Prince, but was now juſtly taken away.

See Collect. Number 2.

"The Abbot and Brethren were declared to be abſolved from any Oath, "they had ſworn to the Pope, or to any Foreign Potentate; and the "Statutes of any Order, that did bind them to a Foreign Subjection, "were abrogated and ordered to be razed out of their Books.

"That no Monk ſhould go out of the precinct, nor any Woman enter "within it, without leave from the King or the Viſitor, and that there "ſhould be no entry to it, but one.

"Some Rules were given about their Meals, and a Chapter of the "Old or New Teſtament was ordered to be read at every one. Some other Rules follow about the diſtribution of their Alms, their "accommodation in Health and Sickneſs. One or two of every Houſe "was to be kept at the Univerſity; that when they were well Inſtru-"cted, they might come and teach others: And every day, there was "to be a Lecture of Divinity for a whole hour: The Brethren muſt "all be well employed.

"Other Rules are added about the Revenues of the House, and a- "gainst Wastes, and that none be entered into their House, nor admit- "ted under twenty four years of Age.

"Every Priest in the House was to say Mass daily; and in it, to pray "for the King and Queen.

An account of the Progress of the Monastical state in England.

But before I give an account of this Visitation, I presume it will not be ingrateful to the Reader to offer him some short view of the Rise and Progress of Monastick Orders in England, and of the state they were in at this time. What the Ancient British Monks were, or by what Rule they were governed; whether it was from the Eastern Churches, that this Constitution was brought into Britain, and was either suited to the Rule of St. Anthony, St. Pachom, or St. Basil; or whether they had it from France, where Sulpitius tells us, St. Martin set up Monasteries, must be left to conjecture. But from the little that remains of them, we find they were very numerous, and were obedient to the Bishop of Caerleon, as all the Monks of the Primitive times were to their Bishops, according to the Canons of the Council of Chalcedon.

But upon the confusions which the Gothick Wars brought into Italy, Benedict and others set up Religious Houses; and more artificial Rules and Methods were found out for their Government. Not long after that, Austin the Monk came into England; and having Baptized Ethelbert, he perswaded him to found a Monastery at Canterbury, which the King, by his Charter, exempted from the Jurisdiction of the Arch-Bishop and his Successors. This was not only done by Austins consent, but he by another Writing confirms this Foundation; and exempted both the Monastery and all the Churches belonging to it, from his, or his Successors Jurisdictions; and most earnestly conjures his Successors, never to give any trouble to the Monks, who were only to be subject to their own Abbot. And this was granted, that they might have no disturbance in the Service of God. But (whether this, with many other Ancient Foundations, were not latter Forgeries, which I vehemently suspect, I leave to Criticks to discuss) the next Exemption that I find, was granted in the year 680, to the Abby of Peterborough, by Pope Agatho, and was Signed by Theodore, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, called the Popes Legate (this I doubt was Forged afterwards.) In the year 725, King Ina's Charter to the Abbey of Glassenbury, relates to their Ancient Charters, and exempts them from the Bishops Jurisdiction. King Offa founded, and exempted the Monastery of St. Albans, in in the year 793, which Pope Honorius the 3*d*. Confirmed, Anno 1218, Kenulph King of Mercia founded and exempted Abington, in the year 821. Knut founded and exempted St. Edmundsbury in the year 1020. 1535.

About the end of the Eighth Century, the Danes began to make their descents into England and made every-where great depredations; and finding the Monks had possessed themselves, of the greatest part of the Riches of the Nation, they made their most frequent inroads upon these places where they knew the richest Spoil was to be found. And they did so wast and ruine these Houses, that they were generally abandon'd by the Monks, who as they loved the ease and wealth they had enjoyed formerly in their Houses, so had no mind to expose themselves to the persecutions of those heathenish Invaders. But when they had deserted their Seats, the Secular Clergy came and possessed them; so that in King Edgar's time, there was scarce a Monk in all England. He was a most dissolute and lewd Prince, but being persuaded by Dunstan and other Monks, that what he did towards the restoring of that decayed State, would be a matter of great Merit, became the great Promoter of the Monastical State in England; For he converted most of the Chapters into Monasteries; and by his Foundation of the Priory of Worcester, it appears, he had then founded no fewer than Forty seven, which he intended to encrease to Fifty, the number of Pardon. Yet in his Foundations, he only exempted the Monasteries, from all Actions or Dues, which the Bishops claim'd. There are exemptions of several rates and sizes: Some Houses were only Exempted from all Exactions; others from all Jurisdiction or Visitations; others had only an Exemption for their precinct; others for all the Churches that belonged to them. Edward the Confessor exempted many of these Houses, which Edgar had founded, as Ramsey, &c. He also founded and Exempted Coventry and Westminster, and the Exemption of the last, was likewise confirmed by Pope Nicolas, in a Bull to King Edward. William the Conqueror Founded and Exempted the Abbey of Battel from all Episcopal Jurisdiction.

Monasteries generally wasted and deserted;

Antiquit. Britan.

But are again set up by King Edgar.

But after that time I do not find, that our Kings exempted Abbeys from any thing, but Episcopal Exactions; for though formerly Kings had made Laws, and given Orders about Ecclesiastical matters, yet now the claim to an Immunity from the Civil Jurisdiction, and also the Papal Authority, were grown to that height, that Princes were to meddle no more with sacred things. And henceforth all Exemptions were granted by the Popes, who claimed a Jurisdiction over the whole Church; and assumed that Power to themselves with many other Usurpations.

All the Ancient Foundations were subscribed by the King, the Queen and Prince, with many Bishops and Abbots, and Dukes and Earls consenting. The Abbeys being Exempted from all Jurisdiction, both Civil and Spiritual, and from all Impositions; and having generally the Privilege of Sanctuary for all that fled to them, were at ease, and accountable to none, so they might do what they pleased. They found also means to enrich themselves, First by the belief of Purgatory. For they persuaded all People, that the Souls departed, Arts used by the Monks for enriching their Houses.

1535. went generally thither; few were so Holy, as to go straight to Heaven; and few so bad, as to be cast to Hell. Then People were made believe, that the saying of Masses for their Souls, gave them great relief in their Torments, and did at length deliver them out of them. This being generally received, it was thought by all a piece of Piety to their Parents, and of necessary care for themselves, and their Families, to give some part of their Estates towards the enriching of these Houses, for having a Mass said every day for the Souls of their Ancestors, and for their own, after their death. And this did so spread, that if some Laws had not restrained their profuseness, the greater part of all the Estates in England, had been given to those Houses. But the Statutes of Mortmain were not very effectual restraints; for what King soever had refused to grant a Mortmain, was sure to have an uneasie reign ever after.

Yet this did not satisfie the Monks, but they fell upon other contrivances, to get the best of all Mens Jewels, Plate and Furniture. For they perswaded them, that the protection and intercession of Saints were of mighty use to them; so that whatsoever respect they put on the Shrines and Images, but chiefly on the Relicks of Saints, they would find their account in it, and the Saints would take it kindly at their hands, and intercede the more earnestly for them. And People who saw Courtries much wrought on by presents, imagined the Saints were of the same temper; only with this difference, That Courtiers love to have Presents put in their own hands, but the Saints were satisfied, if they were given to others. And as in the Courts of Princes, the new Favourite commonly had greatest credit, so every new Saint was believed to have a greater force in his Addresses; and therefore every body was to run to their Shrines, and make great Presents to them. This being infused into the credulous Multitude, they brought the richest things they had, to the places where the bodies or Relicks of those Saints were laid. Some Images were also believed to have a peculiar Excellency in them; and Pilgrimages and Presents to these, were much magnified. But to quicken all this, the Monks found the means, either by dreams or visions, and strange Miraculous stories, to feed the devotion of the People. Relicks without number, where every where discovered; and most wonderful relations of the Martyrdom, and other Miracles of the Saints, were made and read in all Places to the People; and new Improvements were daily made in a Trade, that through the craft of the Monks, and the simplicity of the People, brought in great advantages. And though there was enough got to enrich them all, yet there was strange rivalling, not only among the several Orders, but the Houses of the same Order. The Monks, especially of Glassenbury, St. Albans, and St. Edmunds-bury, vied one with another, who could tell the most extravagant Stories for the honour of their House, and of the Relicks in it.

They became generally corrupted.

The Monks in these Houses abounding in wealth, and living at ease and in idleness, did so degenerate, that from the Twelfth Century downward, their reputation abated much; and the Privileges of Sanctuaries, were a general Grievance, and oft complained of in Parliaments: For they received all that fled to them, which put a great stop to Justice, and did encourage the most criminal offenders. They became became lewd and diſſolute, and ſo impudent in it, that ſome of their farms were let, for bringing in a yearly tribute to their Luſts: nor did they keep Hoſpitality and relieve the poor; but rather encouraged Vagabonds and Beggars, againſt whom Laws were made, both in Edward the 3d, King Henry the 7th, and this Kings Reign. 1535.

Upon which the Begging Friars grew much in credit.

But from the Twelfth Century, the orders of Begging Friars were ſet up, and they by the appearance of Severity and Mortification, gained great eſteem. At firſt they would have nothing, no real eſtates, but the ground on which their Houſe ſtood. But afterwards diſtinctions were found, for ſatisfying their Conſciences in larger Poſſeſſions. They were not ſo idle and lazy as the Monks, but went about and Preached, and heard Confeſſions, and carried about Indulgences, with many other pretty little things, Agnus Dei's, Roſaries, and Pelles, which they made the World believe, had great virtue in them. And they had the eſteem of the people, wholly engroſſed to themſelves. They were alſo more formidable to Princes, than the Monks, becauſe they were poorer, and by conſequence, more hardy and bold. There was alſo a firmer union of their whole Order, they having a General at Rome, and being divided into many Provinces, ſubject to their Provincials. They had likewiſe the School-Learning wholly in their hands, and were great Preachers, ſo that many things concurred, to raiſe their eſteem with the people very high, yet great Complaints lay againſt them, for they went more abroad than the Monks did, and were believed guilty of Corrupting Families. The Scandals that went on them, upon their relaxing the primitive ſtrictneſs of their Orders, were a little rectified by ſome Reformations of theſe Orders. But that laſted not long; for they became liable to much Cenſure, and many viſitations had been made, but to little purpoſe. This Concurring with their ſecret practices againſt the King, both in the matter of his Divorce and Supremacy, made him more willing to examine the truth of theſe reports; that if they were found guilty of ſuch ſcandals, they might loſe their credit with the people, and occaſions be miniſtred to the King, to juſtifie the Suppreſſion of them.

The Kings ſecret motives for diſſolving theſe Houſes.

There was alſo two other Motives, that enclined the King to this Councel. The one was, that he apprehended a War from the Emperor, who was then the only Prince in the World, that had any conſiderable force at Sea; having both great Fleets in the Indies, and being Prince of the Netherlands, where the greateſt trade of theſe parts was driven. Therefore the King judged it neceſſary to fortifie his Ports, and ſeeing the great advantages of Trade, which began then to riſe much, was reſolved to encourage it: For which end he intended to build many Havens and Harbors. This was a matter of great charge, and as his own Revenue could not defray it, ſo he had no mind to lay heavy Taxes on his Subjects, therefore the Suppreſſion of Monaſteries, was thought, the eaſieſt way of raiſing Money.

He alſo intended to erect many more Biſhopricks, to which Cranmer adviſed him much, that the vaſtneſs of ſome Dioceſſes, being reduced to a narrower compaſs, Biſhops might better diſcharge their duties, and overſee their Flocks, according to the Scriptures and the Primitive Rules.

1535. Cranmer's design in it.

But Cranmer did on another reason, press the Suppression of Monasteries. He found that their Foundations, and whole State, was inconsistent with a full and true Reformation. For among the things to be reform'd, were these Abuses, which were essential to their Constitution; (such as the Belief of Purgatory, of Redeeming Souls by Masses, the worship of Saints and Images, and Pilgrimages, and the like.) And therefore those Societies, whose interest it was to oppose the Reformation, were once to be suppressed: and then he hoped, upon new Endowments and Foundations, new Houses should have been erected at every Cathedral, to be Nurseries for that whole Diocess; which he thought would be more suitable to the primitive use of Monasteries, and more profitable to the Church. This was his Scheme, as will afterwards appear; which was in some measure effected, though not so fully as he projected, for Reasons to be told in their proper place.

First Monastery that was dissolved.

There had been a Bull sent from Rome, for dissolving some Monasteries, and Erecting Bishopricks out of them, as was related in the former Book, in the year 1532. And it seems it was upon that Authority, that in the year 1533. the Priory of Christ Church near Aldgate in London, was dissolved, and given to the Lord Chancellor Sr Thomas Audley; (not to make him speak shriller for his Master in the House of Commons, as Fuller mistakes it; for he had been Lord Chancellor a year before this was given him.) The Pope's Authority not being at that time put down, nor the King's Supremacy set up, I conjecture it was done, pursuant to the Bull for the Dissolution, and some Religious Houses; but I never saw the Dissolution, and so can only guess on what ground it was made. But in the Parliament held the former year, in which the King's grant of that House to the Lord Chancellor, was confirmed, it is said "in the Preamble, That the Prior and Convent, had resigned that House to the King the 24th of February 23d Regni, and had left their House; but no mention is made upon what Reason they did it.

Act. 10. Rot. Parl. Regn. 25.

The Proceedings of the Visitors.

But now I come to Consider, how the Visitors carried on their Visitations. Many severe things are said of their Proceedings, nor is it any wonder that men, who had traded so long in lies, as the Monks had done, should load those whom they esteemed the Instruments of their Ruin, with many Calumnies. By their Letters to Cromwell it appears, that in most Houses they found Monstrous Disorders. That many fell down on their knees, and prayed they might be discharged, since they had been forced to make Vows against their wills; with these the Visitors dispensed, and set them at liberty. They found great Factions in the Houses, and Barbarous Cruelties exercised by one Faction against another, as either of them prevailed. In many places, when they gave them the King's injunctions, many cryed out that the severity of them was intolerable, and they desired rather to be suppressed, than so reformed. They were all extremely addicted to Idolatry and Superstition. In some they found the instruments, and other tools for multiplying and coyning.

Cott. Lib. Cleop. E. 4.

But for the Lewdness of the Confessors of Nunneries, and the great Corruption of that State, whole Houses being found almost all with Child; for the dissoluteness of Abbots and the other Monks and Friars, ars, not only with Whores, but Married Women; and for their unnatural Lusts and other brutal practices; these are not fit to be spoken of, much less enlarged on, in a work of this Nature. The full report of this Visitation is lost, yet I have seen an Extract of a part of it, concerning 144 Houses, that contains Abominations in it, equal to any that were in Sodom. 1535. Ibid.

One passage that is more remarkable, I shall only set down; because upon it followed the first Resignation of any Religious House, that I could ever find. Doctor Leighton beset the Abbot of Langden's House, and broke open his door of a sudden, and found his Whore with him; and in the Abbot's Coffer, there was an habit for her, for she went for a young Brother. Whether the shame of this discovery, or any other consideration prevailed with him, I know not; but on the 13th of November, he and Ten Monks Signed a Resignation, which hath an odd kind of Preamble, to be found in the Collection. "It says, that the Revenue of the House, was so 'much endamaged, and engaged in so much debt, that they consi- 'dering this, and what remedies might be found for it, saw, that ex- 'cept the King, of whose Foundation the House was, did speedily 'relieve them, it must be very quickly ruined, both as to its Spiri- 'tual and Temporal concerns; therefore they surrender up their 'House to the King. They were of the Order of Premonstre, and their House was dedicated to the honour of the Blessed Virgin, and St. Thomas Becket. This precedent was followed by the like surrender, with the same Preamble, on the 15th of November, by the Prior of Folkeston a Benedictin, and on the 16th by the Prior of Dover, with Eight Monks. These were all of them in the County of Kent. But neither among the Original Surrenders, nor in the Clause Rolls, are there any other Deeds, in this year of our Lord, there are indeed in the same year of the King, (which runs till April 1536.) four other Surrenders with the same Preambles. Of Merton in York-shire, a Covent of Augustinians, Signed by the Prior and Five Monks, the 9th of February; of Bilsingtoun in Kent, Signed by the Prior and Two Monks, the 21st of February; of Tilty in Essex, a Covent of Cistercians, Signed by the Prior and Five Monks; and of Hornby in York-shire, a Covent of the Premonstre, Signed by the Prior and Two Monks the 23d of March. These were all the Surrenders that I can discover to have been made before the Act of Parliament for suppressing the lesser Monasteries, passed in the next Session that was assembled in February.

Some Houses resigned up to the King. Collect. Numb. 3. Sect. 1. The Original of these Resignations are in the Augmentation Office and enrolled. Rot. Claus. Part. 1st. Regn. 27.

But before that, the afflicted and unfortunate Queen Katharine died at Kimbolton; She had been much disquieted, because she would not lay down her Title of Queen. Many of her servants were put from her on that account; but she would accept of no Service, from any that did not use her as a Queen, and call her so. The King sent oft to her to perswade her to more Complyance. But she stood her ground, and said, since the Pope had judged her Marriage good, she would lose her life, before she did any thing in prejudice of it. She became more chearful, than she had wont to be; and the Countrey people came much to her whom she received, and used very Obligingly. The King had a mind she should go to Fotheringhay-Castle. 1536. The death of Queen Katharine. Originals. Otho. C. 10. Cott. Lib.

1535. ſtle. But when it was propoſed to her, ſhe plainly ſaid, ſhe would never go thither, unleſs ſhe were carried as a Priſoner, bound with Ropes. She deſired leave to come nearer London; but that was not granted. She had the jointure that was aſſigned her, as Princeſs Dowager; and was treated with the reſpect due to that Dignity, but all the Women about her, ſtill called her Queen. I do not find ſhe had any thoughts of going out of England; though her Life in it was but Melancholy. Yet her care to ſupport her Daughters Title, made her bear all the Diſgraces ſhe lay under. The Officious and practiſing Clergy, that were for the Court of Rome, look'd on her as the Head of their Party, and aſſerted her Intereſt much. Yet ſhe was ſo watched, that ſhe could not hold any great Correſpondence with them; though in the matter of the Maid of Kent, ſhe had ſome Medling.

When ſhe ſicken'd, ſhe made her Will; and appointed her Body to be buried, in a Convent of Obſervant Friars, (who had done and ſuffered moſt for her;) and Ordered Five Hundred Maſſes to be ſaid for her Soul; and that one ſhould go a Pilgrimage, to our Lady of Walſingham, and give Two Hundred Nobles by the way to the poor. Some other ſmall Legacies, ſhe left to her Servants. When the King heard ſhe was ſick, he ſent a kind Meſſage to her; and the Emperors Ambaſſador went to ſee her, and to chear her up, but when ſhe found her ſickneſs like to prove Mortal; ſhe made one about her, write a Letter in her name, to the King. In the Title ſhe call'd him, 'Her dear Lord, King and Husband. She adviſed him to look to the 'health of his Soul. She forgave him all the Troubles he had put 'her into. She recommended their Daughter Mary to him, and de- 'ſired he would be a Loving Father to her. She alſo deſired, that he 'would provide Matches for her Maids, who were but Three; and 'that he would give her Servants one years Wages, more than was 'due to them. And Concluded laſtly, I make this Vow, That mine eyes deſire you above all things. By another Letter, ſhe recommended her Daughter to the Emperors care. On the 8th of January ſhe dyed, in the Fiftieth year of her Age, Thirty Three years after ſhe came to England. She was a devout and pious Princeſs, and led a ſevere and mortified Life. In her Greatneſs, ſhe wrought much with her own hands, and kept her Women well employed about her; as appeared, when the Two Legates came once to ſpeak with her. She came out to them with a Skein of ſilk about her Neck, and told them ſhe had been within at work with her Women. She was moſt paſſionately devoted to the Intereſts of the Court of Rome, they being ſo interwoven with her own. And in a word, ſhe is repreſented to be a moſt wonderful good Woman. Only I find on many occaſions, that the King complained much of her uneaſineſs and peeviſhneſs. But whether the fault was in her humor, or in the provocations ſhe met with, the Reader may conjecture. The King received the news of her death, with ſome regret. But he would not give leave to bury her, as ſhe had ordered; but made her body be laid in the Abbey Church of Peterborough, which he afterwards Converted to an Epiſcopal Cathedral. But Queen Anne did not carry her death ſo decently; for ſhe expreſs'd too much joy at it, both in her Carriage and dreſs.

On

On the 4th of February the Parliament late upon a Prorogation of 14th Months, (for in the Record there is no mention of any intermedial Prorogation,) where a great many Laws relating to Civil concerns were passed. By the 15th Act, the Power that had been given by a former Act to the King, for naming thirty two Persons, to make a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws, was again confirmed; for nothing had been done upon the former Act. But there was no limitation of time in this Act, and so there was nothing done in pursuance of it. 1536. A new Session of Parliament.

The great business of this Session of Parliament, was the suppressing the lesser Monasteries. How this went thorough the two Houses, we cannot know from the Journals, for they are lost. But all the Historians of that time tell us, that the report which the Visitors made to the King was read in Parliament; which represented the manners of these Houses so odiously, that the Act was easily carried. The Preamble bears, "That small Religious Houses, under the number of "twelve persons, had been long and notoriously guilty of vicious and "abominable Living; and did much consume and waste their Churches "Lands, and other things belonging to them; and that for above two "hundred years, there had been many Visitations for reforming these "Abuses, but with no success; their vicious living encreasing daily: "So that except small Houses were dissolved, and the Religious put "into greater Monasteries, there could no Reformation be expected "in that matter. Whereupon the King having received a full infor- "mation of these Abuses, both by his Visitors and other credible "ways; and considering that there were divers great Monasteries, in "which Religion was well kept and observed, which had not the full "number in them, that they might and ought to receive, had made "a full Declaration of the Premisses in Parliament. Whereupon it was "Enacted, That all Houses which might spend yearly 200*l.* or with- "in it, should be suppressed, and their Revenues converted to better "uses, and they compelled to reform their Lives. The Lord Herbert thinks it strange, that the Statute in the printed Book, has no Preamble, but begins bluntly. Fuller tells us, that he wonders, that Lord did not see the Record; and he sets down the Preamble, and says, The next follow as in the printed Statute, Chap. 27th. by a mistake for the 28*th*. This shews, that neither the one nor the other, ever look'd on the Record. For there is a particular Statute of Dissolution, distinct from the 28*th* Chap. And the Preamble which Fuller sets down, belongs not to the 28*th* Chapter, as he says, but to the 28*th* Chapter, which was never printed: and the 28*th* relates in the Preamble, to that other Statute, which had given these Monasteries to the King. The lesser Monasteries are suppressed.

The reasons, that were pretended for dissolving these Houses, were: That whereas there was but a small number of Persons in them, they entred into Confederacies together, and their Poverty set them on, to use many ill arts to grow Rich. They were also much abroad, and kept no manner of Discipline in their Houses. But those Houses were generally much richer, than they seemed to be: For the Abbots raising great Fines out of them, held the Leases still low; and by that means they were not obliged to entertain a greater number in their House, and so enriched themselves and their Brethren by the Fines that were raised: For many Houses then rated at two hundred pounds, Reasons for doing it.

1536. were worth many thousands, as will appear to any that compares what they were then valued at, (which is Collected by Speed,) with what their Estates are truly worth. When this was passing in Parliament, Stokesley, Bishop of London, said, "These lesser Houses were as "Thorns soon pluck'd up, but the great Abbots were like putrefied old "Oaks; yet they must needs follow, and so would others do in Chri- "stendom, before many years were passed.

By another Act, all these Houses, their Churches, Lands, and all their Goods were given to the King, and his Heirs and Successors, together with all other Houses, which within a year before the making of the Act, had been dissolved or suppressed: And for the gathering the Revenues that belonged to them, a new Court was Erected, called the Court of the Augmentations of the King's Revenue; which was to consist of a Chancellor, a Treasurer, an Attorney and Sollicitor, and ten Auditors, seventeen Receivers, a Clerk, an Usher, and a Messenger. This Court was to bring in the Revenues of such Houses as were now dissolved, excepting only such as the King by his Letters Patents, continued in their former state, appointing a Seal for the Court, with full Power and Authority to dispose of these Lands for it might be most for the King's Service.

Thus fell the lesser Abbeys, to the number of 376, and soon after this Parliament, which had done the King such eminent Service, and had now sate six years, was dissolved, on the 14*th* of April.

The Translation of the Bible in English designed.

In the Convocation, a motion was made of great consequence; That there should be a Translation of the Bible in English, to be set up in all the Churches of England. The Clergy, when they procured Tindall's Translation to be condemned, and suppressed it, gave out that they intended to make a Translation into the Vulgar-Tongue: Yet it was afterwards, upon a long Consultation, Resolved, That it was free for the Church to give the Bible in a Vulgar-Tongue, or not, as they pleased; and that the King was not obliged to it, and that at that time it was not at all expedient to do it. Upon which, those that promoted the Reformation, made great complaints, and said, It was visible, the Clergy knew there was an opposition between the Scriptures and their Doctrine. That they had first condemned Wickliff's Translation, and then Tindall's; and though they ought to teach men the Word of God, yet they did all they could to suppress it.

The reasons for it.

In the times of the Old Testament, the Scriptures were writ in the Vulgar-Tongue, and all were charged to read and remember the Law. The Apostles wrote in Greek, which was then the most common Language in the World. Christ did also appeal to the Scriptures, and sent the People to them. And by what St. Paul says of Timothy, it appears, that children were then early trained up in that study. In the Primitive Church, as Nations were converted to the Faith, the Bible was Translated into their Tongue. The Latin Translation was very Ancient; the Bible was afterwards put into the Scythian, Dalmatian and Gothick Tongues. It continued thus for several Ages, till the state of Monkery rose; And then when they engrossed the riches, and the Popes assumed the Dominion of the World, it was not consistent with these Designs, nor with the Arts used to promote them, to let the Scriptures be much known: Therefore Legends and strange stories of Visions ons with other devices, were thought more proper for keeping up their Credit, and carrying on their Ends. 1536.

It was now generally desired, that if there were just exceptions against what Tindal had done, these might be amended in a New Translation. This was a plausible thing, and wrought much on all that heard it; who plainly concluded, that those who denyed the People the use of the Scriptures in their vulgar tongues, must needs know their own Doctrine and practices to be inconsistent with it. Upon these grounds Cranmer, who was projecting the most effectual means for promoting a Reformation of Doctrine, moved in Convocation, that they should Petition the King for leave to make a Translation of the Bible. But Gardiner and all his Party opposed it, both in Convocation, and in secret with the King. It was said, that all the Heresies and extravagant Opinions, which were then in Germany, and from thence coming over to England, sprang from the free use of the Scriptures. And whereas in May the last year, Nineteen Hollanders were accused of some Heretical Opinions; 'denying 'Christ to be both God and Man, or that he took Flesh and Blood 'of the Virgin Mary, or that the Sacraments had any effect on those that received them; in which opinions Fourteen of them remained Obstinate, and were burnt by pairs in several places; it was complained, that all those drew their Damnable errors from the indiscreet use of the Scriptures. And to offer the Bible in the English tongue to the whole Nation, during these distractions, would prove, as they pretended, the greatest Snare that could be. Therefore they proposed, that there should be a short exposition of the most useful and necessary Doctrines of the Christian Faith, given to the people in the English tongue, for the Instruction of the Nation, which would keep them in a certain Subjection to the King and the Church, in Matters of Faith. The opposition made to it.

The other Party, though they liked well the publishing such a Treatise in the vulgar tongue, yet by no means thought that sufficient; but said, the People must be allowed to search the Scripture, by which they might be convinced that such Treatises were according to it. These Arguments prevailed with the Two Houses of Convocation. So they petitioned the King, that he would give order to to some, to set about it. To this, great Opposition was made at Court. Some, on the one hand, told the King, that a diversity of opinions would arise out of it; and that he could no more Govern his Subjects if he gave way to that. But on the other hand, it was represented, that nothing would make his Supremacy so acceptable, to the Nation, and make the Pope more hateful, than to let them see, that whereas the Popes had Governed them by a blind obedience, and kept them in darkness, the King brought them into the light, and gave them the free use of the Word of God. And nothing would more effectually extirpate the Popes Authority, and discover the Impostures of the Monks, than the Bible in English; in which all People would clearly discern, there was no Foundation for those things. These Arguments, joyned with the Power that the Queen had in his affections, were so much considered by the King, that he gave order for setting about it immediately. To whom that work was commit-1536. ted, or how they proceeded in it, I know not. For the Account of these things has not been preserved, nor conveyed to us, with that care that the Importance of the thing required. Yet it appears that the work was carried on at a good rate; for three years after this, it was Printed at Paris; which shows they made all convenient haste, in a thing that required so much deliberation.

But this was the last publick good Act of this unfortunate Queen; who the nearer shew drew to her end, grew more full of good works. She had distributed, in the last Nine Months of her Life, between Fourteen and Fifteen Thousand Pounds to the Poor, and was designing great and publick good things. And by all appearance, if she had lived, the Money that was raised by the Suppression of Religious Houses, had been better imployed than it was. In January, she brought forth a dead Son. This was thought to have made ill Impressions on the King: and that, as he concluded from the death of his Sons by the former Queen, that the Marriage was displeasing to God; so he might upon this misfortune, begin to make the like judgment of this Marriage. Sure enough the Popish Party were earnestly set against the Queen, looking on her as a great supporter of Heresie. And at that time Fox then Bishop of Hereford was in Germany at Smalcald, treating a League with the Protestant Princes, who insisted much on the Ausburg Confession. There were many Conferences between Fox and Doctor Barnes, and some others, with the Lutheran Divines, for accommodating the differences between them, and the thing was in a good forwardness. All which was imputed to the Queen. Gardiner was then Ambassador in France, and wrote earnestly to the King, to dissuade him from entring into any Religious league with these Princes: for that would alienate all the World from him, and dispose his own Subjects to Rebel. The King thought the German-Princes and Divines should have submitted all things to his Judgment, and had such an Opinion of his own Learning, and was so puft up with the flattering praises that he daily heard, that he grew impatient of any opposition, and thought that his Dictates should pass for Oracles, And because the Germans would not receive them so, his mind was alienated from them.

The whole Popish Party drove it on.

But the Duke of Norfolk at Court, and Gardiner beyond Sea, thought there might easily be found a mean to accommodate the King, both with the Emperor and the Pope, if the Queen were once out of the way; for then he might freely Marry any one whom he pleased, and that Marriage with the Male Issue of it, could not be disputed: Whereas, as long as the Queen lived, her Marriage, as being judged Null from the beginning, could never be allowed by the Court of Rome, or any of that Party: with these Reasons of State, others of affection concurred. The Queen had been his Wife Three years; but at this time he entertained a secret Love for Jane Seimour, who had all the Charms both of Beauty and Youth in her person; and her humour was tempered, between the severe gravity of Queen Katharine, and the gay pleasantness of Queen Ann. The Queen perceiving this Alienation of the King's heart, used all possible Arts to recover that affection, of whose decay she was sadly sensible. But the Success was quite contrary to what she designed. For the King

King saw her no more with those eyes, which she had formerly captivated; but grew jealous, and ascribed these caresses to some other criminal affections, of which he began to suspect her. This being one of the most memorable passages of this Reign. I was at more than ordinary pains to learn all I could concerning it, and have not only seen a great many Letters that were writ, by those that were set about the Queen, and catcht every thing that fell from her, and sent it to Court, but have also seen an account of it, which the Learned Spelman, who was a Judge at that time, writ with his own hand in his Common-place Book, and another account of it writ by one Anthony Anthony a Surveyor of the Ordnance of the Tower. From all which I shall give a just and faithful relation of it, without concealing the least circumstance, that may either seem favourable or unfavourable to her. 1535.

The King's jealousie of her.

She was of a very cheerful temper, which was not always limited within the bounds of exact decency and discretion. She had rallied some of the King's Servants, more than became her. Her Brother, the Lord Rochford was her Friend as well as brother; but his spiteful Wife was jealous of him: and being a Woman of no sort of Vertue, (as will appear afterwards by her serving Queen Katharine Howard in her beastly Practices, for which she was attainted and executed,) she carried many Stories to the King, or some about him, to persuade, that there was a familiarity between the Queen and her Brother, beyond what so near a Relation could justifie. All that could be said for it, was only this; that he was once seen leaning upon her Bed, which bred great suspicion. Henry Norris, that was Groom of the Stole, Weston, and Bereton, that were of the King's Privy-Chamber, and one Mark Smeton, a Musician, were well observed to have much of her favour. And their zeal in serving her, was thought too warm and diligent to flow from a less active Principle than Love. Many Circumstances were brought to the King, which working upon his aversion to the Queen together with his affection to Mistress Seimour, made him conclude her guilty. Yet somewhat which himself observed, or fancied, at a Tilting at Greenwich, is believed to have given the Crisis to her Ruin. It is said, that he spied her let her Handkerchief fall to one of her Gallants to wipe his face, being hot after a Course. Whether she dropt it carelessly, or of design; or whether there be any truth in that story, the Letters concerning her fall, making no mention of it, I cannot determine; for Spelman makes no mention of it, and gives a very different account of the discovery in these words. As for the evidence of this matter, it was discovered by the Lady Wingfield who had been a Servant to the Queen, and becoming on a suddain infirm some time before her death, did swear this matter to one of her ..... and hereby unluckly the rest of the Page is torn off. By this it seems, there was no legal evidence against the Queen, and that it was but a Witness at second hand, who disposed what they heard the Lady Wingfield swear. Who this person was we know not, nor in what temper of mind the Lady Wingfield might be, when she swore it. The safest sort of forgery, to one whose Conscience can swallow it, is to lay a thing on a dead person's name, where there is no fear of discovery before the great day: and 1535. when it was understood that the Queen had lost the King's heart, many, either out of their zeal to Popery, or design to make their fortune, might be easily induced to carry a story of this Nature. And this it seems was that which was brought to the King at Greenwich, who did thereupon immediately return to Whitehall, it being the 1st of May. The Queen was immediately restrained to her Chamber, the other Five were also seized on: But none of them would confess any thing, but Mark Smeton, as to any actual thing, so Cromwel writ. Upon this they were carried to the Tower. The poor Queen was in a sad condition; she must not only fall under the King's displeasure, but be both defam'd and destroyed at once. At first she smiled and carried it cheerfully; and said, she believed the King did this only to prove her. But when she saw it was in earnest; she desired to have the Sacrament in her Closet, and expressed great devotion, and seemed to be prepared for death.

The Letters about this. Cott. Lib. Otho. C. 10.

The surprise and confusion she was in, raised fits of the Mother, which those about her did not seem to understand: But Three or Four Letters, which were writ concerning her to Court, say, That she was at some times very devout, and cried much; and of a sudden would burst out in Laughter, which are evident signs of Vapours. When she heard that those, who were accused with her, were sent to the Tower, she then concluded her self lost; and said, she should be sent thither next; and talked idlely, saying. "That if her Bishops "were about the King, they would all speak for her. She also said "That she would be a Saint in Heaven, for she had done many good "deeds; and that there should be no Rain, but heavy judgments on "the Land, for what they were now doing to her. Her Enemies had now gone too far, not to destroy her. Next day she was carried to the Tower, and some Lords, that met her on the River, declared to her what her Offences were. Upon which, she made deep Protestations of her Innocence, and begged leave to see the King; but that was not to be expected. When she was carried into the Tower, "She fell down on her knees, and prayed God to help her, as "she was not guilty of the thing for which she was accused. That same day the King wrote to Cranmer to come to Lambeth; but ordered him not to come into his presence. Which was procured by the Queens Enemies, who took care, that one who had such credit with the King, should not come at him, till they had fully persuaded him that she was guilty. Her Uncles Lady, the Lady Boleyn, was appointed to lie in the Chamber with her, which she took very ill; for, upon what reason I know not, she had been in very ill terms with her. She engaged her into much discourse, and studied to draw Confessions from her. Whatsoever she said, was presently sent to the Court. And a Woman full of Vapours, was like enough to tell every thing that was true, with a great deal more; for persons in that condition, not only have no command of themselves, but are apt to say any thing that comes in their fancy.

She is put in the Tower, and pleads her Innocency.

The Duke of Norfolk, and some of the Kings Council, were with her; but could draw nothing from her, though they made her believe, that Norris and Mark had accused her. But when they were gone, she fell down on her knees and wept, and prayed often, Jesus have Mercy on me; and then fell a-laughing: when that fit was over, ſhe deſired to have the Sacrament ſtill by her, that ſhe might try for Mercy. And ſhe ſaid to the Lieutenant of the Tower, ſhe was as clear of the Company of all men, as to ſin, as ſhe was clear from him; and that ſhe was the King's true wedded Wife. And ſhe cryed out, "O Norris, haſt thou accuſed me? Thou art in the Tower "with me, and thou and I ſhall dye together; and Mark, ſo ſhall "thou too. She apprehended they were to put her in a Dungeon; and ſadly bemoaned her own, and her Mothers miſery; and asked them, whether ſhe muſt dye without Juſtice. But they told her, the pooreſt Subjects had Juſtice, much more would ſhe have it. The ſame Letter ſays, that Norris had not accuſed her; and that he ſaid to her Almoner, that he could ſwear for her, ſhe was a good Woman. But ſhe being made believe that he had accuſed her, and not being then ſo free in her thoughts, as to conſider that ordinary Artifice for drawing out Confeſſions, told all ſhe knew, both of him and Mark. Which though it was not enough to deſtroy her, yet certainly wrought much on the jealous and alienated King. She told them, "that ſhe once asked Norris, why he did not go on with his "Marriage? who anſwered her, that he would yet tarry ſome time. "To which ſhe replyed, you look for dead mens ſhoes; for if ought "come to the King but good, you would look to have me. He an- "ſwered, if he had any ſuch thought, he would his head were cut "off. Upon which, ſhe ſaid, ſhe could undoe him if ſhe pleaſed, "and thereupon ſhe fell out with him. As for Mark who was then laid in Irons, ſhe ſaid he was never in her Chamber, but when the King was laſt at Wincheſter; and then he came in to play on the Virginals: ſhe ſaid, that "ſhe never ſpoke to him after that, but on Sa- "turday before May day, when ſhe ſaw him ſtanding in the Window, "and then ſhe asked him, why he was ſo ſad; he ſaid, it was no "matter: ſhe anſwered you may not look to have me ſpeak to you, "as if you were a Nobleman, ſince you are an Inferior perſon. No, "no, Madam, ſaid he, a look ſufficeth me. She ſeemed more ap- "prehenſive of Weſton, than of any body. For on Whitſun-Munday laſt he ſaid to her, "That Norris came more to her Chamber upon her "account, than for any body elſe that was there. She had obſerved, "that he loved a Kinſwoman of hers, and challenged him for it, and "for not loving his Wife. But he anſwered her, that there were Wo- "men in the Houſe whom he loved better than them both; ſhe ask- "ed who is that; your ſelf ſaid he; upon which, ſhe ſaid, ſhe de- fied him.

1535. But confeſſed ſome indiſcreet words.

This Misery of the Queens, drew after it the common effects that follow perſons under ſuch a diſgrace, for now all the Court was againſt her, and every one was courting the riſing Queen. But Cranmer had not learned theſe Arts, and had a better Soul in him, than to be capable of ſuch baſeneſs and ingratitude. He had been much obliged by her, and had conceived an high opinion of her, and ſo could not eaſily receive ill impreſſions of her; yet he knew the King's temper, and that a down-right Juſtification of her would provoke him: therefore he wrote the following Letter, on the 3d of May, with all the ſoftneſs that ſo tender a point required; in which he juſti-

Cranmer's Letter to the King, about her. Cott. Lib.

" Pleaseth it your most Noble Grace, to be advertised, that at your " Graces Commandment by Mr. Secretary his Letters, written in " your Graces name, I came to Lambeth yesterday, and do there re- " main to know your Graces further pleasure. And forsomuch as " without your Graces Commandment, I dare not, contrary to the " Contents of the said Letters, presume to come unto your Graces " Presence; nevertheless of my most bounden duty, I can do no less " than most humbly to desire your Grace, by your Great Wisdom, " and by the Assistance of God's help, somewhat to suppress the deep " sorrows of your Graces heart, and to take all Adversities of Gods " hands both patiently and thankfully. I cannot deny but your " Grace hath great causes many ways of lamentable heaviness: and " also that in the wrongful estimation of the World, your Graces " honour of every Part is so highly touched (whether the things that " commonly be spoken of, be true or not,) that I remember not that " ever Almighty God sent unto your Grace, any like occasion to try " your Graces constancy throughout, whether your Highness can be " content to take off God's hand, as well things displeasant, as plea- " sant. And if he find in your most Noble heart such an Obedi- " ence unto his Will, that your Grace, without murmuration and o- " vermuch heaviness, do accept all adversities, not less thanking him, " than when all things succeeded after your Graces Will and Pleasure, " nor less procuring his Glory and Honour; then I suppose your " Grace did never thing more acceptable unto him, since your first " Governance of this your Realm. And moreover, your Grace shall " give unto him occasion to multiply and increase his Graces and " benefits unto your Highness, as he did unto his most faithful Ser- " vant Job; unto whom, after his great Calamities and heaviness " for his obedient heart, and willing acceptation of Gods scourge and " rodd, Addidit ei Dominus cuncta duplicia. And if it be true, that is " openly reported of the Queens Grace, if men had a right estimati- " on of things, they should not esteem any part of your Graces Ho- " nour to be touched thereby, but her Honour only to be clearly " disparaged. And I am in such a perplexity, that my mind is clean " amazed. For I never had better opinion in Woman, than I had " in her; which maketh me to think, that she should not be culpa- " ble. And again, I think your Highness would not have gon so far, " except she had surely been culpable. Now I think that your Grace " best knoweth, that next unto your Grace, I was most bound unto " her of all creatures living. Wherefore I most humbly beseech " your Grace to suffer me in that, which both Gods Law, Nature, " and also her kindness bindeth me unto; that is, that I may with " your Graces favour wish and pray for her, that she may declare " her self inculpable and innocent. And if she be found culpable, " considering your Graces Goodness towards her, and from what con- " dition your Grace of your only meer goodness took her, and so the

"ful Servant and Subject, nor true unto the Realm, that would not "desire the offence without mercy to be punished, to the example "of all other. And as I loved her not a little, for the Love which "I judged her to bear towards God and his Gospel; so if she be prov"ed culpable, there is not one that loveth God and his Gospel,
"that ever will favour her, but must hate her above all other; and
"the more they favour the Gospel, the more they will hate her:
"For then there was never creature in our time that so much slan"dered the Gospel. And God hath sent her this punishment, for "that she feignedly hath professed his Gospel in her mouth, and "not in heart and deed. And though she have offended so, that "she hath deserved never to be reconciled unto your Graces favour;
"yet almighty God hath manifoldly declared his goodness towards "your Grace, and never offended you. But your Grace, I am sure,
"knowledgeth that you have offended him. Wherefore I trust that "your Grace will bear no less entire favour unto the truth of the "Gospel, than you did before: Forsomuch as your Graces favour to "the Gospel, was not led by affection unto her, but by zeal unto the "truth. And thus I beseech Almighty God, whose Gospel he hath "ordained your Grace to be Defender of, ever to preserve your Grace
"from all evil, and give you at the end, the promise of his Gospel.

"After I had written this Letter unto your Grace, my Lord Chan- "cellor, my Lord of Oxford, my Lord of Sussex, and my Lord Cham- "berlain of your Graces House, sent for me to come unto the Star-
"Chamber; and there declared unto me such things as your Graces "pleasure was they should make me privy unto. For the which I "am most bounden unto your Grace. And what Communication
"we had together, I doubt not but they will make the true report
"thereof unto your Grace. I am exceedingly sorry, that such faults "can be proved by the Queen, as I heard of their relation. But I

But Jealousie, and the King's new affection, had quite defaced all the remainders of esteem for his late beloved Queen. Yet the Ministers continued practising, to get further evidence for the Tryal; which was not brought on, till the 12th of May; and then Norris, Weston, Brereton and Smeton, were tryed by a Commission of Oyer and Terminer in Westminster-Hall. They were twice indicted, and the Indictments were found by two Grand Juries, in the Counties of Kent and Middlesex: The Crimes with which they were charged, being said

1536. said to be done in both these Counties. Mark Smeton confessed he had known the Queen Carnally Three times: The other Three pleaded not Guilty, but the jury upon the evidence formerly mentioned found them all Guilty; and Judgment was given, that they should be drawn to the place of Execution, and some of them to be hanged, others to be beheaded, and all to be quartered, as Guilty of high Treason. On the 15th of May, the Queen and her Brother the Lord Rochford (who was a Peer, having been made a Viscount when his Father was Created Earl of Wiltshire) were brought to be Tryed by their Peers: The Duke of Norfolk being Lord high Steward for that occasion. With him sate the Duke of Suffolk, the Marquess of Exeter, the Earl of Arundel, and Twenty Five more Peers, of whom their Father the Earl of Wiltshire was one, Whether this unnatural complyance was imposed on him by the Imperious King, or officiously submitted to by himself, that he might thereby be preserved from the Ruin that fell on his family, is not known. Here the Queen of England by an unheard-of precedent was brought to the Bar, and Indicted of high Treason. The Crimes charged on her were, That she had procured her Brother and the other four to lie with her, which they had done often; that she had said to them, that the King never had her heart, and had said to every one of them by themselves, that she loved them better than any person whatsoever. Which was to the slander of the Issue that was begotten between the King and her. And this was Treason, according to the Statute made in the 26th year of this Reign (so that the Law that was made for her and the Issue of her Marriage, is now made use of to destroy her.) It was also added in the Indictment, that she, and her complices, had conspired the King's death; but this it seems was only put in to swell the Charge, for if there had been any evidence for it, there was no need of stretching the other Statute, or if they could have proved the violating of the Queen, the known Statute of the Twenty Fifth year of the Reign of Edward the Third had been sufficient. When the Indictment was read she held up her hand, and Pleaded not Guilty, and so did her Brother, and did answer the evidence was brought against her discreetly. One thing is remarkable that Mark Smeton, who was the only person who confessed any thing, was never confronted with the Queen, nor was kept to be an evidence against her, for he had received his Sentence three days before, and so could be no Witness in Law: but perhaps, though he was wrought on to confess, yet they did not think he had confidence enough to averr it to the Queen's face: therefore the evidence they brought, as Spelman says, was the Out of a Woman that was dead, yet this, or rather the Terror of offending the King, so wrought on the Lords, that they found her and her Brother Guilty: and Judgment was given, that she should be Burnt or Beheaded at the King's pleasure. Upon which Spelman observes, that whereas Burning is the death which the Law appoints for a Woman that is attainted of Treason, yet since she had been Queen of England, they left it to the King to determine, whether she should dye so infamous a death, or be Beheaded; but the Judges complained of this way of proceeding, and said, such a disjunctive in a Judgment of Treason, had never been seen. The Lord Rochford was also Condemned ed to be Beheaded and Quartered. Yet all this did not satisfie the enraged King, but the Marriage between him and her must be annulled, and the Issue illegitimated. The King remembred an Intrigue that had been between her and the Earl of Northumberland, which was mentioned in the former Book; and that he then Lord Piercy had said to the Cardinal, 'That he had gone so far before Witnesses, 'that it lay upon his Conscience, so that he could not go back: this it's like might be some promise he made to Marry her, per verba de futuro, which though it was no precontract in its self, yet it seems the poor Queen was either so ignorant or so ill-advised, as to be perswaded afterwards it was one, though it's certain that nothing, but a Contract per verba de præsenti, could be of any force to annul the subsubsequent Marriage. The King and his Council, reflecting upon what it seems the Cardinal had told him, resolved to try what could be made of it, and pressed the Earl of Northumberland to confess a Contract between him and her. But he took his Oath before the Two Arch-Bishops, That there was no Contract, nor promise of Marriage ever between them, and received the Sacrament upon it, before the Duke of Norfolk, and others of the King's Privy Council; wishing it might be to his Damnation, if there were any such thing, (concerning which I have seen the Original Declaration under his own hand.) Nor could they draw any Confession from the Queen, before the Sentence, for certainly if they could have done that, the Divorce had gone before the Tryal; and then she must have been tryed only, as Marchioness of Pembroke. But now she lying under so terrible a Sentence, it is most probable, that either some hopes of Life were given her; or at least, she was wrought on by the Assurances of mitigating that cruel part of her judgment, of Being Burnt, into the milder part of the Sentence, of Having her Head cut off; so that she confessed a Pre-contract, and on the 17th of May was brought to Lambeth; and in Court, the afflicted Arch-Bishop sitting Judge, some Persons of Quality being present, she confessed some just and lawful impediments; by which it was evident, that her Marriage with the King was not valid. Upon which Confession, her Marriage between the King and her was judged to have been Null and Void. The Record of the Sentence is burnt; but these particulars are repeated in the Act that passed in the next Parliament, touching the Succession to the Crown. It seems this was secretly done, for Spelman writes of it thus; It was said, there was a Divorce made between the King and her, upon her confessing a Precontract with another before her Marriage with the King: so that it was then only talkt of, but not generally known. 1536.

Upon an extorted Confession is divorced.

The two Sentences that were past upon the Queen; the one of Attainder for Adultery, the other of Divorce, because of a Pre-contract, did so contradict one another, that it was apparent, one, if not both of them must be unjust; for if the Marriage between the King and her was null from the beginning, then since she was the King's wedded Wife, there could be no Adultery: and her Marriage to the King was either a true Marriage, or not; if it was true, then the annulling of it was unjust, and if it was no true Marriage, then the Attainder was unjust; for there could be no breach of that Faith which was ne-1536. ver given: So that it is plain, the King was resolved to be rid of her, and to Illegitimate her Daughter, and in that transport of his fury, did not consider that the very method he took, discovered the injustice of his proceedings against her. Two days after this, she was ordered to be Executed in the Green on Tower-Hill. How she received these tidings, and how stedfast she continued in the protestations of her Innocence, will best appear by the following circumstances. The day before she suffered, upon a strict search of her past Life, she called to mind, that she had played the Step-Mother too severely to Lady Mary, and had done her many injuries. Upon which, she made the Lieutenant of the Tower's Lady sit down in the Chair of State; which the other, after some Ceremony, doing, she fell down on her knees, and with many tears charged the Lady, as she would answer it to God, to go in her name, and do, as she had done, to the Lady Mary, and ask her forgiveness for the wrongs she had done her. And she said, she had not quiet in her Conscience, till she had done that. But thought she did in this what became a Christian: The Lady Mary could not so easily pardon these injuries; but retained the resentments of them her whole life.

Her Preparation for Death.

This ingenuity and tenderness of Conscience about lesser matters, is a great presumption, That if she had been guilty of more eminent faults, she had not continued to the last denying them, and making protestations of her Innocency. For that same Night she sent her last message to the King, and acknowledged her self much obliged to him, that had continued still to advance her. She said, he had, from a private Gentlewoman, first made her a Marchioness, and then a Queen, and now, since he could raise her no higher, was sending her to be a Saint in Heaven: She protested her Innocence, and recommended her Daughter to his care. And her carriage that day she died, will appear from the following Letter writ by the Lieutenant of the Tower, copied from the Original, which I insert, because the Copier imployed by the Lord Herbert has not writ it out faithfully; for I cannot think that any part of it was left out on design.

The Lieutenant of the Tower's Letter.

'Sir, These should be to advertise you, I have received your Letter, wherein you would have strangers conveyed out of the Tower, and so they be by the means of Richard Gressum, and William Cooke, and Wyt spoll. But the number of strangers past not thirty, and not many of those Armed; and the Ambassador of the Emperor had a Servant there, and honestly put out: Sir, If we have not an hour certain, as it may be known in London, I think here will be but few, and I think a reasonable number were best, , for I suppose she will declare her self to be a good woman, for all men but for the King, at the hour of her death. For this morning she sent for me, that I might be with her at such time as she received the Good Lord, to the intent I should hear her speak as touching her Innocency alway to be clear. And in the writing of this,, she sent for me, and at my coming she said: Mr. Kingston I hear say I shall not die aforenoon, and I am very sorry therefore, for I thought to be dead by this time, and past my pain. I told her, it should be no pain, it was so sottle. And then she said, I heard say the Executioner was very good, and I have a little Neck,

and

'men, and also women, Executed; and that they have been in great
'sorrow, and to my knowledge this Lady has much joy and pleasure 'in death. Sir, her Almoner is continually with her, and had been 'since two a Clock after midnight. This is the effect of any thing 'that is here at this time, and thus fare you well.

Yours

William Kingston.

A little before Noon, being the 19th of May, she was brought to the Scaffold, where she made a short Speech to a great company that came to look on the last Scene of this fatal Tragedy: The chief of whom, were the Dukes of Suffolk and Richmond, the Lord Chancellor, and Secretary Cromwell, with the Lord Mayor, the Sheriffs and Aldermen of London. 'She said, She was come to die, as she was Judg'ed by the Law; she would accuse none, nor say any thing of the 'ground upon which she was judged. She prayed heartily for the 'King; and called him a most merciful and gentle Prince, and that 'he had been always to her, a good, gentle, Soveraign Lord: and if 'any would meddle with her cause, she required them to judge the 'best. And so she took her leave of them, and of the World; and 'heartily desired they would pray for her. After she had been some time in her devotions, her last words being, To Christ I commend my Soul; her Head was cut off by the Hangman of Calais, who was brought over as more expert at Beheading than any in England: her Eyes and Lips were observed to move after her Head was cut off, as Spelman writes; but her Body was thrown into a common Chest of Elm-tree that was made to put Arrows in, and was buried in the Chappel within the Tower before twelve a Clock. Her Execution.

Her Brother with the other four did also suffer; none of them were Quartered, but they were all Beheaded, except Smaton, who was Hanged. It was generally said, that he was corrupted into that Confession, and had his Life promised him; but it was not fit to let him live to tell Tales. Norris had been much in the King's favour, and an offer was made him of his Life, if he would confess his guilt, and accuse the Queen. But he generously rejected that un-handsom proposition, and said, 'That in his Conscience he thought her Innocent 'of these things laid to her charge; but whether she was or not, he 'would not accuse her of any thing, and he would die a thousand 'times, rather than ruin an Innocent Person.

These proceedings occasioned as great variety of Censures, as there were diversity of Interests. The Popish Party said, the justice of God was visible, that she, who had supplanted Queen Katherine, met with the like, and harder measure, by the same means. Some took notice of her saint justifying her self on the Scaffold, as if her Conscience had then prevailed so far, that she could no longer deny a thing, for which she was so soon to answer at another Tribunal. But others thought her care of her Daughter made her speak so tenderly; for The several Censures that were then passed on those proceedings.

1536. she had observed, that Queen Katherine's obstinacy had drawn the King's indignation on her Daughter; and therefore that she alone might bear her misfortunes, and derive no share of them on her Daughter, she spake in a stile, that could give the King no just offence: And as she said enough to justifie her self, so she said as much for the King's honour, as could be expected. Yet in a Letter that she wrote to the King from the Tower, (which will be found in the Collection,) she pleaded her Innocence, in a strain of so much Wit, and moving passionate Eloquence, as perhaps can scarce be parallel'd: certainly her spirits were much exalted when she wrote it, for it is a pitch above her ordinary stile. Yet the Copy I take it from, lying among Cromwell's other Papers, makes me believe it was truly written by her.

Collect. Numb. 4th.

Her carriage seemed too free, and all People thought that some freedoms and levities in her had encouraged those unfortunate Persons to speak such bold things to her, since few attempt upon the Chastity, or make declarations of Love, to persons of so exalted a quality, except they see some invitations, at least, in their carriage. Others thought that a free and jovial temper might, with great Innocence, though with no discretion, lead one to all those things that were proved against her; and therefore they concluded her chast, though indiscreet. Others blamed the King, and taxed his cruelty in proceeding so severely against a person whose Chastity he had reason to be assured of, since she had resisted his addresses near five years, till he Legitimated them by Marriage. But others accused him. It is certain her carriage had given just cause of some jealousie, and that being the rage of a man, it was no wonder if a King of his temper, conceiving it against one whom he had so signally obliged, was transported into unjustifiable excesses.

Others condemned Cranmer, as a man that obsequiously followed all the King's appetites; and that he had now divorced the King a second time, which shewed that his Conscience was governed by the King's pleasure as his supreme Law. But what he did was unavoidable. For whatever motives drew from her the Confession of that Precontract, he was obliged to give Sentence upon it: and that which she confessed, being such as made her incapable to contract Marriage with the King, he could not decline the giving of Sentence upon so formal a Confession. Some loaded all that favoured the Reformation: And said, It now appeared what a Woman, their great Patroness, and Supporter had been. But to those it was answered, That her faults, if true, being secret, could cast no reflection on those, who being ignorant of them, made use of her Protection. And the Church of Rome thought not their Cause suffered, by the enraged cruelty and Ambition, of the cursed Irene, who had convened the second Council of Nice, and set up the Worship of Images again in the East; whom the Popes continued to court and magnifie, after her barbarous murder of her Son, with other acts of unsatiated spite and ambition. Therefore they had no reason to think the worse of persons for claiming the Protection of a Queen, whose faults (if she was at all criminal,) were unknown to them when they made use of her.

Some have since that time concluded it a great evidence of her Guilt, that during her Daughters long and glorious Reign, there was no full nor compleat vindication of her published. For the Writers of that that time thought it enough to ſpeak honourably of her; and in general, to call her Innocent. But none of them ever attempted a clear diſcuſſion of the particulars laid to her charge. This had been much to her Daughters honour, and therefore ſince it was not done, others concluded it could not be done; and that their knowledge of her guilt reſtrained their Pens. But others do not at all allow of that Inference, and think rather, that it was the great Wiſdom of that time not to ſuffer ſuch things to be called in queſtion; ſince no wiſe Government will admit of a Debate about the clearneſs of the Princes Title. For the very attempting to prove it weakens it more, than any of the proofs that are brought can confirm it; therefore it was prudently done of that Queen and her great Miniſters, never to ſuffer any Vindication or Apology to be written. Some indiſcretions could not be denied, and theſe would all have been catched hold of, and improved by the buſie Emiſſaries of Rome and Spain. 1536.

But nothing did more evidently diſcover the ſecret cauſe of this Queens ruin, than the King's Marrying Jane Seimour, the day after her Execution. She of all King Henry's Wives, gained moſt on his eſteem and affection: But ſhe was happy in one thing, that ſhe did not out-live his love; otherwiſe ſhe might have fallen as ſignally as her Predeceſſor had done. Upon this turn of Affairs a great change of Counſels followed.

There was nothing now that kept the Emperor and the King at a diſtance, but the Illegitimation of the Lady Mary, and if that Matter had been adjuſted, the King was in no more hazard of trouble from him: Therefore it was propoſed, that ſhe might be again reſtored to the King's favour. She found this was the beſt opportunity ſhe could ever look for, and therefore laid hold on it, and wrote an humble ſubmiſſion to the King, and deſired again to be admitted to his preſence. But her ſubmiſſions had ſome reſerves in them, therefore ſhe was preſſed to be more expreſs in her acknowledgments. At this ſhe ſtuck long, and had almoſt embroyled her ſelf again with her Father. She freely offered to ſubmit to the Laws of the Land about the Succeſſion, and confeſſed the fault of her former Obſtinacy. But the King would have her acknowledge, that his Marriage to her Mother was inceſtuous and unlawful; and to renounce the Pope's Authority, and to accept him, as Supream Head of the Church of England. Theſe things were of hard digeſtion with her, and ſhe could not eaſily ſwallow them; ſo ſhe wrote to Cromwell, to befriend her at the King's hands. Upon which many Letter's paſſed between them. He wrote to her, that it was impoſſible to recover her Fathers favour, without a full and clear ſubmiſſion in all points. So in the end ſhe yielded, and ſent the following Paper, all written with her own hand, which is ſet down, as it was Copied from the Original yet extant.

Her ſubmiſſion under her own hand: Cott. Lib. Otho. C. 10.

'The Confeſſion of me the Lady Mary made upon certain points 'and Articles under written; in the which, as I do now plainly, 'and with all mine heart confeſs and declare mine inward Sentence, 'Belief, and Judgment, with a due conformity of Obedience to the 'Laws of the Realm; ſo minding for ever to perſiſt and continue in 'this

'this determination, without change, alteration, or variance, I do 'most humbly beseech the King's Highness, my Father, whom I have 'obstinately and inobediently offended in the denial of the same here- 'tofore, to forgive mine offences therein, and to take me to his most 'gracious Mercy.

'First, I confess and knowledge the King's Majesty, to be my So- 'veraign Lord and King in the Imperial Crown of this Realm of 'England; and do submit my self to his Highness, and to all and 'singular Laws and Statutes of this Realm, as becometh a true and 'faithful Subject to do; which I shall also obey, keep, observe, ad- 'vance, and maintain, according to my bounden duty, with all the 'power, force, and qualities, that God hath endued me with, during 'my Life.

'Item, I do recognize, accept, take, repute, and knowledge, the 'King's Highness to be Supream Head in Earth, under Christ, of the Church 'of England; and do utterly refuse the Bishop of Rome's pretended 'Authority, Power, and Jurisdiction, within this Realm heretofore 'usurped, according to the Laws and Statutes made in that behalf, 'and of all the King's true Subjects humbly received, admitted, obey- 'ed, kept and observed; and also do utterly renounce and forsake 'all manner of Remedy, Interest and advantage, which I may by any 'means claim by the Bishop of Rome's Laws, Process, Jurisdiction, 'or Sentence, at this present time, or in any wise hereafter, by a- 'ny manner of title, colour, mean, or case, that is, shall, or can be 'devised for that purpose.

Mary.

'Item, I do freely, frankly, and for the Discharge of my duty to- 'wards God, the King's Highness, and his Laws, without other re- 'spect, recognize and knowledge, That the Marriage heretofore had 'between his Majesty, and my Mother, the late Princess Dowager, 'was by God's Law, and Man's Law, incestuous and unlawful.

Mary.

She is restored to his favour.

Upon this she was again received into favour. One circumstance I shall add, that shows the frugality of that time. In the Establishment that was made for her Family, there was only 40 l. a quarter assigned for her privy Purse. I have seen a Letter of hers to Cromwell, at the Christmass-quarter, desiring him to let the King know, that she must be at some Extraordinary expence that season, that so he might encrease her allowance, since the 40 l. would not defray the Charge of that quarter.

The Lady Elizabeth well used by the King and Queen.

For the Lady Elizabeth, though the King divested her of the Title of Princess of Wales, yet he continued still to breed her up in the Court, with all the care and tenderness of a Father. And the new Queen, what from the ſweetneſs of her diſpoſition, and what out of compliance with the King, who loved her much, was as kind to her, as if ſhe had been her Mother. Of which I ſhall add one pretty evidence, though the childiſhneſs of it may be thought below the Gravity of a Hiſtory: yet by it the Reader will ſee, both the kindneſs that the King and Queen had for her, and that they allowed her to ſubſcribe, Daughter. There are two Original Letters of hers yet remaining, writ to the Queen when ſhe was with Child of King Edward; the one in Italian, the other in Engliſh; both writ in a fair hand, the ſame that ſhe wrote all the reſt of her life. But the conceits in that writ in Engliſh, are ſo pretty, that it will not be unacceptable to the Reader, to ſee this firſt bloſſom of ſo great a Princeſs, when ſhe was not full Four years of Age; She being Born in September 1533. and this writ in July 1537. 1536.

Her Letter to the Queen when not Four years of Age.

'Although your Highneſs Letters be moſt joyful to me in abſence, 'yet conſidering what pain it is to you to write, your Grace being 'ſo great with Child, and ſo ſickly, your Commendation were e- 'nough in my Lord's Letter. I much rejoyce at your health, with 'the well liking of the Countrey; with my humble thanks that your 'Grace wiſhed me with you till I were weary of that Countrey. 'Your Highneſs were like to be combered, if I ſhould not depart till 'I were weary being with you: although it were in the worſt ſoil 'in the World, your preſence would make it pleaſant. I cannot re- 'prove my Lord for not doing your Commendations in his Let- 'ter, for he did it; and although he had not, yet I will not complain 'on him, for that he ſhall be diligent to give me knowledge from time 'to time, how his buſie child doth; and if I were at his birth, no doubt 'I would ſee him beaten, for the trouble he has put you to. Mr. Denny, 'and my Lady, with humble thanks prayeth moſt entirely for your 'Grace, prayeth the Almighty God to ſend you a moſt lucky deliverance. 'And my Miſtreſs wiſheth no leſs, giving your Highneſs moſt humble 'thanks for her commendations. Writ with very little leiſure, this laſt day of July.

Your Humble Daughter,

Elizabeth.

A new Parliament called.

But to proceed to more ſerious matters. A Parliament was Summoned to meet the 8th of June. If full Forty days be neceſſary for a Summons, then the Writs muſt have been iſſued forth the day before the late Queens diſgrace; ſo that it was deſigned before the Juſts at Greenwich, and did not flow from any thing that then appeared. When the Parliament met, the Lord Chancellor Audley, in his ſpeech, told them, That when the former Parliament was diſ- 'ſolved, the King had no thoughts of Summoning a new one ſo 'ſoon. But for two reaſons, he had now called them. The one 'was, That he finding himſelf ſubject to ſo many infirmities, and 'conſidering that he was Mortal, (a rare thought in a Prince) he deſired

Journal Procerum.

1536. 'desired to settle an apparent Heir to the Crown, in case he should die 'without Children lawfully begotten. The other was, to repeal 'an Act of the former Parliament, concerning the Succession of the 'Crown, to the issue of the King by Queen Ann Boleyn. He desired 'them to reflect on the great troubles and vexation the King was 'involved in, by his first unlawful Marriage, and the dangers he was 'in by his second; which might well have frighted any body from a 'third Marriage. But Ann, and her Conspirators, being put to death 'as they well deserved, the King at the humble request of the Nobili- 'ty, and not out of any Carnal Concupiscence, was pleased to Marry 'again a Queen, by whom there were very probable hopes of having 'Children: Therefore he recommended to them, to provide an heir 'to the Crown by the King's direction, who, if the King dyed with- 'out Children lawfully begotten, might Rule over them. He desired 'they would pray God earnestly, that he would grant the King Issue of 'his own body; and return thanks to Almighty God that preserved 'such a King to them out of so many eminent dangers, who imployed 'all his care and endeavours, that he might keep his whole people in 'quiet, peace, and perfect charity, and leave them so to those that should 'succeed him.

The Act of Succession.

But though this was the chief cause of calling the Parliament, it seems the Ministers met with great difficulties, and therefore spent much time in preparing mens minds. For the Bill about the Succession to the Crown, was not brought into the House of Lords before the 30th day of June, that the Lord Chancellor offered it to the House. It went through both Houses without any oppositon. It contained first, 'A repeal of the former Act of Succession, and a Confirmation 'of the two Sentences of Divorce, the Issue of both the King's for- 'mer Marriages being declared illegitimate, and for ever excluded 'from claiming the Inheritance of the Crown, as the King's Lawful 'heirs by lineal descent. The Attainder of Queen Ann and her Com- 'plices is confirmed. Queen Ann is said, to have been inflamed with 'pride and Carnal desires of her body; and, having confederated 'her self with her complices, to have committed divers Treasons 'to the danger of the King's Royal Person; (with other aggrava- 'ting words,) for which she had justly suffered Death, and is now 'attainted by Act of Parliament. And all things that had been said 'or done against her or her Daughter, being contrary to an Act of 'Parliament then in force, and pardoned; and the inheritance of the 'Crown is established, on the Issue of Queen Jane, whether Male or 'Female, or the King's Issue by any other Wife whom he might Marry 'afterwards.

'But since it was not fit to declare, to whom the Succession of the 'Crown belonged after the King's death left the Person, so designed, 'might be thereby enabled to raise trouble and Commotion; 'therefore they considering the King's wise and excellent Govern- 'ment, and confiding in the love and affection which he bore to his 'Subjects, did give him full Power to declare the Succession to the 'Crown, either by his Letters Patents under the Great Seal, or by 'his last Will, Signed with his Hand; and promised all faithful o- 'bedience to the persons named by him. And if any, so designed to

'to ſucceed in default of others, ſhould endeavor to uſurp upon thoſe 1536.
'before them or to exclude them, they are declared Traytors, and were 'to forfeit all the Right they might thereafter clame to the Crown.
'And if any ſhould maintain the Lawfulneſs of the former Marriages,
'or that the Iſſue by them was Legitimate, or refuſed to ſwear to the 'King's Iſſue by Queen Jane, they were alſo declared Traytors.

By this Act it may appear how abſolutely this King Reigned in England. Many queſtion'd much the validity of it, and (as ſhall afterwards appear,) the Scots ſaid, That the Succeſſion to the Crown was not within the Parliaments Power to determine about it, but muſt go by inheritance to their King, in default of Iſſue by this King. Yet by this, the King was enabled to ſettle the Crown on his Children whom he had now declared Illegitimate, by which he brought them more abſolutely to depend upon himſelf. He neither made them deſperate, nor gave them any further Right, than what they were to derive purely from his own good pleaſure. This did alſo much pacifie the Emperor, ſince his Kinſwoman was, though not reſtored in blood, yet put in a Capacity to ſucceed to the Crown.

The Pope endeavoured a reconciliation with the King.

At this time there came a new Propoſition from Rome, to try if the King would accommodate matters with the Pope. Pope Clement the Seventh dyed two years before this, in the year 1534. and Cardinal Farneſe ſucceeded him, called Pope Paul the Third. He had before this made one unſucceſsful attempt upon the King; but, upon the beheading of the Biſhop (and declared Cardinal) of Rocheſter, he had thundered a moſt terrible Sentence of Depoſition againſt the King, and deſigned to commit the Execution of it to the Emperor: Yet now, when Queen Katharine and Queen Ann, who were the occaſions of the rupture, were both out of the way, he thought it was a proper conjuncture, to try if a Reconciliation could be effected. This he propoſed to Sir Gregory Caſſali, who was no more the King's Ambaſſador at Rome, but was ſtill his Correſpondent there. The Pope deſired he would move the King in it, and let him know that he had ever favoured his Cauſe in the former Pope's time, and though he was forced to give out a Sentence againſt him, yet he had never any intention to proceed upon it to further Extremities.

Buria vain.

But the King was now ſo entirely alienated from the Court of Rome, that to cut off all hopes of Reconciliation, he procured two Acts to be paſſed in this Parliament. The one was for the utter extinguiſhing the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome. It was brought into the Houſe of Lord's on the 4th of July; and was read the firſt time the 5th, and the ſecond time on the 6th of July, and lay at the Committee till the 12th. And on the 14th, it was ſent down to the Commons; who, if there be no miſtake in the Journal, ſent it up that ſame day: They certainly made great haſte, for the Parliament was diſſolved within Four days.

'The Preamble of this firſt Act contains ſevere Reflections on the 'Biſhop of Rome, (whom ſome called the Pope,) who had long darkned God's word, that it might ſerve his Pomp, Glory, Avarice, Ambition and Tyranny; both upon the Souls, Bodies, and Goods of 'all Chriſtians; excluding Chriſt out of the Rule of Man's Soul,
'and Princes out of their Dominions: And had exacted in England

1536. 'great Sums, by dreams, and vanities and other Superſtitious ways.
'Upon theſe reaſons his Uſurpations had been by Law put down in 'this Nation; yet many of his Emiſſaries were ſtill practiſing up and 'down the Kingdom, and perſwading people to acknowledge his pre'tended Authority. Therefore every perſon ſo offending after the
'laſt of July next to come, was to incur the pains of a Premunire,
'and all Officers, both Civil, and Eccleſiaſtical, were commanded to 'make enquiry about ſuch offences, under ſeveral penalties.

On the 12th of July, a Bill was brought in concerning Privileges obtained from the See of Rome, and was read the firſt time. And on the 17th it was agreed to, and ſent down to the Commons, who ſent it up again the next day. It bears, that the Popes had, during their Uſurpation, 'granted many Immunities to ſeveral Bodies and 'Societies in England, which upon that Grant had been now long
'in uſe: Therefore all theſe Bulls, Breves, and every thing depend'ing on, or flowing from them, were declared void and of no force.
'Yet all Marriages celebrated by virtue of them, that were not other-
'wiſe contrary to the Law of God, were declared good in Law; and
'all Conſecrations of Biſhops by virtue of them, were confirmed.
'And for the future, all who enjoyed any Privileges by Bulls, were
'to bring them into the Chancery, or to ſuch Perſons as the King
'ſhould appoint for that end. And the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury
'was Lawfully to grant anew the effects contained in them, which 'Grant was to paſs under the great Seal, and to be of full force in 'Law.

This ſtruck at the Abbots Rights. But they were glad to bear a Diminution of their Greatneſs, ſo they might ſave the whole, which now lay at ſtake. By the Thirteenth Act, they corrected an Abuſe which had come in, to evade the force of a Statute made in the Twenty Firſt year of this King, about the Reſidence of all Eccleſiaſtical perſons in their Livings. One qualification, that did excuſe from Reſidence, was the ſtaying at the Univerſity for the compleating of their Studies. Now it was found, that many diſſolute Clergymen went and lived at their Univerſities, not for their Studies, but to be excuſed from ſerving their Cures. So it was Enacted, that none above the Age of Forty, that were not either Heads of Houſes, or Publick Readers, ſhould have any Exemption from their Reſidence, by virtue of that Clauſe in the former Act. And thoſe under that Age ſhould not have the Benefit of it, except they were preſent at the Lectures, and perform'd their Exerciſes in the Schools.

By an other Act, there was Proviſion made againſt the prejudice the King's Heirs might receive, before they were of Age, by Parliaments held in the Non-Age; That whatſoever Acts were made before they were Twenty Four years of Age, they might at any time of their lives after that, Repeal and Annul, by their Letters Patents, which ſhould have equal force with a Repeal by Act of Parliament. From theſe Acts it appears, that the King was abſolute Maſter, both of the affections and fears of his Subjects when in a new Parliament called on a ſudden, and in a Seſſion of ſix Weeks, from the 8th of June to the 18th of July, Acts of this Importance were paſſed without any Proteſt or publick Oppoſition.

But

But having now opened the buſineſs of the Parliament, as it relates to the State, I muſt next give an account of the Convocation, which ſate at this time, and was very buſie, as appears by the Journal of the Houſe of Lords, in which this is given for a reaſon of many Adjournments, becauſe the Spiritual Lords were buſie in the Convocation. It ſate down on the 9th of June, according to Fuller's Extract, it being the Cuſtom of all this Reign, for that Court to meet two or three days after the Parliament. Hither Cromwell came as the King's Vicar-General: But he was not yet Vice-Gerent. For he ſate next the Arch-Biſhop; but when he had that Dignity he ſate above him. Nor do I find him ſtiled in any Writing Vice-Gerent for ſome time after this; though the Lord Herbert ſays, he was made Vice-Gerent the 18th of July this year, the ſame day in which the Parliament was Diſſolved. 1536. The Proceedings in the Convocation.

Latimer, Biſhop of Worceſter, preached the Latine Sermon, on theſe words. The Children of this World are wiſer in this Generation, than the Children of Light. He was the moſt Celebrated Preacher of that time. The ſimplicity and plainneſs of his matter, with a ſerious and fervent Action that accompanied it, being preferred to more learned and elaborate Compoſures. On the 21ſt of June, Cromwell moved, that they would Confirm the Sentence of the Invalidity of the King's Marriage with Queen Ann, which was accordingly done by both Houſes of Convocation. But certainly Fuller was aſleep when he wrote; That Ten days before that, the Arch-Biſhop had paſſed the Sentence of Divorce, on the day before the Queen was beheaded. Whereas if he had conſidered this more fully, he muſt have ſeen that the Queen was put to Death a Month before this, and was Divorced two days before ſhe dyed. Yet, with this animadverſion, I muſt give him my thanks for his pains in copying out of the Journals of Convocation many remarkable things, which had been otherwiſe irrecoverably loſt.

On the 23d of June, the lower Houſe of Convocation ſent to the upper Houſe a Collection of many opinions, that were then in the Realm; which, as they thought, were abuſes, and errors, worthy of ſpecial Reformation. But they began this Repreſentation with a Proteſtation: 'That they intended not to do, or ſpeak any thing, Fuller. 'which might be unpleaſant to the King; whom they acknowledg-'ed their Supream Head, and were reſolved to obey his Commands, 'renouncing the Pope's uſurp'd Authority, with all his Laws and In-'ventions, now extinguiſht and aboliſht, and did addict themſelves 'to Almighty God and his Laws, and unto the King and the Laws 'made within this Kingdom.

There are Sixty Seven opinions ſet down, and are either the Tenets of the Old Lollards, or the New Reformers, together with the Anabaptiſts opinions. Beſides all which, they complained of many unſavory and indiſcreet expreſſions, which were either feigned on deſign to diſgrace the New Preachers, or were perhaps the extravagant Reflexions of ſome illiterate and injudicious Perſons; who are apt upon all occaſions, by their heat and folly, rather to prejudice, than advance their party; and affect ſome petulant jeers, which they think witty, and are perhaps well entertained by ſome others, who though they 1536. are more judicious themselves, yet imagining that such jests on the contrary opinions will take with the People, do give them too much Encouragement. Many of these jests about Confession, praying to Saints, Holy-water, and the other Ceremonies of the Church, were complained of. And the last Articles contained sharp reflexions on some of the Bishops, as if they had been wanting in their Duty to suppress such things. This was clearly levelled at Cranmer, Latimer, and Shaxton, who were noted as the great Promoters of these opinions. The first did it prudently and solidly. The second zealously and simply. And the third with much indiscreet pride and vanity. But now that the Queen was gone, who had either raised or suppressed them, their Enemies hoped to have advantages against them, and to lay the growth of these opinions to their charge. But this whole Project failed, and Cranmer had as much of the King's favour as ever; for instead of that which they had projected, Cromwell, by the Kings order, coming to the Convocation, Declared to them, that it was the King's pleasure, that the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church should be reformed by the Rules of Scripture, and that nothing were to be maintained which did not rest in that Authority, for it was absurd, since that was acknowledged to contain the Laws of Religion, that recourse should rather be had to Glosses, or the decrees of Popes, than to these. There was at that time one Alexander Alesius, a Scotch-man, much esteemed for his Learning and Piety, whom Cranmer entertained at Lambeth. Him Cromwell brought with him to the Convocation, and desired him to deliver his opinion about the Sacraments. He enlarged himself much to Convince them, that only Baptism and the Lord's Supper were Instituted by Christ.

Antiq. Brit. in vita Cranm.

Stokesley Bishop of London answered him in a long Discourse, in which he shewed he was better acquainted with the Learning of the Schools and the Canon-Law, than with the Gospel; He was Seconded by the Arch-bishop of York, and others of that Party.

But Cranmer in a long and learned Speech, shewed how useless the niceties of the Schools were, and of how little Authority they ought to be; and discoursed largely of the Authority of the Scriptures, of the use of the Sacraments, of the uncertainty of Tradition, and of the Corruption which the Monks and Friars had brought into the Christian Doctrine. He was vigorously seconded by the Bishop of Hereford, who told them, the World would be no longer deceived with such Sophisticated stuff as the Clergy had formerly vented: The Laity were now in all Nations studying the Scriptures, and that, not only in the vulgar Translations, but in the original Tongues; and therefore it was a vain imagination to think they would be any longer governed by those arts which in the former Ages of Ignorance had been so effectual. Not many days after this, there were several Articles brought into the upper House of Convocation, devised by the King himself, about which there were great debates among them. The two Arch-Bishops, heading two Parties, Cranmer was for a Reformation, and with him joyned Thomas Goodrick, Bishop of Ely, Shaxton, of Sarum, Latimer, of Worcester, Fox, of Hereford, Hilsey, of Rochester, and Barlow, of St. David's.

But Lee, Arch-bishop of York, was a known favourer of the Popes Interests; which as it first appeared in his scrupling so much, with the

the whole Convocation of York, the acknowledging to the King to be Supreme Head of the Church of England; so he had since discovered it on all occasions, in which he durst do it without the fear of losing the King's favour: So he, and Stokesley, Bishop of London, Tonstall, of Durham, Gardiner of Winchester, Longland, of Lincoln, Sherburn, of Chichester, Nix, of Norwich, and Kite, of Carlisle, had been still against all changes. But the King discovered, that those did in their hearts love the Papal Authority, though Gardiner dissembled it most artificially. Sherburn, Bishop of Chichester, upon what inducement I cannot understand, resigned his Bishoprick, which was given to Richard Sampson, Dean of the Chappel; a Pension of 400 l. being reserved to Sherburn for his Life, which was confirmed by an Act of this Parliament. Nix, of Norwich, had also offended the King signally by some correspondence with Rome, and was kept long in the Marshalsea, and was convicted and found in a Premunire: The King considering his great Age, had upon his humble submission discharged him out of Prison, and pardon'd him. But he died the former year; though Fuller, in his slight way, makes him sit in this Convocation: for by the 17th Act of the last Parliament, it appears that the Bishoprick of Norwich being vacant, the King had recommended William Albot of St. Bennet's to it; but took into his own hands all the Lands and Mannours of the Bishoprick, and gave the Bishop several of the Priories in Norfolk in exchange, which was confirmed in Parliament. 1536.

Act 17. 27. Regni.

I shall next give a short abstract of the Articles about Religion, which were after much consultation and long debating agreed to.

Articles agreed on about Religion. Printed by Fuller.

'First, All Bishops and Preachers must instruct the People to believe the whole Bible, and the three Creeds, that was made by the Apostles, the Nicene, and the Athenasian; and interpret all things according to them, and in the very same words, and condemn all Heresies contrary to them, particularly those condemned by the first four general Councils.

'Secondly, Of Baptism the People must be instructed; That it is a Sacrament instituted by Christ, for the Remission of Sins, without which none could attain Everlasting Life: And that, not only those of full Age, but Infants, may, and must be Baptized, for the pardon of Original sin, and obtaining the gift of the Holy Ghost, by which they became the Sons of God. That none Baptized, ought to be Baptized again. That the opinions of the Anabaptists and Pelagians, were detestable Heresies; And that those of ripe Age, who desired Baptism must with it joyn Repentance and Contrition for their sins, with a firm belief of the Articles of the Faith.

'Thirdly, Concerning Pennance, they were to instruct the People, that it was instituted by Christ, and was absolutely necessary to Salvation. That it consisted of Contrition, Confession and Amendment of Life, with exterior works of Charity, which were the worthy Fruits of Pennance. For Contrition, it was an inward shame and sorrow for sin, because it is an offence of God, which provokes his displeasure. To this must be joyned, a Faith of the mercy and goodness of God, whereby the penitent must hope, that God will forgive him, and repute him justified, and of the number of his Elect Children, not for the worthiness of any merit or work done by him, but 1536. 'for the only Merits of the Blood and Passion of our Saviour Jesus 'Christ. That this Faith is got and confirmed by the Applicati- 'on of the Promises of the Gospel, and the use of the Sacraments: 'And for that end, Confession to a Priest is necessary, if it may be had, 'whose absolution was instituted by Christ, to apply the promises of 'God's Grace to the penitent; Therefore the People were to be taught, 'That the Absolution is spoken by an Authority given by Christ in 'the Gospel to the Priest, and must be believed; as if it were spoken 'by God himself, according to our Saviour's words; and therefore 'none were to condemn auricular Confession, but use it for the com- 'fort of their Consciences, The people were also to be instructed, 'that though God pardoned sin, only for the satisfaction of Christ; 'yet they must bring forth the Fruits of Penance, Prayer, Fasting, 'Almsdeeds, with restitution and satisfaction for wrongs done to o- 'thers, with other works of Mercy and Charity, and Obedience to 'God's Commandments, else they could not be saved; and that by do- 'ing these, they should both obtain Everlasting Life, and mitigation 'of their Afflictions in this present life, according to the Scriptures.

'for

'Fourthly, As touching the Sacrament of the Altar, People were to 'be instructed, that under the Forms of Bread and Wine, there was 'truly and substantially given, the very same Body of Christ, that 'was born of the Virgin Mary; and therefore it was to be received 'with all Reverence, every one duely examining himself, according to 'the words of St. Paul.

'Fifthly, The people were to be instructed, That Justification 'signifieth the Remission of Sins, and acceptation into the favour of 'God; that is to say, a perfect Renovation in Christ. To the ob- 'taining which, they were to have, Contrition, Faith, Charity, which 'were both to concur in it, and follow it; and that the good works 'necessary to Salvation, were not only outward Civil works, but the 'inward motions and graces of God's Holy Spirit, to dread, fear, and 'love him, to have firm confidence in God, to call upon him, and to 'have patience in all adversities, to hate sin, and have purposes and 'wills not to sin again; with such other motions and vertues, con- 'senting and agreeable to the Law of God.

'The other Articles were about the Ceremonies of the Church. 'First, of Images. The people were to be instructed, That the use of 'them was warranted by the Scriptures, and that they served to re- 'present to them good Examples, and to stir up Devotion; and there- 'fore it was meet that they should stand in the Churches. But that 'the people might not fall into such Superstition as it was thought 'they had done in time past, they were to be taught, to reform the 'Abuses, lest Idolatry might ensue, and that in censing, kneeling, 'offering, or worshipping them, the people were to be instructed, not 'to do it to the Image, but to God and his honour.

'Secondly, For the honouring of Saints, they were not to think to 'attain these things at their hands, which were only obtained of God, 'but that they were to honour them, as persons now in glory, to 'praise God for them, and imitate their vertues, and not fear to die for 'the Truth, as many of them had done.

'Thirdly, for praying to Saints, The people were to be taught 'that

'that it was good to pray to them, to pray for, and with us. And to 1536.
'correct all Superſtitious Abuſes in this matter, they were to keep the 'days appointed by the Church for their Memories, unleſs the King
'ſhould leſſen the number of them, which if he did it, was to be obeyed.

'Fourthly, of Ceremonies. The people were to be taught, That 'they were not to be condemned and caſt away, but to be kept as 'good and laudable, having myſtical ſignifications in them, and being 'uſeful to lift up our minds to God. Such were the Veſtments in the 'worſhip of God: The ſprinkling holy-water to put us in mind of our 'Baptiſm and the Blood of Chriſt: Giving holy Bread in ſign of our 'Union in Chriſt, and to remember us of the Sacrament: Bearing 'Candles on Candlemas-day, in remembrance that Chriſt was the ſpi-
'ritual Light: giving Aſhes on Aſh-wednes-day, to put us in mind of 'Penance, and of our Mortality. Bearing Palms on Palm-ſunday, to 'ſhow our deſire to receive Chriſt in our hearts as he entred into Je-
'ruſalem: Creeping to the Croſs on Good-fryday, and kiſſing it, in 'memory of his death, with the ſetting up the Sepulchre on that day:
'The Hallowing the Font, and other Exorciſms and Benedictions.

'And laſtly, As to Purgatory, they were to declare it good and cha'ritable to pray for the Souls departed, which was ſaid to have con'tinued in the Church from the beginning: And therefore the People 'were to be inſtructed, That it conſiſted well with the due order of 'Charity, to pray for them, and to make others pray for them, in 'Maſſes and Exequies, and to give Alms to them for that end. But 'ſince the place they were in, and the pains they ſuffered, were 'uncertain by the Scripture, we ought to remit them wholly to 'Gods mercy: Therefore all theſe Abuſes were to be put away, which,
'under the pretence of Purgatory, had been advanced, as if the 'Popes pardons did deliver Souls out of it, or Maſſes ſaid in certain 'places, or before certain Images, had ſuch efficiency: with other
'ſuch-like Abuſes.

Theſe Articles being thus conceived, and in ſeveral places corrected, and tempered by the King's own hand, were ſigned by Cromwell, and the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and ſeventeen other Biſhops forty, Abbots and Priors, and fifty Arch-Deacons and Proctors of the lower Houſe of Convocation. Among whom, Polidor Virgil, and Peter Vannes, ſigned with the reſt, as appears by the Original yet extant. They being tendred to the King, he confirmed them, and ordered them to be publiſhed with a Preface in his name. 'It is ſaid in the Preface, 'that he, accounting it the chief part of his charge, that the Word and Commandments of God ſhould be believed and obſerved, and to maintain unity and concord in opinion; and underſtanding, to his great regret, that there was great diverſity of opinion ariſen among his Subjects, both about Articles of Faith and Ceremonies, had in his own Perſon taken great pains and ſtudy about theſe things, and had ordered alſo the Biſhops, and other Learned men of the Clergy, to examine them; who after long deliberation had concluded on the moſt ſpecial Points, which, the King thought proceeded from a good, right, and true judgment, according to the Laws of God; theſe would alſo be profitable, for eſtaliſhing unity in the Church of England: Therefore he had ordered them to be publiſhed, requi-1536. 'ring all to accept of them, praying God ſo to illuminate their hearts, 'that they might have no leſs zeal and love to unity and concord in 'reading them, than he had in making them to be deviſed, ſet forth, 'and publiſhed; which good acceptance ſhould encourage him to take 'further pains for the future, as ſhould be moſt for the honour of God, 'and the profit, and the quietneſs of his Subjects.

'ring

And variouſly cenſured.

This being publiſhed, occaſion'd great variety of Cenſures. Thoſe that deſired Reformation, were glad to ſee ſo great a ſtep once made; and did not doubt, but this would make way for further Changes. They rejoyced to ſee the Scriptures, and the ancient Creeds, made the Standards of the Faith, without mentioning Tradition, or the Decrees of the Church. Then the Foundation of Chriſtian Faith was truly ſtated, and the terms of the Covenant between God and man in Chriſt were rightly opened, without the niceties of the Schools of either ſide. Immediate worſhip of Images and Saints was alſo removed, and Purgatory was declared uncertain by the Scripture. Theſe were great advantages to them, but the eſtabliſhing the neceſſity of Auricular confeſſion, the Corporal preſence in the Sacrament, the keeping up and doing reverence to Images, and the praying to Saints, did allay their joy, yet they ſtill counted it a victory, to have things brought under debate, and to have ſome G oſſer abuſes taken away.

The other party were unſpeakably troubled. Four Sacraments were paſſed over, which would encourage ill-affected people to neglect them. The gainful Trade by the belief of Purgatory was put down; for though it was ſaid to be good to give Alms for praying for the dead, yet ſince both the dreadful Stories of the Miſeries of Purgatory, and the Certainty of Redeeming Souls out of them by Maſſes, were made doubtful, the Peoples Charity and bounty that way would ſoon abate. And in a word, the bringing matters under diſpute was a great Mortification to them; for all concluded, that this was but a Preamble to what they might expect afterwards.

When theſe things were ſeen beyond Sea, the Papal party made every-where great uſe of it, to ſhow the Neceſſity of adhering to the Pope; ſince the King of England, though when he broke off from his Obedience to the Apoſtolick See, he pretended, he would maintain the Catholick Faith entire, yet was now making great Changes in it. But others, that were more moderate, acknowledged that there was great temper and prudence in contriving theſe Articles. And it ſeems the Emperor, and the more Learned Divines about him, both approved of the Precedent, and liked the particulars ſo well, that not many years after, the Emperor publiſhed a work not unlike this, called, The Interim; becauſe it was to be in force in that Interim, till all things were more fully debated and determined by a General Council, which in many particulars, agreed with theſe Articles. Yet ſome ſtricter perſons cenſured this work much, as being a Political dawbing, in which, they ſaid, there was more pains taken to gratifie perſons, and ſerve particular ends, than to aſſert Truth in a free and un-biaſſed way, ſuch as became Divines. This was again excuſed, and it was ſaid, that all things, could not be attained on a ſudden: that ſome of the Biſhops and Divines, who afterwards arrived at a clearer underſtanding of ſome matters, were not then ſo fully convinced about them, and ſo it was their ignorance, and not their Cowardice or Policy, that made them compliant in ſome things. Beſides, it was ſaid, that as our Saviour did not reveal all things to his Diſciples, till they were able to bear them; and as the Apoſtles did not of a ſudden aboliſh all the Rites of Judaiſm, but for ſome time, to gain the Jews, complyed with them, and went to the Temple, and offered Sacrifices; ſo the People were not to be over-driven in this Change. The Clergy muſt be brought out of their ignorance by degrees, and then the people were to be better inſtructed; but to drive furiouſly, and do all at once, might have ſpoiled the whole deſign, and totally alienated thoſe who were to be drawn on by degrees; it might have alſo much endangered the Peace of the Nation, the People being much diſpoſed by the practices of the Friers to riſe in Arms: Therefore theſe ſlow ſteps were thought the ſurer and better method. 1536.

The Convocation declares againſt the Council called by the Pope.

On the laſt day of the Convocation, there was another Writing brought in by Fox Biſhop of Hereford, occaſioned by the Summons for a General Council to ſit at Mantua, to which the Pope had cited the King to appear. The King had made his appeal from the Pope to a General Council, but there was no reaſon to expect any Juſtice in an Aſſembly ſo conſtituted, as this was like to be. Therefore it was thought fit to publiſh ſomewhat of the Reaſons why the King could not ſubmit his matter to the Deciſion of ſuch a Council, as was then intended. And it was moved, that the Convocation ſhould give their ſenſe of it.

Collect. Numb. 5.

The Subſtance of their Anſwer, (which the Reader will find in the Collection,) was, 'That as nothing was better Inſtituted by the 'Ancient Fathers, for the Eſtabliſhment of the Faith, the Extirpa'tion of Hereſies, the Healing of Schiſms, and the Unity of the 'Chriſtian Church, than General Councils, gathered in the Holy 'Ghoſt, duely called to an indifferent place; with other neceſſary 'requiſites: So on the other hand nothing could produce more pe'ſtiferous effects, than a General Council called upon private malice, 'or Ambition, or other carnal reſpects; which Gregory Nazianzen 'ſo well obſerved in this time, that he thought all Aſſemblies of Bi'ſhops were to be eſchewed, for he never ſaw good come of any of them, 'and they had encreaſed, rather than healed the diſtempers of the Church. 'For the appetite of vain-glory, and a contentious humor bore down rea'ſon: Therefore they thought Chriſtian Princes ought to employ all 'their endeavours to prevent ſo great a miſchief. And it was to be 'conſidered, Firſt, Who had Authority to call one. Secondly, If the 'Reaſons for calling one were weighty. Thirdly, Who ſhould be the 'Judges. Fourthly, What ſhould be the manner of Proceeding. Fifth'ly, What things ſhould be treated of in it. And as to the firſt of 'theſe, they thought neither the Pope, nor any one Prince of what 'dignity ſoever, had Authority to call one, without the Conſent of 'all other Chriſtian Princes: eſpecially ſuch as had entire and ſu'preme Government over all their Subjects. This was Signed on the 20*th* of July, by Cromwell, and the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, with 1536. with 14 Bishops, and 40 Abbots, Priors and Clerks, of the Convocation of Canterbury. Whether this and the former Articles were also Signed by the Convocation of the Province of York, does not appear by any Record; but that I think is not to be doubted. This being obtained, the King published a long and sharp Protestation against the Council now Summoned to Mantua. In which he shews, that the Pope had no power to call one; 'For as it was done by the 'Emperors of old; so it pertained to Christian Princes now. That 'the Pope had no Jurisdiction in England, and so could Summon none 'of this Nation to come to any such meeting. That the place was 'neither safe nor proper. That nothing could be done in a Coun- 'cil to any purpose, if the Pope sate Judge in chief in it, since one 'of the true ends, why a Council was to be desired, was to reduce 'his Power within its old limits. A free General Council was that 'which he much desired; but he was sure this could not be such: 'and the present distractions of Christendom, and the Wars between 'the Emperor and the French King, shewed this was no proper 'time for one. The Pope who had long refused or delayed to call 'one, did now choose this Conjuncture of Affairs, knowing that few 'would come to it, and so they might carry things as they pleased. 'But the World was now awake; the Scriptures were again in 'mens hands, and People would not be so tamely cozen'd as they 'had been. Then he shews how unsafe it was, for any English 'man to go to Mantua, how little regard was to be had to the 'Pope's safe Conduct, they having so oft broken their Oaths and 'Promises. He also shews how little reason he had to trust him- 'self to the Pope, how kind he had been to that See formerly, and 'how basely they had requited it: And that now these Three years 'past, they had been stirring up all Christian Princes against him, 'and using all possible means to create him trouble. Therefore he 'declared, he would not go to any Council called by the Bishop of 'Rome; but when their was a General Peace among Christian Prin- 'ces, he would most gladly hearken to the motion of a true Gene- 'ral Council: and the mean-while, he would preserve all the Articles 'of the Faith in his Kingdom, and sooner lose his Life and his Crown, 'than suffer any of them to be put down. And so he protested against 'any Council to be held at Mantua, or any where else, by the Bishop 'of Rome's Authority: That he would not acknowlege it, nor receive 'any of their Decrees.

The King publishes his reasons against it.

Fox.

At this time Reginald Pool, who was of the Royal Blood, being by his Mother descended from the Duke of Clarence, Brother to King Edward the Fourth, and in the same degree of kindred with the King by his Fathers side, was in great esteem for his Learning, and other Excellent Vertues. It seems the King had determimined to breed him up to the greatest dignity in the Church; and to make him as Eminent in Learning, and other acquired Parts, as he was for Quality, and a Natural Sweetness and Nobleness of Temper. Therefore the King had given him the Deanery of Exceſter, with several other Dignities, towards his maintenance beyond Sea; and sent him to Paris, where he stayed several years: There he first incurred the King's displeasure. For, being desired by him to concur with his Agents, gents, in procuring the Subſcriptions and Seals of the French Univerſities, he excuſed himſelf; yet it was in ſuch terms, that he did not openly declare himſelf againſt the King: After that, he came over to England, and as he writes himſelf, was preſent when the Clergy made their Submiſſion, and acknowledged the King Supream Head: In which, ſince he was then Dean of Exeter, and kept his Deanry ſeveral years after that, it is not to be doubted, but that, as he was by his place obliged to ſit in the Convocation, ſo he concurred with the reſt in making that Submiſſion. From thence he went to Padua, where he lived long, and was received into the Friendſhip and Society of ſome celebrated Perſons, who gave themſelves much to the Study of Eloquence, and of the Roman Authors. Theſe were Centareno, Bembo, Caraffa, Sadoletti, with a great many more, that became afterwards well known over the World: But all thoſe gave Pool the Preheminence, and that juſtly too, for he was accounted one of the moſt Eloquent men of his time. 1536.

The King called him oft home to aſſiſt him in his Affairs, but he ſtill declined it; at length finding delays could prevail no longer, he wrote the King word, that he did not approve of what he had done, neither in the matter of his Divorce, nor his ſeparation from the Apoſtolick See. To this the King anſwered, deſiring his reaſons why he diſagreed from him, and ſent him over a Book which Doctor Sampſon had writ in defence of the Proceedings in England. Upon which he wrote his Book De unione Eccleſiaſtica, and ſent it over to the King: and ſoon after Printed it this year. In which Book he condemned the King's Actions, and preſſed him to return to the obedience he owed the See of Rome, with many ſharp reflections; but the Book was more conſidered for the Author, and the Wit and Eloquence of it, than for any great Learning, or deep reaſoning in it. He did alſo very much depreſs the Royal, and exalt the Papal Authority: He compared the King to Nebuchadonoſor, and addreſſed himſelf in the Concluſion to the Emperor, whom he conjured to turn his Arms rather againſt the King than the Turk. And indeed the indecencies of his Expreſſions againſt the King, not to mention the ſcurrilous Language he beſtows on Sampſon, whoſe Book he undertakes to anſwer, are ſuch, that it appears how much the Italian Air had changed him; and that his Converſe at Padua had for ſome time defac'd that generous temper of mind, which was otherwiſe ſo natural to him.

And writes his Book againſt him.

Upon this, the King deſired him at firſt to come over, and explain ſome Paſſages in his Book: But when he could not thus draw him into his Toyls, he proceeded ſeverely againſt him, and diveſted him of all his Dignities; but theſe were plentifully made up to him by the Pope's bounty, and the Emperors. He was afterwards rewarded with a Cardinals hat, but he did not riſe above the degree of a Deacon. Some believe that the Spring of this oppoſition he made to the King was a ſecreet affection he had for the Lady Mary. The publiſhing of this Book, made the King ſet the Biſhops on work to write Vindications of his Actions: which Stokeſley and Tonſtal did in a long and Learned Letter, that they wrote to Pool. And Gardiner publiſhed his Book of true obedience: To which Bonner, who was hot on the 1536. the scent of preferment, added a preface. But the King designed sharper Tools for Pool's punishment: Yet an Attainder in absence was all he could do against himself. But his Family and Kindred felt the weight of the King's displeasure very sensibly.

But now I must give an account of the dissolution of the Monasteries, pursuant to the Act of Parliament, though I cannot fix the exact time in which it was done. I have seen the Original Instructions with the Commission, given to those who were to visit the Monasteries in and about Bristol. All the rest were of the same kind. They bear date the 28*th* of April, after the Session of Parliament was over; and the report was to be made in the Octaves of St Michael the Arch-Angel. But I am inclined to think that the great Concussion and disorder things were in by the Queen's death, made the Commissioners unwilling to proceed in so invidious a matter, till they saw the Issue of the new-Parliament. Therefore I have delayed giving any account of the proceedings in that matter till this place. The Instructions will be found in the Collection. The Substance of them was as follows.

Collect Numb. 6. Instructions about the dissolution of Monasteries.

'The Auditors of the Court of Augmentations, were the Persons 'that were employed. Four, or any Three of them, were Commis- 'sioned to execute the Instructions in every particular Visitation. One 'Auditor or Receiver, and one of the Clerks of the former Visita- 'tion, were to call for three discreet Persons in the County, who 'were also named by the King. They were to signifie to every 'House the Statute of Dissolution, and shew them their Commission. 'Then they were to put the Governor, or any other officer of the House, 'to declare upon Oath the true State of it: And to require him 'speedily to appear before the Court of Augmentations, and in the 'mean time not to meddle with any thing belonging to the House. 'Then to examine how many Religious Persons were in the House, 'and what lives they led; how many of them were Priests, how ma- 'ny of them would go to other Religious Houses, and how many of 'them would take Capacities and go into the World. They were to 'estimate the State and Fabrick of the House, and the number of 'the Servants they kept: and to call for the Covent-Seal, and Writ- 'tings, and put them in some sure place, and take an Inventory of all 'their Plate, and their Moveable goods, and to know the value of all 'that before the 1*st* of March last belonged to the House, and what 'debts they owed. They were to put the Covent-Seal, with the 'Jewels and Plate in safe keeping, and to leave the rest (an Inven- 'tory being first taken) in the Governors hands, to be kept by them 'till further Order. And the Governors were to meddle with none 'of the Rents of the House, except for necessary Sustenance, till 'they were another way disposed of. They were to try what Leas- 'es and Deeds had been made for a whole year before the 4*th* of 'February last. Such as would still live in Monasteries, were to be 'recommended to some of the great Monasteries that lay next: and 'such as would live in the world, must come to the Arch-Bishop of 'Canterbury, or the Lord Chancellor, to receive Capacities. (From 'which it appears that Cromwel was not at this time Lord Vice-Ge- 'rent, for he granted these Capacities when he was in that Power.)

'And

'And the Commiſſioners were to give them a reaſonable allowance 'for their Journey, according to the diſtance they lived at. The Go- 'vernor was to be ſent to the Court of Augmentations, who were to 'aſſign him a yearly penſion for his Life. 1536.

What Report thoſe Commiſſioners made, or how they obeyed their Inſtructions, we know not; for the Account of it is razed out of the Records. The Writers that lived near that time repreſent the matter very odiouſly, and ſay; about ten thouſand Perſons were ſet to ſeek for their Livings; only forty Shillings in Money, and a Crown, being given to every Religious man. The rents of them all, roſe to about thirty two Thouſand Pounds: And the Goods, Plate, Jewels, and other moveables, were valued at an Hundred Thouſand Pound: And it is generally ſaid, and not improbably, that the Commiſſioners were as careful to inrich themſelves, as to encreaſe the King's Revenue. The Churches and Cloyſters were for the moſt part pulled down; and the Lead, Bells and other Materials were ſold; and this muſt needs have raiſed great diſcontents every where.

Great diſcontents among all ſorts of People.

The Religious Perſons that were undone, went about complaining of the Sacrilege and Injuſtice of the Suppreſſion; That what the piety of their Anceſtors had dedicated to God and his Saints, was now invaded and converted to ſecular ends. They ſaid, the King's ſeverity fell firſt upon ſome particular Perſons of their Orders, who were found Delinquents; but now, upon the pretended miſcarriages of ſome Individual Perſons, to proceed againſt their Houſes, and ſuppreſs them, was an unheard-of practice. The Nobility, and Gentry, whoſe Anceſtors had founded or enriched theſe Houſes, and who provided for their younger Children, or empoveriſhed Friends, by putting them into theſe Sanctuaries, complained much of the prejudice they ſuſtained by it. The People, that had been well entertained at the Abbots Tables, were ſenſible of their loſs: for generally, as they Travelled over the Country, the Abbies were their Stages, and were Houſes of Reception to Travellers and Strangers. The Devouter ſort of People of their Perſwaſion, thought their Friends muſt now lie in Purgatory without relief, except they were at the charge to keep a Prieſt, who ſhould daily ſay Maſs for their Souls. The poor, that fed on their daily Alms, were deprived of that ſupply.

Endeavors are uſed to quiet theſe.

But to compoſe theſe diſcontents, firſt many Books were publiſhed to ſhew what Crimes, Cheats, and Impoſtures, thoſe Religious Perſons were guilty of. Yet that wrought not much on the People; for they ſaid, why where not theſe Abuſes ſeverely puniſhed and reformed? But muſt whole Houſes, and the Succeeding Generations, be puniſhed for the faults of a few? Moſt of theſe reports were alſo denyed, and even thoſe who before envyed the eaſe and plenty in which the Abbots and Monks lived, began now to pity them, and condemned the proceedings againſt them. But to allay this General diſcontent, Cromwell adviſed the King to ſell their Lands at very eaſie Rates to the Gentry in the ſeveral Counties, obliging them, ſince they had them upon ſuch terms, to keep up the wonted Hoſpitality. This drew in the Gentry a-pace both to be ſatisfied with what was done; and to Aſſiſt the Crown for ever in the defence of theſe Laws: their own intereſt being ſo enterwoven with the Rights

1536. of the Crown. The commoner sort, who, like those of old that followed Christ for the Loaves, were most concerned for the loss of a good dinner on a Holy-day, or when they went over the Country about their business, were now also in a great measure satisfied, when they heard that all to whom these Lands were given, were obliged under heavy Forfeitures to keep up the Hospitality; and when they saw that put in practice, their discontent, which lay chiefly in their Stomach, was appeased.

And to quiet other People, who could not be satisfied with such things, the King made use of a Clause in the Act that gave him the lesser Monasteries, which Empowered him to continue such as he should think fit. Therefore on the 17*th* of August, he by his Letters Patents, did of new give back in perpetuam Eleemosynam for perpetual Alms, Five Abbies. The first of these, was the Abbey of St. Mary of Betlesden of the Cistercian order in Bedfordshire, ten more were afterwards confirmed. Sixteen Nunneries, were also confirmed: In all Thirty one Houses. The Patents (in most of which some manors are excepted, that had been otherwise disposed of,) are all enrolled, and yet none of our Writers have taken any notice of this. It seems these Houses had been more regular than the rest: So that in a General Calamity they were rather reprieved than excepted: for two years after this, in the Suppression of the rest of the Monasteries, they fell under the common fate of other Houses. By these new Endowments, they were obliged to pay Tenths and first-Fruits, and to obey all the Statutes and Rules that should be sent to them from the King, as Supream Head of the Church. But it is not unlike that some presents to the Commissioners, or to Cromwell, made these Houses out-live this ruin: for I find great trading in Bribes at this time, which is not to be wondred at, when there was so much to be shared.

Yet people generally incline to Rebel.

But great Disorders followed upon the Dissolution of the other Houses. People were still generally discontented. The Suppression of Religious Houses occasioned much out-crying and the Articles that lately published about Religion, encreased the distaste they had conceived at the Government. The old Clergy were also very watchful to improve all opportunities, and to blow upon every spark. And the Pope's Power of deposing Kings had been for almost five hundred years received as an Article of Faith. The same Council that established Transubstantiation, had asserted it: and there were many Precedents, not only in Germany, France, Spain and Italy, but also in England, of Kings that were Deposed by Popes, whose Dominions were given to other Princes. This had begun in the Eighth Century, in two famous Deprivations. The one in France, of Childeric the 3*d*, who was deprived, and the Crown given to Pepin: and about the same time, those Dominions in Italy which were under the Eastern Emperors, renounced their Allegiance to them. In both these the Popes had a great hand, yet they rather confirmed and approved those Treasonable Mutations, than gave the first rise to them. But after Pope Gregory the 7*th*'s time, it was clearly assumed, as a Right and Prerogative of the Papal Crown, to Depose Princes, and absolve Subjects from the Oaths of Allegiance, and set up others in their stead. And all those Emperors or Kings, that contested any thing with Popes, sat very uneasie and unsafe in their Thrones, ever after that. But if they were tractable to the demands of the Court of Rome, then they might oppress their Subjects, and Govern as unjustly as they pleased: for they had a mighty support from that Court. This made Princes more easily bear the Popes usurpations, because they were assisted by them in all their other Proceedings. And the Friers, having the Consciences of People generally in their hands, as they had the word given by their General at Rome, so they disposed People, either to be obedient, or seditious, as they pleased. 1536.

Now, not only their own Interests, mixed with their zeal for the ancient Religion, but the Pope's Authority, gave them as good a Warrant to encline the People to Rebel, as any had in former times, of whom some were Canonized for the like practices. For in August the former year, the Pope had Summoned the King to appear within Ninety days, and to answer for putting away his Queen, and taking another Wife; and for the Laws he had made against the Church, and putting the Bishop of Rochester and others to death for not obeying these Laws: and if he did not reform these faults, or did not appear to answer for them, the Pope Excommunicated him, and all that favoured him, deprived the King, put the Kingdom under an Interdict, forbade all his Subjects to obey, and other States to hold Commerce with him, dissolved all his Leagues with foreign Princes, commanded all the Clergy to depart out of England, and his Nobility to rise in Arms against him. But now, the force of those Thunders, which had formerly produced great Earth-quakes and Commotions, was much abated: yet some storms were raised by this, though not so violent as had been in former times.

The people were quiet till they had reaped their Harvest. And though some Injunctions were published a little before, to help it the better forward, most of the Holy-days of Harvest being abolished by the King's Authority; yet that rather Inflamed them the more. Other Injunctions were also published in the King's Name by Cromwell his Vice-gerent, which was the first Act of pure Supremacy done by the King. For in all that went before, he had the Concurrence of the two Convocations. But these, it is like, were penned by Cranmer. The Reader is referred to the Collection of Papers for them, as I transcribed them out of the Register. The King's injunctions about Religion.

'The Substance of them was, That first, all Ecclesiastical Incumbents were for a quarter of a year after that, once every Sunday, and ever after that, twice every quarter, to publish to the People: That the Bishop of Rome's usurped Power, had no ground in the Law of God: and therefore was on good reasons abolished in this Kingdom: And that the King's power was by the Laws of God, Supream over all persons in his Dominions. And they were to do their uttermost endeavour, to extirpate the Pope's Authority, and to establish the Kings. Collect. Numb. 7.

'Secondly, They were to declare the Articles lately published, and agreed to by the Convocation: and to make the people know which of them were Articles of Faith, and which of them Rules for the decent and politick Order of the Church.

'Thirdly,

1536. 'Thirdly, They were to declare the Articles lately set forth, for the 'the Abrogation of some superfluous Holy-days, particularly in Har- 'vest time.

'Fourthly, They were no more to extol Images or Relicks, for Su- 'perstition or gain; nor to exhort people to make Pilgrimages, as if 'blessings and good things were to be obtained of this or that Saint 'or Image. But in stead of that, the People were to be instructed to 'apply themselves to the keeping of God's Commandments, and do- 'ing works of Charity; and to believe that God was better served by 'them when they stayed at home and provided for their Families, 'than when they went Pilgrimages: and that the Moneys laid out on 'these, were better given to the Poor.

'Fifthly, They were to exhort the People to teach their Children 'the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the ten Commandments, in En- 'glish: and every Incumbent was to explain these, one Article a day, 'till the People were Instructed in them. And to take great care, 'that all Children were bred up to some trade or way of Living.

'Sixthly, They must take care that the Sacraments and Sacra- 'mentals be reverently administred in their Parishes, from which 'when at any time they were absent, they were to Commit the 'Cure to the Learned and expert Curate; who might instruct the peo- 'ple in wholsome Doctrine: that they might also see, and their Pa- 'stors did not pursue their own profits or interests, so much as the 'Glory of God, and the good of the Souls under their Cure.

'Seventhly, They should not, except on urgent occasion, go to 'Taverns or Ale-houses: nor sit too long at any sort of Games after 'their Meals, but give themselves to the Study of the Scripture, or 'some other honest exercise; and remember that they must excel 'others in purity of life, and be examples to all others to live well 'and Christianly.

'Eightly, Because the goods of the Church, were the goods of 'the Poor; every Beneficed Person that had twenty Pound or above, 'and did not reside, was yearly to distribute the Fortieth part of his 'Benefice to the Poor of the Parish.

'Ninthly, Every Incumbent that had a hundred Pounds a year, must 'give an Exhibition for one Scholar at some Grammar School, or 'University; who after he had compleated his Studies, was to be 'Partner of the Cure and Charge, both in Preaching, and other du- 'ties: And so many hundred Pounds as any had, so many Students he 'was to breed up.

'Tenthly, Where Parsonage or Vicarage Houses were in great de- 'cay the Incumbent was every year to give a fifth part of his pro- 'fits to the repairing of them, till they were finished; and then to 'maintain them in the State they were in.

'Eleventhly, All these Injunctions were to be observed, under pain 'of suspension and sequestration of the mean profits till they were ob- 'served.

These were equally ingrateful to the Corrupt Clergy, and to the Laity that adhered to the old Doctrine. The very same opinions, a- bout Pilgrimages, Images, and Saints departed, and instructing the People in the Principles of Christian Religion in the Vulgar tongue, for

for which the Lollards were not long ago, either burnt or forced to abjure them, were now ſet up by the King's Authority. From whence they concluded, that whatſoever the King ſaid of his maintaining the old Doctrine, yet he was now changing it. The Clergy alſo were much troubled at this Precedent, of the King's giving ſuch Injunctions to them, without the conſent of the Convocation: From which they concluded, they were now to be ſlaves to the Lord Vice-gerent. The matter of theſe Injunctions was alſo very uneaſie to them. The great profits they made by their Images and Relicks, and the Pilgrimages to them, were now taken away: and yet ſevere Impoſitions and heavy Taxes were laid on them; a fifth part for Repairs, a tenth at leaſt for an Exhibitioner, and a fortieth for Charity, which were cryed out on as intolerable burdens. Their Labour was alſo increaſed, and they were bound up to many ſeverities of Life: All theſe things touched the Secular Clergy to the quick, and made them concur with the Regular Clergy in diſpoſing the People to Rebel. 1536.

This was ſecretly fomented by the great Abbots. For though they were not yet ſtruck at, yet the way was prepared to it; and their Houſes were oppreſſed with crouds of thoſe who were ſent to them from the ſuppreſſed Houſes. There was ſome pains taken to remove their fears. For a Letter was ſent to them all in the King's name, to ſilence the reports that were ſpread abroad, as if all Monaſteries were to be quite ſuppreſſed. This they were required not to believe, but to ſerve God according to their Order, to obey the King's Injunctions, to keep Hoſpitality, and make no waſtes nor dilapidations. Yet this gave them ſmall comfort; and as all ſuch things do, rather increaſed than quieted their jealouſies and fears. So many ſecret cauſes concurring, no wonder the People fell into mutinous and ſeditious practices.

A Rebellion in Lincolnſhire.

The firſt Riſing was in Lincolnſhire in the beginning of October, where a Church-man, diſguiſed into a Cobler, and directed by a Monk, drew a great body of Men after him. About 20000 were gathered together. They ſwore to be true to God, the King, and the Commonwealth, and digeſted their Grievances into a few Articles, which they ſent to the King, deſiring a redreſs of them.

Their Demands.

'They complained of ſome things that related to ſecular concerns, 'and ſome Acts of Parliament that were uneaſie to them: They alſo 'complained of the Suppreſſion of ſo many Religious Houſes: that 'the King had mean Perſons in high Places about him, who were ill 'Counſellors: They alſo complained of ſome Biſhops who had ſub'verted the Faith; and they apprehended the Jewels and Plate of their 'Churches, ſhould be taken away. Therefore they deſired the King 'would call to him the Nobility of the Realm, and by their advice re'dreſs their Grievances: Concluding with an acknowledgment of the 'Kings being their Supream Head, and that the Tenths and firſt 'Fruits of all Livings, belonged to him of Right.

The King's anſwer.

When the King heard of this Inſurrection, he preſently ſent the Duke of Suffolk with a Commiſſion to raiſe forces for diſperſing them: But with him he ſent an anſwer to their Petition. 'He began with 'that about his Counſellors, and ſaid; It was never before heard of, 'that the Rabble preſumed to Dictate to their Prince, what Coun-

1536. 'sellors he should choose. That was the Princes work and not theirs. 'The Suppression of Religious Houses was done pursuant to an Act 'of Parliament, and was not set forth by any of his Counsellors. 'The Heads of these Religious Houses, had under their own hands 'confessed those horrid Scandals, which made them a reproach to the 'Nation. And in many Houses there were not above Four or Five 'Religious Persons. So it seemed they were better pleased, that 'such dissolute Persons should consume their Rents in riotous and idle 'living, than that their Prince should have them for the Common 'good of the whole Kingdom. He also answered their other Demands 'in the same high and commanding strain; and required them to sub- 'mit themselves to his mercy, and to deliver their Captains and Lieu- 'tenants into the hands of his Lieutenants; and to disperse, and car- 'ry themselves as became good and obedient Subjects, and to put a 'hundred of their number into the hands of his Lieutenants, to be or- 'dered as they had deserved.

When this answer was brought to them, it raised their Spirits higher. The practising Clergy-men continued to inflame them. They persuaded them, That the Christian Religion would be very soon decayed, and taken away quite, if they did not vigorously defend it: That it would come to that, that no Man should marry a Wife, receive any of the Sacraments, nor eat a piece of roast Meat, but he should pay for it: That it were better to live under the Turk, than under such oppression. Therefore there was no cause in which they could with more honour and a better conscience hazard their Lives, than for the Holy Faith. This encouraged and kept them together a little longer. They had forced many of the Gentry of the Country to go along with them. These sent a secret Message to the Duke of Suffolk, letting him know what ill effects the King's rough answer had produced: That they had joyned with the People only to moderate them a little, and they knew nothing that would be so effectual as the offer of a general pardon. So the Duke of Suffolk, as he moved towards them with the Forces which he had drawn together, sent to the King to know his pleasure, and earnestly advised a gentle composing of the matter without Blood. At that same time the King was advertised from the North, that there was a general and formidable Rising there. Of which he had the greater apprehensions, because of their neighbourhood to Scotland; whose King, being the King's Nephew, was the Heir presumptive of the Crown, since the King had Illegitimated both his Daughters. And though the King's firm Alliance with France made him less apprehensive of trouble from Scotland, and their King was at this time in France, to marry the Daughter of Francis; yet he did not know how far a general Rising might invite that King, to send orders to head and aid the Rebels in the North. Therefore he resolved first to quiet Lincolnshire. And as he had raised a great force about London, with which he was marching in Person against them; so he sent a new Proclamation, requiring them to return to their obedience, with secret assurances of mercy. By these means they were melted away. Those who had been carryed in the Stream, submitted to the King's mercy, and promised all obedience for the future: Others, that were obstinate, obstinate, and knew themselves unpardonable, fled Northward, and joyned themselves to the Rebels there: Some of their other Leaders were apprehended, in particular the Cobler, and were Executed. 1536.

But for the Northern Rebellion, as the Parties concerned, being at a greater distance from the Court, had larger opportunities to gather themselves into a huge Body; so the whole Contrivance of it was better laid. One Ask Commanded in Chief. He was a Gentleman of an ordinary condition, but understood well how to draw on and Govern a Multitude. Their march was called the Pilgrimage of Grace. And to inveigle the People, some Priests marched before them with Crosses in their hands. In their Banners they had a Crucifix with the Five wounds, and a Chalice: and every one wore on his sleeve, as the badge of the Party, an Emblem of the Five Wounds of Christ, with the name Jesus wrought in the midst. All that joyned to them took an Oath, 'That they entred into this Pilgrimage of Grace, for 'the love of God, the preservation of the King's Person, an Issue, 'the purifying the Nobility, and driving away all base born and ill 'Councellors; and for no particular profit of their own, nor to do dis-'pleasure to any, nor to kill any for envy; but to take before 'them the Cross of Christ, his Faith, the Restitution of the Church, 'and the Suppression of Hereticks, and their Opinions. These were specious pretences, and very apt to work upon a giddy and discontented multitude. So People flocked about their Crosses and Standards in great numbers,; and they grew to be 40000 strong. They went over the Country without any great opposition. The Arch-Bishop of York and the Lord Darcy were in Pomfret Castle; which they yielded to them, and were made to swear their Covenant. They were both suspected of being secret Promoters of the Rebellion: The latter suffered for it, but how the former excused himself I cannot give any account. They also took York and Hull; but though they summoned the Castle of Skipton, yet the Earl of Cumberland, who would not degenerate from his Noble Ancestors, held it out against all their force: and though many of the Gentlemen, whom he had entertained at his own cost, deserted him, yet he made a brave resistance. Scarborough Castle was also long besieged; but there Sir Ralph Evers, that Commanded it, gave an un-exampled instance of his fidelity and courage; for though his Provisions fell short, so that for twenty days he and his men had nothing but Bread and Water, yet they stood out till they were relieved. Which grew very formidable.

This Rising in Yorkshire encouraged those of Lancashire, the Bishoprick of Durham, and Westmorland, to Arm. Against these the Earl of Shrewsbury, that he might not fall short of the Gallantry and Loyalty of his renown'd Ancestors, made head: though he had no Commission from the King. But he knew his zeal and fidelity would easily procure him a Pardon, which he modestly asked for the service he had done. The King sent him not only that, but a Commission to Command in Chief all his Forces in the North. To his Assistance he ordered the Earl of Derby to march; and sent Courtney Marques of Exeter, and the Earls of Huntington, and Rutland, to joyn him. He also ordered the Duke of Suffolk, with the force that he had led into Lincolnshire, to lie still there; least they, being but newly quieted, should 1536. break out again, and fall upon his Armies behind; when the Yorkshire men met them before.

The Duke of Norfolk and others sent against them.

On the 20th of October, he sent the Duke of Norfolk with more forces to joyn the Earl of Shrewsbury: But the Rebels were very numerous and desperate. When the Duke of Norfolk understood their strength, he saw great reason to proceed with much caution: for if they had got the least advantage of the King's Troops, all the discontents in England would upon the report of that have broken out. He saw their numbers were now such, that the gaining some time was their ruin: For such a great Body could not subsist long together, without much provisions; and that must be very hard for them to bring in: So he set forward a Treaty. It was both honourable for the King to offer Mercy to his distracted Subjects, and of great advantage to his affairs: for as their numbers did every day lessen; so the King's forces were still encreasing. He wrote to the King, that considering the season of the year, he thought the offering some fair conditions might persuade them to lay down their Arms, and disperse themselves: Yet when the Earl of Shrewsbury sent a Herauld with a Proclamation, ordering them to lay down their Arms, and submit to the King's Mercy; Aske received him sitting in State, with the Arch-Bishop on the one hand, and the Lord Darcy on the other, but would not suffer any Proclamation to be made, till he knew the Contents of it. And when the Herauld told what they were, he sent him away without suffering him to publish it. And then the Priests used all their endeavours to engage the People to a firm resolution of not dispersing themselves, till all matters about Religion were fully settled.

As they went forward, they every-where repossessed the ejected Monks of their Houses; and this encouraged the rest, who had a great mind to be in their old Nests again. They published also many stories among them of the many growing burdens of the King's Government, and made them believe that Impositions would be laid on every thing that was either bought or sold. But the King hearing how strong they were, sent out a general Summons to all the Nobility to meet him at Northampton the 7th of November. And the forces sent against the Rebels advanced to Doncaster, to hinder them from coming further southward; and took the Bridge which they fortified, and laid their forces along the River to maintain that Pass.

They advance to Doncaster.

The Writers of that time say, that the day of Battel was agreed on; but that the Night before, excessive Rains falling, the River swelled so, that it was unpassable next day, and they could not force the Bridge. Yet it is not likely the Earl of Shrewsbury, having in all but 5000 men about him, would agree to a pitched Battel with those who were Six times his number, being then 30000. Therefore it is more likely that the Rebels only intended to pass the River the next day, which the Rain that fell hindred: But the Duke of Norfolk continued to press a Treaty, which was hearkned to by the other side; who were reduced to great straits; for their Captain would not suffer them to spoyl the Country, and they were no longer able to subsist without doing that. The Duke of Norfolk directed some that were secretly gained, or had been sent over to them as

Deserters,

Deſerters, to ſpread reports among them, that their Leaders were making Terms for themſelves, and would leave the reſt to be undone. This joyned to their neceſſities, made many fall off every day. 1536.

The Duke of Norfolk finding his Arts had ſo good an operation, offered to go to Court, with any whom they would ſend with their demands, and to intercede for them. This he knew would take up ſome time, and moſt of them would be diſperſed before he could return. So they ſent two Gentlemen, whom they had forced to go with them, to the King to Windſor. Upon this the King diſcharged the Rendezvous at Northampton, and delayed the ſending an anſwer as much as could be: But at laſt, hearing that though moſt of them were diſperſed, yet they had engaged to return upon warning, and that they took it ill that no anſwer came; he ſent the Duke of Norfolk to them with a general pardon, ſix only excepted by name, and four others that were not named. But in this the King's Councels were generally cenſured, for every one was now in fear, and ſo the Rebels rejected the Propoſition. The King alſo ſent them word by their own Meſſenger, 'That he took it very ill at their hands, that they 'had choſen rather to riſe in Arms againſt him, than to Petition him 'about thoſe things which were uneaſie to them. And to appeaſe them a little, the King by new Injunctions, commanded the Clergy to continue the uſe of all the Ceremonies of the Church. This, it is like, was intended for keeping up the four Sacraments, which had not been mentioned in the former Articles. The Clergy, that were with the Rebels, met at Pomfret to draw up Articles to be offered at the Treaty that was to be at Doncaſter: where three hundred were ordered to come from the Rebels to treat with the King's Commiſſioners. So great a number was called, in hopes that they would diſagree about their Demands, and ſo fall out among themſelves. On the 6th of December they met to treat, and it ſeems had ſo laid their matter before, that they agreed upon theſe following Demands.

The Duke of Norfolk breaks them by delays.

'A general Pardon to be granted: a Parliament to be held at 'York; and courts of juſtice to be there; that none on the North 'of Trent might be brought to London upon any Law-ſute. They deſired a Repeal of ſome Acts of Parliament: Thoſe for the laſt 'Subſidy, for uſes, for making words miſpriſion of Treaſon, and for 'the Clergies paying their Tenths and firſt Fruits to the King. They 'deſired the Princeſs Mary might be reſtored to her right of Succeſ'ſion; the Pope to his wonted Juriſdiction, and the Monks to their 'Houſes again; that the Lutherans might be puniſhed; that Audley 'the Lord Chancellor, and Cromwell the Lord Privy-Seal, might be ex'cluded from the next Parliament; and Lee and Leighton, that had 'viſited the Monaſteries, might be impriſoned for Bribery and Ex'tortion.

Their Demands.

But the Lords, who knew that the King would by no means agree to theſe Propoſitions, rejected them. Upon which the Rebels took heart again, and were growing more enraged and deſperate; ſo that the Duke of Norfolk wrote to the King, that if ſome content were not give them, it might end very ill, for they were much ſtronger than his Forces were: And both he, and the other Commanders of the King's Forces, in their hearts wiſhed that moſt of their Demands were granted 1536. granted; being Persons, who though they complied with the King, and were against that Rebellion, yet were great Enemies to Lutheranism, and wished a Reconciliation with Rome; of which the Duke of Norfolk was afterwards accused by the Lord Darcy, as if he had secretly encouraged them to insist on these Demands. The King seeing the humour was so obstinate, resolved to use gentler Remedies; and so sent to the Duke of Norfolk a general Pardon, with a promise of a Parliament, ordering him not to make use of these, except in extremity.

That was no easie thing to that Duke, since he might be afterwards made to answer for it, whether the extremity was really such, as to justifie his granting these things. But the Rebels were become again as numerous as ever, and had resolved to cross the River, and to force the King's Camp, which was still much inferior to theirs in number. But Rains falling the second time, made the Foords again unpassable. This was spoken by the King's Party, as little less than a Miracle; that God's Providence had twice so opportunely interposed for the stopping of the progress of the Rebels: And it is very probable that on the other side, it made great impression on the Superstitious multitude; and both discouraged them, and disposed them, to accept of the offer of Pardon, and a Parliament to be soon called, for considering their other Demands. The King signed the Pardon at Richmond the 9th of December: by which all their Treasons and Rebellion up to that day were pardoned, provided they made their submission to the Duke of Norfolk and the Earl of Shrewsbury, and lived in all due obedience for the future. 'The King sent likewise a long answer to their Demands, as to what they complained about the subversion of the Faith; He protested his zeal for the true Christian Faith, and that he would live and die in the defence and preservation of it. But the ignorant multitude were not to instruct him what the true Faith was, nor to presume to correct what he and the whole Convocation had agreed on. That as he had preserved the Church of England in her true Liberties, so he would do still; and that he had done nothing that was so oppressive, as many of his Progenitors had done upon less grounds. But that he took it very ill of them, who had rather one Cardinal or two should enjoy the Profits of their Monasteries, to support them in their dissolute and abominable course of Living, than that their King should have them for defraying the great Charge he was at for their defence against Foreign Enemies. For the Laws, it was high presumption in a rude multitude to take on them to judge what Laws were good, and what not. They had more reason to think, that he after twenty eight years Reign should know it better than they could. And for his Government, he had so long preserved his Subjects in Peace and Justice, had so defended them from their Enemies, had so secured his Frontier, had granted so many general Pardons, had been so unwilling to punish his Subjects, and so ready to receive them into mercy; that they could shew no parallel to his Government among all their former Kings. And whereas it was said, That he had many of the Nobility of his Council, in the beginning of his Reign and few now; he shewed them in that one instance, how they were abused by the lying slanders of some disaffected Persons. For when he came to the Crown, there were none that were born

The King's answer to them.

'Noble

'Noble, of his Council, but only the Earl of Surrey, and the Earl of Shrewsbury; whereas now, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Marques of Exeter, the Lord Steward, the Earls of Oxford and Sussex, and the Lord Sands were of the Privy-Council: And for the Spiritualty, the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of Winchester, Hereford and Chichester, were also of it: And he and his whole Council judging it necessary to have some at the board, who understood the Law of England, and the Treaties with Foreign Princes; he had by their Unanimous Advice brought in his Chancellor, and the Lord Privy-Seal. He thought it strange, that they who were but Brutes, should think they could better judge who should be his Counsellors than himself and his whole Council: Therefore he would bear no such thing at their hands; it being inconsistent with the duty of good Subjects, to meddle in such matters. But if they or any of his other Subjects, could bring any just complaint against any about him, he was ready to hear it; and if it were proved, he would punish it according to Law. As for the complaints against some of the Prelates for preaching against the Faith, they could know none of these things but by the report of others; since they lived at such a distance, that they themselves had not heard any of them preach. Therefore he required them not to give credit to Lies, nor be misled by those who spread such Calumnies and ill Reports: And he concluded all with a severe Expostulation; adding that such was his love to his Subjects, that imputing this Insurrection, rather to their folly and lightness, than to any malice or rancour, he was willing to pass it over more gently, as they would perceive by his Proclamation. 1536.

Now the People were come to themselves again, and glad to get off so easily; and they all chearfully accepted the King's offers, and went home again to their several dwellings. Yet the Clergy were no way satisfied, but continued still to practise amongst them, and kept the Rebellion still on foot; so that it broke out soon after. The Duke of Norfolk, and the Earl of Shrewsbury, were ordered to lie still in the Country with their Forces, till all things were more fully composed. They made them all come to a full submission; and first, to revoke all Oaths and Promises made, during the Rebellion, for which they asked the King's Pardon on their knees; 2ly, To swear to be true to the King, and his Heirs and Successors; 3ly, To obey and maintain all the Acts of Parliament made during the King's reign. 4ly, Not to take Arms again but by the King's Authority. 5ly, To apprehend all Seditious Persons. 6ly. To remove all the Monks, Nuns and Friars, whom they had placed again in the dissolve Monasteries. There were also Orders given to send Ask, their Captain, and the Lord Darcy to Court. Ask was kindly received, and well used by the King. He had shewed great conduct in Commanding the Rebels; and it seems the King had a mind, either to gain him to his service, or, which I suspect was the true Cause, to draw from him a discovery of all those, who in the other Parts of the Kingdom, had favoured or relieved them. For he suspected, not without cause, that some of the great Abbots had given secret supplies of Money to the Rebels; for which many of them were afterwards tryed and attainted. The Lord Darcy was under great apprehensions, and studied to purge himself, 1537. The Rebellion is quieted.

1537. himself, that he was forced to a Compliance with them; but pleaded, that the long and important services, he had done the Crown for fifty years, he being then fourscore, together with his great Age and Infirmity, might mitigate the King's displeasure. But he was made Prisoner. Whether this gave those who had been in Arms, new jealousies, that the King's Pardon would not be inviolably observed; or whether the Clergy had of new, prevailed on them to rise in Arms, I cannot determine: But it broke out again, though not so dangerously as before. Two Gentlemen of the North, Musgrave and Tilby, raised a body of 8000 Men; and thought to have surprized Carlisle; but were repulsed by those within. And in their return the Duke of Norfolk fell upon them, and routed them. He took many prisoners, and by Martial Law hanged up all their Captains, and Seventy other Prisoners on the Walls of Carlisle. Others at that same time thought to have surprized Hull; but it was prevented, and the leaders of that Party were also taken and executed.

New risings but soon dispersed.

Many other Risings were in several places of the Countrey, which were all soon represt; the ground of them all was, That the Parliament which was promised, was not called: But the King said, they had not kept conditions with him, nor would he call a Parliament till all things were quieted. But the Duke of Norfolk's vigilance every where, prevented their gathering together in any great Body. And after several unsuccessful Artempts, as length the Country was absolutely quieted in January following. And then the Duke of Norfolk proceeded according to the Martial Law against many whom he had taken. Ask had also left the Court without leave, and had gone amongst them, but was quickly taken. So he and many others were sent to several places, to be made publick Examples. He suffered at York, others at Hull, and in other Towns in Yorkshire. But the Lord Darcy, and the Lord Hussy, were arraigned at Westminster, and attainted of Treason: The former for the Northern, and the other for the Lincolnshire Insurrection. The Lord Darcy was beheaded at Tower-hill, and was much lamented. Every body thought that considering his Merits, his Age, and former Services, he had hard measure. The Lord Hussy was beheaded at Lincoln. The Lord Darcy in his Tryal accused the Duke of Norfolk; that in the Treaty at Doncaster, he had encouraged the Rebels to continue in their demands. This the Duke denied, and desired a Tryal by Combate, and gave some presumptions to shew that the Lord Darcy bore him ill-will, and said this out of Malice. The King either did not believe this, or would not seem to believe it: And the Duke's great diligence in the Suppression of these Commotions set him beyond all jealousies. But after those Executions, the King wrote to the Duke in July next, to Proclaim an absolute Amnesty over all the North; which was received with great joy, every body being in fear of himself: and so the threatning storm was dissipated without the effusion of much blood, save what the Sword of Justice drew. At the same time the King of Scotland returning from France with his Queen, and touching on the Coast of England; many of the People fell down at his feet, praying him to assist them, and he should have all. But he was, it seems, bound up by the French King: and so went home without giving them any any encouragement. And thus ended this Rebellion, which was chiefly carried on by the Clergy, under the pretence of Religion. 1537.

A new Visitation of Monasteries.

And now the King was delivered of all his apprehensions that he had been in for some years, in fear of Stirs at home. But they being now happily composed; as he knew it would so overawe the rest of his discontented Subjects, that he needed fear nothing from them for a great while; so it encouraged him to go on in his other designs, of suppressing the rest of the Monasteries; and reforming some other Points of Religion. Therefore there was a new Visitation appointed for all the Monasteries of England. And the Visiters were ordered, to Examine all things that related either to their Conversation, to their affection to the King, and the Supremacy, or to their Superstition, in their several Houses: To discover what Cheats and Impostures there were, either in their Images, Relicks, or other miraculous things, by which they had drawn People to their Houses on Pilgrimages, and gotten from them any great Presents. Also to try how they were affected during the late Commotions, and to discover every thing that was amiss in them, and report it to the Lord Vice-gerent. In the Records of the whole Twenty Eighth year of the King's Reign, I find but one Original Surrender of any Religious House. The Abbot of Furneſe in Lincolnſhire valued at 960 lib. with thirty Monks resigning up that House to the King, on the 9th of April, which was very near the end of the year of the King's Reign, for it commenced on the 22d of April. Two other Surrenders are enrolled that year. The one was of Bermondſey in Surrey, the first of June in the twenty eighth of the King's Reign. The Preamble was, that they surrendred in hopes of greater Benevolence from the King. But this was the effect of some secret practice, and not of the Act of Parliament. For it was valued at 548 lib. and so fell not within the Act. The other was of Buſtlisham or Biſhtam in Berkſhire, made by Barlow Bishop of St. Davids, that was Commendator of it, and a great Promoter of the Reformation. It was valued at 327 lib. But in the following year they made a quicker Progress, and found strange Enormities in the greater Houses. It seems all the Houses under 200 lib. of Rent were not yet suppressed. For I find many within that value afterwards resigning their Houses. So that I am enclined to believe, that the first Visitation being made towards the Suppression of the lesser Monasteries, and that (as appears by their instructions) being not to be finished till they had made a report of what they had done to the Court of Augmentations, who were after the report made to determine what Pensions were to be reserved to the Abbot and other Officers; (which report was to be made in the Octaves of St. Michael, and after that, a new Commission was to be given for their Suppression;) when that was done, they went no further at that time. So that I cannot think there were many Houses Suppressed when these Stirs began: and after their first rising, it is not likely that great Progress would be made in a business that was like to inflame the People more, and encrease the number of the Rebels. Neither do I find any Houses suppressed by virtue of the former Act of Parliament till the twenty ninth year of the King's Reign.

Some of the great Abbots surrender their Houses.

And yet they made no great hast this year. For there are but 1537. twenty one Surrenders all this year, either in the Rolls, or Augmentation-Office. And now, not only ſmall Abbeys, but greater ones were ſurrendred to the King. The Abbots were brought to do it upon ſeveral Motives. Some had been faulty during the late Rebellion, and were liable to the King's diſpleaſure: and theſe to redeem themſelves, compounded the Matter by a reſignation of their Houſe. Others began to like the Reformation, and that made them the more willing to ſurrender their Houſes; ſuch as Barlow, Biſhop of St. David's, who not only ſurrendred up his own Houſe of Buſhliſham, but prevailed on many others to do the like: Others were convicted of great diſorders in their Converſation; and theſe not daring to ſtand a Tryal, were glad to accept of a Penſion for life, and deliver up their Houſe. Others were guilty of making great waſtes and Dilapidations. For they all ſaw the Diſſolution of their Houſes approaching, and ſo every one was induced to take all the care he could to provide for himſelf, and his kindred; ſo that the Viſitors found in ſome of the Richeſt Abbeys of England, as St. Albans, and Battell, ſuch depredations made, that at St. Albans an Abbot could not ſubſiſt any longer, the rents were ſo low; and in Battell, as all their furniture was old and torn, not worth an 100 lib. ſo both in Houſe and Chappel they had not 400 Marks worth of Plate. In other Houſes they found not above twelve or fifteen Ounces of Plate, and no furniture at all, but only ſuch things as they could not embezel, as the Walls, and Windows, Bells and Lead. In other Houſes, the Abbot and Monks were glad to accept of a Penſion for themſelves during life: and ſo being only concerned for their own particular intereſt, reſigned their Houſe to the King. Generally, the Monks had eight Marks a year Penſion, till they were provided for. The Abbots Penſions were proportioned to the Value of their Houſe, and to their Innocence. The Abbots of St. Albans, and Tewksbury, had 400 Marks a year a piece. The Abbot of St. Edmundsbury was more Innocent; for the Viſitors wrote from thence, that they could find no ſcandals in that Houſe: So he (it ſeems) was not eaſily brought to Reſign his Houſe, and had 500 Marks Penſion reſerved to him. And for their inferior Officers ſome had 30, ſome 10, or 8, and the loweſt 6 lib. Penſion.

In other places, upon a vacancy, either by death or deprivation, they did put in an Abbot only to reſign up the Houſe. For after the King's Supremacy was eſtabliſhed, all thoſe Abbots that had been formerly confirmed by the Pope, were placed in this manner. The King granted a Conge d' elire to the Prior and Convent, with a Miſſive Letter, declaring the name of the perſon whom they ſhould chooſe: then they returned an election to the King, who, upon that, gave his aſſent to it by a Warrant under the great Seal, which was certified to the Lord Vice-gerent; who thereupon Confirmed the Election, and returned him back to the King, to take the Oaths: upon which the Temporalities were reſtored. Thus all the Abbots were now placed by the King, and were generally pickt out to ſerve this turn. Others, in hope of advancement to Biſhopricks, or to be Suffragan Biſhops, as the inferior ſort of them were made generally, were glad to recommend themſelves to the King's favour, by a quick and cheerful Surrender of their Monaſtery. Upon ſome of theſe inducement ducements it was, that the greateſt number of the Religious Houſes were reſigned to the King, before there was any Act of Parliament made for their ſuppreſſion. In ſeveral Houſes, the Viſitors, who were generally, either Maſters of Chancery, or Auditors of the Court of Augmentations, ſtudied not only to bring them to reſign their Houſes, but to Sign Confeſſions of their paſſed lewd and diſſolute lives. Of theſe, there is only one now extant, which (it is like) eſcaped the general raſure and deſtruction of all Papers of that kind, in Queen Mary's time. But from the Letters that I have ſeen, I perceive there were ſuch Confeſſions made by many other Houſes. 1538.

Confeſſions of horrid Crimes made in ſeveral Houſes.

That Confeſſion of the Prior and Benedictines of St. Andrews in Northampton is to be ſeen in the Record of the Court of Augmentations. In which, with the moſt aggravating expreſſions that could be deviſed, they acknowledged their paſt ill life, "for which the Pitt of Hell was ready to "ſwallow them up. They confeſſed that they had neglected the Wor-"ſhip of God, lived in Idleneſs, Gluttony, and Senſuality, with many "other woful expreſſions to that purpoſe.

Collect. Numb. 3. ſect. 4.

Other Houſes, as the Monaſtery of Betleſden, reſigned with this preamble, "That they did profoundly conſider, that the manner and "trade of living, which they, and others of their pretended Religi-"on, had for a long time followed, conſiſted in ſome dumb ceremo-"nies, and other Conſtitutions, of the Biſhops of Rome, and other "foreign Potentates; as the Abbot of Ciſteaux, by which they were "blindly led, having no true knowledge of God's Laws; procuring "exemptions from their Ordinary and Dioceſan, by the Power of the "Biſhop of Rome, and ſubmitting themſelves wholly to a foreign "Power, who never came hither to reform their abuſes, which were "now found among them. But that now knowing the moſt per-"fect way of Living is ſufficiently declared by Chriſt and his Apo-"ſtles; and that it was moſt fit for them to be Governed by the "King, who was their Supream Head on Earth, they ſubmitted them-"ſelves to his Mercy, and ſurrendred up their Monaſtery to him on the "25th of September in the 30th year of his Reign. This writing was ſigned by the Abbot, the Sub-Prior, and nine Monks. There are five other Surrenders to the ſame purpoſe; by the Gray, and White Friars of Stamford, the Gray-Friars of Coventry, Bedford, and Ailesbury, yet to be ſeen. Some are reſigned upon this Preamble, "That they "hoped the King would of new found their Houſe; which was o-"therwiſe like to be ruined, both in Spirituals and Temporals. So did the Abbot of Chertſey in Surrey, with fourteen Monks on the 14th of July in the 29th year of this Reign, whoſe Houſe was valued at 744 lib. I have ſome reaſon to think that this Abbot was for the Reformation, and intended to have had his Houſe new founded to be a Houſe of true and well regulated devotion: And ſo I find the Prior of great Malverne in Worceſterſhire offered ſuch a Reſignation. He was recommended by Biſhop Latimer to Cromwell, with an earneſt deſire that his Houſe might ſtand, not in Monkery, but ſo as to be converted to Preaching, Study, and Prayer. And the good Prior was willing to compound for his Houſe by a Preſent of 500 Marks to the King, and of 200 to Cromwell. He is commended, for being an old worthy man, a good Houſe-keeper, and one that daily fed many poor 1538. people. To this Latimer adds; Alas my good Lord! Shall we not see Two or Three in every Shire changed to such remedy.

But the Resolution was taken once to extirpate all. And therefore though the Visitors interceeded earnestly for one Nunnery in Oxfordshire, Godstow, where there was great strictness of Life; and to which most of the young Gentlewomen of the County were sent to be bred; so that the Gentry of the Country desired the King would spare the House, yet all was uneffectual.

The form of most surrenders. Collect. Numb. 3. Sect. 1.

The General Form in which most of these Resignations begins, is "That the Abbot and Brethren, upon full deliberation, certain knowledge, of their own proper motion, for certain just and reasonable causes, specially moving them in their Souls and Consciences, did freely, and of their own accord, give and grant their Houses to the King, Others (it seems) did not so well like this preamble; and therefore did, without any reason or preamble, give away their Houses to the Visitors, as Feoffees in trust for the King's use. And thus they went on, procuring daily more surrenders. So that in the thirtieth year of the King's Reign there were 159 Resignations enrolled, of which the Originals of 155 do yet remain. And for the Readers Collect. Numb. 3. Sect. 3. further satisfaction, he shall find, in the Collection at the end of this Book, the names of all these Houses so surrendred, with other particulars relating to them, which would too much weary him, if inserted in the thread of this Work. But there was no Law to force any to make such Resignations. So that many of the great Abbots would not comply with the King in this matter, and stood it out till after the following Parliament that was in the 31th year of his Reign.

It was questioned by many whether these surrenders could be good in Law, since the Abbots were but Trustees and Tenants for Life. It was thought they could not absolutely alienate, and give away their House for ever. But the Parliament afterwards declared the Resignations were good in Law. For by their Foundations all was trusted to the Abbot and the Senior Brethren of the House; who putting the Covent-Seal to any Deed, it was of force in Law. It was also said, that they thus surrendring, had forfeited their Charters and Foundations; and so the King might seize and possess them with a good Title, if not upon the Resignation, yet upon Forfeiture. But others thought, that, whatsoever the Nicety of Law might give the King, yet there was no sort of equity in it, that a few Trustees, who were either bribed, or frighted, should pass away that which was none of theirs, but only given them in Trust and for Life. Other Abbots were more roughly handled. The Prior of Wooburn was suspected of favouring the Rebels, of being against the King's Supremacy, and for the Pope's, and of being for the General Council then summoned to Mantua. And he was dealt with to make a submission and acknowledgment. In an account of a long Conference which he had with a Privy Councellor under his own hand, I find that the great thing which he took offence at, was, That Latimer and some other Bishops Preached against the Veneration of the Blessed Virgin, and the other Saints: and that the English Bible then set out, differed in many things from the Latin; with several lesser matters. So that they looked on their Religion as changed, changed, and wondered that the Judgments of God upon Queen Anne had not terrified others from going on to ſubvert the Faith: yet he was prevailed with, and did again ſubmit to the King, and acknowledge his Supremacy; but he afterwards joyned himſelf to the Rebels and was taken with them, together with the Abbot of Whaley, and two Monks of his Houſe; and the Abbot of Gervanx, with a Monk of his Houſe; and the Abbot of Sawley in Lancaſhire, with the Prior of that Houſe; and the Prior of Burlington; who were all attainted of High Treaſon, and Executed. The Abbots of Glaſtenbury and Reading, were men of great Power and Wealth. The one Was rated at 3508. lib. and the other at 2116. lib. They ſeeing the ſtorm like to break out on themſelves, ſent a great deal of the Plate and Money that they had in their Houſe, to the Rebels in the North. Which being afterwards diſcovered, they were attainted of High Treaſon a year after this; but I mention it here of the affinity of the matter: Further particulars about the Abbot of Reading I have not yet diſcovered. But there is an account given to Cromwell of the proceedings againſt the Abbot of Glaſtenbury in two Letters which I have ſeen, the one was writ by the Sheriff of the County, the other by Sir John Ruſſel, who was preſent at his Tryal, and was reputed a man of as great Integrity and Vertue as any in that time; which he ſeems to have left as an Inheritance to that Noble Family that has deſcended from him. Theſe inform, that he was Indicted of Burglary, as well as Treaſon; for having broken the Houſe in his Monaſtery where the Plate was kept, and taken it out, which as Sir William Thomas ſays, was ſent to the Rebels. The evidence being brought to the Jury, who (as Sir John Ruſſel writes,) were as good and worthy men as had ever been on any Jury in that County; they found him guilty. He was carried to the place of Execution, near his own Monaſtery; where (as the Sheriff writes,) he acknowledged his guilt, and begged God and the King pardon for it. The Abbot of Colcheſter was alſo attainted of High Treaſon. What the particulars were I cannot tell. For the Record of their Attainders was loſt. But ſome of our own Writers deſerve a ſevere cenſure, who Write, It was for denying the King's Supremacy; whereas if they had not undertaken to Write the Hiſtory without any information at all, they muſt have ſeen that the whole Clergy, but moſt particularly the Abbots, had over and over again acknowledged the King's Supremacy. 1538.

Divers opinions about these.

For clearing which and diſcovering the Impudence of Sander's Relation of this matter, I ſhall lay before the Reader, the Evidences that I find of the Submiſſion of theſe and all the other Abbots to the King's Supremacy: Firſt, in the Convocation, in the 22d year of this Reign, they all acknowledged the King. Supream Head of the Church of England. They did all alſo ſwear to maintain the Act of the Succeſſion of the Crown, made in the 25th year of his Reign, in which the Pope's Power was plainly condemned. For in the proceedings againſt More and Fiſher, it was frequently repeated to them, that all the Clergy had ſworn it. It is alſo entred in the Journal of the Houſe of Lords, that all the Members of both Houſes ſwore it at their breaking up: And the ſame Journals inform us, that the Abbots of Colcheſter and Reading ſate in that Parliament, and as there 1537. there was no Protestation made against any of the Acts passed in that Session, so it is often entred, that the Acts were agreed to by the Unanimous consent of the Lords. It appears also by several Original Letters, that the Heads of all the Religious Houses in England had Signed that Position, that the Pope had no more Jurisdiction in this Kingdom, than any foreign Bishop whatsoever. And it was rejected by none but some Carthusians, and Franciscans of the Observance, who were proceeded against, for refusing to acknowledge it: When they were so pressed in it, none can imagine that a Parliamentary Abbot would have been dispenced with. And in the last Parliament, in which the second Oath about the Succession to the Crown was enacted, it was added, That they should also swear the King to be the Supream head of the Church. The Abbots of Glassenbury and Reading were then present, as appears by the Journals, and consented to it: So little reason there is for Imagining that they refused that, or any other Complyance that might secure them in their Abbeys.

In particular, the Abbot of Reading had so got into Cromwell's good opinion, that in some differences between him and Shaxton Bishop of Salisbury, that was Cromwell's creature, he had the better of the Bishop. Upon which, Shaxton, who was a proud ill-natured man, wrote a high expostulating Letter to Cromwell, Complaining of an Injunction he had granted against him at the Abbots desire. He also "shewed that in some contests between him and his Residentiaries, "and between him and the Major of Salisbury, Cromwell was always "against him: he likewise challenged him for not answering "his Letters. He tells him, God will judge him for abusing his "Power as he did; he prays God to have pity on him, and to turn "his heart, with a great deal more provoking Language. He also adds many insolent praises of himself; and his whole Letter is as extravagant a piece of vanity and insolence, as ever I saw. To this Cromwell wrote an answer, that shews him to have been indeed a great man. The Reader will find it in the Collection, and see from it how modestly and discreetly he carried his Greatness.

Collect. Numb. 8. But how justly soever these Abbots were attainted, the seizing on their Abbey-Lands, pursuant to those Attainders, was thought a great stretch of Law; since the Offence of an Ecclesiastical Incumbent is a Personal thing, and cannnot prejudice the Church; no more than a secular man, who is in an Office, does by being Attainted, bring any diminution of the Rights of his Office on his successors. It is true there were some words cast into the thirteenth Act of the Parliament, in the 26th year of this Reign, by which divers Offences were made Treason, that seemed to have been designed for such a purpose. The words are, that whatsoever Lands any Traytor had of any Estate of Inheritance in use or possession, by any Right, Title or Means, should be forfeited to the King. By which, as it is certain, Estates in Tayl were comprehended, so the Lands that any Traytor had in Possession or use, seem to be included; and that the rather, because by some following words their Heirs and Successors are for ever excluded. This either was not thought on when the Bishop of Rochester was attainted, or perhaps was not claimed, since the the King intended not to leſſen the number of Biſhopricks, but rather to increaſe them. Beſides, the words of the Statute ſeem only to belong to an Eſtate of Inheritance: within which, Church-Benefices could not be included, without a great force put on them. 'Tis true the word Succeſſor favoured theſe ſeiſures, except that be thought an expletory word put in, out of form, but ſtill to be limited to an Eſtate of Inheritance. That word does alſo import, that ſuch Criminals might have Succeſſors. But if the whole Abbey was forfeited theſe Abbots could have no ſucceſſors: Yet it ſeems the ſeizures of theſe Abbeys were founded on that Statute, and this ſtretch of the Law occaſioned that Explanation, which was added of the words Eſtate of Inheritance, in the Statute made in Edward the Sixth's Reign about Treaſons: Where it is expreſſed that Traitors ſhould forfeit to the Crown, what Lands they had of any Eſtate of Inheritance, to which is added in their own Right, it ſeems on deſign to cut off all Pretence for ſuch Proceeding for the future, as had been in this Reign. But if there were any Illegality in theſe ſeiſures, the following Parliament did at leaſt tacitly juſtifie them. For they excepted out of the Proviſo's made concerning the Abbeys that were ſuppreſſed, ſuch as had been forfeited and ſeized on by any Attainders of Treaſon. 1538.

Another Surrender is not unlike theſe, but rather leſs Juſtifiable. Many of the Carthuſian Monks of London were executed for their open denying of the King's Supremacy, and for receiving Books from foreign parts againſt his Marriage and other proceedings; divers alſo of the ſame Houſe, that favoured them, but ſo ſecretly, that clear Proof could not be found to convict them, were kept Priſoners in their Cells, till they dyed. But the Prior was a worthy man, of whom Thomas Bedyl, one of the Viſitors, writes, that he was a man of ſuch Charity that he had not ſeen the like, and that the eyes of the People were much on that Houſe, and therefore he adviſed that the Houſe might be converted to ſome good uſe. But the Prior was made to reſign, with this Preamble, 'That many of that Houſe had offended the King, 'ſo that their goods might be juſtly confiſcated, and themſelves 'adjudged to a ſevere death: which they deſired to avoid, by an 'humble Submiſſion and Surrender of their Houſe to the King. But there were great Complaints made of the Viſitors, as if they had practiſed with the Abbots and Priors to make theſe Surrenders: and that they had conſpired with them to cheat the King, and had privately embezeled moſt of the Plate and Furniture. The Abbeſs of Cheapſtow complained in particular of Doctor London, one of the Viſitors, that he had been corrupting her Nuns: and generally it was cryed out on, that under-hand and ill practices were uſed. Therefore to quiet theſe reports, and to give ſome colour to juſtifie what they were about, all the foul Stories that could be found out, were publiſhed to defame theſe Houſes. Battell-Abbey was repreſented to be a little Sodom; ſo was Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, with ſeveral other Houſes. But for Whoredom and Adultery they found Inſtances without number; and of many other unnatural practices and ſecret Luſts, with arts to hinder Conceptions and make Abortions. But no ſtory became ſo publick, as a diſcovery made of the Prior of the Croſſed Friars in London; who on a Friday at eleven a Clock in the day was found in bed 1538. bed with a Whore. He fell down on his knees, and prayed those who surprized him, not to publish his shame: But they had a mind to make some advantage by it, and asked him Money. He gave them 30 lib. which he protested was all he had, but he promised them 30 lib. more: yet failing in the payment, a Sute followed on it: and in a Bill which I have seen given to Cromwel, then Master of the Rolls, the case is related.

The Superstition and cheats of these Houses discovered.

But all the stories of this kind served only to disgrace those Abbots or Monks that were so faulty. And the People generally said, there were personal crimes which ought to be punished: but they were no way satisfied with the Justice of the King's proceedings, against whole Houses for the faults of a few. Therefore another way was thought on, which indeed proved more effectual, both for recovering the People out of the Superstitious fondness they had for their Images and Relicks, and for discovering the secret Impostures that had been long practised in these Houses. And this was, to order the Visitors to examine well all the Relicks, and feigned Images, to which Pilgrimages were wont to be made. In this, Doctor London did great service. From Reading he writes, 'That the chief Relicks of 'Idolatry in the Nation were there: an Angel with one wing, that 'brought over the Spears head that pierced our Saviours side. To 'which he adds a long Inventory of their other Relicks, and says 'there were as many more as would fill Four Sheets of Paper. He 'also writes from other places that he had every-where taken down 'their Images and Trinkets. At St. Edmundsbury, as John ap Rice informed they found some of the Coals that roasted St. Laurence, the Parings of St. Edmunds Toes, St. Thomas Becket's Penknife, and Boxes with as many pieces of the Cross of our Saviour, as would make a large whole Cross. They had also Relicks against Rain, and for hindring weeds to spring. But to pursue this further were endless, the Relicks were so innumerable. And the value which the People had of them may be gathered from this; that a piece of St. Andrews finger set in an ounce of Silver, was laid to pledge by the House of Westm. for 40. lib. but the Visitors, when they suppressed that House, did not think fit to redeem it at so high a rate.

Images publickly broken.

For their Images, some of them were brought to London, and were there at St. Paul's Cross in the sight of all the People, broken; that they might be fully convinced of the jugling Impostures of the Monks. And in particular, the Crucifix of Boxley in Kent, commonly called the Rood of Grace; to which many Pilgrimages had been made, because it was observed sometimes to bow, and to lift it self up, to shake, and to stir head, hands, and feet, to roul the eyes, move the lips, and bend the brows: All which were looked on by the abused multitude, as the effects of a Divine Power. These were now publickly discovered to have been cheats. For the Springs were shewed, by which all these motions were made. Upon which John Hilsey then Bishop of Rochester, made a Sermon, and broke the Rood in pieces. There was also another famous Imposture discovered at Hales in Glocestershire; where the blood of Christ was shewed in a viol of Crystal, which the People sometimes saw, but sometimes they could not see it: So they were made believe, that they were not not capable of ſo ſignal a favour, as long as they were in mortal ſin; and ſo they continued to make Preſents, till they bribed Heaven to give them the ſight of ſo bleſſed a Relick. This was now diſcovered to have been the Blood of a Duck, which they renewed every week: and the one ſide of the Vial was ſo thick, that there was no ſeeing through it, but the other was clear and tranſparent: And it was ſo placed near the Altar, that one in a ſecret place behind, could turn either ſide of it outward. So when they had drained the Pilgrims that came thither, of all they had brought with them, then they afforded them the favour of turning the clear ſide outward; who upon that went home very well-ſatisfied with their Journey, and the expence they had been at. There was brought out of Wales a huge Image of Wood, called Darvel Gatheren, of which one Ellis Price, Viſitor of the Dioceſs of St. Aſaph, gave this account, On the 6th of April, 1537; 'That the people of the Country had 'a great Superſtition for it, and many Pilgrimages were made to it; 'ſo that the day before he wrote, there were reckoned to be above 'five or ſix hundred Pilgrims there: Some brought Oxen and Cattel, 'and ſome brought Mony; and it was generally believed, that if 'any offered to that Image, he had power to deliver his Soul from 'Hell. So it was ordered to be brought to London, where it ſerved for fewel to burn Fryar Forreſt. There was an huge Image of our Lady at Worceſter, that was had in great reverence; which when it was ſtript of ſome veils that covered it, was found to be the Statue of a Biſhop. 1538. Pilgrim. Inglish.

Barlow Biſhop of St. Davids did alſo give many advertiſements of the Superſtition of his Country, and of the Clergy and Monks of that Dioceſs, who were guilty of heatheniſh Idolatry, groſs Impiety, and Ignorance, and of abuſing the people with many evident forgeries: about which he ſaid, he had good evidence when it ſhould be called for. But that which drew moſt Pilgrims and preſents in thoſe parts, was an Image of our Lady, with a Taper in her hand; which was believed to have burnt nine Years, till one forſwearing himſelf upon it, it went out; and was then much reverenced and worſhipped. He found all about the Cathedral ſo full of ſuperſtitious Conceits, that there was no hope of working on them; therefore he propoſed the tranſlating the Epiſcopal Seat from St. Davids to Caermaerden; which he preſſed by many Arguments, and in ſeveral Letters, but with no ſucceſs. Then many rich Shrines of our Lady of Walſingham, of Ipſwich, and Iſlington, with a great many more, were brought up to London, and burnt by Cromwel's Orders.

But the richeſt Shrine in England, was that of Thomas Becket, called St. Thomas of Canterbury the Martyr: who being raiſed up by King Henry the 2d, to the Arch-biſhoprick of Canterbury, did afterwards give that King much trouble, by oppoſing his Authority, and exalting the Pope's. And though he once conſented to the Articles agreed on at Clarendon, for bearing down the Papal, and ſecuring the Regal Power; yet he ſoon after repented of that only piece of Loyalty, of which he was guilty all the while he was Arch-biſhop. He fled to the Pope, who received him as a Confeſſor for the deareſt Article of the Roman Belief: The King and Kingdom were Excommuni- Thomas Becket's Shrine broken.

1538. cated, and put under an Interdict upon his Account. But afterwards upon the Interceſſion of the French King, King Henry and he were reconciled, and the Interdict was taken off. Yet his unquiet Spirit could take no reſt, for he was no ſooner at Canterbury, than he began to embroyl the Kingdom again: and was proceeding by Cenſures againſt the Arch-biſhop of York, and ſome other Biſhops, for crowning the King's Son in his abſence. Upon the news of that, the King being then in Normandy, ſaid, If he had faithful Servants, he would not be ſo troubled with ſuch a Prieſt; whereupon ſome zealous or officious Courtiers, came over and killed him: For which, as the King was made to undergo a ſervere Penance, ſo the Monks were not wanting in their ordinary Arts to give out many miraculous ſtories concerning his Blood. This ſoon drew a Canonization from Rome, and he being a Martyr for the Papacy, was more extolled than all the Apoſtles or Primitive Saints had ever been. So that for 300 Years, he was accounted one of the greateſt Saints in Heaven, as may appear from the accounts in the Leger-Books, of the Offerings made to the three greateſt Altars in Chriſt's Church in Canterbury. The one was to Chriſt, the other to the Virgin, and the third to St. Thomas. In one Year there was offered at Chriſt's Altar, 3 l. 2 s. 6 d. To the Virgins Altar, 63 l. 5 s. 6 d. But to St. Thomas's Altars 832 l. 12 s. 3 d. But the next Year the Odds grew greater; for there was not a penny offered at Chriſts Altar, and at the Virgins, only 4 l. 1 s. 8 d. But at St. Thomas's 954 l. 6 s. 3 d. By ſuch Offerings it came, that his Shrine was of ineſtimable value. There was one Stone offered there by Lewis the 7th of France, who came over to viſit it, in a Pilgrimage, that was believed the Richeſt in Europe. Nor did they think it enough to give him one day in the Kalendar the 29th of December; but unuſual honours were deviſed, for this Martyr of the Liberties of the Church, greater than any that had been given to the Martyrs for Chriſtianity. The day of raiſing his Body, or, as they called it, of his Tranſlation, being the 7th of July, was not only a holy-day, but every 50th Year, there was a Jubilee for 15 days together, and Indulgence was granted, to all that came to viſit his Shrine: as appears from the Record of the ſixth Jubilee after his Tranſlation, Anno 1420; which bears, that there were then about an hundred thouſand ſtrangers come to viſit his Tomb. The Jubilee began at twelve a clock on the Virgil of the Feaſt, and laſted fifteen days. By ſuch Arts they drew an incredible deal of Wealth to his Shrine. The Riches of that, together with his diſloyal practices, made the King reſolve both to un-ſhrine and un-Saint him at once. And then his Skull, which had been much worſhipped, was found an Impoſture. For the true Skull, was lying with the reſt of his bones in his Grave. The Shrine was broken down, and carryed away; the Gold that was about it, filling two Cheſts, which were ſo heavy, that they were a load to eight ſtrong Men to carry them out of the Church. And his Bones were, as ſome ſay, burnt, ſo it was underſtood at Rome; but others ſay, they were ſo mixed with other dead Bones, that it would have been a Miracle indeed to have diſtinguiſhed them afterwards. The King alſo ordered his Name to be ſtruck out of the Kalender, and the Office for his Feſtivity to be daſht out of all Breviaries.

Sonner's Antiquities of Canterbury.

And

And thus was the Superſtition of England to Images and Relicks extirpated. 1538.

Yet the King took care to qualifie the diſtaſte which the Articles publiſhed the former Year had given. And though there was no Parliament in the Year 1537, yet there was a Convocation; upon the concluſion of which, there was printed an Explanation of the chief Points of Religion, ſigned by nineteen Biſhops, eight Arch-Deacons, and ſeventeen Doctors of Divinity and Law. In which there was an Expoſition of the Creed, the ſeven Sacraments, the ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the ſalutation of the Virgin, with an Account of Juſtification and Purgatory. But this Work was put in a better Form afterwards, where the Reader will find a more particular account of it. When all theſe Proceedings of the King's were known at Rome, all the Satyrical Pens there were employed to paint him out, as the moſt Infamous Sacrilegious Tyrant that ever was. They repreſented him as one that made War with Heaven, and the Saints that were there: That committed outrages on the Bodies of the Saints, which the Heatheniſh Romans would have puniſhed ſeverely for any that commited the like on thoſe that were dead, how mean or bad ſoever they had been. All his proceedings againſt the Prieſts or Monks that were attained and executed for high-Treaſon, were repreſented as the effects of ſavage and barbarous Cruelty. His ſuppreſſing the Monaſteries, and devouring what the Devotion of former Ages had conſecrated to God, and his Saints, was called Revanous and Impious Sacrilege; nor was there any thing omitted that could make him appear to poſterity, the blackeſt Tyrant that ever wore a Crown. They compared him to Pharaoh, Nabuchadonoſor, Belſhazzar, Nero, Domitian, and Diocletian; but chiefly to Julian the Apoſtate. This laſt Parallel liked them beſt, and his Learning, his Apoſtacy, and pretence of Reforming, were all thought copied from Julian; only they ſaid his Manners were worſe. Theſe things were every day printed at Rome, and the Informations that were brought out of England were generally addreſſed to Cardinal Pool, whoſe ſtyle was alſo known in ſome of them. All which poſſeſt the King with the deepeſt and moſt implacable hatred to him that ever he bore to any perſon; and did provoke him to all theſe Severities that followed on his Kindred and Family.

New Articles about Religion publiſhed.

Invectives againſt the King printed at Rome.

But the malice of the Court of Rome did not ſtop there. For now the Pope publiſhed all theſe Thunders which he had threatned three Years before. The Bull of Depoſition is printed in Cherubins Bullarium Romanum, which ſince many have the confidence to deny matters of Fact, though moſt publickly acted, ſhould be found in the Collection Papers, the ſubſtance of it is as follows. 'The Pope being God's 'Vicar on Earth; and according to Jeremy's Prophecy, ſet over Na- 'tions and Kingdoms, to root out and deſtroy; and having the Supream 'Power over all the Kings in the whole World; was bound to proceed 'to due correction, when milder courſes were ineffectual: therefore 'ſince King Henry, who had been formerly a Defender of the Faith, 'had fallen from it; had contrary to an Inhibition made, put away 'his Queen, and marryed one Anne Bolein, and had made impious 'and hurtful Laws; denying the Pope to be the Supream Head of

The Pope's Bulls againſt the King.

1538. 'the Church, but assuming that Title to himself; and had required 'all his subjects under pain of death to swear it; and had put the 'Cardinal of Rochester to death, because he would not consent to 'these Heresies; and by all these things had rendred himself unwor- 'thy of his Regal Dignity; and had hardened his heart (as Pharaoh 'did) against all the Admonitions of Pope Clement the 7th: there- 'fore since these his crimes were so notorious, He, in imitation of what 'the Apostle did to Elimas the Magician, proceeds to such Censures 'as he had deserved; and with the advice of his Cardinals, does 'first exhort him and all his Complices, to return from their errours, 'to annull the Acts lately made, and to proceed no farther upon 'them: which he requires him and them to do, under the pains of 'Excommunication and Rebellion, and of the King's losing his King- 'dom, whom he required within 90 days, to appear at Rome, by 'himself or Proxy, and his Complices within 60 days, to give an 'account of their Actions; otherwise he would then proceed to a fur- 'ther sentence against them. And Declares, that if the King and his 'Complices do not appear, he has fallen from the right to his Crown, 'and they from the right to their Estates; and when they die, they 'were to be denied Christian Burial. He puts the whole Kingdom 'under an Interdict; and declares all the King's Children by the said 'Anne, and the Children of all his Complices, to be under the 'same pains, though they be now under age; and incapacitates them 'for all honours or employments; and declares all the Subjects or 'Vassals of the King's or his Complices, absolved from all Oaths or 'Obligations to them, and requires them to acknowledg them no 'more. And declares him and them Infamous, so that they might nei- 'ther be Witnesses nor make Wills. He requires all other persons 'to have no dealings with him or them, neither by Trading, nor any 'other way, under the pain of Excommunication; the annulling their 'Contracts, and the exposing goods so traded in, to all that should 'catch them. And that all Clergy-men should within five days after 'the expiration of the time prefixed, go out of the Kingdom; (leav- 'ing only so many Priests as would be necessary for Baptizing In- 'faints, and giving the Sacrament to such as died in Penitence) un- 'der the pains of Excommunication and Deprivation. And Charges 'all Noble-men and others in his Dominions, under the same pains, 'to rise up in Arms against him, and to drive him out of his King- 'dom; and that none should take Arms for him, or any way assist 'him: and Declares all other Princes absolved from any Confede- 'racies made, or to be made, with him; and earnestly obtests the Em- 'perour and all Kings, and requires other Princes under the former 'pains, to trade no more with him; and in case of their disobedience 'he puts their Kingdoms under an Interdict. And requires all 'Princes and Military persons, in the virtue of Holy Obedience, to 'make War upon him, and to force him to return to the Obedience 'of the Apostolick See; and to seize on all Goods, or Merchandizes 'belonging to the King or his Complices, where-ever they could find 'them; and that such of his Subjects that were seized on, should 'be made Slaves. And requires all Bishops, three days after the 'time that was set down was elapsed, to intimate this Sentence in all 'their

'their Churches, with putting out of Candles, and other Ceremonies 1538.
'that ought to be uſed, in the moſt ſolemn and publick manner that 'might be. And all who hindred the Publication of this Sentence, are 'put under the ſame Pains. He ordained this Sentence to be affixed at 'Rome, Tournay, and Dunkirk; which ſhould ſtand for a ſufficient 'publication; and concludes, that if any ſhould endeavour to oppoſe,
'or enervate any of the premiſes, he ſhould incur the indignati-
'on of Almighty God, and the Holy Apoſtles, St. Peter and Paul.
'Dated at Rome the 30th of Auguſt, 1535. But the Pope found the Princes of Chriſtendom liked the precedent, of uſing a King in that manner ſo ill, that he ſuſpended the Execution of this Bull till this time, that the ſuppreſſion of Abbies, and the burning of Thomas Beckets Bones (for it was ſo repreſented at Rome, though our Writers ſay they were buried;) did ſo inflame the Pope, that he could forbear no longer; and therefore by a new ſentence he did all he could to ſhake him in his Throne.

'The Preamble of it was, That as our Saviour had pity on St. Peter
'after his fall, ſo it became St. Peter's Succeſſors to imitate our Saviour
'in his Clemency; and that therefore though he having heard of King
'Henry's Crimes, had proceeded to a ſentence againſt him; (Here the 'former Bull was recited.) Yet ſome other Princes who hoped he 'might be reclaimed by gentler methods, had interpoſed for a ſuſpen'ſion of the Sentence: and he being eaſie to believe, what he ſo ear-'neſtly deſired, had upon their Interceſſion ſuſpended it. But now he 'found they had been deceived in their hopes, and that he grew 'worſe and worſe; and had done ſuch diſhonour to the Saints, as to
'raiſe St. Thomas of Canterbury's Body, to arraign him of High Trea-
'ſon, and to burn his Body, and Sacrilegiouſly to rob the Riches that 'had been offered to his Shrine, as alſo to ſuppreſs St. Auſtin's Abbey
'in Canterbury; and that having thruſt out the Monks, he had put 'in wild Beaſts into their grounds, having transformed himſelf into a 'Beaſt. Therefore he takes off the Suſpenſion, and publiſhes the 'Bull, commanding it to be executed: Declaring that the affix-
'ing it at Diepe or Bulloign in France, at St. Andrews or Calliſtren,
'(that is Callſtream, a Town near the border of England,) in Scotland
'or Tuam, or Artifert in Ireland, or any two of theſe, ſhould be 'a ſufficient publication. Dated the 17th of December, Anno Dom
'1538.

No Man can read theſe Bulls, but he muſt conclude that if the Pope be the Infallible and Univerſal Paſtor of the Church, whom all are bound to obey, he has a full authority over all Kings, to proceed to the higheſt Cenſures poſſible: and ſince the matters of fact, enumerated in the Sentence as the grounds of it, were certainly true; then the Pope is either cloathed with the powers of Depoſing Princes; or if otherwiſe, he lied to the world when he pretended to it thus, and taught falſe Doctrine, which cannot ſtand with Infallibility: And the pretended grounds of the Sentence as to matter of fact, being evidently true, this muſt be a juſt Sentence; and therefore all that acknowledged the Infallibility of that See, were bound to obey it, and all the Rebellions that followed, during the reign of the King or his Children, were founded on this Sentence, and muſt be juſtified by it; otherwiſe the 1538. Pope's Infallibility must fall to the ground. But this was to be said for the Pope, that though he had raised the several branches of this Sentence, higher than any of his Predecessors had ever done; yet as to the main he had very good and authentick Precedents for what he did, from the Depositions of Emperours or Kings, that were made by former Popes for about 500 Years together. This I thought needful to be more fully opened, because of the present Circumstances we are now in; since hereby every one that will consider things, must needs see that the belief of the Pope's Infallibility does necessarily infer the acknowledgment of their power of deposing Heretical Kings. For it is plain, the Pope did this ex Cathedra, and as a Pastor feeding and correcting his Flock.

Popes

But not content with this, he also wrote to other Princes, inflaming them against the King; particularly to the Kings of France and Scotland. To the last of these he sent a Breve; declaring King Henry an Heretick, a Schismatick, a manifest Adulterer, a publick Murtherer, a Rebel, and convict of High Treason against him, the Pope his Lord; for which Crimes he had deposed him, and offered his Dominions to him, if he would go and invade them. And thus the breach between him and the Pope was past reconciling: and at Rome it was declared equally meritorious to fight against him, as against the Turk. But Card. Pool made it more meritorious in his Book. Yet the thunders of the Vatican had now lost their force; so that these had no other effect but to enrage the King more against all such as were suspected to favour their Interests, or to hold any correspondence with Cardinal Pool. Therefore he first procured a Declaration against the Pope's pretentions, to be signed by all the Bishops of England: in which, after they declared against the Pope's Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, upon the grounds formerly touched, they concluded, 'That 'the People ought to be instructed, that Christ did expressly forbid his 'Apostles or their Successors to take to themselves the Power of 'the Sword, or the Authority of Kings. And that, if the Bishop of 'Rome, or any other Bishop assumed any such Power, he was a Ty- 'rant and Usurper of other Mens Rights, and a Subverter of the 'Kingdom of Christ. This was subscribed by 19 Bishops, (all that were then in England) and 25 Doctors of Divinity and Law. It was some time before May 1538. For Edward Fox Bishop of Hereford, who was one that signed it, died the 8th of May that Year. There was no Convocation called by Writ for doing this. For as there is no mention of any such Writ in the Registers, so if it had been done by Convocation, Cromwell had signed it first; but his hand not being at it, it is more probable that a meeting of the Clergy was called by the King's Missive Letters; or that, as was once done before, the Paper was drawn at London, and sent over the Kingdom to the Episcopal Sees, for the Bishops Hands to it.

Lesley, Hist. Scot.

The Clergy in England declared against these.

There is another Original Paper extant, signed at this time by eight Bishops: from which I conjecture those were all that where then about London. It was to shew, 'That by the Commission which 'Christ gave to Church-men, they were only Ministers of his Gos- 'pel to instruct the People in the Purity of the Faith: But that by 'other places of Scripture, the Authority of Christian Princes over 'all

'clear. And that the Biſhops and Prieſts have charge of Souls with-
'in their Cures; Power to adminiſter Sacraments, and to teach the 'Word of God: To the which Word of God, Chriſtian Princes ac-
'knowledg themſelves ſubject; and that in caſe the Biſhops be neg'ligent, it is the Chriſtian Prince's Office to ſee them do their du'ty. This being ſigned by John Hilſey Biſhop of Rocheſter, muſt be after the Year 1537, in which he was Conſecrated; and Latimer and Shaxton alſo ſigning, it muſt be before the Year 1539, in which they reſigned. But I believe it was ſigned at the ſame time that the other was: And the deſign of it was, to refute thoſe Calumnies ſpread at Rome, as if the King had wholly ſuppreſſed all Eccleſiaſtical Officers, and denyed them any Divine Authority, making them wholly dependent on the Civil Power, and acting by Commiſſion only from him. And therefore they explained the Limits of both theſe Powers, in ſo clear and moderate a way, that it muſt have ſtopt the Mouths of all Oppoſers. But whether there was any publick uſe made of this Paper, I can by no means diſcover.

The King did alſo ſet forward the Printing of the Engliſh Bible, which was finiſhed this Year, at London, by Graſton the Printer, who printed 1500 of them at his own Charge. This Bible Cromwel preſented to the King, and procured his Warrant, allowing all his Subjects, in all his Dominions, to read it, without controul or hazard. For which, the Arch-biſhop wrote Cromwel a Letter of moſt hearty thanks, 'dated the 13th of Auguſt. Who did now rejoyce that he 'ſaw this day of Reformation, which he concluded was now riſen in 'England ſince the Light of God's Word did ſhine over it with-'out any Cloud. The Tranſlation had been ſent over to France to be Printed at Paris: the workmen in England not being judged able to do it, as it ought to be. Therefore in the Year 1537, it was recommended to Bonner's Care, who was then Ambaſſador at Paris, and was much in Cromwel's favour, who was ſetting him up againſt Gardiner. He procured the King of France's leave to print it at Paris, in a large Volume: but upon a complaint made by the French Clergy, the Preſs was ſtopt, and moſt of the Copies were ſeized on, and publickly burnt: but ſome Copies were conveyed out of the way, and the Work-men and Forms were brought over to England: where it was now finiſhed and publiſhed. And Injunctions were given out in the King's name, by Cromwel, to all Incumbents, 'to pro-'vide one of theſe Bibles, and ſet it up publickly in the Church, Collect. Num. 11. 'and not to hinder or diſcourage the reading of it, but to encourage 'all perſons to peruſe it, as being the true lively Word of God, which 'every Chriſtian ought to believe, embrace, and follow, if he expected 'to be ſaved. And all were exhorted, not to make conteſts about 'the Expoſition or ſence of any difficult place, but to refer that to 'Men of higher judgment in the Scriptures. Then ſome other Rules 'were added, about inſtructing the people in the Principles of 'Religion, by teaching the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and ten Com-'mandments in Engliſh: And that in every Church there ſhould be 'a Sermon made every quarter of a Year at leaſt, to declare to 'the people the true Goſpel of Chriſt, and to exhort them to the 'works 1538. 'works of Charity, Mercy, and Faith: and not to truſt in other 'Mens works, or Pilgrimages to Images, or Relicks, or ſaying o- 'ver Beads, which they did not underſtand; ſince theſe things tend- 'ed to Idolatry and Superſtition, which of all offences did moſt pro- 'voke God's Indignation. They were to take down all Images, which 'were abuſed by Pilgrimages, or Offerings made to them; and to 'ſuffer no Candles to be ſet before any Image; only there might be 'Candles before the Croſs, and before the Sacrament, and about the Se- 'pulchre: And they were to inſtruct the people, that Images ſer- 'ved only as the Books of the unlearned, to be rememberances of the 'Converſations of them whom they repreſented: but if they made 'any other uſe of Images, it was Idolatry: for remedying whereof, 'as the King had already done in part, ſo he intended to do more 'for the aboliſhing ſuch Images, which might be a great offence to 'God, and a danger to the Souls of his Subjects. And if any of 'them had formerly magnified ſuch Images, or Pilgrimages, to ſuch 'purpoſes, they were ordered openly to recant, and acknowledg 'that in ſaying ſuch things they had been led by no ground in Scrip- 'ture; but were deceived by a vulgar error, which had crept in- 'to the Church, through the avarice of thoſe who had profit by 'it. They were alſo to diſcover all ſuch as were Letters of the read- 'ing of God's Word in Engliſh, or hindred the Execution of theſe 'Injunctions. Then followed Orders for keeping of Regiſters in their 'Pariſhes; for Reading all the King's Injunctions once every quarter 'at leaſt: That none were to alter any of the Holy-days without di- 'rections from the King: And all the Eves of the Holy-days for- 'merly abrogated, were declared to be no faſting-days: The 'Commemoration of Thomas Becket was to be clean omitted: The 'kneeling for the Avies after Sermon were alſo forbidden; which 'were ſaid in hope to obtain the Pope's Pardon. And whereas in their 'Proceſſions they uſed to ſay ſo many Suffrages with an Ora pro nobis 'to the Saints, by which they had not time to ſay the Suffrages to God 'himſelf, they were to teach the pople, that it were better to omit 'the Ora pro nobis, and to ſing the other Suffrages which were moſt 'neceſſary and moſt effectual.

Theſe Injunctions ſtruck at three main Points of Popery: containing encouragments to the vulgar, to read the Scriptures in a known Tongue, and putting down all worſhip of Images, and leaving it free for any Curate to leave out the Suffrages to the Saints. So that they were looked on as a deadly blow to that Religion. But now thoſe of that party did ſo artificially comply with the King, that no advantages could be found againſt any of them for their diſobedience. The King was Maſter at Home, and no more to be diſobeyed. He had not only broken the Rebellion of his own Subjects, and ſecured himſelf by Alliance from the dangers threatned him by the Pope; but all their expectations from the Lady Mary were now clouded: For on the 12th of October 1537, Queen Jane had born him a Son; who was Chriſtned Edward: the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury being one of his God-Fathers. This very much encouraged all that were for Reformation, and diſheartned thoſe who were againſt it. But the joy for this young Prince was qualified by the Queen's death,

Prince Edward born.

two days after; which afflicted the King very much: for of all his Wives, ſhe was the deareſt to him. And his grief for that loſs is given as the reaſon, why he continued two Years a Widower. But others thought he had not ſo much tenderneſs in his Nature, as to be much or long troubled for any thing. Therefore the ſlowneſs of his marrying was aſcribed to ſome Reaſons of State. But the Birth of the Prince was a great diſappointment to all thoſe whoſe hopes reſted on the Lady Mary's ſucceeding her Father: Therefore they ſubmitted themſelves with more than ordinary Compliance to the King. 1538.

Great Compliances by the Popiſh Party.

Gardiner was as buſie as any in declaiming againſt the Religious Houſes, and took occaſion in many of his Sermons to commend the King for ſuppreſſing them: The Arch-biſhop of York had recovered himſelf at Court: and I do not find that he interpoſed in the Suppreſſion of any of the Religious Houſes, except Hexham, about which he wrote to Cromwel, that it was a great Sanctuary when the Scots made Inroads: And ſo he thought that the continuing of it might be of great uſe to the King. He added, in that Letter, 'That he did 'carefully ſilence all the Preachers of Novelties. But ſome of theſe 'boaſted, that they would ſhortly have Licences from the King, as 'he heard they had already from the Arch biſhop of Canterbury; but 'he deſired Cromwel to prevent that miſchief. This is all that I find of him.

There is a Pardon granted to Stokeſly Biſhop of London, on the 3d of July, in the 30th Year of his Reign, being this Year, for having acted by Commiſſion from Rome, and ſued out Bulls from thence. If theſe Crimes were done before the Separation from Rome, they were remitted by the General Pardon. If he took a particular Pardon, it ſeems ſtrange that it was not enrolled till now. But I am apt to believe it was rather the Omiſſion of a Clerk, than his being guilty of ſuch a Tranſgreſſion about this time; for I ſee no cauſe to think the King would have pardoned ſuch a Crime in a Biſhop, in thoſe days. All that Party had now, by their compliance and ſubmiſſion, gained ſo much on the King, that he began to turn more to their Counſels, than he had done of late Years. Gardiner was returned from France, where he had been Ambaſſador for ſome Years: He had been alſo in the Emperor's Court, and there were violent preſumptions, that he had ſecretly reconciled himſelf to the Pope, and entered into a Correſpondence with him. For one of the Legates Servants diſcourſed of it at Ratisbone, to one of Sir Henry Knevet's Retinue (who was joyned in the Embaſſy with Gardiner,) whom he took to be Gardiner's Servant, and with whom he had an old acquaintance. The Matter was traced, and Knevet ſpoke with the Italian that had firſt let it fall, and was perſwaded of the truth of the thing: But Gardiner ſmelling it out, ſaid, That Italian, upon whoſe Teſtimony the whole Matter depended, was corrupted to ruin him; and complained of it to the Emperor's Chancellor Granvel: Upon which Ludovico (that was the Italian Name) was put in Priſon. And it ſeems the King either looked on it as a Contrivance of Gardiner's Enemies, or at leaſt ſeemed to do ſo, for he continued ſtill to employ him. Yet on many occaſions he expreſſed great contempt of him, and uſed him not 1538. not as a Councellor, but as a Slave. But he was a Man of great cunning, and had obſerved the King's Temper exactly, and knew well to take a fit occaſion for moving the King in any thing, and could improve it dextrouſly. He therefore repreſented to the King, that nothing would ſo ſecure him both at home, and abroad, againſt all the miſchief the Pope was contriving, as to ſhew great zeal againſt Hereticks, chiefly the Sacramentaries, (by that name they branded all that denied the Corporal preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt.) And the King being, all his life, zealous for the belief of the Corporal Preſence, was the more eaſily perſwaded to be ſevere on that Head: And the rather, becauſe the Princes of Germany, whoſe friendſhip was neceſſary to him, being all Lutherans, his proceedings againſt the Sacramentaries would give them no offence.

An occaſion at that time preſented it ſelf as opportunely as they could have wiſhed, one John Nicolſon, alias Lambert, was then queſtioned by the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury for that opinon. He had been Miniſter of the Engliſh Company at Antwerp; where being acquainted with Tindall and Frith, he improved that knowledg of Religion, which was firſt infuſed in him by Bilney: But Chancellor More ordered the Merchants to diſmiſs him; ſo he came over to England, and was taken by ſome of Arch-biſhop Warham's Officers, and many Articles were objected to him. But Warham died ſoon after, and the change of Counſels that followed occaſioned his Liberty. So he kept a School at London, and hearing Doctor Taylor, afterwards Biſhop of Lincoln, preach of the Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, he came to him upon it, and offered his Reaſons why he could not believe the Doctrine he had preached: Which he put in Writing, digeſting them into ten Arguments. Taylor ſhewed this to Doctor Barns, who as he was bred among the Lutherans, ſo had not only brought over their Opinions, but their Temper with him: He thought that nothing would more obſtruct the progreſs of the Reformation than the venting that Doctrine in England. Therefore Taylor and he carryed the Paper to Cranmer, who was at that time alſo of Luther's Opinon, which he had drunk in from his Friend Oſiander. Latimer was of the ſame belief. So Lambert was brought before them, and they ſtudied to make him retract his Paper: But all was in vain, for Lambert, by a fatal reſolution appealed to the King.

And Lambert in particular.

Who had appealed to the King.

This Gardiner laid hold on, and perſuaded the King to proceed ſolemnly and ſeverely in it. The King was ſoon prevailed with, and both Intereſt and Vanity concurred to make him improve this opportunity, for ſhewing his Zeal and Learning. So Letters were written to many of the Nobility and Biſhops, to come and ſee this Tryal; in which the King intended to ſit in Perſon, and to manage ſome part of the Argument. In November, on the day that was prefixed, there was a great appearance in Weſtminer-Hall, of the Biſhops, and Clergy, the Noblity, Judges, and the King's Council; with an incredible number of Spectators. The King's Guards were all in White, and ſo was the Cloth of State.

When the Priſoner was brought to the Bar, The Tryal was opened by a Speech of Doctor Dayes, which was to this effect: 'That this Aſſembly was not at all convened to diſ-

'Head, intended openly to condemn and confute that Man's Hereſy
'in all their preſence. Then the King commanded him to declare his Opinion about the Sacrament. To which Lambert began his anſwer with a Preface, acknowledging the King's great Goodneſs, that he would thus hear the Cauſes of his Subjects, and commending his great Judgment and Learning. In this the King interrupted him, telling him in Latin, That he came not there to hear his own Praiſes ſet forth, and therefore commanded him to ſpeak to the Matter. This he uttered with a ſtern Countenance; at which Lambert being a little diſordered, the King asked him again, Whether was Chriſt's Body in the Sacrament, or not? He anſwered in the words of St. Auſtine, It was his Body in a certain manner. But the King bad him anſwer plainly, Whether it was Chriſt's Body, or not? So he anſwered, That it was not his Body. Upon which the King urged him with the words of Scripture, This is my Body; and then he commanded the Arch-biſhop to confute his Opinion, who ſpoke only to that part of it, which was grounded on the Impoſſibility of a Bodies being in two places at once. And that he confuted from Chriſt's appearing to St. Paul; ſhewing that though he is always in Heaven, yet he was ſeen by St. Paul in the Air. But Lambert affirmed, that he was then only in Heaven; and that St. Paul heard a Voice, and ſaw a Viſion, but not the very Body of Chriſt. Upon this they diſputed for ſome time: in which it ſeems the Biſhop of Wincheſter thought Cranmer argued but faintly, for he interpoſed in the Argument.

Arguments brought againſt him.

Tonſtal's Arguments run all upon God's Omnipotency, that it was not to be limited by any appearances of Difficulties, which flowed from our want of a right underſtanding of things; and our Faculties being weak, our Notions of Impoſſibilities were proportioned to theſe. But Stokesly thought he had found out a Demonſtration that might put an end to the whole Controverſy; for he ſhewed, that in Nature we ſee one Subſtance changed into another, and yet the Accidents remain. So when Water is boiled, till it evaporates into Air, one Subſtance is changed into another, and moiſture that was the Accident remains, it being ſtill moiſt. This (as one of the Eye-witneſſes relates) was received with great applauſe, and much joy appeared in the Biſhops looks upon it. But whether the Spectators could diſtinguiſh well between Laughter for Joy, and a ſcornful ſmile, I cannot tell: For certainly this Crotchet muſt have provoked the latter rather; ſince it was a Sophiſm, not to be forgiven any above a junior Sophiſter; thus from an accidental converſion, where the Subſtance was ſtill the ſame, only altered in its Form and Qualities, (according to the Language of that Philoſophy, which was then moſt in vogue,) to infer a ſubſtantial mutation, where one Subſtance was annihilated, and a new one produced in its place. But theſe Arguments it ſeems diſorder'd Lambert ſomewhat; and either the King's ſtern looks, the variety of the Diſputants, ten, one after another, engaging with him, or the greatneſs of the Preſence, with the length of the Action, which continued five hours, put him in ſome confuſion; it is not improbable but they might in the end bring him to be quite ſilent. This one that was preſent ſaid, flowed from his being ſpent and wearied; and that he ſaw 1538. what he said was little considered: but other ascribed it to his being confounded with the Arguments that were brought against him. So the general applause of the Hall, gave the Victory on the King's side. When he was thus silent, the King asked him, If he was convinced by the Arguments, and whether he would live or die? He answed, That he committed his Soul to God, and submitted his Body to the King's Clemency. But the King told him, If he did not recant, he must die, for he would not be a Patron of Hereticks; and since he would not do that, the King ordered Cromwel to read the Sentence, (which he, as the King's Vice-gerent, did,) declaring him an incorrigible Heretick, and condemning him to be burnt. Which was soon after executed in Smithfield, in a most barbarous manner; for when his Legs and Thighs were burnt to the stumps, there not being fire enough to consume the rest of him suddenly, two of the Officers raised up his Body on their Halberds, he being yet alive and crying out, None but Christ, none but Christ; and then they let him fall down into Fire, where he was quickly consumed to Ashes. He was a learned and good Man. His answers to the Articles objected to him by Warham, and a Book which in his imprisonment he wrote for justifying his Opinion, which he directed to the King, do shew both great Learning for those times, and a very good Judgment.

He is condemned.

And burned.

This being done, the Party that opposed the Reformation perswaded the King, that he had got so much reputation to himself by it, that it would effectually refute all aspersions, which had been cast on him, as if he intended to change the Faith: neither did they forget to set on him, in his weak side, and magnifie all that he had said, as if the Oracle had uttered it: By which they said, it appeared he was indeed a Defender of the Faith, and the Supream Head of the Church. And he had so good a conceit of what was done, that he intended to pursue these Severities further; and therefore soon after he resolved on summoning a Parliament, partly for confirming what he had done, and compleating what remained to be done further, in the suppression of the Monasteries; and likewise for making a new Law for punishing some Opinions, which were then spreading about the Sacrament, and some other Articles, as will soon appear.

The Popish Party gain ground at Court.

Now the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury's Interest at Court, suffered a great diminution. His chief Friend among the Bishops, was Fox, Bishop of Hereford, who was much esteemed, and imployed by the King. He was a Privy-Councellor, and had been imployed in a Negotiation with the Princes of Germany, to whom he was a very acceptable Minister. They proposed, That the King would receive the Ausburg Confession, except in such things as should be altered in it by common Consent, and defend it in a free Council, if any such were called; and that neither of them should acknowledg any Council called by the Pope: That the King should be called the Patron of their League, and they should mutually assist one another, the King giving 100000 Crowns a Year towards the defence of the League.

The Bishop of Winchester being then in France, did much dissuade the King from making a Religious League with them; against which he

he gave ſome plauſible politick Reaſons, for his Conſcience never ſtrugled with a Maxim of State. But the King liked moſt of the Propoſitions; only he would not accept the Title of Defender of their League, till ſome Differences in the Doctrine were agreed. So they were to have ſent over Sturmius as their Agent; and Melanthon, Bucer, and George Draco, to confer with the King's Divines. But upon Queen Ann's fall, this vaniſhed; and though the King entered into a Civil League with them, and had frequently a mind to bring over Melanthon, for whom he had a great value, yet it never took effect. There were three things in which the Germans were more poſitive, than in any other Point of Reformation. Theſe were, the Communion in both kinds, the Worſhip in a known Tongue, and an allowance for the marriage of the Clergy. All the people had got theſe things in their heads; ſo that it was generally believed, that if the Pope had in time conſented to them, the Progreſs of the Reformation had been much ſtopped. The expreſs words of the Inſtitution, and the Novelty of the contrary Practice, had engaged that Nation very early for Communion in both kinds. Common ſenſe made them all deſire to underſtand what they did and ſaid in the Worſhip of God; and the lewd and diſſolute practices of the unmarried Clergy, were ſo publick, that they thought the honour of their Families, of which that Nation is extremely ſenſible, could not be ſecured, unleſs the Clergy might have Wives of their own. But at theſe the King ſtuck more, than at other things that were more diſputable. For in all other Points that were material, he had ſet up the Doctrine of the Ausburg Confeſſion; and there was good ground to hope that the Evidence of at leaſt two of theſe would have brought over the King to a fuller agreement, and firmer union with them. But the Biſhop of Hereford's death gave a great blow to that deſign. For though that Party thought they had his room well filled, when they had got Bonner to be his Succeſſor; yet they found afterwards what a fatal miſtake they committed, in raſing him now to Hereford, and tranſlating him within a few months to London, vacant by Stokesley's death. But during the vacancy of the See of Hereford, Cranmer held a viſitation in it, where he left ſome Injunctions (to be found in the Collection) which chiefly related to the encouraging of reading the Scriptures, and giving all due obedience to the King's Injunctions. For the other Biſhops that adhered to Cranmer, they were rather clogs than helps to him. Latimer's ſimplicity and weakneſs made him be deſpiſed: Shaxton's proud and litigious humour drew hatred on him: Barlow was not very diſcreet; and many of the Preachers whom they cheriſhed, whether out of an unbridled forwardneſs of temper, or true zeal that would not be managed and governed by politick and prudent Meaſures, were flying at many things that were not yet aboliſhed. Many complaints were brought of theſe to the King. Upon which, Letters were ſent to all the Biſhops in the King's Name, to take care, that as the People ſhould be inſtructed in the Truth, ſo they ſhould not be unwarily charged with too many Novelties; ſince the publiſhing theſe, if it was not tempered with great diſcretion, would raiſe much contention, and other inconveniencies that might be of dangerous conſequence. But it ſeems this Caveat did not produce what was deſigned by 1538. by it, or at least the opposite Party were still bringing in new Complaints: for I have seen an Original Letter of Cromwel's to the Bishop of Landaffe, bearing date the 6th of January; in which he makes mention of the King's Letter sent to that purpose, and requires him to look to the execution of them, both against the violence of the new Preachers, and against those that secretly carried on the pretended Authority of the Bishop of Rome; otherwise he threatens to proceed against him in another manner. All these things concurred to lessen Cranmer's Interest in the Court; nor had he any firm Friend there but Cromwel, who was also careful to preserve himself: There was not a Queen now in the King's Bosom to favour their Motions. Queen Jane had been their Friend, though she came in Anne Bolleyn's room that had supported them most. The King was observed to be much guided by his Wives, as long as they kept their Interest with him. Therefore Cromwel thought the only way to retrieve a Design that was almost lost, was to engage the King in an Alliance with some of the Princes of Germany; from whence he had heard much of the Beauty of the Lady Anne of Cleave, the Duke of Cleve's Sister, whose elder Sister was married to the Duke of Saxony.

Coll. Numb. 13.

A new Parliament.

But while he was setting this on foot, a Parliament was summoned to meet the 28th of April. To which all the Parliamentary Abbots had their Writs. The Abbots of Westminster, St. Albans, St. Edmundsbury, St. Mary York, Glassenbury, Gloucester, Ramsey, Evesham, Peterborough, Reading, Malmesbury, Croyland, Selby, Thorny, Winchelcomb, Waltham, Cirencester, Tewkesbury, Colchester, and Tavestoke, sate in it. On the 5th of May, the Lord Chancellor acquainted them, that the King being most desirous to have all his Subjects of one Mind in Religion; and to quiet all Controversies about it, had commanded him to move to them, that a Committee might be appointed for examining these different Opinions, and drawing up Articles for an agreement which might be reported and considered to the House. To this the Lords agreed, and named for a Committee Cromwel the Vice-gerent, the two Arch-bishops, the Bishops of Duresme, Bath and Wells, Ely, Bangor, Carlisle, and Worcester: Who were ordered to go about it with all haste, and were dispensed with for their attendance in the House, till they had ended their Business. But they could come to no agreement; for the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, having the Bishops of Ely and Worcester to second him, and being favoured by Cromwel, the other side could carry nothing against them: Nor would either Party yield to the other, so that 11 days passed in these Debates.

The six Articles are proposed.

On the 16th of May, the Duke of Norfolk told the Lords, That the Committee that was named, had made no progress, for they were not of one Mind; which some of the Lords had objected, when they were first named. Therefore he offered some Articles to the Lords consideration, that they might be examined by the whole House, and that there might be a perpetual Law made for the observation of them after the Lords had freely delivered their Minds about them. The Articles were.

'First, Whether in the Eucharist, Christ's real Body was present 'without any Transubstantiation? (so it is in the Journal, absque Transubstantiatione) it seems so the Corporal Presence had been 'established,

'eſtabliſhed, they would have left the manner of it indefinite. 1539.

'Secondly, Whether that Sacrament was to be given to the Laity in 'both kinds?

'Thirdly, Whether the Vows of Chaſtity, made either by Men or 'Women, ought to be obſerved by the Law of God?

Fourthly, Whether by the Law of God private Maſſes ought to be 'celebrated?

'Fifthly, Whether Prieſts by the Law of God might marry?

'Sixthly, Whether Auricular Confeſſion were neceſſary by the Law 'of God?

Againſt theſe the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury argued long. For the firſt, he was then in his Opinion a Lutheran, ſo he was not like to ſay much againſt it. But certainly he oppoſed the ſecond much; ſince there was not any thing for which thoſe with whom he held correſpondence were more earneſt, and ſeemed to have greater advantages, both from Chriſt's own words in the Inſtitution, and the conſtant practice of the Church for 12 Ages. Reaſons againſt them.

For the Third, It ſeemed very hard to ſuppreſs ſo many Monaſteries, and ſet the Religious Perſons at liberty, and yet bind them up to Chaſtity. That ſame Parliament by another Act, abſolved them from their vow of Poverty, giving them power to purchaſe Lands: now it was not reaſonable to bind them up to ſome parts of their Vow, when they abſolved them from the reſt. And it was no ways prudent to bind them up from Marriage, ſince, as long as they continued in that State, they were ſtill capable to re-enter into their Monaſteries, when a fair occaſion ſhould offer; whereas they upon their marrying, did effectually lay down all poſſible pretenſions to their former Houſes.

For the Fourth, The aſſerting the Neceſſity of private Maſſes, was a plain condemnation of the King's Proceedings in the ſuppreſſion of ſo many Religious Houſes, which were Societies chiefly dedicated to that purpoſe. For if theſe Maſſes did profit the Souls departed, the deſtroying ſo many Foundations could not be juſtified. And for the living, theſe private Maſſes were clearly contrary to the firſt Inſtitution, by which that which was bleſſed and conſecrated was to be diſtributed: And it was to be a Communion, and ſo held by the Primitive Church, which admitted none, ſo much as to ſee the celebration of that Sacrament, but thoſe who received it: Laying Cenſures upon ſuch as were preſent at the reſt of that Office, and did not ſtay and Communicate.

For the Fifth, it touched Cranmer to the quick, for he was then married. The Scripture did in no place enjoyn the Celibat of the Clergy. On the contrary, Scripture ſpeaks of their Wives, and gives the Rules of their living with them. And St. Paul, in expreſs words, condemns all Mens leaving their Wives, without exception; ſaying, That the Man hath not Power over his own body, but the Wife. In the Primitive Church, though thoſe that were in Orders, did not marry, yet ſuch as were married before Orders, kept their Wives, of which there were many Inſtances; and when ſome moved in the Council of Nice, that all that had been married, when they entred into Orders, ſhould put away their Wives: it was rejected, and ever ſince the 1539. Greek Churches have allowed their Priests to keep their Wives. Nor was it ever commanded in the Western Church, till the Popes began their Usurpation. Therefore the prohibition of it being only grounded on the Papal Constitutions, it was not reasonable to keep it up, since that Authority on which it was built, was now overthrown.

What was said concerning Auricular Confession, I cannot so easily recover. For though Cranmer argued three days against these Articles, I can only gather the substance of his Arguments from what himself wrote on some of these Heads afterwards. For nothing remains of what passed there, but what is conveyed to us in the Journal, which is short and defective.

On the 24th of May, the Parliament was Prorogued to the 30th, upon what reason it does not appear. It was not to set any of the Bills backward; for it was agreed, that the Bills should continue in the State in which they were then, till their next meeting. When they met again, on the 30th of May, being Friday, the Lord Chancellor intimated to them, that not only the Spiritual Lords, but the King himself, had taken much pains to bring things to an agreement, which was effected. Therefore he moved in the King's Name, that a Bill might be brought in for punishing such as offended against these Articles. So the Lords appointed the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of Ely, and St. Davids, and Doctor Petre, a Master of Chancery, (afterwards Secretary of State) to draw one Bill; and the Arch-bishop of York, the Bishop of Duresm, and Winchester, and Doctor Tregonnel, another Master of Chancery, to draw another Bill about it; and to have them both ready, and to offer them to the King by Sunday next. But the Bill that was drawn by the Arch-bishop of York, and those with him, was best liked: yet it seems the Matter was long contested, for it was not brought to the House before the 7th of June; and then the Lord Chancellor offered it, and it was read the first time. On the 9th of June, it had the second reading, and on the 10th it was engrossed, and read the third time. But when it passed, the King desired the Arch-bishop of Canterbury to go out of the House, since he could not give his consent to it; but he humbly excused himself, for he thought he was bound in Conscience to stay and vote against it. It was sent down to the House of Commons, where it met with no great opposition; for on the 14th it was agreed to, and sent up again: And on the 28th it had the force of a Law by the Royal Assent.

The Title of it was an Act for abolishing Diversity of Opinions in certain Articles concerning Christian Religion. It is said in the Preamble, that the King, 'considering the blessed effects of Union, and the mischiefs 'of discord, since there were many different Opinions, both among 'the Clergy and Laity, about some Points of Religion, had called 'this Parliment, and a Synod at the same time for removing those 'differences, where six Articles were proposed, and long debated by 'the Clergy: And the King himself had come in Person to the Par- 'liament, and Council, and opened many things of high Learning 'and great Knowledg about them; And that he, with the Assent of 'both Houses of Parliament, had agreed on the following Articles.

An Act past for them.

'First,

'First, That in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Conſecration, 1539.
'there remained no Subſtance of Bread and Wine, but under theſe
'forms the Natural Body and Blood of Chriſt were preſent: Secondly,
'That Communion in both kinds was not neceſſary to Salvation to all
'Perſons by the Law of God; but that both the Fleſh and Blood of 'Chriſt were together in each of the kinds. Thirdly, That Prieſts,
'after the Order of Prieſthood, might not Marry by the Law of God.
'Fourthly, That Vows of Chaſtity ought to be obſerved by the Law 'of God. Fifthly, That the uſe of private Maſſes ought to be con'tinued; which as it was agreeable to God's Law, ſo Men received
'great benefit by them. Sixthly, That Auricular Confeſſion was ex'pedient and neceſſary, and ought to be retained in the Church.
'The Parliament thanked the King for the pains he had taken in
'theſe Articles: And Enacted, That if any, after the 12th of July,
'did ſpeak, preach, or write againſt the firſt Article, they were to 'be judged Hereticks, and to be burnt without any abjuration; and
'to forfeit their real and perſonal Eſtate to the King. And thoſe
'who preached, or obſtinately diſputed againſt the other Articles,
'were to be judged Felons; and to ſuffer death as Felons, without 'benefit of Clergy. And thoſe, who either in Word or Writing, ſpake 'againſt them, were to be Priſoners during the King's pleaſure, and 'forfeit their Goods and Chattels to the King, for the firſt time: And 'if they offended ſo the ſecond time, they were to ſuffer as Felons.
'All the Marriages of Prieſts are declared void; and if any Prieſt did
'ſtill keep any ſuch Woman, whom he had ſo married, and lived
'familiarly with her, as with his Wife, he was to be judged a Fe'lon. And if a Prieſt lived carnally with any other Woman, he was 'upon the firſt Conviction to forfeit his Benefices, Goods, and Chat-
'tels, and to be impriſoned during the King's pleaſure; and upon the 'ſecond Conviction, was to ſuffer as a Felon. The Women ſo of'fending, were alſo to be puniſhed in the ſame manner as the Prieſts;
'and thoſe who contemned, or abſtained from Confeſſion, or the Sa'crament, at the accuſtomed times, for the firſt offcence were to for'feit their Goods and Chattels, and be impriſoned; and for the ſe-
'cond, were to be adjudged of Felony. And for the Execution of 'this Act, Commiſſions were to be iſſued out to all Arch-biſhops,
'and Biſhops, and their Chancellors, and Commiſſaries, and ſuch o'thers in the ſeveral Shires as the King ſhall name, to hold their 'Seſſions quarterly, or oftener; and they were to proceed upon Pre-
'ſentments, and by a Jury. Thoſe Commiſſioners were to ſwear,
'that they ſhould execute their Commiſſion indifferently, without
'favour, affection, corruption, or malice. All Eccleſiaſtical incumbents 'were to read this Act in their Churches once a quarter. And in 'the end a Proviſo was added, concerning Vows of Chaſtity. That 'they ſhould not oblige any, except ſuch as had taken them at or 'above the age of 21 Years; or had not been compelled to take 'them.

This Act was received, by all that ſecretly favoured Popery, with great joy; for now they hoped to be revenged on all thoſe who had hitherto ſet forward a Reformation. It very much quieted the Bigots; who were now perſwaded that the King would not ſet up He- Which is variouſly cenſured 1539. resie, since he passed so severe an Act against it; and it made the total Suppression of Monasteries go the more easily through. The Popish Clergy liked all the Act very well, except that severe branch of it against their unchast practices. This was put in by Cromwel, to make it cut with both edges. (Some of our inconsiderate Writers, who never perused the Statutes, tell us it was done by a different Act of Parliament; but greater Faults must be forgiven them who write upon hear-say.) There was but one comfort that the poor Reformers could pick out of the whole Act, that they were not left to the Mercy of the Clergy, and their Ecclesiastical Courts, but were to be tried by a Jury; where they might expect more candid and gentle dealing. Yet the denying them the benefit of Abjuration, was a severity beyond what had ever been put in practise before: So now they began to prepare for new Storms, and a heavy Persecution.

An Act about the Suppression of the greater Monasteries.

The other chief business of this Parliament was, the Suppression of Monasteries. It is said in the Preamble of that Act, 'That divers 'Abbots, Priors, and other Heads of Religious Houses, had, since the '4th of February in the 27th Year of the King's Reign, without co'straint, of their own accord, and according to the due course of 'the Common Law, by sufficient Writings of Record, under their 'Covent-Seals, given up their Houses, and all that belonged to them, 'to the King. Therefore all Houses that were since that time sup'pressed, dissolved, relinquished, forfeited or given up, are confir'med to the King, and his Successors for ever: And all Monasteries that 'should thereafter be suppressed, forfeited, or given up, are also con'firmed to the King and his Successors. And all these Houses, with 'the Rents belonging to them, were to be disposed of by the Court 'of Augmentations for the King's Profit; excepting only such as were 'come into the King's Hands by Attainders of Treason, which be'longed to the Exchequer. Reserving to all persons, except the Pa'trons, Founders, and Donors of such Houses, the same right to any 'parts of them, or jurisdiction in them, which they could have claim'ed if that Act had never been made. Then followed many Clauses 'for Annulling all Deeds and Leases, made within one Year before 'the Suppression of any Religious House, to the prejudice of it, or 'different from what had been granted formerly. And all Churches 'or Chappels, which belonged to these Monasteries, and were for'merly exempted from the Visitation or Jurisdiction of their Ordina'ry, are declared to be within the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of the 'Diocess, or of any other that should be appointed by the King.

This Act passed in the House of Peers, without any Protestation made by any of the Abbots, though it appears by the Journal, that at the first reading of it there were eighteen Abbots present, at the second reading twenty, and seventeen at the third reading, and the Abbots of Glastenbury, Colchester, and Reading, were among those who were present; so little reason there is to think they were attainted for any open withstanding the King's Proceedings, when they did not protest against this Act, which was so plainly levelled at them. It was soon dispatched by the Commons; and offered to the Royal Assent By it, no Religious Houses were suppressed, as is grenerally taken for granted; but only the Surrenders, that either had been, or were to be be made, were confirmed. The laſt Proviſo for Annulling all Exemptions of Churches and Chappels, had been a great happineſs to the Church, if it had not been for that Clauſe; That the King might appoint others to viſit them; which in a great degree did enervate it. For many of thoſe who afterwards purchaſed theſe Lands, with the Impropriated Tithes, got this likewiſe in their Grants, that they ſhould be the Viſitors of the Churches and Chappels formerly exempted: from whence great diſorders have ſince followed in theſe Churches, which not falling within the Biſhop's Juriſdiction, are thought not liable to his Cenſures; ſo that the Incumbents in them, being under no Reſtraints, have often been ſcandalous to the Church; and given occaſion to thoſe who were diſaffected to the Hierarchy, to cenſure the Prelates for thoſe offences which they could not puniſh; ſince the Offenders were thus excepted out of their Juriſdiction. This abuſe, which firſt ſprang from the Ancient Exemptions that were Confirmed or Granted by the See of Rome, has not yet met with an effectual Remedy. 1539.

Upon the whole Matter, this Suppreſſion of Abbies was univerſally cenſured; and beſides the common Exceptions which thoſe that favoured the old Superſtition, made, it was queſtioned, whether the Lands that formerly belonged to Religious Houſes, ought to have returned to the Founders and Donors by way of Reverter, or to have fallen to the Lords of whom the Lands were holden by the way of Eſcheat, or to have come to the Crown? It is true, by the Roman Law, or at leaſt by a Judgment of the Senate in Theodoſius's time, the Endowments of the Heatheniſh Temples were, upon a full debate, whether they ſhould return to the right Heirs, or be Confiſcated? in the end adjudged to the Fiſc, or the Emperor's Exchequer. upon this reaſon, that by the Will of the Donors, they were totally alienated from them and their Heirs. But in England it went otherwiſe. And when the Order of the Knights-Templers was diſſolved, it was then judged in favour of the Lord by Eſcheat. For though the Founders and Donors had totally alienated theſe Lands from themſelves and their Heirs, yet there was no reaſon from thence to conclude any thing that might wrong the Superior Lord of his Right in the caſe of an Eſcheat. And this muſt have held good, if thoſe Alienations and Endowments had been abſolute, without any condition. But the Endowments being generally rather of the nature of Covenants and Contracts, and made in conſideration of ſo many Maſſes to be ſaid for their Souls; then it was moſt juſt; that, upon a non-performance of the Condition, and when that publick Error and Cheat, which the Monks had put upon the World, was diſcovered, the Lands ſhould have returned to the Founders and Patrons, and their Heirs and Succeſſors. Nor was there any grounds for the Lords to pretend to them by Eſcheat, eſpecially where there Anceſtors had conſented to, and confirmed thoſe Endowments. Therefore there was no need of excluding them by any ſpecial Proviſo. But for the Founders and Donors, certainly if there had not been a particular Proviſo made againſt them, they might have recovered the Lands which their Anceſtors had ſuperſtitiouſly given away; and the Surrenders which Religious Perſons made to the Crown, could not have cut off 1539. their Title. But this Act did that effectually. It is true, many of the greateſt of them were of Royal Foundation, and theſe would have returned to the Crown without Diſpute.

Another about the erecting new Biſhopricks.

On the 23 of May, in the Seſſion of Parliament, a Bill was brought in by Cromwel, for giving the King Power to erect new Biſhopricks by his Letters Patents. It was read that day for the firſt, ſecond, and third time; and ſent down to the Commons. The Preamble of it was, 'That it was known what ſlothful and ungodly Life had been 'led by thoſe who were called Religious. But that theſe Houſes 'might be converted to better uſes; that God's Word might be better 'ſet forth, Children brought up in Learning, Clarks nouriſhed in the 'Univerſities, and that old decayed Servants might have Livings, 'poor People might have Alms-Houſes to maintain them; Readers 'of Greek, Hebrew, and Latin, might have good Stipends; daily Alms 'might be miniſtred, and Allowance might be made for mending 'of the High-ways, and Exhibition for Miniſters of the Church, for 'theſe ends. If the King thought fit to have more Biſhopricks or Cathe-'dral Churches erected out of the Rents of theſe Houſes, full Power was 'given to him to erect, and found them, and to make Rules and 'Statutes for them, and ſuch Tranſlations of Sees or Diviſions of them 'as he thought fit. But on this Act I muſt add a ſingular Remark. The Preamble, and material parts of it, were drawn by the King himſelf; and the firſt draught of it under his hand is yet extant; which ſhews his extraordinary application and underſtanding of Buſineſs. But in the ſame Paper there is a Liſt of the Sees which he intended to found; of which what was done afterwards came ſo far ſhort, that I know nothing to which it can be ſo reaſonably imputed, as the declining of Cranmer's Intereſt at Court; who had propoſed the Erecting of new Cathedrals and Sees, with other things mentioned in the Preamble of the Statute, as a great mean for reforming the Church. The Sees which the King then deſigned, with the Abbies out of which they were to be Erected, follow, as in the Paper under the King's own Hand.

Over

Over these is written, The Bishopricks to be made. In another corner of the Page he writes as follows. 1539.

'Places to be altered according to our device, which have Sees in them. 'Christ's Church in Canterbury, St. Swithins, Ely, Duresm, Rochester, with a part of Leeds, Worcester, and all others having the same. Then a little below; Places to be altered into Colledges and Schools: Burton super Trent. More is not written in that Paper. But I wonder much, that in this List Chester was forgotten; yet it was erected before any of them: for I have seen a Commission under the Privy-Seal to the Bishop of Chester, to take the Surrender of the Monastery of Hamond in Shropshire, bearing date the 24*th* of August this Year. So it seems the See of Chester was erected and endowed before the Act passed, though there is among the Rolls a Charter for endowing and founding of it afterwards. Bristol is not mentioned in this Paper, though a See was afterwards erected there. It was not before the end of the next Year that these Sees were founded; and there was in that interval so great a Change made, both of the Councels and Ministers, that no wonder the things now designed were never accomplished.

An Act about the King's Proclamations.

Another Act passed in this Parliament, concerning the obedience due to the King's Proclamations. There had been great Exceptions made to the Legality of the King's Proceedings in the Articles about Religion, and other Injunctions published by his Authority, which were complained of as contrary to Law; since by these the King had, without consent of Parliament, altered some Laws, and had laid Taxes on his Spiritual Subjects. Upon which an Act passed, which sets 'forth in the Preamble, the contempt and disobedience of the King's 'Proclamations, by some who did not consider what a King by his 'Royal Power might do; which if it continued, would tend to the 'disobedience of the Laws of God, and the dishonour of the King's 'Majesty, (who may full ill bear it.) Considering also, that many oc-'casions might require speedy Remedies, and that delaying these till 'a Parliament met, might occasion great Prejudices to the Realm; 'and that the King by his Royal Power given of God, might do ma-'ny things in such cases; Therefore it is Enacted, That the King 'for the time being, with Advice of his Council, might set forth Pro-'clamations with Pains and Penalties in them, which were to be o-'beyed as if they were made by an Act of Parliament. But this 'was not to be so extended, that any of the King's Subjects should 'suffer in their Estates, Liberties, or Persons, by virtue of it: Nor 'that by any of the King's Proclamations, Laws or Customs were to 'be broken and subverted. Then follow some Clauses about the publishing of Proclamations, and the way of prosecuting those who contemned and disobeyed them. It is also added, 'That if any of-'fended against them, and in further contempt went out of the 'Realm, he was to be adjudged a Traitor. This also gave Power to 'the Counsellors of the King's Successor, if he were under Age, to 'set forth Proclamations in his Name, which were to be obeyed in 'the same manner with those set forth by the King himself. This Act gave great Power to the Judges, since there were such Restrictions in some branches of it, which seemed to lessen the great extent

of 1539. of the other parts of it; so that the Expositors of the Law had much referred to them: upon this Act were the great changes of Religion in the Non-age of Edward the 6th grounded.

An Act about precedence.

There is another Act, which but collaterally belongs to Ecclesiastical Affairs; and therefore shall be but slightly touched. It is the Act of the Precedency of the Officers of State, by which the Lord Vicegerent has the precedence of all Persons in the Kingdom, next the Royal Family: and on this I must make one Remark, which may seem very improper for one of my Profession; especially when it is an animadversion on one of the greatest Men that any Age has produced, the most Learned Mr. Selden. He, in his Titles of Honour, says, 'That this Statute was never printed in the Statute-Book, and 'but incorrectly by another, and that therefore he inserts it literally as 'is in the Record. In which there are two mistakes. For it is printed in the Statute-Book that was set out in that King's Reign, though left out in some later Statute-Books; and that which he prints, is not exactly according to the Record. For as he prints it, the Bishop of London is not named in the precedency; which is not according to the Parliament-Roll, in which the Bishop of London has the precedence next the Arch-bishop of York; and though this is corrected in a Posthumous Edition; yet in that set out by himself, it is wanting: Nor is that Omission among the Errors of the Press, for though there are many of these gathered to be amended, this is none of them. This I do not take notice of out of any vanity, or humour of Censuring a Man so great in all sorts of Learning; but my design is only to let ingenious Persons see, that they ought not to take things on trust easily, no not from the greatest Authors.

Some Acts of Attaindors.

These are all the publick Acts that relate to Religion, which were passed in this Parliament. With these there passed an Act of Attaindor of the Marquess of Exeter, and the Lord Montacute, with many others, that were either found to have had a great hand in the late Rebellion; or were discovered to hold Correspondence with Cardinal Pool, who was then trafficking with Foreign Princes, and projecting a League among them against the King. But of this I shall give a more full account at the end of this Book; being there to open the grounds of all the Attaindors that were passed in these last Years of the King's Reign. There is one remarkable thing that belongs to this Act.

Some were to be attainted in absence; others they had no mind to bring to make their answer, but yet designed to attaint them. Such were the Marchioness of Exeter, and the Countess of Sarum, Mother to Cardinal Pool, whom by a gross mistake, Speed fancies to have been condemned without Arraignment or Tryal, as Cromwel had been by Parliament. For she was now condemned a Year before him. About the Justice of doing this there was some debate; and to clear it, Cromwel sent for the Judges, and asked their Opinions, Whether a Man might be attainted in Parliament, without being brought to make his answer? They said, it was a dangerous question. That the Parliament ought to be an example to all inferior Courts; and that when any Person was charged with a Crime, he, by the common Rule of Justice Justice and Equity should be heard to plead for himself. But the Parliament being the Supream Court of the Nation, what way soever they proceeded, it must be good in Law; and it could never be questioned, whether the Party was brought to answer or not. And thus a very ill Precedent was made, by which the most innocent Person in the World might be ruined. And this, as has often been observed in the like cases, fell very soon heavily on the Author of the Counsel, as shall appear. 1539.

When the Parliament was Prorogued, on the 28th of June, the King apprehended that the Arch-bishop of Canterbury might be much cast down with the Act for the six Articles, sent for him, and told him, That he had heard how much, and with what Learning he had argued against it, and therefore he desired he would put all his Arguments in writing, and bring them to him. Next day he sent the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and the Lord Cromwel, to dine with him. Ordering them to assure him of the King's constant and unshaken kindness to him, and to encourage him all they could. When they were at Table with him at Lambeth, they run out much on his commendation, and acknowledged he had opposed the Act with so much Learning, Gravity, and Eloquence; that even those that differed from him, were much taken with what he said, and that he needed fear nothing from the King. Cromwel saying, that this difference the King put between him, and all his other Councellors; that when Complaints were brought of others, the King received them, and tried the truth of them; but he would not so much as hearken to any Complaint of the Arch bishop. From that he went on to make a Parallel between him and Cardinal Wolsey: That the one lost his Friends by his haughtiness and pride, but the other gained on his Enemies by his gentleness and mildness. Upon which the Duke of Norfolk said, he might best speak of the Cardinal, for he knew him well, having been his Man. This nettled Cromwel, who answered, That though he had served him, yet he never liked his manners: and that though the Cardinal had designed, (if his attempt for the Popedom had been successful,) to have made him his Admiral; yet he had resolved not to accept of it, nor to leave his Country. To which the Duke of Norfolk replied, with a deep Oath, That he Lied; with other reproachful language. This troubled Cranmer extreamly, who did all he could to quiet and reconcile them. But now the Enmity between those two great Ministers broke out to that height, that they were never afterwards hearty friends.

The King's care of Cranmer. Antiq. Brit. in vita Cran.

But Cranmer went about that which the King had commanded: and made a Book of the Reasons that led him to oppose the six Articles, in which the places out of the Scriptures, the Authorities of the ancient Doctors, with the arguments drawn from these, were all digested in a good method. This he commanded his Secretary to write out in a fair hand, that it might be given the King. The Secretary returning with it from Croydon, where the Arch-bishop was then, to Lambeth, found the Key of his Chamber was carried away by the Arch-bishops Almoner: So that he being obliged to go over to London, and not daring to trust the Book to any others keeping, carried it with himself; where both he, and the Book, met with an un-lookt-for

The Bear broke looſe into the River, and the Dogs after her. They that were in the Boat leaped out, and left the poor Secretary alone there. But the Bear got into the Boat, with the Dogs about her, and ſunk it. The Secretary apprehending his Life was in danger, did not mind his Book, which he loſt in the Water. But being quickly reſcued, and brought to Land, he begun to look for his Book, and ſaw it floating in the River. So he deſired the Bearward to bring it to him; who took it up; but before he would reſtore it, put it into the hands of a Prieſt that ſtood there, to ſee what it might contain. The Prieſt reading a little in it, found it a Confutation of the ſix Articles: and told the Bearward, that whoſoever claimed it, would be hanged for his pains. But the Arch-biſhop's Secretary thinking to mend the matter, ſaid, it was his Lord's Book. This made the Bearward more intractable, for he was a ſpiteful Papiſt, and hated the Arch-biſhop; ſo that no offers nor entreaties could prevail with him to give it back. Whereupon Morice, (that was the Secretary's Name,) went and opened the matter to Cromwell the next day; Cromwell was then going to Court, and he expected to find the Bearward there, looking to deliver the Book to ſome of Cranmer's Enemies; he therefore ordered Morice to go along with him. Where, they as had expected, they found the Fellow with the Book about him; upon whom Cromwell called, and took the Book out of his hands, threatning him ſeverely for his preſumption in medling with a Privy-Councellor's Book.

Proceedings upon that Act.

But though Cranmer eſcaped this hazard, yet in London the ſtorm of the late Act was falling heavily on them that were obnoxious. Shaxton and Latimer, the Biſhops of Salisbury and Wroceſter, within a week after the Seſſion of Parliament, as it appears, reſigned their Biſhopricks. For on the 7th of July the Chapters of theſe Churches Petitioned the King for his leave to fill thoſe Sees, they being then vacant by the free Reſignation of the former Biſhops. Upon which the Congé d' Elire for both was granted. Nor was this all, but they being preſented, as having ſpoken againſt the ſix Articles, were put in Priſon, where the one lay till the King died, and the other till a little before his death, as ſhall be ſhewn in its proper place. There were alſo Commiſſions iſſued out, for proceeding upon that Statute: and thoſe who were Commiſſioned for London, were all ſecret favourers of Popery; ſo they proceeded moſt ſeverely, and examined many Witneſſes againſt all who were preſented: whom they Interrogated not only upon the expreſs words of the Statute; but upon all ſuch collateral or preſumptive circumſtances, as might entangle them, or conclude them guilty. So that in a very little while 500 Perſons were put in Priſon, and involved in the breach of the Statute. Upon this not only Cranmer and Cromwell, but the Duke of Suffolk, and Audly the Chancellor repreſented to the King how hard it would be, and of what ill conſequence, to execute the Law upon ſo many Perſons. So the King was prevailed with to pardon them all; and I find no further proceeding upon this Statute till Cromwell fell.

But the oppoſite Party uſed all the Arts poſſible to inſinuate themſelves selves into the King. And therefore, to shew how far their compliance would go, Bonner took a strange Commission from the King, on the 12th of November this Year. It has been certainly enrolled; but it is not there now, so that I judg it was razed in that suppression of Records, which was in Queen Mary's time. But, as Men are commonly more careless at home, Bonner has left it on Record in his own Register. Whether the other Bishops took such Commissions from this King, I know not. But I am certain there is none such in Cranmer's Register: and it is not likely, if any such had been taken out by him, that ever it would have been razed. The Commission it self will be found in the Collection of Papers at the End. The substance of it is, 'That since all Jurisdictions, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, Coll. Numb. 14. 'flowed from the King as Supream Head, and he was the Foundation 'of all Power; it became those who exercised it only (Precario) at the 'King's Courtesy, gratefully to acknowledg, that they had it only of 'his bounty; and to declare that they would deliver it up again, when 'it should please him to call for it. And since the King had consti- 'tuted the Lord Cromwel his Vice-gerent in Ecclesiastical Affairs; yet 'because he could not look into all those Matters, therefore the King, 'upon Bonner's Petition, did empower him in his own stead, to ordain 'such as he found worthy, to present and give Institution, with all 'the other parts of Episcopal Authority, for which he is duly Com- 'missionated; and this to last during the King's Pleasure only. And 'all the Parts of the Episcopal Function being reckoned up, it con- 'cluded with a strict Charge to the Bishop to Ordain none but such, 'of whose Integrity, good Life and Learning, he had very good assu- 'rance. For as the Corruptions of the Christian Doctrine, and of 'Mens Manners, had chiefly proceeded from ill Pastours; so it was 'not to be doubted, but good Pastours, well chosen, would again reform 'the Christian Doctrine, and the Lives of Christians. After he had taken this Commission, Bonner might well have been called one of the King's Bishops. The true reason of this profound Compliance, was, That the Popish Party apprehended that Cranmer's great Interest with the King, was chiefly grounded on some Opinions he had, of the Ecclesiastical Officers being as much subject to the King's Power, as all other Civil Officers were. And this having endeared him so much to the King, therefore they resolved to out-do him in that Point. But there was this difference, that Cranmer was once of that Opinion, and if he followed it at all, it was out of Conscience: But Bonner, against his Conscience, (if he had any) complied with it. 1539.

Now followed the final dissolution of the Abbeys; there are 57 Surrenders upon Record this Year. The Originals of about 30 of these are yet to be seen. Thirty seven of them were Abbies or Priories, and 20 Nunneries. The good House of Godstow now fell, with the rest, though among the last of them. Now the great Parliament Abbots surrendred apace; as those of Westminster, St. Albans, St. Edmundsbury, Canterbury, St. Mary in York, Selby, St. Peter's in Glocester, Cirencester, Waltham, Winchcombe, Malmsbury and Battel. Three others were attainted; Glassenbury, Reading, and Colchester. The Deeds of the rest are lost. Here it will not be unacceptable to the Reader, to know who were the Parliamentary Abbots. There were in all 28, as they Dissolution of the great Abbies.

1539. were commonly given. Fuller has given a Catalogue of them in three places of this History of Abbies; but as every one of these differs from the others; so none of them are according to the Journals of Parliament; The Lord Herbert is also mistaken in his account. I shall not rise higher in my enquiry than this Reign, for anciently many more Abbots and Priors sate in Parliament, beside other Clergy that had likewise their Writs; and of whose right to sit in the House of Commons, there was a Question moved in Edward the Sixth's Reign, as shall be opened in its proper place. Much less will I presume to determine so great a Point in Law, Whether they sate in the House of Lords as being a part of the Ecclesiastical State, or as holding their Lands of the King by Baronage? I am only to observe the Matter of Fact, which is, That in the Journals of Parliament in this Reign, these 28 Abbots had their Writs, Abington, St. Albans, St. Austins Canterbury, Battel, St. Bennets in the Holm, Berdeny, Cirencester, Colchester, Coventry, Croyland, St. Edmunds-bury, Evesham, Glassenbury, Gloucester, Hide, Malmsbury, St. Mary's in York, Peterborough, Ramsey, Reading, Selby, Shrewsbury, Tavenstock, Teuksbury, Thorney, Waltham, Westminster and Winchelcomb; to whom also the Prior of St. Johns may be added. But besides all these, I find, that in the 28*th* Year of this King, the Abbot of Burton upon Trent sate in Parliament. Generally Coventry and Burton were held by the same Man, as one Bishop held both Coventry and Litchfield, though two different Bishopricks; but in that Year they were held by two different Persons, and both had their Writs to that Parliament. The method used in the suppression of these Houses, will appear by one compleat Report made of the Suppression of the Abbey of Teuksbury, which out of many I copied, and is in the Collection. From it the Reader will see, what Provision was made for the Abbot, the Prior, the other Officers, and the Monks, and other Servants of the House; and what Buildings they ordered to be defaced, and what to remain; and how they did estimate the Jewels, Plate, and other Ornaments. But Monasteries were not sufficient to stop the Appetite of some that were about the King; for Hospitals were next look'd after. One of these was this Year surrendred by Thomas Thirleby, with two other Priests; he was Master of St. Thomas Hospital in Southwark, and was designed Bishop of Westminster, to which he made his way by that Resignation. He was a learned and modest Man, but of so fickle or cowardly a Temper, that he turned always with the Stream in every change that was made, till Queen Elizabeth came to the Crown; but then, being ashamed of so many turns, he resolved to shew he could once be firm to somewhat.

Some Hospitals surrendred

Now were all the Monasteries of England suppressed, and the King had then in his hand the greatest opportunity of making Royal and Noble Foundations, that ever King of England had. But whether out of Policy, to give a general Content to the Gentry, by selling to them at low Rates, or out of easiness to his Courtiers, or out of an unmeasured lavishness in his Expence, it came far short of what he had given out he would do, and what himself seemed once to have designed. The clear yearly value of all the suppressed Houses is cast up, in an Account then stated to be, viz. 131607 l. 6 s. 4 d. as the Rents were were then rated, but was at leaſt ten times ſo much in true value. Of which he deſigned to convert 18000. l. into a Revenue for eighteen Biſhopricks and Catherdrals. But of theſe he only erected ſix, as ſhall be afterwards ſhewn. Great ſums were indeed laid out on building and fortifying many Ports, in the Channel, and other parts of England, which were raiſed by the Sale of Abbey-Lands. 1539.

At this time many were offering Projects for Noble Foundations, on which the King ſeemed very earneſt: But it is very likely, that before he was aware of it, he had ſo out-run himſelf in his Bounty, that it was not poſſible for him to bring theſe to any effect. Yet I ſhall ſet down one of the Projects, which ſhews the greatneſs of his Mind that deſigned it; that is, of Sir Nicholas Bacon, who was afterwards one of the wiſeſt Miniſters that ever this Nation bred. The King deſigned to found a Houſe for the Study of the Civil Law, and the purity of the Latin and French Tongues? So he ordered Sir Nicholas Bacon, and two others, Thomas Denton, and Robert Cary, to make a full Project, of the Nature, and Orders of ſuch a Houſe, who brought it to him in a writing; the Original whereof is yet extant. The deſign of it was, that there ſhould be frequent Pleadings, and other Exerciſes in the Latine and French Tongues: and when the King's Students were brought to ſome ripeneſs, they ſhould be ſent with his Ambaſſadors to Foreign Parts, and trained up in the knowledg of Foreign Affairs; and ſo the Houſe ſhould be the Nurſery for Ambaſſadors. Some were alſo to be appointed to write the Hiſtory of all Embaſſies, Treaties, and other foreign Tranſactions: as alſo of all Arraignments, and Publick Tryals at Home. But before any of them might write on theſe Subjects, the Lord Chancellor was to give them an Oath, that they ſhould do it truly, without reſpect of Perſons, or any other corrupt Affection. This noble Deſign miſcarried. But if it had been well laid, and regulated, it is eaſie to gather what great and publick Advantages might have flowed from it. Among which, it is not inconſiderable, that we ſhould have been delivered from a Rabble of ill-Writers of Hiſtory, who have without due care or enquiry, delivered to us the Tranſactions of that time ſo imperfectly, that there is ſtill need of enquiring into Regiſters and Papers for theſe Matters. Which in ſuch a Houſe had been more certainly and clearly conveyed to Poſterity, than can be now expected at ſuch a diſtance of time, and after ſuch a raſure of Records, and other confuſions, in which many of theſe Papers have been loſt. And this help was the more neceſſary, after the ſuppreſſion of Religious Houſes: in moſt of which a Chronicle of the Times was kept, and ſtill filled up as new Tranſactions came to their knowledg. It is true, moſt of theſe were written by Men of weak Judgments, who were more punctual in delivering Fables and Trifles, than in opening obſervable Tranſactions. Yet ſome of them were Men of better Underſtandings; and it is like were directed by their Abbots, who being Lords of Parliament, underſtood Affairs well: only an invincible humor of lying, when it might raiſe the credit of their Religion, or Order, or Houſe, runs through all their Manuſcripts.

In Biblioth. Nob. D.D. Gul. Pierpoint.

One thing was very remarkable, which was this Year granted, at 1539. Cranmer's Intercession. There was nothing could so much recover Reformation, that was declining so fast, as the free use of the Scriptures; and though these had been set up in the Churches a Year ago, yet he pressed, and now procured leave for private Persons to buy Bibles, and keep them in their Houses. So this was granted by Letters Patents directed to Cromwel, bearing date the 13th of November, The substance of which was, 'That the King was desirous to have 'his Subjects attain the knowledg of God's Word; which could not 'be effected by any means so well, as by granting them the free and 'liberal use of the Bible in the English Tongue; which to avoid dis-'sension, he intended should pass among them only by one Transla-'tion. Therefore Cromwel was charged to take care, that for the space 'of five Years, there should be no Impression of the Bible, or any part 'of it, but only by such as should be assigned by him. But Gardiner opposed this all he could; and, one day, in a Conference before the King, he provoked Cranmer to shew any difference between the Authority of the Scriptures, and of the Apostolical Canons, which he pretended were equal to the other Writings of the Apostles. Upon which, they disputed for some time. But the King perceived solid Learning, tempered with great Modesty, in what Cranmer said; and nothing but vanity and affectation in Gardiner's reasonings. So he took him up sharply, and told him, that Cranmer was an old and experienced Captain, and was not to be troubled by Fresh-men and Novices.

A Proclamation about the free use of the Scriptures.

Coll. Numb. 15.

The King designs to marry Ann of Cleve.

The great Matter of the King's Marriage came on at this time. Many Reports were brought the King of the Beauty of Anne of Cleve, so that he inclined to ally himself with that Family. Both the Emperor, and the King of France, had courted him to Matches which they had projected. The Emperor proposed the Dutchess of Milan, his Kinswoman, and Daughter to the King Denmark. He was then designing to break the League of Smalcald, and to make himself master of Germany: And therefore he took much pains with the King, to divide him from the Princes there; which was in great part effected by the Statute for the six Articles: Upon which the Ambassadors of the Princes had complained, and said, That whereas the King had been in so fair a way of Union with them, he had now broke it off, and made so severe a Law about Communion in one kind, Private Masses, and the Celibate of the Clergy, which differed so much from their Doctrine, that they could entertain no further correspondence with him, if that Law was not mitigated. But Gardiner wrought much on the King's Vanity and Passions; and told him, that it was below his Dignity, and high Learning, to have a Company of dull Germans, and small Princes, dictate to him in Matters of Religion. There was also another thing which he oft made use of, (though it argues somewhere a great Ignorance of the Constitution of the Empire,) That King could not expect these Princes would ever be for his Supremacy; since if they acknowledged that in him, they must likewise yield to the Emperor. This was a great Mistake; for as the Princes of Germany never acknowledged the Emperor to have a Soveraignty in their Dominions; so they did acknowledg the Diet, in which the Soveraignty of the Empire lies, to

bout Religion. And in things that were not determined by the Diet, every Prince pretended to it as highly in his own Dominions, as the King could do in England. But as untrue as this Allegation was, it ſerved Gardiner's turn; for the King was ſufficiently irritated with it againſt the Princes, ſo that there was now a great coldneſs in their correſpondence. Yet the Project of a Match with the Dutcheſs of Milan failing, and theſe propoſed by France not being acceptable, Cromwel moved the King about an Alliance with the Duke of Cleve; who, as he was the Emperor's Neighbour in Flanders, had alſo a pretenſion to the Dutchy of Guelders, and his eldeſt Daughter was married to the Duke of Saxony. So that the King having then ſome apprehenſions of a War with the Emperor, this ſeemed a very proper Alliance to give him a Diverſion.

There had been a Treaty between her Father, and the Duke of Lorrain, in order to a Match between the Duke of Lorrain's Son, and her. But they both being under Age, it went no further than a Contract between their Fathers. Hans Holbin having taken her Picture, ſent it over to the King. But in that he beſtowed the common complement of his Art, ſomewhat too liberally, on a Lady that was in way to be Queen. The King liked the Picture, better than the Original, when he had the occaſion afterwads to compare them. The Duke of Saxony, who was very zealous for the Ausburg Confeſſion, finding the King had declined ſo much from it, diſſwaded the Match. But Cromwel ſet it on mightily; expecting a great Support from a Queen of his own making: whoſe Friends being all Lutherans, it tended alſo to bring down the Popiſh Party at Court, and again to recover the ground they had now loſt. Thoſe that had ſeen the Lady, did much commend her Beauty, and Perſon. But ſhe could ſpeak no Language but Dutch; to which the King was a ſtranger. Nor was ſhe bred to Muſick, with which the King was much taken. So that except her Perſon had charmed him, there was nothing left for her to gain upon him by. After ſome months Treaty, one of the Counts Palatine of the Rhine, with other Ambaſſadors from the Duke of Saxony, and her Brother the Duke of Cleves, (for her Father was lately dead) came over, and concluded the Match.

In the end of December, ſhe was brought over to England: And the King being impatient to ſee her, went down Incognito to Rocheſter. But when he had a ſight of her, finding none of theſe charms which he was made believe were in her, he was ſo extreamly ſurprized, that he not only did not like her, but took an Averſion to her, which he could never after overcome. He ſwore they had brought over a Flanders Mare to him, and was very ſorry he had gone ſo far, but glad it had proceeded no further. And preſently he reſolved, if it were poſſible, to break off the Matter, and never to yoke himſelf with her. But his Affairs were not then in ſuch a condition, that he could ſafely put that Affront on the Dukes of Saxony and Cleves, which the ſending back of this Lady would have done. For the Germans, being of all Nations moſt ſenſible of every thing in which the Honour of their Family is touched; he knew they would reſent ſuch an injury. And it was not ſafe for him to adventure that at ſuch

Who comes over to England.

1539. a time. For the Emperor was then in Paris, whither he had gone to an Enterview with Francis. And his Reception was not only as magnificent as could be, but there was all the evidence possible of hearty Friendship and Kindness. The King also understood, that between them there was somewhat projected against himself. And now Francis, that had been as much obliged by him, as possibly one Prince could be by another, was not only forgetful of it, but intended to take advantage from the Distractions and Discontents of the English, to drive them out of France, if it were possible. And it is not to be doubted but the Emperor would gladly have embroiled these two Kings, that he might have a better opportunity both to make himself Master of Germany, and to force the King of England into an Alliance, by which the Lady Mary should be Legitimated, and the Princes of Germany be left destitute of a Support, which made them insolent and Intractable. The King apprehended the Conjunction of those two great Princes against himself, which was much set forward by the Pope; and that they would set up the King of Scotland against him, who with that Foreign Assistance, and the Discontents at home, would have made War upon great Advantages; especially those in the North of England, being ill-affectd to him: And therefore he judged it necessary for his Affairs, not to lose the Princes of Germany. Only he resolved, first, to try if any Nullities or Pre-contracts could excuse him fairly at their hands. He returned to Greenwich very melancholy. He much blamed the Earl of Southampton, who being sent over to receive her at Callice, had written an high Commendation of her Beauty. But he excused himself, that he thought the thing was so far gone, that it was decent to write as he had done. The King lamented his condition in that Marriage; and expressed great trouble, both to the Lord Russel, Sir Anthony Brown, Sir Anthony Denny, and others about him. The last of those told him, this was one 'Advantage that Mean Persons had over Princes: That great Prin-'ces must take such Wives as are brought them, whereas meaner Per-'sons go and chuse Wives for themselves. But when the King saw Cromwel, he gave his grief a freer vent to him. He finding the King so much troubled, would have cast the chief blame on the Earl of Southampton, for whom he had no great kindness: And said, when he found her far short of what Reports and Pictures had made her, he should have staied her at Callice, till he had given the King notice of it. But the Earls Commission being only to bring her over; he said, It had been too great a presumption in him, to have interposed in such a manner. And the King was convinced he was in the right. So now, all they had to insist on, was the clearing of that Contract that had passed between her and the Marques of Lorain: which the Ambassadors, who had been with the King, had undertaken should be fully done, and brought over with her in due form of Law. So after the Lady was bought in great State to Greenwich, the Council met, and sent for the Ambassadors of the Duke of Cleve that conducted her over; and desired to see what they had brought for clearing the breach of that Contract with the Marques of Lorain. But they had brought nothing, and made no account of it; saying, that the Contract was in their Minority, when they could give no no conſent; and that nothing had followed on it, after they came to be of Age. But this did not ſatisfy the King's Council, who ſaid, theſe were but their words, and they muſt ſee better proofs. The King's Marriage was annulled with Anne Boleyn, upon a pre-contract; therefore he muſt not again run the like hazard. So Oliſſeger and Hogeſden, the Ambaſſadors from Cleve, did, by a formal Inſtrument, proteſt before Cromwel, That in a Peace made between their late Maſter, John Duke of Cleve, and Anthony Duke of Lorrain, one of the Conditions was, that this Lady being then under Age, ſhould be given in marriage to Francis Son to the Duke of Lorrain, who was likewiſe under Age; which Treaty they affirmed they ſaw and read. But that afterwards Henry de Groſſe, Ambaſſador of Charles Duke of Guelders, upon whoſe Mediation that Peace had been concluded, declared in their hearing, that Eſpouſals were Annulled, and of no Effect; and that this was regiſtred in the Chancery of Cleve, of which they promiſed to bring an authentical Extract within three months to England. Some of the Councellors, who knew the King's ſecret diſlike of her Perſon, would have inſiſted more on this. But the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of Dureſm, ſaid, If there was no more than that, it could be no juſt hindrance to the Solemnization of the Marriage. So the King ſeeing there was no remedy, and being much preſſed, both by the Miniſters of Cleve, and by the Lord Cromwel, married her on the 6th of January: But expreſſed ſo much averſion and diſlike of her, that every Body about him took notice of it. Next day the Lord Cromwel asked him how he liked her then. He told him, He was not every Man; therefore he would be free with him: He liked her worſe than he did. He ſuſpected ſhe was no Maid: and had ſuch ill ſmells about her, that he loathed her more than ever, and did not believe he ſhould ever conſummate the Marriage. This was ſad news to Cromwel, who knew well how delicate the King was in theſe Matters; and that ſo great a Misfortune muſt needs turn very heavy on him, that was the chief Promoter of it. He knew his Enemies would draw great advantages from this; and underſtood the King's Temper too well, to think his Greatneſs would laſt long, if he could not induce the King to like the Queen better. But that was not to be done; for though the King lived five months with her in that State, and very oft lay in the Bed with her, yet his Averſion rather encreaſed than abated. She ſeemed not much concerned at it: and, as their Converſation was not great, ſo ſhe was of an heavy Compoſition, and was not much diſpleaſed, to be delivered from a Marriage in which ſhe had ſo little ſatisfaction. Yet one thing ſhews that ſhe wanted not Capacity; for ſhe learned the Engliſh Language very ſoon: and before her Marriage was annulled, ſhe ſpoke Engliſh freely, as appears by ſome of the Depoſitions.

And could never love her.

There was an Inſtrument brought over from Cleve, taken out of the Chancery there; by which it appeared, That Henry de Groſſe, Ambaſſador from the Duke of Guelders, had, on the 15th of February, in the Year 1535, declared the Nullity of the former Contract, in expreſs words, which are ſet down in High Dutch, but thus put in Latine; Sponſalia illa progreſſum ſuum non habitura, (I will not anſwer for 1540. for the Latine,) ex quo dictus Dux Carolus admodum doleret, & propterea quædam fecisset, & amplius facturus esset. And Pallandus, that was Ambassador from the Duke of Cleves in the Duke of Guelder's Court, wrote to his Master, Illustrissimum Ducem Gueldriæ certo scio prima illa Sponsalia inter Domicellam Annam fore inania & progressum suum non habitura. When this was shewed the King, his Council found great exceptions to it, upon the Ambiguity of the word Sponsalia; it not being expressed, whether they were Espousals by the words of the Present, or of the Future Tense; and intended to make use of that when there should be a fit opportunity for it.

A Parliament called. On the 12th of April a Session of Parliament was held. The Journal shews, that neither the Abbot of Westminster, nor any other Abbot was present. After the Lord Chancellor had opened the Reasons for the King's meeting them at that time, as they related to the Civil Government; Cromwel, as Lord Vice-gerent, spake next in the King's Name, and said, 'There was nothing which the King so much desired, as a firm Union among all his Subjects, in which he placed his chief security. He knew there were many Incendiaries, and much Cockle grew up with the Wheat. The rashness and licentiousness of some, and the inveterate Superstition and stiffness of others to the Ancient Corruptions, had raised great dissentions, to the great regret of all good Christians. Some were called Papists, others Heretics; which bitterness of Spirit seemed the more strange, since now the Holy Scriptures, by the King's great care of his People, were in all their hands, in a Language which they understood, but these were grosly perverted by both sides, who studied rather to justify their Passions out of them, than to direct their belief by them. The King leaned neither to the right nor to the left Hand, neither to the one nor the other Party, but set the pure and sincere Doctrine of the Christian Faith only before his Eyes: And therefore was now resolved to have this set forth to his Subjects without any corrupt mixtures; and to have such decent Ceremonies continued, and the true use of them taught, by which all Abuses might be cut off, and Disputes about the Exposition of the Scriptures cease, and so all his Subjects might be well instructed in their Faith, and directed in the reverent Worship of God; and resolved to punish severely all Transgressors, of what sort or Sect soever they were. The King was resolved, That Christ, that is, Gospel of Christ, and the Truth should have the Victory. And therefore had appointed some Bishops and Divines to draw up an Exposition of those things that were necessary for the Institution of a Christian Man: Who were, the two Arch-bishops, the Bishop of London, Durham, Winchester, Rochester, Hereford, and St. Davids, and Doctors, Thirleby, Robertson, Cox, Day, Oglethorp, Redman, Edgeworth, Crayford, Symonds, Robins, and Tresham. He also had appointed others to examine what Ceremonies should be retained, and what was the true use of them; who were the Bishops of Bath and Wells, Ely, Sarum, Chichester, Worcester, and Landaff. The King had also commanded the Judges, and other Justices of the Peace, and Persons commissioned for the execution of the Act formerly passed, to proceed against all Transgressors, and punish them accord-

'to Law. And he Concluded with an high Commendation of the 'King, whose due Praises, he said, a Man of far greater Eloquence 'than himself was, could not fully set forth. The Lords approved of this Nomination, and ordered that these Committees should sit constantly on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: and on other days they were to sit in the afternoon. But their Proceedings will require so full a Relation, that I shall first open the other Affairs that passed in this Session, and leave these to the last. 1540.

On the 14th of April the King created Cromwel Earl of Essex; the Male Line of the Bourchiers, that had carried that Title, being extinguished. This shews that the true Causes of Cromwel's fall, must be found in some other thing, than his making up the King's Marriage: who had never thus raised his Title, if he had intended so soon to pull him down. He is made Earl of Essex.

On the 22d of April, a Bill was brought in for Suppressing the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. Their first Foundation was to be a Guard to the Pilgrims that went to the Holy Land. For some Ages, that was extolled as the highest expression of devotion and a reverence to our Savour, to go and view the Places of his abode; and chiefly the places where he was Crucified, Buried, and ascended to Heaven. Upon which, many entered into a Religious Knighthood, who were to defend the Holy Land, and conduct the Pilgrims. Those were of two sorts; The Knights-Templars, and Hospitallers. The former were the greater and richer, but the other were also very considerable. The Popes and their Clergy did every where animate all Princes, and great Persons, to undertake Expeditions into these Parts; Which were very costly and dangerous, and proved fatal to almost all the Princes that made them. Yet the belief of the Pains of Purgatory, from which all were delivered by the Pope's Power, who went on this Expedition; such as died in it being also reckoned Martyrs; wrought wonderfully on a blind and superstitious Age. But such as could not go, were perswaded, That if on their death-beds they vowed to go upon their recovery, and left some Lands to maintain a Knight that should go thither and fight against the Infidels, it would do as well. Upon this, great and vast Endowments were made. But there were many Complaints made of the Templars, for betraying and robbing the Pilgrims, and other horrid abuses, which may reasonably be believed to have been true; though other Writers of that Age lay the blame rather on the Covetousness of the King of France, and the Pope's Malice to them: Yet in a General Council the whole Order was Condemned, and Suppressed, and such of them as could be taken, were cruelly put to death. The Order of the Hospitallers stood, yet did not grow much after that. They were beaten out of the Holy Land by the Sultans, and lately out of the Isle of Rhodes, and were at this time in Malta. Their great Master depended on the Pope and the Emperor: so it was not thought fit, to let a House, that was subject to a Forreign Power, stand longer. And it seems they would not willingly surrender up their House, as others had done. Therefore it was necessary to force them out of it by an Act of Parliament; which on the 22d of April was read the first time, and on the 26th the 2d time, and one the 29th the third time; by which both The suppression of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem.

1540. their House in England, and another they had in Kilmainam in Ireland, were suppressed; great Pensions being reserved by the Act to the Priors, a 1000 l. to him of St. John's near London, and 500 Marks to the other, with very considerable allowances for the Knights, which in all amounted near to 3000 l. yearly. But on the 14th of May, the Parliament was Prorogued to the 25th, and a Vote passed, that their Bills should remain in the State they were in.

Cromwel's Fall. Upon their next meeting, as they were going on in their Business, a great Change of Court broke out. For on the 13th of June, at the Council Table, the Duke of Norfolk, in the King's Name challenged the Lord Cromwel of High Treason, and Arresting him, sent him Prisoner to the Tower. He had many Enemies among all sorts of Persons. The Noblity despised him, and thought it lessened the greatness of their Titles, to see the Son of a Black-Smith raised so many degrees above them. His aspiring to the Order of the Garter, was thought inexcusable vanity: and his having so many places heaped on him, as Lord Privy-Seal, Lord Chamberlain of England, and Lord Vice-gerent, with the Mastership of the Rolls, with which he had but lately parted, drew much envy on him. All the Popish Party hated him out of measure. The Suppression of the Abbies was laid wholly at his door: The Attaindors, and all other servere proceedings, were imputed to his Counsels. He was also thought to be the Person that had kept the King and the Emperor at such distance: And therefore the Duke of Norfolk, and Gardiner, beside private Animosities, hated him on that account. And they did not think it impossible, if he were out of the way, to bring on a Treaty with the Emperor; which they hoped would open the way for one with the Pope. But other more secret Reasons wrought his ruine with the King. The fear he was in of a Conjunction between the Emperor and France did now abate: For he understood that it went no further than Complements. And though he clearly discovered, having sent over the Duke of Norfolk to Francis, that he was not to depend much on his friendship; yet at the same time he knew that the Emperor would not yield up the Dutchy of Milan to him, upon which his heart was much set. So he saw they could come to no agreement; Therefore he made no great account of the loss of France, since he knew the Emperor would willingly make an Alliance with him: The hopes of which made him more indifferent, whether the German Princes were pleased with what he did, or not, since he had now attained the end he had proposed to himself in all his Negotiations with them, which was, to secure himself from any trouble the Emperor might give him. Therefore Cromwell's Counsels were now disliked, for he had always enclined the King to favour those Princes against the Emperor. Another secret cause was, That as the King had an unconquerable aversion to his Queen, so he was taken with the Beauty and Behaviour of Mistress Katherine Howard, Daughter to the Lord Edmond Howard, a Brother of the Duke of Norfolks. And as this designed Match raised the credit of her Uncle, so the ill consequences of the former, drew him down who had been the chief Counsellor in it. The King also found his Government was grown uneasie, and therefore judged it was no ill Policy to cast over all that had been done amiſs, upon a Miniſter who had great Power with him: and being now in diſgrace, all the blame of theſe things would be taken off from the King, and laid on him, and his Ruin would much appeaſe Diſcontents, and make them more moderate in cenſuring the King, or his Proceedings. It is ſaid, that other Particulars were charged on him, which loſt him the King's Favour. If this be true, it is like they related to the encouragement he was ſaid to have given to ſome Reformers, in the oppoſition they made to the ſix Articles; upon the Execution of which the King was now much ſet. His Fall was ſo ſecretly carried, that though he had often before looked for it, knowing the King's uneaſie and jealous temper, yet at that time he had no apprehenſions of it, till the Storm broke upon him. In his Fall he had the common fate of all diſgraced Miniſters, to be forſaken by his Friends, and inſulted over by his Enemies. Only Cranmer retained ſtill ſo much of his former ſimplicity, that he could never learn theſe Court Arts. Therefore he wrote to the King about him next day, 'He much magnified his diligence in the King's Service and 'Preſervation, and diſcovering all Plots as ſoon as they were made: 'That he had always loved the King above all things, and ſerved 'him with great fidelity and ſucceſs: That he thought no King of 'England had ever ſuch a Servant; upon that account he had loved 'him, as one that loved the King above all others. But if he was 'a Traytor, he was glad it was diſcovered. But he prayed God 'earneſtly, to ſend the King ſuch a Chancellor in his ſtead, who could 'and would ſerve him as he had done. This ſhews both the firmneſs of Cranmer's friendſhip to him, and that he had a great Soul, not turned by the changes of Mens Fortunes, to like or diſlike them, as they ſtood or declined from their greatneſs. And had not the King's Kindneſs for Cranmer been deeply rooted, this Letter had ruined him. For he was the moſt impatient of Contradiction, in ſuch caſes, that could be. Cromwel's ruin was now decreed; and he who had ſo ſervily complied with the King's Pleaſure in procuring ſome to be Attainted the Year before, without being brought to make their Anſwer, fell now under the ſame ſeverity. For whether it was that his Enemies knew, That if he were brought to the Bar, he would ſo juſtifie himſelf, that they would find great difficulties in the Proceſs; or whether it was that they blindly reſolved to follow that injuſtifiable Precedent, of paſſing over ſo neceſſary a Rule to all Courts, of giving the Party accuſed an hearing; the Bill of Attaindor was brought into the Houſe of Lords, Cranmer being abſent that day, as appears by the Journal, on the 17th of June, and read the firſt time, and on the 19th was read the ſecond and third time, and ſent down to the Commons. By which it appears, how few Friends he had in that Houſe, when a Bill of that nature went on ſo haſtily. But it ſeems he found in the Houſe of Commons ſomewhat of the ſame meaſure, which ten Years before he had dealt to the Cardinal, though not with the ſame ſucceſs. For his Matter ſtuck ten days there. At length a new Bill of Attaindor was brought up, conceived in the Houſe of Commons, with a Proviſo annexed to it. They alſo ſent back the Bill which the Lords ſent to them. But it is not clear from the Journals what they meant by thoſe two Bills. It ſeems they rejected

But though this be an unparliamentary way of proceeding, I know no other sense which the words of the Journal can bear, which I shall set down in the Margent, that the Reader may judg better concerning it. * And that very day the King assented to it, as appears by the Letter written the next day by Cromwel to the King.

Cromwel's Attainder. Collect. Num. 16.

The Act said, 'That the King having raised Thomas Cromwel from 'a base Degree, to great Dignities and high Trusts; yet he had now, 'by a great number of Witnesses, Persons of Honour, found him to 'be the most Corrupt Traitor, and Deceiver of the King and the 'Crown, that had ever been known in his whole Reign. He had 'taken upon him to set at liberty divers Persons put in Prison for Mi- 'prision of Treason, and others that were suspected of it. He had 'also received several Bribes, and for them granted Licenses to carry 'Mony, Corn, Horses, and other things out of the Kingdom, con- 'trary to the King's Proclamations. He had also given out many 'Commissions without the King's knowledge; and being but of a base 'Birth, he said, That he was sure of the King. He had granted ma- 'ny Pass-ports, both to the King's Subjects and Forreigners, for pas- 'sing the Seas without search. He being also an Heretick, had dis- 'persed many Erroneous Books among the King's Subjects, particu- 'larly some that were contrary to the Belief of the Sacrament. And 'when some had informed him of this, and had shewed him those 'Heresies in Books printed in England, he said, They were good, and 'that he found no fault in them; and said, It was as lawful for ma- 'ry Christian Man to be the Minister of that Sacrament, as a Priest. And 'whereas the King had constituted him Vice-gerent for the Spiritu- 'al Affairs of the Church; he had, under the Seal of that Office, li- 'censed many that were suspected of Heresie, to Preach over the 'Kingdom; and he had, both by Word and in Writing, suggested to 'several Sheriffs, That it was the King's Pleasure they should discharge 'many Prisoners, of whom some were Indicted, others apprehended 'for Heresie. And when many particular Complaints were brought 'to him of detestable Heresies, with the Names of the Offenders, he 'not only defended the Hereticks, but severely checkt the Informers; 'and vexed some of them by Imprisonment, and other ways; the 'particulars of all which were too tedious to be recited. And he 'having entertained many of the King's Subjects about himself, whom 'he had infected with Heresie, and imagining he was by force able 'to defend his Treasons and Heresies; on the last of March, in the '30th Year of the King's Reign, in the Parish of St. Peters the Poor 'in London, when some of them complained to him of the new 'Preachers, such as Barnes and others, he said; Their Preaching was 'good; and said also, among other things, That if the King would 'turn from it, yet he would not turn: And if the King did turn, and

'Proviſo; That this ſhould not be hurtful to the Biſhop of Bath and
'Wells, and to the Dean and Chapter of Wells; with whom, it ſeems, he had made ſome exchanges of Lands.

From theſe Particulars, the Reader will clearly ſee, why he was not brought to make his Anſwer, moſt of them relating to Orders and Directions he had given, for which it is very probable he had the King's Warrant. And for the matter of Hereſie, it has appeared how far the King had proceeded towards a Reformation, ſo that what he did that way, was moſt likely done by the King's Order: But the King now falling from theſe things, it was thought they intended to ſtifle him by ſuch an Attaindor; that he might not diſcover the ſecret Orders or Directions given him for his own Juſtification. For the particulars of Bribery and Extortion, they being mentioned in general Expreſſions, ſeem only caſt into the heap to defame him. But for thoſe Treaſonable words, it was generally thought that they were a Contrivance of his Enemies: ſince it ſeemed a thing very extravagant, for a Favourite, in the height of his Greatneſs, to talk ſo rudely. And if he had been guilty of it, Bedlam was thought a fitter place for his Reſtraint than the Tower. Nor was it judged likely that he having ſuch great and watchful Enemies at Court, any ſuch Diſcourſes could have lain ſo long ſecret: Or if they had come to the King's knowledge, he was not a Prince of ſuch a temper as to have forgiven, much leſs imployed and advanced a Man after ſuch diſcourſes. And to think, that during theſe fifteen Months, after the words were ſaid to have been ſpoken, none would have had the Zeal for the King, or the Malice to Cromwel, as to repeat them, were things that could not be believed. The formality of drawing his Dagger, made it the more ſuſpected; for this was to affix an overt-Act to theſe words, which in the Opinion of many Lawyers, was neceſſary to make words Treaſonable. But as if theſe words had not been ill enough, ſome Writers ſince have made them worſe; as if he had ſaid, He would thruſt his Dagger in the King's Heart: About which Fuller hath made another 1540. story to excuse these words, as if they had not been meant of the King, but of another. But all that is founded on a Mistake, which, if he had looked in the Record, he had corrected.

Cromwel's Fall was the first step towards the King's Divorce. For on the 24th of June he sent his Queen to Richmond, pretending the Country Air would agree better with her. But on the 6th of July a motion was made, and assented to in the House of Lords, that they should make an Address to the King, desiring him to suffer his Marriage with the Queen to be tryed. Upon which, the Lord Chancellor, the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Earl of Southampton, and the Bishop of Duresm, were sent down to the Commons, to represent the Matter to them, and to desire their concurrence in the Address. To which they agreed, and ordered twenty of their number to go along with the Peers. So the whole House of Lords, with these Commoners, went to the King; and told him, they had a Matter of great consequence to propose to him, but it was of that Importance, that they first begged his leave to move it. This being obtained, they desired the King would order a Tryal to be made of the validity of his Marriage. To which the King consented, and made a deep Protestation, as in the presence of God, that he should conceal nothing that related to it, and all its Circumstances; And that there was nothing that he held dearer than the Glory of God, the Good of the Common-wealth, and the Declaration of Truth. So a Commission was issued out to the Convocation to try it.

It's referr'd to the Convocation.

On the 7th of July it was brought before the Convocation, of which the Reader will see a fuller account in the Collection at the end, than is needful to be brought in here. The Case was opened by the Bishop of Wincheſter, and a Committee was appointed to consider it; and they deputed the Bishop of Duresm, and Wincheſter, and Thirleby, and Richard Leighton Dean of York, to examine the Witnesses that day. And the next day they received the King's own Deposition; with a long Declaration of the whole Matter, under Cromwell's hand, in a Letter to the King; and the Depositions of most of the Privy Councellors, of the Earl of Southampton, the Lord Russel then Admiral, of Sir Anthony Brown, Sir Anthony Denny, Doctor Chambers, and Doctor Butts, the King's Physicians, and of some Ladies that had talked with the Queen. All which amounted to this; that the King expected that the Precontract with the Marquess of Lorrain, should have been more fully cleared. That the King always disliked her, and married her but sore against his heart; and since that time he had never consummated the Marriage. So the substance of the whole Evidence being considered, it amounted to these three particulars. First, That there had been a Contract between the Marquess of Lorrain and the Queen, which was not sufficiently cleared: for it did not yet appear whether these Espousals were made by the Parties themselves, or in the words of the Present Tense. Then it was said, That the King having married her against his Will, he had not given a pure, inward, and compleat consent: And since a Man's Act is only what is inward, extorted or forced promises do not bind. And Thirdly, That he had never consummated the Marriage. To which was added the great interest the whole Nation had in the King's having more Issue, which they saw he could could never have by the Queen. This was furiously driven on by the Popish Party. And Cranmer, whether overcome with these Arguments, or rather with fear, for he knew it was contrived to send him quickly after Cromwel, consented with the rest. So that the whole Convocation, without one disagreeing Vote, judged the Marriage null, and of no force: and that both the King, and the Lady, were free from the Bond of it. 1540. Convocation agree to it. Coll. Numb. 19.

This was the greatest piece of Compliance that ever the King had from the Clergy. For as they all knew there was nothing of weight in that præcontract; so they laid down a most pernicious Precedent, for invalidating all publick Treaties and Agreements: since if one of the Parties being unwilling to it, so that his consent were not inward, he was not bound by it, there was no safety among Men more. For no Man can know whether another consents inwardly: And when a Man does any thing with great aversion, to infer from thence, that he does not inwardly consent, may furnish every one with an excuse, to break loose from all Engagements: For he may pretend he did it unwillingly, and get his Friends to declare that he privately signified that to them. And for that Argument, which was taken from the want of Consummation; they had forgotten what was pleaded on the King's behalf ten Years before, That consent without Consummation, made a Marriage compleat; by which they concluded, that though Prince Arthur had not consummated his Marriage with Queen Katherine, yet his consent did so compleat it, that the King could not afterwards lawfully marry her. But as the King was resolved on any terms to be rid of this Queen, so the Clergy were also resolved not to incur his displeasure: In which they rather sought for reasons to give some colour to their Sentence, than past their Judgment upon the strength of them. This only can be said for their excuse, that these were as just and weighty Reasons, as used to be admitted by the Court of Rome for a Divorce; and most of them being Canonists, and knowing how many Precedents there were to be found for such Divorces, they thought they might do it, as well as the Popes had formerly done. It is censured.

On the 9th of July, Sentence was given: Which was signed by both Houses of Convocation; and had the two Arch-Pishops Seals put to it; of which whole Tryal the Record does yet remain, having escaped the Fate of the other Books of Convocation. The Original depositions are also yet extant.

Only I shall add here a reflection upon Cromwel's Misfortune, which may justly abate the loftiness of haughty Men. The day after he was attainted, being required to send to the King a full account under his hand of the business of his Marriage; which account he sent, as will be found in the Collection; he Concludes it with these abject words: Coll. Numb. 17.

'I, a most woful Prisoner, ready to take the death, when it shall 'please God and your Majesty; and yet the frail flesh inciteth me 'continually to call to your Grace for Mercy, and Grace for 'mine Offences. And thus Christ save, preserve, and keep you. 'Written at the Tower this Wednesday the last of June, with 'the heavy heart, and trembling hand, of your Highness most 'heavy, and most miserable Prisoner, and poor slave, Thomas Cromwel.

And

1540. 'And a little below that, Most Gracious Prince, I cry for Mercy, Mercy, Mercy.

Report made to the Parl.

On the 10th of July, the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury reported to the House of Lords, That the Convocation had judged the Marriage Null, both by the Law of God, and the Law of the Land. The Bishop of Winchester delivered the Judgment in Writing; which being read, he enlarged on all the Reasons of it. This satisfied the Lords, and they sent down Cranmer and him to the Commons, to give them the same account. Next day the King sent the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Southampton, and the Bishop of Winchester, to let the Queen know what was done: who was not at all troubled at it, and seemed not ill-pleased. They told her, that the King would by Letters Patents Declare her his Adopted Sister, and give her precedence before all the Ladies of England, next his Queen and Daughters: and assign her an Estate of 3000 l. a Year; and that she had her choice, either to live in England, or to return home again. She accepted the offer, and under her hand declared her consent and approbation of the Sentence; and chose to live still in England, where she was in great Honour, rather than return under that disgrace to her own Country. She was also desired to write to her Brother, and let him know, that she approved of what was done in her Matter, and that the King used her as a Father, or a Brother; and therefore to desire him, and her other Friends, not to take this Matter ill, or lessen their Friendship to the King. She had no mind to do that, but said it would be time enough when her Brother wrote to her, to send him such an answer. But it was answered, That much depended on the first Impressions that are received of any Matter. She in conclusion said, she should obey the King in every thing he desired her to do. So she wrote the Letter, as they desired it; and the day following, being the 12th of July, the Bill was brought into the House for annulling the Marriage, which went easily through both Houses.

The Queen consents to it.

Coll. Numb. 20.

An Act about the Incontinence of Priests.

On the 16th of July, a Bill was brought in, for moderating the Statute of the six Articles in the Clauses that related to the Marriage of the Priests, or their Incontinency with other Women. On the 17th, it was agreed by the whole House, without a contradicting Vote, and sent down to the Commons; who the 21th, sent it up again. By it the Pains of death were turned to Forfeitures of the Goods and Chattels, and the Rents of their Ecclesiastical Promotions to the King.

Another about Religion.

On the 20th of July, a Bill was brought in concerning a Declaration of the Christian Religion, and was then read the first, 2d, and 3d, time, and passed without any opposition, and sent down to the Commons; who agreeing to it, sent it up again the next day. 'It contained, that 'the King, as Supream Head of the Church, was taking much pains 'for an Union among all his Subjects in Matters of Religion; and for 'preventing the further progress of Heresie, had appointed many of 'the Bishops, and the most learned Divines, to declare the principal 'Articles of the Christian Belief, with the Ceremonies, and way of 'God's Service to be observed. That therefore a thing of that weight 'might not be rashly done, or hasted through, in this Session of Parliament;

'fore it was Enacted, That whatſoever was determined by the Arch-Bi-'ſhops, Biſhops, and the other Divines, now Commiſſionated for 'that effect, or by any others appointed by the King, or by the whole
'Clergy of England, and publiſhed by the King's Authority concer'ning the Chriſtian Faith, or the Ceremonies of the Church, ſhould
'be believed and obeyed by all the King's Subjects; as well as if the 'particulars ſo ſet forth had been enumerated in this Act, any Cu-
'ſtom or Law to the contrary notwithſtanding. To this a ſtrange
'Proviſo was added, which deſtroyed the former Clauſe; That no'thing ſhould be done or determined by the Authority of this 'Act, which was contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom.
But whether this Proviſo was added by the Houſe of Commons, or originally put into the Bill, does not appear. It was more likely it was put in at the firſt by the King's Council: for theſe contradictory Clauſes raiſed the Prerogative higher, and left it in the Judge's power to determine which of the two ſhould be followed; by which all Eccleſiaſtical Matters were to be brought under Tryals at Common Law: for it was one of the great deſigns, both of the Miniſters and Lawyers at this time, to bring all Eccleſiaſtical Matters to the Cognizance of the Secular Judge.

But another Bill paſſed, which ſeems a little odd, concerning the circumſtances of that time. 'That whereas many Marriages had been
'annulled in the time of Popery, upon the pretence of Precontracts,
'or other degrees of Kindred, than thoſe that were prohibited by the 'Law of God: Therefore, after a Marriage was conſummated, no
'pretence of any precontract, or any degrees of Kindred or Alliance,
'but thoſe mentioned in the Law of God, ſhould be brought or made
'uſe of, to annul it; ſince theſe things had been oft pretended,
'only to diſſolve a Marriage, when the Parties grew weary of each o'ther, which was contrary to God's Law. Therefore it was Enacted, That 'no pretence of precontract, not conſummated, ſhould be made uſe
'of to annul a Marriage duly ſolemnized and conſummated; and 'that no degrees of kindred, not mentioned by the Law of God, ſhould
'be pleaded to annul a Marriage. This Act gave great occaſion of cenſuring the King's former proceedings againſt Queen Ann Boleyn, ſince, that which was now condemned had been the pretence for diſſolving his Marriage with her. Others thought the King did it on deſign to remove that Impediment out of the way of the Lady Elizabeth's ſucceeding to the Crown; ſince that judgment upon which ſhe was Illegitimated, was now indirectly cenſured: And that other branch of the Act, for taking away all prohibitions of Marriages, within any degrees but thoſe forbidden in Scripture, was to make way for the King's Marriage with Katherine Howard, who was Couſin-German to Queen Ann Boleyn; for that was one of the prohibited degrees by the Canon Law.

The Province of Canterbury offered a Subſidy of four ſhillings in the pound, of all Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, to be payed in two years, and that in acknowledgment of the great liberty they enjoyed by being delivered from the Uſurpations of the Biſhops of Rome, and in recompence of the great charges the King had been at, and was ſtill to Subſidies granted by the Clergy.

1540. be at, in building Havens, Bulwarks, and other Forts, for the defence of his Coasts, and the security of his Subjects. This was confirmed in Parliament. But that did not satisfie the King; who had husbanded the Money that came in by the sale of Abbey Lands, so ill, that now he wanted Money, and was forced to ask a Subsidy for his Marriage of the Parliament: this was obtained with great difficulty. For it was said, That if the King was already in want, after so vast an income, especially being engaged in no War, there would be no end of his necessities; nor could it be possible for them to supply them. But it was answered, That the King had laid out a great Treasure in fortifying the Coast: and though he was then in no visible War, yet the charge he was at in keeping up the War beyond Sea, was equal to the expence of a War; and much more to the advantage of his People, who were kept in Peace and Plenty. This obtained a Tenth, and four 15ths. After the passing of all these Bills, and many other that concerned the Publick, with several other Bills of Attainder, for some that favoured the Pope's Interests, or Corresponded with Cardinal Pool; which shall be mentioned in another place, the King sent in a General Pardon, with the Ordinary Exceptions; and in particular, excepted Cromwell, the Countess of Sarum, with many others, then in Prison; Some of them were put in for opposing the King's Supremacy, and others for transgressing the Statute of the six Articles: On the 24th of July the Parliament was dissolved.

And Laicy.

Cromwell's Death. And now Cromwell, who had been six weeks a Prisoner, was brought to his Execution. He had used all the endeavours he could for his own preservation. Once he wrote to the King in such melting terms, that he made the Letter to be thrice read, and seemed touched with it. But the charms of Katherine Howard, and the endeavours of the Duke of Norfolk and the Bishop of Winchester at length prevailed. So a Warrant was sent to cut off his Head, on the 28*th* of July at Tower-hill. When he was brought to the Scaffold, his kindness to his Son made him very cautious in what he said; he declined the purging of himself, but said, he was by Law condemned 'to die, and thanked God for bringing him to that death, for his 'Offences. He acknowledged his Sins against God, and his Offences 'against his Prince, who had raised him from a base degree. He 'declared that he died in the Catholick Faith, not doubting of any 'Article of Faith, or of any Sacrament of the Church: and denied 'that he had been a Supporter of those who delivered ill Opinions: 'He confessed he had been seduced, but now died in the Catholick 'Faith, and desired them to pray for the King, and for the Prince, 'and for himself: and then prayed very fervently for the remission 'of his past Sins, and admittance into Eternal Glory: and having given the Sign, the Executioner cut off his Head very barbarously.

His Character. Thus fell that great Minister, that was raised meerly upon the strength of his natural Parts. For as his Extraction was mean, so his Education was low: All the learning he had, was, that he had got the New-Testament in Latin by heart. His great wisdom, and dexterity in business, raised him up through several steps, till he was become as great as a Subject could be. He carryed his greatness with wonder-wonderful temper and moderation; and fell under the weight of popular Odium, rather than Guilt. The disorders in the Suppression of Abbeys were generally charged on him. Yet when he fell, no Bribery, nor cheating of the King, could be fastned on him; though such things come out in swarms on a disgraced Favourite, when there is any ground for them. By what he spoke at his death, he left it much doubted of what Religion he dyed. But it is certain he was a Lutheran. The term Catholick Faith used by him in his last speech seemed to make it doubtful, but that was then used in England, in its true sense, in Opposition to the Novelties of the See of Rome, as will afterwards appear, on another occasion. So that his profession of the Catholick Faith was strangely perverted, when some from thence concluded that he dyed in the Communion of the Church of Rome. But his praying in English, and that only to God through Christ, without any of those tricks that were used when those of that Church died, shewed he was none of theirs. With him the Office of the King's Vice-gerent in Ecclesiastical affairs died, as it rose first in his Person: and as all the Clergy opposed the setting up a new Officer, whose Interest should oblige him to oppose a Reconciliation with Rome, so it seems none were fond to succeed in an Office, that proved so fatal to him that had first carryed it. The King was said to have lamented his death, after it was too late; but the fall of the new Queen, that followed not long after, and the miseries which fell also on the Duke of Norfolk, and his Family, some years after, were looked on as the Scourges of Heaven, for their cruel prosecution of this unfortunate Minister. 1540.

With his fall, the progress of the Reformation, which had been by his endeavours so far advanced, was quite stopt. For all that Cranmer could do after this, was to keep the ground they had gained. But he could never advance much further. And indeed every one expected to see him go next. For, as one Gostwick, Knight for Bedfordshire, had named him in the House of Commons, as the Supporter and Promoter of all the Heresie that was in England; so the Popish Party reckoned they had but half done their work, by destroying Cromwell; and that it was not finished till Cranmer followed him. Therefore all possible endeavours were used to make discoveries of the Encouragement, which, as was believed he gave to the Preachers of the condemned Doctrines. And it is very probable, that had not the Incontinence of Katherine Howard (whom the King declared Queen on the 8*th* of August,) broken out not long after, he had been Sacrificed the next Session of Parliament. Designs against Cranmer.

But now I return to my proper business, to give an account of Church-matters for this year; with which these great Changes in Court had so great a Relation, that the Reader will excuse the digression about them.

Upon Cromwell's fall, Gardiner, and those that followed him, made no doubt but they should quickly recover what they had lost of late years. So their greatest attempt was upon the Translation of the Scriptures. The Convocation Books (as I have been forced often to lament,) are lost; so that here I cannot stir, but as Fuller leads me: who assures the World that he Copied out of the Records with his 1540. own Pen what he publiſhed. And yet I doubt he has miſtaken himſelf in the year; and that which he calls the Convocation of this year, was the Convocation of the year 1542. For he tells us, That their 7th Seſſion was the 10th of March. Now in this year the Convocation did not ſit down till the 13th of April, but that year it ſate all March, So likewiſe he tells us of the Biſhops of Weſtminſter, Glocester and Peterborough, bearing a ſhare in this Convocation: whereas theſe were not Conſecrated before Winter, and could not ſit as Biſhops in this Synod. And beſides, Thirleby ſate at this time in the lower Houſe; as was formerly ſhewn in the Proceſs about Ann of Cleves Marriage. So that their attempt againſt the New Teſtament belongs to the year 1542.

A Commiſſion ſits about Religion.

But they were now much better employed, though not in the way of Convocation. For a ſelect number of them ſate by virtue a Commiſſion from the King confirmed in Parliament. Their firſt work was to draw up a Declaration of the Chriſtian Doctrine, for the neceſſary erudition of a Chriſtian Man. They thought that to ſpeak of Faith in general, ought naturally to go before an Expoſition of the Chriſtian Belief: and therefore with that they began.

An Explanation of Faith.

The Church of Rome, that deſigned to keep her Children in ignorance, had made no great account of Faith; which they generally taught, conſiſted chiefly in an Implicite Believing whatever the Church propoſed; without any explicite knowledge of particulars. So that a Chriſtian Faith, as they had explained it, was a Submiſſion to the Church. The Reformers finding that this was the Spring of all their other errors, and that which gave them colour and Authority; did on the other hand ſet up the ſtrength of their whole Cauſe on an Explicite believing the truth of the Scriptures, becauſe of the Authority of God, who had revealed them. And ſaid, that as the great Subject of the Apoſtles Preaching, was Faith, ſo that which they every where taught, was to read and believe the Scriptures. Upon which followed nice Diſputing, what was that ſaving Faith by which the Scriptures ſay, we are Juſtified. They could not ſay it was barely crediting the Divine Revelation, ſince in that ſenſe the Devils believed. Therefore they generally placed it, at firſt, in their being aſſured that they ſhould be ſaved by Chriſt dying for them. In which, their deſign was to make Holineſs and all other graces neceſſary requiſites in the Compoſition of Faith; though they would not make them formally parts of it. For ſince Chriſt's death has its full virtue and effect upon none but thoſe who are regenerate, and live according to his Goſpel; none could be aſſured that he ſhould be ſaved by Chriſt's death, till he firſt found in himſelf theſe neceſſary qualifications which are delivered in the Goſpel. Having once ſettled on this phraſe, their followers would needs defend it, but really made it worſe by their Explanations. The Church of Rome, thought they had them at great advantages in it, and called them Solifidians, and ſaid they were againſt good works: though whatever unwary expreſſions ſome of them threw out, they always declared good works indiſpenſably neceſſary to Salvation. But they differed from the Church of Rome, in two things that were material: There was alſo a third, but the there difference was more in the manner of expreſſion. The one was, what were good works? The Church of Rome had generally delivered, that works which did not immediate honour to God or his Saints, where more valuable, than works done to other men: and that the honour they did to Saints in their Images and Relicks, and to God in his Priests, that were dedicated to him, where the highest pieces of Holiness, as having the best Objects. This was the foundation of all that Trade, which brought in both Riches and Glory to their Church. On the other hand, the Reformers taught, That justice and mercy, with other good works done in obedience to God's Commandments, were only necessary. And for these things, so much magnified at Rome, they acknowledged there ought to be a decent splendor in the worship of God; and good provision to be made for the encouragement of those who dedicated themselves to his Service in the Church: and that what was beyond these, was the effect of Ignorance and Superstition. The other main difference was about the Merit of good Works: which the Friars had raised so high, that People were come to think they bought and sold with Almighty God, for Heaven, and all other his Blessings. This the Reformers judged was the height of Arrogance: and therefore taught that good works were indeed absolutely necessary to Salvation; but that the purchase of Heaven was only by the Death and Intercession of Jesus Christ. With these material differences they joyned another that consisted more in words? Whether Obedience was an essential part of Faith; The Reformers said it certainly accompanied and followed Faith; but thought not fit to make it an Ingredient in the nature of Faith. These things had been now much canvassed in disputes: And it was thought by many, that men of ill lives made no good use of some of the Expressions of the Reformers, that separated Faith from good works, and came to perswade themselves, that if they could but attain to a firm assurance, That they should be saved by Christ, all would be well with them. Therefore now when they went about to state the true Notion of Faith, Cranmer commanded Doctor Redmayn, who was esteemed the most learned and judicious Divine of that time, to write a short Treatise on these Heads: which he did with that solidity and clearness, that it will sufficiently justifie any advantageous Character that can be given of the Author; and according to the Conclusions of that Treatise they laid down the nature of Faith, thus: That it stands in two several senses in Scripture, 'The one is the perswasion 'of the truths, both of natural and revealed Religion, wrought in 'the mind by God's holy Spirit: And the other is such a belief as be-'gets a submission to the Will of God, and hath Hope, Love, and 'Obedience to God's Commandments joyned to it: which was Abra-'ham's Faith, and that which according to St. Paul wrought by Cha-'rity, and was so much commended in the Epistle to the Hebrews. 'That this was the Faith which in Baptism is professed, from which 'Christians are called the Faithful, And in those Scriptures where it 'is said, That we are justified by Faith, they declared, we may not 'think that we be justified by Faith, as it is a separate vertue from 'Hope and Charity, Fear of God, and Repentance; but by it is meant 'Faith, neither only, nor alone, but with the foresaid vertues coup-'led together; containing (as is aforesaid) the obedience to the 'whole 1540. 'whole Doctrine and Religion of Christ. But for the Definition of 'Faith, which some proposed, as if it were a certainty that one was 'Predestinated, they found nothing of it, either in the Scriptures, 'or the Doctors, and thought that could not be known: for though 'God never failed in his Promises to Men, yet such was the frailty of 'Men, that they often fail'd in their promises to God, and so did for- 'feit their right to the promises, which are all made upon conditions 'that depend on us.

Cranmer's Opinion about it.

Upon this occasion I shall digress a little, to shew with what care Cranmer considered so weighty a point. Among his other Papers, I find a Collection of a great many places out of the Scripture, concerning Justification by Faith, together with a vast number of Quotations out of Origen, Basil, Jerome, Theodoret, Ambrose, Austin, Prosper, Chrysostom, Gennadius, Beda, Hesychius, Theophylact, and Oecumenius; together with many later writers, such as Anselm, Bernard, Peter Lombard, Hugo Cardinalis, Lyranus, and Bruno; in which the sense of those Authors in this point did appear; all drawn out with his own hand. To this is added another Collection of many places of the Fathers, in which they speak of the merit of good works: and at the end of the whole Collection he writes these words, 'This Proposition that we 'justified by Christ only, and not by our good works, is a very true 'and necessary Doctrine of St. Paul's, and the other Apostles, taught 'by them, to set forth thereby the Glory of Christ, and the Mercy of 'God through Christ. And after some further discourse to the same 'purpose, he concludes, Although all that be justified must of neces- 'ty have Charity, as well as Faith; yet neither Faith nor Charity 'be the worthiness nor merits of our Justification: but that is to be 'ascribed only to our Saviour Christ, who was offered upon the Cross 'for our sins, and rose again for our Justification. This I set down to let the World see that Cranmer was not at all concerned in those nicties, which have been so much enquired into since that time, about the instrumentality of Faith in Justification; all that he then considered, being, That the glory of it might be ascribed only to the Death and Intercession of Jesus Christ.

They explain the Apostles Creed.

After this was thus laid down, there followed an Explanation of the Apostles Creed; full of excellent matters; being a large Paraphrase on every Article of the Creed, with such serious and practical Inferences, that I must acknowledg, after all the practical Books we have had, I find great Edification in reading that over and over again. The Style is strong, nervous, and well-fitted for the weakest capacities. There is nothing in this that is controverted between the Papists and the Reformers; except the Definition of the Holy Catholick Church, which they give us thus: That it comprehends all Assemblies of men over the whole World, that receive the Faith of Christ: who ought to hold an unity of Love, and brotherly Agreement together, by which they become members of the Catholick Church. Upon which a long excursion is made, to shew the injustice and unreasonableness of the Plea of the Church of Rome; who place the Unity of the Catholick Church, in a submission to the Bishop of their City; without any ground from Scripture, or the Ancient Writers.

From

From that they proceeded to Examine the ſeven Sacraments: And here fell in ſtiff debates, which remain in ſome Authentick Writings, that give a great light to their proceedings. The method which they followed was this. First, the whole buſineſs they were to conſider, was divided into ſo many heads; which were propoſed as Queries, and theſe were given out to ſo many Biſhops and Divines: And at a prefixed time every one brought his opinion in writing, upon all the Queries. So concerning the ſeven Sacraments, the Queries were given out to the two Arch-Biſhops, the Biſhop of London, Rocheſter and Carliſle, (though the laſt was not in the Commiſſion,) And to the Biſhops of Dureſm, Hereford, and St. Davids. For though the Biſhop of Wincheſter, was in this Commiſſion, yet he did nothing in this particular; but I imagine that he was gone out of Town, and that the Biſhop of Carliſle was appointed to ſupply his abſence. The Queries were alſo given to Doctor Thirleby, then Biſhop Elect of Weſtminſter, to Doctor Robertſon, Day, Redmayn, Cox, Leighton, (though not in the Commiſſion) Symmonds, Treſham, Coren, (though not in the Commiſſion,) Edgeworth, Oglethorp, Crayford, Wilſon, and Robins. When their Anſwers were given in, two were appointed to compare them, and draw an Extract of the Particulars, in which they agreed or diſagreed: which the one did in Latin, and the other in Engliſh; only thoſe who compared them, it ſeems, doing it for the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, took no notice of his Opinions in the Extract they made. And of theſe, the Original anſwers of the two Arch-Biſhops, the Biſhops of London, Rocheſter and Carliſle, and theſe Doctors, Day, Robertſon, Redmayn, Cox, Leighton, Symmonds, Treſham, Coren, Edgeworth, and Oglethorp, are yet extant. But the Papers given in by the Biſhops of Duteſm, Hereford and St. Davids, and the Elect of Weſtminſter, and Doctors, Crayford, Wilſon and Robins, though they are mentioned in the Extracts made out of them, yet are loſt. This the Reader will find in the Collection; which, though it be ſomewhat large, yet I thought ſuch pieces were of too great Importance, not to be communicated to the World; ſince it is perhaps as great an Evidence of the ripeneſs of their proceedings, as can be ſhewed in any Church, or any Age of it. And though other Papers of this ſort do not occur in this King's Reign: yet I have reaſon to conclude from this Inſtance, that they proceeded with the ſame maturity in the reſt of their deliberations. In which I am the more confirmed, becauſe I find another inſtance like this, in the Reformation that was further carried on in the ſucceeding Reign of Edward the 6th; of many Biſhops and Divines giving in their Opinions under their hands, upon ſome heads then examined and changed. In Cranmer's Paper ſome ſingular opinions of his, about the nature of Eccleſiaſtical Offices will be found; but as they are delivered by him with all poſſible modeſty, ſo they were not eſtabliſhed as the Doctrine of the Church, but laid aſide as particular conceits of his own, and it ſeems that afterwards he changed his opinion. For he ſubſcribed the Book that was ſoon after ſet out; which is directly contrary to thoſe opinions ſet down in theſe Papers. Cranmer was for reducing theſe Sacraments to two, but the Popiſh party was then prevalent, ſo the old number of ſeven was agreed to.

1540.

The ſeven Sacraments.

With great maturity.

Collect. Numb. 21.

Baptiſm

1540. Baptism was explained in the same manner that had been done three years before, in the Articles then set out: only the matter of Original Sin was more enlarged on.

Secondly, Pennance was formally placed in the absolution of the Priest; which by the former Articles was only declared a thing desirable, and not to be contemned if it might be had; yet all merit of good works was rejected, though they were declared necessary: and sinners were taught to depend wholly on the Sufferings of Christ; with other good directions about Repentance.

Thirdly, In the Explanation of the Eucharist, Transubstantiation was fully asserted: as also the Concomitancy of the Blood with the Flesh; so that Communion in both kinds was not necessary. The use of hearing Mass, though one did not Communicate, was also asserted. To which were added very good Rules about the disposition of mind that ought to accompany this Sacrament.

Fourthly, Matrimony was said to be Instituted of God, and Sanctified by Christ: The degrees in the Mosaical Law were declared obligatory, none else: and the Bond of Marriage was declared not separable on any account.

Fifthly, Orders were to be administred in the Church, according to the New-Testament: but the particular forms, of Nominating, Electing, Presenting, or Appointing Ecclesiastical Ministers, was left to the Laws of every Country, to be made by the assent of the Prince. The Office of Church-men was to Preach, Administer the Sacraments, to Bind and Loose, and to pray for the whole Flock: But they must execute these, with such limitation as was allowed by the Laws of every Kingdom. The Scripture, they said, made express mention only of the two Orders of Priests and Deacons. To these the Primitive Church had added some Inferior degrees, which were also not to be contemned. But no Bishop had any Authority over other Bishops by the Law of God. Upon which followed a long Digression, confuting the pretensions of the Bishops of Rome; with an Explanation of the King's Authority in Ecclesiastical Matters; which was before hand set down in another place, to shew what they understood by the King's being Supream Head of the Church.

Sixthly, Confirmation was said to have been used in the Primitive Church, in Imitation of the Apostles; who by laying on their hands conferred the Holy-Ghost, in an extraordinary manner. And therefore was of great advantage, but not necessary to Salvation.

Seventhly, Extream-unction was said to have been derived from the practice of the Apostles, mentioned by St. James, for the health both of Body and Soul: and though the sick Person was not always recovered of his bodily sickness by it, yet remission of sins was obtained by it; and that which God knew to be best for our bodily condition, to whose will we ought always to submit. But this Sacrament was only fruitful to those who by Pennance were restored to the State of Grace.

The Ten Commandments.

Then followed an Explanation of the Ten Commandments, which contains many good Rules of Morality, drawn from every one of them. The 2d Commandment Gardiner had a mind to have shortned, and to cast into the first. Cranmer was for setting it down as it was in the

the Law of Moſes. But a temper was found: it was placed as a Diſtinct Commandment, but not at full length; the words, For I the Lord thy God, &c. being left out, and only thoſe that go before being ſet down. In the Explanation of this Commandment, Images were ſaid to be profitable for putting us in mind of the great Bleſſings we have received by our Saviour, and of the vertues and holineſs of the Saints, by which we were to be ſtirred up to imitate them: So that they were not to be deſpiſed, though we be forbidden to do any godly honour to them. And therefore the Superſtition of preferring one Image to another, as if they had any ſpecial vertue in them, or the adorning them richly, and making Vows and Pilgrimages to them, is condemned; yet the Cenſing of Images, and Kneeling before them, are not condemned: but the People muſt be taught, that theſe things were not to be done to the Image it ſelf, but to God and his honour. To the third Commandment, they reduced the Invocation of Gods name for his Gifts. And they condemned the Invocation of Saints, when ſuch things were prayed for from them, which were only given by God. This was the giving his Glory to Creatures: yet to pray to Saints as Interceſſors is declared lawful, and according to the Doctrine of the Catholick Church. Upon the 4th Commandment a Reſt from labour every 7th day is ſaid to be Ceremonial, and ſuch as only obliged Jews: but the Spiritual ſignification of Reſt among Chriſtians, was to abſtain from Sin, and other Carnal pleaſures. But beſides that, we were alſo bound by this Precept ſometimes to ceaſe from labour, that we may ſerve and worſhip God both in publick and private: And that on the days appointed for this purpoſe, People ought to examine their lives, the paſt week, and ſet to amendment, and give themſelves to prayer, reading and meditation. Yet in caſes of neceſſity, ſuch as ſaving their Corn or Cattel, Men ought not ſuperſtitiouſly to think that it is a Sin to work on that day; but to do their work without ſcruple. Then follow very profitable Expoſitions of the other Commandments, with many grave and weighty admonitions concerning the duties by them enjoyned, and againſt thoſe ſins which are too Common in all Ages. 1540.

After that, an Explanation of the Lord's Prayer was added. In the Preface to which, it is ſaid, that it is meet and requiſite that the unlearned People ſhould make their Prayers in their Mother-Tongue; whereby they may be the more ſtirred to Devotion, and to mind the things they prayed for. Then followed an Expoſition of the Angels Salutation of the Bleſſed Virgin: In which, the whole Hiſtory of the Incarnation of Chriſt was opened, and the Ave Maria explained; which Hymn was chiefly to be uſed, in Commemoration of Chriſt's Incarnation, and likewiſe to ſet forth the praiſes of the Bleſſed Virgin. The next Article is about Free-will, which they ſay muſt be in Man, otherwiſe all Precepts and Exhortations are to no purpoſe. They defined it a power of the will, joyned with Reaſon, whereby a reaſonable creature, without conſtraint, in things of reaſon, diſcerneth and willeth good and evil; but chooſeth good by the aſſiſtance of God's grace, and evil of it ſelf. This was perfect in the State of Innocency, but is much impaired by Adam's Fall, and now by an eſpecial grace (offered to all Men, but enjoyed only by thoſe who by their free-will do accept the ſame,) The Lord's Prayer.

The Ave Maria.

Free-will.

1540. it was restored, that with great watchfulness we may serve God acceptably. And as many places of Scriptures shew, That free-will is still in man, so there be many others which shew that the grace of God is necessary, that doth both prevent us, and assist us, both to begin, and perform every good work. Therefore all men ought most gratefully to receive and follow the motions of the Holy Ghost, and to beg God's grace with earnest devotion, and a stedfast Faith: which he will grant to all that so ask it, both because he is naturally good, and he has promised to grant our desires. For he is not the Author of Sin, nor the Cause of Man's Damnation; but this Men draw on themselves, who by vice have corrupted those Natures which God made good. Therefore all Preachers were warned so to moderate themselves in this high point, that they neither should so preach the Grace of God as to take away Free-will, nor so extol Free-will, as injury might be done to the Grace of God.

Justification. After this they handled Justification. Having stated the miseries of Man by nature, and the guilt of Sin, with the unspeakable goodness of God in sending Christ to redeem us by his death, who was the Mediator between God and Man; They next shew how Men are made partakers of the Blessings which he hath procured. Justification is the making of us righteous before God, whereby we are reconciled to him, and made heirs of Eternal life: that by his Grace we may walk in his ways, and be reputed just and righteous in the day of Judgment, and so attain Everlasting Happiness. God is the chief cause of our Justification: yet man prevented by Grace is by his free consent and obedience a worker toward the attaining his own Justification. For though it is only procur'd through the merits of Christ's death, yet every one must do many things to attain a right and claim to that which, though it was offered to all, yet was applied but to a few. We must have a stedfast Faith, true Repentance, real purposes of amendment; committing Sin no more, but serving God all our lives; which if we fall from, we must recover it, by Pennance, Fasting, Alms, Prayer, with other good works, and a firm Faith, going forward in mortification and obedience to the Laws of God: It being certain that Men might fall away from their Justification. All curious reasonings about Predestination were to be set apart; there being no certainty to be had of our Election, but by feeling the motions of God's Spirit in us, by a good and vertuous life, and persevering in it to the end. Therefore it was to be taught, that as on the one hand we are to be justified freely by the free Grace of God, so on the other hand, when it is said We are justified by Faith, it must be understood of such a Faith, in which the fear of God, Repentance, Hope and Charity, be included, all which must be joyned together in our Justification: and though these be imperfect, yet God accepteth of them freely thorough Christ.

Good Works. Next, good works were explained, which were said to be absolutely necessary to Salvation. But these were not only outward corporal works, but inward Spiritual works, as the Love and Fear of God, Patience, Humility, and the like. Nor were they Superstitions and Men's Inventions, such as those in which Monks and Friers exercised themselves: nor only moral works done by the power of Nat-

ral reaſon: but the works of Charity, flowing from a pure heart, a good Conſcience, and Faith unfeigned; which were meritorious towards the attaining of Everlaſting life. Other works were of an Inferior ſort; ſuch as Faſting, Alms-deeds, and other fruits of Pennance. And the merit of good works is reconciled with the freedom of God's Mercies to us, ſince all our works are done by his Grace; ſo that we have no cauſe of boaſting, but muſt aſcribe all to the Grace and Goodneſs of God. The laſt Chapter is about Prayers for Souls departed, which is the ſame that was formerly ſet out in the Articles three years before. 1540.

And this was finiſhed and ſet forth this year, with a Preface written by thoſe of the Clergy who had been imployed in it; declaring with what care they had examined the Scriptures, and the ancient Doctors, out of whom they had faithfully gathered this Expoſition of the Chriſtian Faith. To this the King added another Preface ſome years after, declaring that although he had caſt out the darkneſs, by ſetting forth the Scriptures to his People, which had produced very good effects; yet, as Hypocriſie and Superſtition were purged away, ſo a Spirit of preſumption, diſſention, and carnal liberty was breaking in. For repreſſing which he had by the advice of his Clergy, ſet forth a Declaration of the true knowledge of God, for directing all mens belief and practice; which both Houſes of Parliament had ſeen, and liked very well. So that he verily truſted it contained a true and ſufficient Doctrine, for the attaining everlaſting life. Therefore he required all his People, to read and print in their hearts, the Doctrine of this Book. He alſo willed them to remember, that as there were ſome Teachers, whoſe Office it was to inſtruct the People; ſo the reſt ought to be taught, and to thoſe it was not neceſſary to read the Scriptures: and that therefore he had reſtrained it from a great many, eſteeming it ſufficient for ſuch to hear the Doctrine of the Scriptures taught by their Preachers, which they ſhould lay up in their hearts, and practiſe in their lives. Laſtly, he deſired all his Subjects to pray to God to grant them the Spirit of Humility, that they might read and carry in their hearts the Doctrine ſet forth in this Book. But though I have joyned the account of this Preface, to the Extract here made of the Biſhop's Book, yet it was not prefixed to it, till above two years after the other was ſet out.

All this ſet forth in a Book,

And publiſhed by the King's Authority.

When this was publiſhed, both Parties found cauſe in it both to be glad and ſorrowful. The Reformers rejoyced to ſee the Doctrine of the Goſpel thus opened more and more; for they concluded that Ignorance and prejudices, being the chief ſupports of the Errours they complained of; the inſtructing People in Divine Matters, even though ſome particulars diſpleaſed them, yet would awaken and work upon an inquiſitive humor that was then a ſtirring; and they did not doubt but their Doctrines were ſo clear, that inquiries into Religion would do their buſineſs. They were alſo glad to ſee the Morals of Chriſtianity ſo well cleared, which they hoped would diſpoſe People to a better taſte of Divine matters; ſince they had obſerved that purity of Soul does mightily prepare People for ſound Opinions. Moſt of the Superſtitious conceits and practices, which had for ſome ages em-1540. based the Christian Faith, were now removed; and the great fundamental of Christianity, the Covenant between God and Man in Christ, with the conditions of it, was plainly and sincerely declared. There was also another Principle laid down, that was big with a further Reformation: for every National Church was declared a compleat Body within it self, with power to reform Heresies, correct Abuses, and do every thing else that was necessary for keeping it self pure, or governing its members. By which there was a fair way opened for a full discussion of things afterwards, when a fitter opportunity should be offered. But on the other hand, the Popish Party thought they had gained much. The seven Sacraments were again asserted, so that here much ground was recovered, and they hoped more would follow. There were many things laid down, to which they knew the Reformers would never consent. So that they, who were resolved to comply with every thing that the King had a mind to, were pretty safe. But the others, who followed their persuasions and consciences were brought into many snares; and the Popish Party was confident that their absolute Compliance, which was joyned with all possible submission and flattery, would gain the King at length: and the stiffness of others, who would not give that difference to the King's judgment and pleasure, would so alienate him from them, that he would in the end abandon them; for with the King's years, his uneasiness and perverseness grew mightily on him.

The dissolution of the King's Marriage with Anne of Cleves, had so offended the Princes of Germany, that though upon the Ladies account, they made no publick noise of it; yet there was little more intercourse between the King and them, especially Cromwel falling, that had always carried on the correspondence with them. And as this intercourse went off, so a secret Treaty was set on foot between the King and the Emperor: yet it came not to a Conclusion till two years after.

Corrections of the Mass-Book and other Offices. Ex M S S. D D. Stillingfleet.

The other Bishops that were appointed to examine the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, drew up a Rubrick and Rationale of them: which I do not find was printed, but a very Authentical M S. of a great part of it is extant. The alterations they made were inconsiderable, and so slight, that there was no need of reprinting, either the Missals, Breviaries, or other Offices; for a few rasures of these Collects in which the Pope was prayed for, of Thomas Becket's Office, and the Offices of other Saints, whose days were by the King's Injunctions no more to be observed, with some other Deletions, made that the old Books did still serve. For whether it was, that the Change of the Mass-Books, and other publick Offices, would have been too great a Charge to the Nation; or whether they thought it would have possessed the People with an opinion that the Religion was altered, since the Books of the ancient Worship were changed; which remaining the same, they might be the more easily perswaded; that the Religion was still the same; there was no new impression of the Breviaries, Missals, and other Rituals, during this King's Reign. Yet in Queen Mary's time they took care that Posterity should not know how much was dashed out or changed. For as all Parishes were required to furnish themselves with new compleat Books of the Offices;

fices; ſo the daſhed Books were every-where brought in, and deſtroyed. But it is likely that moſt of thoſe Scandalous Hymns and Prayers, which are addreſſed to Saints in the ſame ſtyle, in which good Chriſtians worſhip God, were all ſtruck out; becauſe they were now condemned, as appears from the Extract of the other Book ſet out by the Biſhops. 1540.

A Perſecution of Proteſtants.

But as they went on in theſe things, the Popiſh Party, whoſe Counſels were laid very cloſe, and managed with great dexterity, chiefly by the Duke of Norfolk and Gardiner, purſued the ruine of thoſe whom they called Hereticks: knowing well that if the King was once ſet againſt them, and they provoked againſt the Government, he would be not only alienated from them, but forced, for ſecuring himſelf againſt them, to gain the hearts of his other Subjects by a Conjunction with the Emperor, and by his means with the Pope. The firſt on whom this deſign took effect, were Doctor Barnes, Mr. Gerrard, and Mr. Jerome, all Prieſts; who had been among the earlieſt Converts to Luther's Doctrine. Barnes had in a Sermon at Cambridge, during the Cardinals greatneſs, reflected on the Pomp and State in which he lived, ſo plainly, that every body underſtood of whom he meant. So he was carried up to London; but by the interpoſition of Gardiner and Fox, who were his friends, he was ſaved at that time, having abjured ſome opinions that were objected to him. But other accuſations being afterwards brought againſt him, he was again Impriſoned, and it was believed that he would have been burnt. But he made his eſcape and went to Germany, where he gave himſelf to the ſtudy of the Scriptures and Divinity. In which he became ſo conſiderable, that not only the German Divines, but their Princes, took great notice of him: and the King of Denmark ſending over Ambaſſadors to the King, he was ſent with them; though perhaps Fox was ill informed, when he ſays he was one of them. Fox Biſhop of Hereford, being at Smalcald in the year 1536. ſent him over to England; where he was received and kindly entertained by Cromwel, and well uſed by the King. And by his means the correſpondence with the Germans was chiefly kept up. For he was often ſent over to the Courts of the ſeveral Princes. But in particular, he had the misfortune to be firſt employed in the project of the King's Marriage with the Lady Anne of Cleves; for that giving the King ſo little ſatisfaction, all who were the main promoters of it fell in diſgrace upon it.

Of Barnes and others.

But other things concurred to deſtroy Barnes. In Lent this year Bonner had appointed him, and Gerrard, and Jerome, turns in the Courſe of Sermons at St. Paul's Croſs: they being in favour with Cromwel, on whom Bonner depended wholly. But Gardiner ſent Bonner word, that he intended himſelf to preach on Sunday at St. Paul's Croſs: and in his Sermon he treated of Juſtification, and other points, with many reflections on the Lutherans. Barnes, when it came to his Turn, made uſe of the ſame Text, but preached contrary Doctrine; not without ſome unhandſome reflections on Gardiner's perſon; and he played on his name, alluding to a Gardiner's ſetting ill Plants in a Garden. The other two preached the ſame Doctrine, but made no reflections on any Perſon. Gardiner ſeemed to bear it with a great appearance of neglect 1540. neglect and indifferency. But his friends complained to the King of the unsufferable insolencies of these Preachers, who did not spare so great a Prelate, especially he being a Privy-Councellor. So Barnes was questioned for it, and commanded to go and give the Bishop of Winchester satisfaction. And the Bishop carried the matter with a great shew of moderation, and acted outwardly in it, as became his Function: though it was believed the matter struck deeper in his heart, which the effects that followed seemed to demonstrate. The King concerned himself in the matter, and did argue with Barnes about the Points in difference. But whether he was truly convinced, or overcome rather with the fear of the King than with the force of his reasonings; he and his two Friends, William Jerome, and Tho. Gerrard, signed a paper (which will be found in the Collection,) in which he acknowledged, 'That having been brought before the King, for 'things preached by him; His Highness, being assisted by some of the 'Clergy, and so disputed with him, that he was convinced of his rash- 'ness and oversight: and promised to abstain from such indiscretions 'for the future, and to submit to any orders the King should give for 'what was past.

Collect. Numb. 22.

'The Articles were. First, That though we are Redeemed only 'by the death of Christ, in which we participate by Faith and Bap- 'tism; yet by not following the Commandments of Christ we 'lose the benefits of it, which we cannot recover but by Pe- 'nance.

'Secondly, That God is not the Author of Sin, or Evil, which he 'only permits.

'Thirdly, That we ought to reconcile our selves to our neighbours, 'and forgive, before we can be forgiven.

'Fourthly, That good works, done sincerely according to the Scrip- 'tures, are profitable and helpful to Salvation.

'Fifthly, That Laws made by Christian Rulers ought to be obey- 'ed by their Subjects for conscience sake: and that whosoever breaks 'them, breaks God's Commandments.

It's not likely that Barnes could say any thing directly contrary to these Articles: though having brought much of Luther's heat over with him, he might have said some things that sounded ill upon their heads. There were other Points in difference between Gardiner and him, about Justification; but it seems the King thought these were of so subtile a nature, that no Article of Faith was controverted in them: and therefore left the Bishop and him to agree these among themselves, which they in a great measure did. So the King commanded Barnes and his friend to preach at the Spittle in the Easter week, and openly to recant what they had formerly said. And Barnes was in particular to ask the Bishop of Winchester's pardon, which he did: and Gardiner being twice desired by him, to give some sign that he forgave him, did lift up his Finger. But in their Sermons, it was said they justified in one part, what they recanted in another. Of which complaints being brought to the King, he, without hearing them, sent them all to the Tower. And Cromwel's interest at Court was then declining so fast, that either he could not protect them, or else would not prejudice himself by interposing in a matter which gave the King so so great offence. They lay in the Tower till the Parliament met, and then they were attainted of Heresie, without ever being brought to make their answer. And it seems for the Extraordinariness of the thing, they resolved to mix attainders for things that were very different from one another. For four others were by the same Act attainted of Treason, who were Gregory Buttolph, Adam Damplip, Edmund Brindholme, and Clement Philpot, for assisting Reginald Pool, adhering to the Bishop of Rome, denying the King to be the Supream Head on earth of the Church of England, and designing to surprize the Town of Callice. One Derby Gunnings was also attainted of Treason for assisting one Fitz-Gerald a Traitor in Ireland. And after all these, Barnes, Gerrard and Jerome, are attainted of Heresie, being, as the Act says. 'Detestable Hereticks, who had conspired together 'to set forth many Heresies, and taking themselves to be Men of 'learning, had expounded the Scriptures; perverti g them to their 'Heresies, the number of which was too long to be re| eated; that 'having formerly abjured, they were now incorrigible Hereticks: 'and so were condemned to be burned, or suffer any other death; as 'should please the King. And two days after Cromwel's death, being the 30*th* of July, They were brought to Smithfield, where in their Execution there was as odd a mixture, as had been in their Attainders. For Abel, Fetherston and Powel, that were attainted by another Act of the same Parliament, for owning the Pope's Supremacy, and denying the King's, were carried to the place of Execution, and coupled with the other three. So that one of each was put into a Hurdle, and carried together, which every body condemned as an Extravagant affectation of the shew of Impartial Justice. 1540. Who were condemned in Parliament.

When they were brought to the Stake, Barnes spake thus to the People. 'Since he was to be burned as an Heretick, he would declare 'what Opinions he held. So he enlarged on all the Articles of the 'Creed, to shew he believed them all. He expressed a particular ab- 'horrence of an Opinion which some Anabaptists held, That the 'Blessed Virgin was as a Saffron Bagg; (by which indecent Simile 'they meant that our Saviour took no substance of her.) He explain- 'ed his Opinion of Good works, that they must of necessity be done, 'since without them none should ever enter into the Kingdom of 'God. They were commanded of God, to shew forth our profession 'by them: but he believed, as they were not pure nor perfect, so 'they did not avail to our Justification, nor merit any thing at the 'hands of God; for that was to be ascribed to the Merits of the Dea h 'and Passion of Christ. He professed great Reverence to the Blessed 'Virgin and Saints. But said, he saw no warrant in Scriptures for 'praying to them: nor was it certain whether they prayed for us or 'not; but if the Saints did pray for those on Earth, he trusted within 'half an hour to be praying for them all. Then he asked the Sheriff if he had any Articles against them, for which they were condemned: who answered he had none. He next asked the People, if they knew wherefore he died, or if they had been led into any Errours by his Preaching; but none made answer. Then he said, he heard he was condemned to die by an Act of Parliament; and it seemed it was for Heresie, since they were to be burnt. He prayed God to forgive Their Speeches at the Stake.

1540. those who had been the occasions of it. And in particular, for the Bishop of Winchester, if he had sought or procured his death, he prayed God heartily to forgive him, as Christ forgave his Murtherers. He prayed earnestly for the King, and the Prince; and exhorted the People to pray for them. He said, some had reported that he had been a Preacher of Sedition and Disobedience: But he declared to the People, that they were bound by the Law of God, to obey their King's Laws with all humility, not only for fear, but for Conscience; adding, that if the King commanded any thing against God's Law, though it were in their Power to resist him, yet they might not do it. Then he desired the Sheriff to carry five requests from him to the King.

'First, That since he had taken the Abbey-Lands into his hands, 'for which he did not blame him, (as the Sheriff fancied he was about 'to do, and thereupon stopped him,) but was glad that Superstition 'was taken away; and that the King was then a compleat King, o- 'beyed by all his Subjects, which had been done through the Preach- 'ing of them, and such wretches as they were: yet he wished the King 'would bestow these goods, or some of them, to the comfort of his 'poor Subjects who had great need of them.

'Secondly, That Marriage might be had in greater esteem, and 'that Men might not upon light pretences cast off their Wives; and 'that those who were unmarried, might not be suffered to live in 'Whoredom.

'Thirdly, That Abominable Swearers might be punished.

'Fourthly, That since the King had begun to set forth Christian 'Religion, he would go forward in it, and make an end: for though 'he had done a great deal, yet many things remained to be done, 'and he wished that the King might not be deceived with false 'Teachers.

The Fifth desire he said he had forgot.

Then he begged that they all would forgive him, if at any time he had said or done evil unadvisedly: and so turned about, and prepared himself for his death.

Jerome spake next, and declared his Faith upon every Article of the Creed; and said that he believed that was in the Holy Scriptures. He also prayed for the King, and the Prince. And concluded with a very Pathetical Exhortation to mutual Love and Charity; that they would propose to themselves the pattern of Christ's wonderful Love, through whom only he hoped to be saved; and desired all their Prayers for himself and his Brethren. Then Gerrard declared his Faith, and said, That if through ignorance or negligence, he had taught any error, he was sorry for it; and asked God pardon and them, whom he had thereby offended. But he protested, that according to his Learning and Knowledge, he had always set forth the honour of God, and the obedience of the King's Laws. Then they all prayed for the pardon of their Sins, and constancy and patience in their sufferings: And so they embraced and kissed one another, and then the Executioners tyed them to the Stake, and set fire to them.

Their death did rather encourage than dishearten their followers: who seeing such an extraordinary measure of patience in them, were the more confirmed in their resolutions of suffering for a good conscience, ſcience, and for his name, who did not forſake his Servants in their cruel Agonies. One difference between their Sufferings, and the other three who were hanged for aſſerting the Pope's Supremacy, was remarkable; that though the others demeaned themſelves toward them with the moſt uncharitable and ſpiteful malice that was poſſible, (ſo that their own Hiſtorian ſays, That their being carried with them to their Execution was bitterer to them than death it ſelf;) yet they declared their hearty forgiving of their Enemies, and of Gardiner in particular, who was generally looked on as the Perſon that procured their death: which Imputation ſtuck faſt to him, though by a Printed Apology he ſtudied to clear himſelf of any other concernment in it, than by giving his vote for the Act of their Attainder. 1540.

Now Bonner began to ſhew his nature. Hitherto he had acted another Part. For being moſt extreamly deſirous of Preferment, he had ſo complied with Cromwell and Cranmer, that they had great confidence in him; and he being a bluſtering and forward Man, they thought he might do the Reformation good ſervice, and therefore he was advanced ſo high by their means. But as ſoon as ever Cromwell fell, the very next day he ſhewed his Ingratitude, and how nimbly he turned with the Wind. For Grafton the Printer, (whom Cromwell favoured much for his Printing the Bible, and who was by that means very familiar with Bonner,) meeting him, ſaid, he was very ſorry for the news he heard of Cromwell's being ſent to the Tower. Bonner anſwered, It had been good he had been diſpatcht long ago. So the other ſhrunk away, perceiving the change that was in him. And ſome days after that, Grafton being brought before the Council, for ſome Verſes which he was believed to have Printed in commendation of Cromwell, Bonner informed the Council of what Grafton had ſaid to him upon Cromwell's being Arreſted, to make the other Charge ſeem the more probable. Yet Audley the Chancellor was Grafton's friend, and brought him off. But Bonner gave the City of London quickly cauſe to apprehend the utmoſt ſeverities from him. For many were endicted by his procurement. Yet the King was loth to give too many Inſtances of Cruelty, in this declination of his Age, and therefore by an order from the Star-Chamber they were diſcharged. But upon what motives I cannot fancy, he pickt out an Inſtance, which, if the deeper ſtains of his following life had not daſht all particular ſpots, had been ſufficient to have blemiſht him for ever. There was one Richard Mekins a Boy not above fifteen years of Age, and both Illiterate and very Ignorant, who had ſaid ſomewhat againſt the corporal preſence of Chriſt's Body in the Sacrament, and in Commendation of Doctor Barnes. Upon this he was Indicted. The words were proved by two Witneſſes, and a day was appointed for the Juries to bring in their Verdict. The day being come, the Grand Jury was called for, then the Fore-man ſaid, they had found nothing. This put Bonner in a fury, and he charged them with Perjury: But they ſaid they could find nothing, for the Witneſſes did not agree. The one depoſed, That he had ſaid the Sacrament was nothing but a Ceremony: and the other, That it was nothing but a Signification. But Bonner ſtill perſiſted and told them, that he had ſaid, That Barnes dyed Holy. But they could not find theſe words to be againſt the Statute. Bonner's cruelty.

1540. tute. Upon which Bonner curſed, and was in a great rage, and cauſed them to go aſide again: So they being over-awed, returned and found the Indictment. Then ſate the Jury upon life and death, who found him Guilty: and he was adjudged to be burnt. But when he was brought to the Stake, he was taught to ſpeak much good of Bonner, and to condemn all Hereticks, and Barnes in particular, ſaying he had learned Hereſie of him. Thus the Boy was made to dye with a lie in his mouth. For Barnes held not that opinion of the Sacraments being only a Ceremony or Signification, but was a zealous Lutheran: which appeared very ſignally on many occaſions, chiefly in Lambert's caſe. Three others were alſo burned at Salisbury upon the ſame Statute, one of whom was a Prieſt. Two alſo were burned at Lincoln in one day. Beſides, a great number of Perſons were brought in trouble, and kept long in Priſon upon the Statute of the ſix Articles. But more Blood I find not ſpilt at this time.

New Biſhopricks founded.

In the end of this year were the new Biſhopricks founded. For in December was the Abbey of Weſtminſter converted into a Biſhop's See, and a Deanry and twelve Prebends, with the Officers for a Cathedral and a Quire. And in the year following on the 4*th* of Auguſt, the King erected out of the Monaſtery of St. Werburgh at Cheſter, a Biſhoprick, a Deanry, and ſix Prebends. In September, out of the Monaſtery at St. Peter's at Gloceſter, the King endowed a Biſhoprick, a Deanry, and ſix Prebendaries. And in the ſame month, the Abbey of Peterborough was converted to a Biſhop's ſeat, a Deanry, and ſix Prebendaries. And to lay this whole matter together, two years after this, the Abbey of Oſney in Oxford was converted into a Biſhoprick, a Deanry, and ſix Prebends. And the Monaſtery of St. Auſtin's in Briſtol was changed into the ſame uſe. There are many other Grants alſo in the Rolls, both to the Biſhops, and Deans, and Chapters, of theſe Sees. But theſe Foundations will be better underſtood, by their Charters: of which, ſince the Biſhoprick of Weſtminſter is leaſt known, becauſe long ago ſuppreſſed, I have choſen to ſet down the Charter of that See; which the Reader will find in the Collection: And they running all in the ſame ſtyle, one may ſerve for the reſt. The Subſtance of the Preamble is, 'That the King being moved by the Grace of God, and intending nothing more than that true Religion, and the ſincere worſhip of God, ſhould not be abo-liſhed, but rather reſtored to the Primitive ſincerity, and reformed from theſe abuſes with which the profeſſion and the lives of the Monks had ſo long and ſo lamentably corrupted Religion; had, as far as human Infirmity could foreſee, deſigned that the word of God might be ſincerely Preached, the Sacraments purely Adminiſtred, good Order kept up, the Youth well Inſtructed, and old People relieved, with other publick Alms-deeds. And therefore the King Erected and Endowed theſe Sees. The day after theſe ſeveral Grants, there followed a Writ to the Arch-Biſhop, containing, that the King had appointed ſuch a Perſon to be Biſhop of that See, Requiring him to Conſecrate and Ordain him in due form. Then the Priories at moſt Cathedrals, ſuch as Canterbury, Wincheſter, Dureſm, Worceſter, Carliſle, Rocheſter and Ely, were alſo converted into Deanries, and Colleges of Prebends, with many other Officers, and an Allowance of Charity to be yearly distributed to the Poor. 1540

But as all this came far short of what the King had once intended, so Cranmer's Design was quite disappointed. For he had projected that in every Cathedral there should be provision made for Readers of Divinity, and of Greek and Hebrew, and a great number of Students to be both exercised in the daily Worship of God, and trained up in Study and Devotion; whom the Bishop might transplant out of this Nursery, into all the Parts of his Diocess. And thus every Bishop should have had a College of Clergy-men under his eye, to be preferred according to their merit: he saw great disorders among some Prebendaries, and in a long Letter, the Original of which I have seen, he expressed his regret that these Endowments went in such a Channel. Yet now his Power was not great at Court, and the other Party run down all his Motions. But these who observed things narrowly, judged that a good mixture of Prebendaries, and of young Clerks bred up about Cathedrals, under the Bishop's eye, and the Conduct and Direction of the Dean and Prebendaries, had been one of the greatest Blessings that could have be fallen the Church: Which not being sufficiently provided of Houses for the Forming of the minds and manners of those who are to be received into Orders, has since felt the ill effects of it very sensibly. Against this, Cranmer had projected a Noble Remedy, had not the Popish Party then at Court, who very well apprehended the advantages such Nurseries would have given to the Reformation, born down this Proposition, and turned all the King's Bounty and Foundations another way.

Cranmer's design miscarries.

These new Foundations gave some credit to the King's proceedings, and made the Suppression of Chanteries and Chappels go on more smoothly. But those of the Roman Party beyond Sea, censured this, as they had done all the rest of the King's Actings. They said, it was but a slight Restitution of a small part of the Goods, of which he had robbed the Church. And they Complained of the King's encroaching on the Spiritual Jurisdiction of the Church, by dismembring Dioceses, and removing Churches from one Jurisdiction to another. To this it was answered That the necessities which their practices put on the King, both to fortifie his Coast and Dominions, to send Money beyond Sea for keeping the War at a distance from himself, and to secure his quiet at home, by easie grants of these Lands, made him that he could not do all that he intended. And for the Division of Dioceses, many things were brought from the Roman Law, to shew, That the Division of the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, whether of Patriarchs, Primates, Metropolitans or Bishops, was Regulated by the Emperors; of which the Ancient Councils always approved. And in England, when the Bishoprick of Lincoln being judged of too great an Extent, the Bishoprick of Ely was taken out of it, it was done only by the King, with the consent of his Clergy and Nobles. Pope Nicolas indeed officiously intruded himself into that matter, by sending afterwards a Confirmation of that which was done. But that was one of the great Arts of the Papacy, to offer Confirmations of things that were done without the Popes. For these being easily received by them, that thought of nothing more than to give the better countenance to their own Acts. the

These Foundations censured.

1540. Popes afterwards founded a Right on these Confirmations. The very receiving of them was pretended to be an acknowledgment of a Title in the Pope. And the matter was so artificially managed, that Princes were noozed into some approbation of such a pretence, before they were aware of it. And then the Authority of the Canon Law prevailing, Maxims were laid down in it, by which the most tacite and inconsiderate Acts of Princes, were construed to such senses, as still advanced the greatness of the Papal pretensions.

This business of the new Foundations being thus setled, the matters of the Church were now put in a method: and the Bishop's Book was the standard of Religion. So that whosoever was not agreeable to that, was judged Heretical, whether it leaned to the one side, or the other. But it seems that the King by some secret Order had checked up the the Party, which was going on the Execution of the Statute of the six Articles, that they should not proceed capitally.

The State of the Court at this time.

Thus matters went this year, and with this, the Series of the History of the Reformation, made by this King, ends: for it was now digested and formed into a Body. What followed was not in a Thread, but now and then some remarkable things were done: sometimes in favour of the one, and sometimes of the other Party. For after Cromwell fell, the King did not go on so steadily in any thing as he had done formerly. Cromwell had an Ascendant over him, which after Cardinal Wolsey's fall none besides himself ever had. They knew how to manage the King's uneasie and imperious humor: But now none had such a Power over him. The Duke of Norfolk was wise and brave, and made his Court well, but had not so great a Genius, so that the King did rather trust and fear, than esteem him. Gardiner was only a Tool, and being of an abject Spirit, was employed, but not at all reverenced by the King. Cranmer retained always candor and simplicity, and was a great Prelate; but neither a good Courtier, nor a States-man. And the King esteemed him more for his vertues, than for his dexterity and cunning in business. So that now the King was left wholly to himself; and being extream humorous and impatient, there were more errors committed in the last years of his Government, than had been for his whole Reign before. France forsook him, Scotland made War upon him, which might have been fatal to him, if their King had not died in the beginning of it, leaving an Infant Princess, but a few days old, behind him. And though the Emperor made Peace with him, yet it was but an hollow agreement. Of all which I shall give but slender hints, in the rest of this Book; and rather open some few particulars, than pursue a continued Narration, since the matter of my Work fails me.

The Bible in English set up in all Churches.

In May the 33d year of the King's Reign, a new Impression of the Bible was finished, and the King by Proclamation, 'Required all Curates and Parishioners of every Town and Parish, to provide themselves a Copy of it before All-Hallowtide: under the Penalty of forfeiting forty Shillings a month, after that, till they had done. He declared that he set it forth, to the end, that his People might by Reading it, perceive the Power, Wisdom, and Goodness of God: Observe his Commadments, obey the Laws, and their Prince, and live

'not thereby intend that his Subjects ſhould preſume to expound, or 'take arguments from Scripture; nor diſturb Divine Service, by read'ing it, when Maſs was Celebrating: but ſhould read it meekly, humbly, and reverently, for their Inſtruction, Edification and Amendment. There was alſo care taken ſo to Regulate the Prices of the Bibles, that there ſhould be no exacting on the Subjects in the Sale of them. And Bonner ſeeing the King's mind was ſet on this, ordered ſix of theſe great Bibles to be ſet up in ſeveral places of St. Paul's: that all Perſons who could read, might at all times have free acceſs to them. And upon the Pillars to which theſe Bibles were chained, an Exhortation was ſet up, 'admoniſhing all, that came thither to Collect. Numb. 25.
'read, That they ſhould lay aſide vain-glory, hypocriſie, and all o'ther corrupt affections, and bring with them Diſcretion, good In'tentions, Charity, Reverence, and a quiet Behaviour, for the Edifi'cation of their own Souls; but not to draw multitudes about them,
'nor to make Expoſitions of what they read, nor to read aloud, nor
'make noiſe in time of Divine Service, nor enter into Diſputes con'cerning it. But People came generally to hear the Scriptures read, and ſuch as could read, and had clear voices, came often thither with great Crowds about them. And many ſet their Children to School, that they might carry them with them to St. Paul's, and hear them read the Scriptures. Nor could the People be hindred from entring into diſputes about ſome places: for who could hear the words of the Inſtitution of the Sacrament, Drink ye all of it, or St. Paul's Diſcourſe againſt worſhip in an unknown Tongue, and not from thence be led to conſider, that the People were deprived of the Cup, which by Chriſt's expreſs Command was to be drank by all; and that they were bid to a worſhip, to which the unlearned could not ſay, Amen, ſince they underſtood not what was ſaid, either in the Collects or Hymns? So the King had many Complaints brought him, of the Abuſes that were ſaid to have riſen from the Liberty given the People to read the Scriptures. Upon which, Bonner, (no doubt having obtained the King's leave) ſet up a new Advertiſement; in which he complained of theſe abuſes, in the reading the Bible: for which he threatned the People, that he would remove theſe Bibles out of the Church, if they continued as they did, to abuſe ſo high a favour. Yet theſe Complaints produced no further ſeverity at this time. But by them the Popiſh party afterwards obtained what they deſired. This Summer the King turned the Monaſtery of Burton upon Trent, into a Collegiat Church for a Dean and four Prebends: and the Monaſtery of Thornton in Lincolnſhire into another, for a Dean and four Prebends. In this year 1541.

applied to better purpoſes, were waſted on great Entertainment; which though they paſſed under the decent name of Hoſpitality, yet were in themſelves both too high and expenſive, and proved great hindrances to Church-mens Charity, in more neceſſary and profitable inſtances. He therefore ſet out an Order, for Regulating that Expence: by which, an Arch-Biſhops Table was not to exceed ſix diſhes of meat, and four of * Banquet; a Biſhops, five diſhes of meat, and * Bellaria.

But he that gives us the account of this, laments that this Regulation took no effect. And complains that the people expecting generally such splendid House-keeping from the Dignified Clergy, and not considering how short their Revenues are, of what they were anciently: they out of a weak Compliance with the Multitude, have disabled themselves of keeping Hospitality, as our Saviour ordered it, not for the Rich, but the Poor; not to mention the other ill effects that follow too sumptuous a Table.

The King goes to York.

In the end of this year, the Tragical fall of the Queen put a stop to all other proceedings. The King had invited his Nephew, the King of Scotland, to meet him at York, who was resolved to come thither. The King intended to gain upon him all he could, and to engage him to follow the Copy he had set him, in Extirpating the Pope's Supremacy, and Suppressing Abbeys, and to establish a firm agreement in all other things. The Clergy of Scotland feared the ill effects of that Interview, especially their King being a Prince of most extraordinary Parts, who, had he not blemished his Government with being so extreamly addicted to his pleasures, was the Greatest Prince that Nation had for several Ages. He was a great Patron of Learning, and Executor of Justice: he used in Person and Incognito, to go over his Kingdom, and see how Justice was every where done. He had no very good Opinion of the Religious Orders, and had encouraged Buchanan to write a severe and witty Libel against the Franciscan Friars. So that they were very apprehensive that he might have been wrought on by his Uncle. Therefore they used all their endeavours to divert his Journey. But the French King, that had him fast engaged to his Interest, falling then off from the King, wrought more on him. So instead of meeting the King at York, where magnificent preparations were made for his Reception, he sent his Excuse; which provoked his Uncle, and gave occasion to a breach that followed not long after.

An account of the State of Scotland.

But here I shall crave the Readers leave to give a full representation of the state of Religion at this time in Scotland, and of the footing the Reformation had got there: Its neighbourhood to England, and the Union of these Kingdoms, first in the same Religion, and since under the same Princes, together with the intercourse that was both in this and the next Reign, between these Nations, seem not only to justifie this Digression, but rather challenge it as a part of the History, without which it should be defective. And it may be the rather expected from one, who had his Birth and Education in that Kingdom.

The beginnings of Learning there.

The Correspondence between that Crown and France was the cause that what Learning they had, came from Paris: where our Kings generally kept some Scholars, and from that great Nursery they were brought over, and set in the Universities of Scotland to propagate Learning there. From the year 1412, in which Wardlaw, Arch-Bishop of St. Andrews, first founded that University, Learning had made such a progress, that more Colleges were soon after founded in that City. Universities were also founded both at Glascow, and Aberdeen, which which have ſince furniſhed that Nation with many eminent Scholars in all profeſſions. But at the time that Learning came into Scotland, the knowledge of true Religion alſo followed it: and in that ſame Arch-Biſhops time, one John Resby an Engliſh man, a follower of Wickliff's Opinions, was charged with Hereſie. Forty Articles were objected to him, of which two are only mentioned. The one was, That The Pope is not Chriſt's Vicar. The other was, That he was not to be eſteemed a Pope, if he was a man of wicked life. For maintaining theſe, he was burnt Anno 1407. Twenty four years after that, one Paul Craw came out of Germany, and being a Bohemian and an Huſſite, was infuſing his Doctrine into ſome at St. Andrews, which being diſcovered, he was judged an obſtinate Heretick, and burnt there, Anno 1432. And to encourage People to proſecute ſuch Perſons, Fogo, who had diſcovered him, was rewarded with the Abbey of Melroſs ſoon after.

1541. And of the Reformation.

Leſley.

It does not appear that thoſe Doctrines, which were called Lollardies in England, had gained many followers in Scotland, till near the end of that Century. But then it was found that they were much ſpread over the Weſtern Parts: which being in the neighbourhood of England, thoſe who were perſecuted there, might perhaps fly into Scotland, and ſpread their Doctrine in that Kingdom. Several Perſons of Quality were then charged with theſe Articles, and brought to the Arch-Biſhops of Glaſgow's Courts. But they anſwered him with ſuch confidence, that he thought fit to diſcharge them, with an admonition to take heed of new Doctrines, and to content themſelves with the Faith of the Church.

Spotſwood.

At this time the Clergy in Scotland were both very ignorant and diſſolute in their manners. The Secular Clergy minded nothing but their Tithes, and did either hire ſome Friers to Preach, or ſome poor Prieſts to ſing Maſſes to them at their Churches. The Abbots had poſſeſſed themſelves of the beſt ſeats, and the greateſt wealth of the Nation: and by a profuſe Superſtition, almoſt the one half of the Kingdom fell into the hands of the Churchmen. The Biſhops looked more after the affairs of the State, than the concerns of the Church; and were reſolved to maintain by their cruelty, what their Predeceſſors had acquired by fraud and impoſtures. And as Leſly himſelf confeſſes, there was no pains taken to inſtruct the People in the principles of Religion; nor were the Children at all Catechiſed, but left in ignorance: and the ill lives of the Clergy, who were both covetous and lewd, diſpoſed the People to favour thoſe that preached for a Reformation.

The Clergy were both ignorant and cruel.

The firſt that ſuffered in this Age was Patrick Hamilton, a Perſon of very noble Blood: his Father was Brother to the Earl of Arran, and his Mother Siſter to the Duke of Albany; ſo nearly was he on both ſides related to the King. He was provided of the Abbey of Fern in his youth; and being deſigned for greater Preferments, he was ſent to travel: but as he went thorough Germany, he contracted a friendſhip with Luther, Melanction, and others of their Perſuaſion; by whoſe means he was inſtructed in the Points about which they differed from the Church of Rome. He returned to Scotland, that he might communicate that knowledge to others with which himſelf was ſo happily enlightned. And little conſidering, either the hindrance of his further Preferment, or the other dangers that might lie in his way, Patrick Hamilton's ſufferings.

1541. way, he spared not to lay open the Corruptions of the Roman Church, and to shew the Errors that had crept into the Christian Religion. He was a man both of great learning, and of a sweet and charming conversation, and came to be followed and esteemed by all sorts of People.

The Clergy being enraged at this, invited him to St. Andrews, that there might be Conferences held with him, about those Points which he condemned. And one Friar Campbel, Prior of the Dominicans, who had the reputation of a Learned man, was appointed to treat with him. They had many Conferences together, and the Prior seemed to be convinced in most points; and acknowledged there were many things in the Church that requird Reformation. But all this while he was betraying him; so that when the Abbot looked for no such thing, he was in the night time made Prisoner, and carried to the Arch-Bishop's Castle. There several Articles were objected to him, about Original Sin, Free-will, Justification, Good Works, Priestly Absolution, Auricular Confession, Purgatory, and the Pope's being Antichrist. Some of these he positively adhered to, the others he thought were disputable Points; yet he said he would not condemn them, except he saw better reasons than any he had yet heard. The matter was referred to twelve Divines of the University, of whom Friar Campbel was one. And within a day or two they censured all his Tenets as Heretical, and contrary to the Faith of the Church. On the first of March Judgment was given upon him, by Beaton Arch-Bishop of St. Andrews, with whom sate the Arch-Bishop of Glasgow, the Bishop of Dunkeld, Bricken and Dunblan, five Abbots, and many of the inferior Clergy. They also made the whole University, old and young, sign it. He was declared an obstinate Heretick, and delivered to the Secular Power.

The King had at that time gone a Pilgrimage to Ross, and the Clergy fearing lest nearness of blood, with the Intercessions which might be made for him, should snatch this Prey out of their hands, proceeded that same day to his Execution. So in the afternoon he was brought to the Stake before St. Salvators College. He stripped himself of his Garments, and gave them to his man; and said, he had no more to leave him, but the example of his death. That he prayed him to keep in mind. For though it was bitter and painful in mans Judgment, yet it was the entrance to Everlasting life, which none could inherit that denied Christ before such a Congregation. Then he was tied to a Stake, and a great deal of fewel was heaped about him: which he seemed not to fear, but continued lifting up his eyes to Heaven, and recommending his Soul to God. When the train of Powder was kindled, it did not take hold of the Fewel, but only scorched his hand, and the side of his face. This occasioned some delay, till more Powder was brought from the Castle; during which time the Friars were very troublesome, and called to him to turn, and pray to our Lady, and say Salve Regina. None was more officious than Friar Campbel. The Abbot wished him often to let him alone, and give him no more trouble. But the Friar continuing to importune him; he said to him, Wicked man, thou knowest that I am not an Heretick, and that it is the truth of God for which I now suffer. So much thou didst confess to me in private: and there- thereupon I appeal thee to answer before the Judgment Seat of Christ. By this time more powder was brought and the fire was kindled. He cried out with a loud voice, How long, O Lord, shall darkness oppress this Realm? how long wilt thou suffer this Tyranny of Men? And died repeating these words, Lord Jesus receive my Spirit. The patience and constancy he expressed in his sufferings, made the Spectators generally conclude that he was a true Martyr of Christ: in which they were the more confirmed, by Frier Campbell's falling into great despair soon after, who from that turned frantick, and died within a year. 1541.

On this I have insisted the more fully, because it was indeed the beginning of the Reformation in Scotland; and raised there an humour of inquiring into Points of Religion, which did always prove fatal to the Church of Rome. In the University it self many were wrought on, and particularly one Seaton, a Dominican Frier, who was the King's Confessor. He being appointed to preach the next Lent at St. Andrews, insisted much on these Points: 'That the Law of God was the 'only Rule of Righteousness, that Sin was only committed when 'God's Law was violated, that no man could satisfie for Sin, and that 'pardon was to be obtained by unfeigned repentance and true Faith. But he never mentioned Purgatory, Pilgrimages, Merits nor Prayers to Saints: which used to be the Subjects on which the Friers insisted most on these occasions. Being gone from St Andrews, he heard that another Frier of his own Order had refuted these Doctrines. So he returned, and confirmed them in another Sermon; in which he also made some reflections on Bishops that were not Teachers, calling them Dumb-Dogs. For this he was carried before the Arch-Bishop; but he defended himself, saying that he had only in St. Paul's words said a Bishop should teach, and in Esaias words, that such as did not teach were Dumb-Dogs: but having said this in the general, he did not apply it to any Bishop in particular. The Arch-Bishop was netled at this answer, yet resolved to let him alone till he should be brought into disgrace with the King. And that was soon done, for the King being a licentious Prince, and Frier Seaton having often reproved him boldly for it, he grew weary of him. The Clergy perceiving this, were resolved to fall upon him. So he withdrew to Berwick, but wrote to the King, that if he would hear him make his defence, he would return and justifie all that he had taught. He taxed the cruelty of the Clergy, and desired the King would restrain their Tyranny, and consider that he was obliged to protect his Subjects from their Severity and Malice. But receiving no satisfactory Answer, he lived in England, where he was entertain'd by the Duke of Suffolk as his Chaplain. Not long after this one Forrest, a simple Benedictin Monk, was accused for having said that Patrick Hamilton had died a Martyr: yet since there was no sufficient proof to convict him, a Frier, one Walter Lainge, was sent to confess him, to whom in Confession he acknowledged, he thought Hamilton was a good Man, and that the Articles for which he was condemned, might be defended. This being revealed by the Frier, was taken for good evidence. So the poor Man was condemned to be burnt as an Heretick. As he was led out to his Execution, he said, Fie on falshood, fie on Friers, revealers of Confession; Let never man trust

Forrest's sufferings.

1541. truſt them after me: they are deſpiſers of God, and deceivers of men. When they were conſidering in what place to burn him, a ſimple man that attended the Arch-biſhop, adviſed to burn him in ſome low Cellar; for ſaid he, the ſmoak of Mr. Patrick Hamilton has infected all thoſe on whom it blew.

A further perſecution in Scotland.

Soon after this, Abbot Hamilton's Brother and Siſter were brought into the Biſhop's Courts: but the King, who favoured this Brother, perſwaded him to abſent himſelf. His Siſter and ſix others being brought before the Biſhop of Roſs, who was deputed by the Arch-Biſhop to proceed againſt them, the King himſelf dealt with the Woman to abjure, which ſhe and the other ſix did. Two others were more reſolute, The one was Normand Gowrlay, who was charged with denying the Pope's Authority in Scotland, and ſaying there was no Purgatory: The other was David Straiton. He was charged with the ſame Opinions. They alſo alledged that he had denied that Tithes were due to Church-men: and that when the Vicar came to take the Tith out of ſome Fiſh-boats that belonged to him, he alledged the Tith was to be taken where the ſtock grew, and therefore ordered the tenth fiſh to be caſt into the Sea, and bade the Vicar to ſeek them there. They were both judged obſtinate Hereticks, and burnt at one Stake the 27*th* of Auguſt, 1534. Upon this perſecution ſome others, who were cited to appear, fled into England. Thoſe were Alexander Aleſſe, John Fife, John Mackbee, and one Mackdowgall. The firſt of theſe was received by Cromwel into his Family, and grew into great favour with King Henry, and was commonly called his Scholar; of whom ſee what was ſaid Page 214. But after Cromwel's death, he took Fife with him, and they went into Saxony, and were both Profeſſors in Leipſic. Mackbee was at firſt entertained by Shaxton Biſhop of Salisbury; but he went afterwards into Denmark, where he was known by the name of Doctor Maccabeus, and was Chaplain to King Chriſtian the ſecond.

The progreſs of the Reformation.

But all theſe violent proceedings were not effectual enough to quench that light which was then ſhining there. Many by ſearching the Scriptures came to the knowledge of the Truth, and the noiſe of what was then doing in England, awakned others to make further enquiries into matters of Religion. Pope Clement the 7*th* apprehending that King Henry might prevail on his Nephew to follow his example, wrote Letters full of earneſt exhortations to him to continue in the Catholick Faith. Upon which King James called a Parliament, and there in the preſence of the Pope's Nuncio, declared his zeal for that Faith and the Apoſtolick See. The Parliament alſo concurred with him in it; and made Acts againſt Hereticks, and for maintaining the Pope's Authority. That ſame Pope did afterwards ſend to deſire him to aſſiſt him in making war againſt the King of England; for he was reſolved to divide that Kingdom among thoſe who would aſſiſt him in driving out King Henry. But the firm peace at that time between the King of England and the French King, kept him quiet from any trouble, which otherwiſe the King of Scotland might have given him. Yet King Henry ſent the Biſhop of St. Davids, with the Duke of Norfolk's Brother, Lord William Howard to him, ſo unexpectedly, that they came to him at Sterlin before he had heard of their being being sent. The Bishop brought with him some of the Books that had been writ for the justifying King Henry's proceeding; he desired that King would impartially examine them. But he put them into the hands of some about him that were addicted to the interests of Rome, who, without ever reading them, told him they were full of pestilent Doctrine and Heresie. 1541. Buchanan.

The secret business they came for, was, To perswade that King to concur with his Uncle, and to agree on an Interview between them: and they offered him in their Master's name the Lady Mary in Marriage, and that he should be made Duke of York, and * Lord Lieutenant of all England. But the Clergy diverted him from it, and perswaded him rather to go on in his design of a match with France. And their Councils did so prevail, that he resolved to go in Person, and fetch a Queen from thence. On the first of January 1537. he was married to Magdalen, daughter to Francis the First. But she being then gone far in a Consumption, died soon after he had brought her home, on the 28*th* of May. She was much lamented by all Persons, the Clergy only excepted: for she had been bred in the Queen of Navarres Court, and so they apprehended she might incline the King to a Reformation. But he had seen another Lady in France, Mary of Guise, whom he then liked so well; that after his Queens death, he sent Cardinal Beaton into France to treat for a match with her. This gave the Clergy as much joy as the former marriage had raised fear; for no Family in Christendom was more devoted to the interests of the Papacy than that was. And now the King though he had freer thoughts himself, yet was so engaged to the pretended old Religion, that he became a violent persecutor of all who differed from it. * Regni Anglici Vicarius.

The King grew very expensive, he indulged himself much in his pleasures; he built four noble Palaces, which considering that Kingdom and that Age, were very extraordinary Buildings; he had also many natural Children, All which things concurred to make him very desirous of Money. There were two different Parties in the Court. The Nobility on the one hand represented to him the great wealth that the Abbots had gathered; and that if he would do as his Uncle had done, he would thereby raise his Revenue to the Triple of what it was, and provide plentifully for his Children. The Clergy on the other hand assured him, That if he would set up a strict inquisition of Hereticks, he would discover so many Men of Estates that were guilty, that by their Forfeitures he might raise about an hundred thousand Crowns a year: And for his Children, the easiest way of providing for them, was to give them good Abbeys and Priories. This they thought would engage both the King and his Sons to maintain their Rights more steadily, if their own Interests were interwoven with them. They also perswaded the King, That if he maintained the established Religion, it would give him a good interest in England, and make him be set up by foreign Princes as the head of the League, which the Pope and the Emperor were then projecting against King Henry. These Counsels being seconded by his Queen, who was a wise and good Lady, but wonderfully zealous for the Papacy, did so prevail with him, that as he made four of his Children Abbots of Priors, so he gave way to the persecuting humor of The King wholly guided by the Clergy.

1541. his Priests: and give Sir James Hamilton (a natural Brother of the Earl of Arrans, in whom the Clergy put much confidence,) a Commission to proceed against all that were suspected of Heresie. In the year 1539. many were cited to appear before a meeting of the Bishops at Edinburgh. Of those, nine abjured, many were banished and five were burnt. Forrester, a Gentleman, Simpson, a Secular Priest; Killore and Beverage, two Friars; and Forrest, a Canon Regular, were burnt on the Castle-hill of Edinburgh. The last of these was a zealous constant Preacher, which was a rare thing in those days. His Diocesan, the Bishop of Dunkeld sent for him, and rebuked him for it; and bid him, When he found a good Epistle, or good Gospel, that made for the liberties of the Holy Church, to preach on that, and let the rest alone. The good man answered: he had read both the Old Testament, and the New, and never found an ill Epistle, or ill Gospel in any of them. The Bishop replied, that he thanked God he had lived well these many years, and never knew either the Old or New: he contented himself with his Portuise, and his Pontifical; and if the other would trouble himself with these fantasies, he would repent it when he could not help it. Forrest said, He was resolved to do what he conceived was his duty, whatever might be the danger of it. By this it appears how deliberately the Clergy at that time delivered themselves up to Ignorance and Superstition.

Two other Martyrs.

In the same year Russel, a Franciscan Friar, and one Kennedy, a young man of 18 years of age, were brought before the Arch-Bishop of Glasgow. That Bishop was a learned and moderate man, and was much against these cruel proceedings: he was also in great credit with the King, having been his Tutor. Yet he was forced by the threatnings of his Brethren, to go on with the persecution. So those two, Russel and Kennedy, being brought before him. Kennedy, that was young and fearful, had resolved to submit and abjure. But being brought to the Bar, and encouraged by Russel's discourses, he felt so high a measure of courage and joy in his heart, that he fell down on his knees, and broke forth in these words; 'Wonderful, O God, is thy love and 'mercy towards me a miserable wretch: for now, when I would have 'denied thee, and thy Son my Saviour, thou hast by thine own hand 'pulled me back from the bottom of Hell, and given me most Hea'venly comfort, which hath removed the ungodly fear that before 'oppressed my mind. Now I defie death, do what you please, I thank 'God I am ready. There followed a long dispute between the Friar and the Divines that sate with the Arch-Bishop: but when he perceived they would hear nothing, and answered him only with revilings and jeers, he gave it over and concluded in these words; This is your 'hour and power of darkness: now yet sit as Judges, and we stand 'wrongfully condemned; but the day cometh which will shew our 'Innocence, and you shall see your own blindness to your everlasting 'confusion; Go on, and fulfil the measure of your iniquity. This put the Arch-Bishop in great confusion, so that he said to those about him, that these rigorous executions did hurt the cause of the Church more than could well be thought of; and he declared that his opinion was, That their lives should be spared, and some other course taken with them. But those that sate with him said, if he took a course different from what the other Prelates had taken, he was not the Churches friend. This, with other threatning expreſſions prevailed ſo far on his fears, that he gave Judgment. So they were burnt; but at their death they expreſſed ſo much conſtancy and joy, that the people were much wrought on by their behaviour. Ruſſel encouraged Kennedy, his partner in ſufferings, in theſe words: 'Fear not, Brother, for he is more 'mighty that is in us, than he that is in the world; the pain which 'we ſhall ſuffer is ſhort, and light; but our joy and conſolation ſhall 'never have an end. Death cannot deſtroy us, for it is deſtroyed al-'ready by him, for whoſe ſake we ſuffer. Therefore let us ſtrive to 'enter in by the ſame ſtrait way, which our Saviour ha h taken be-'fore us. With the blood of ſuch Martyrs was the Field of that Church ſowen, which did quickly riſe up in a plentiful harveſt. 1541.

Among thoſe that were at this time in hazard, George Buchanan was one. The Clergy were reſolved to be revenged on him for the ſharpneſs of the Poems he had written againſt them. And the King had ſo abſolutely left all men to their mercy, that he had died with the reſt, if he had not made his eſcape out of Priſon; Then he went beyond Sea, and lived 20 years in that Exile, and was forced to teach a School moſt part of the time; yet the greatneſs of his mind was not oppreſſed with that mean employment. In his writings there appears, not only all the beauty and graces of the Latin Tongue, but a vigor of mind and quickneſs of thought, far beyond Bembo, or the other Italians, who at that time affected to revive the purity of the Roman Stile It was but a feeble imitation of Tully in them; but his ſtile is ſo natural and nervous and his reflections on things are ſo ſolid, (beſides his immortal Poems in which he ſhews how well he could imitate all the Roman Poets in their ſeveral ways of writing, that he who compares them, will be often tempted to prefer the Copy to the Original,) that he is juſtly reckoned the greateſt and beſt of our modern Authors. This was the ſtate of affairs at this time in Scotland. And ſo I ſhall leave this digreſſion, on which if I have ſtayed too long, my kindneſs to my native Country muſt be my excuſe; and now I return to the affairs of England.

The King went his progreſs with his fair and beloved Queen, and when he came to York, he iſſued out a Proclamation, 'That all who had 'been aggrieved for want of Juſtice, by any whom he had formerly 'employed, ſhould come to him, and his Council for redreſs. This was done to caſt all paſt miſcarriages on Cromwel, and to put the people in hopes of better times. But upon his return to London, he met with a new affliction. He was ſo much taken with his Queen, that on All-Saints day, when he received the Sacrament, he openly gave God thanks for the good life he led, and truſted ſtill to lead with her: and deſired his Ghoſtly Father to joyn with him in the ſame Thankſgiving to God. But this joy laſted not long: for the next day, the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury came to him, and gave him a doleful account of the Queens ill Life, as it had been brought him by one John Laſſels: Who, when the King was in his Progreſs, had told him that his Siſter who had been an old Servant of the Duke of Norfolks, under whoſe care the Queen was brought up, ſaid to him that the Queen was lewd, and that one Francis Deirham had enjoyed her often; as alſo one Mannock; with other foul circumſtances, not fit to be related. The Arch-Biſhop communicated it to the Lord Chancellor, and the other

Privy-

1541. Privy Councellors that were at London. They agreed, that the Arch-Bishop should open it to the King. But he not knowing how to do it in Discourse, set it down in writing, and put it in the King's hands. When the King read it, he seemed much perplexed; but loved the Queen so tenderly, that he looked on it as a Forgery. And now the Arch-Bishop was in extream danger, for if full evidence had not been brought, it had been certainly turned on him to his ruine. The King imparted it to some other Councellors, and told them, that he could not believe it, yet he would try it out, but with all possible secrecy. So the Lord Privy-Seal was sent to London, to examine Lassels, who stood to what he had informed. Then he sent the same Lord into Sussex, where Lassels's Sister lived, to try if she would justifie what her Brother had reported in her name. And she owning it, he ordered Deirham and Mannack to be arrested upon some other pretences; but they being examined, not only confessed what was informed, but revealed some other circumstances that shewed the Queen had laid aside all sense of Modesty, as well as the fear of a Discovery; three several Women having been witnesses to these her lewd practices. The report of that struck the King into a most profound Pensiveness, and he burst out into Tears, and lamented his misfortune. The Arch-Bishop of Canterbury and some other Councellors, were sent to examine the Queen. She at first denied every thing, but when she perceived it was already known, she confessed all, and set it under her hand. There were also evident presumptions that she had intended to continue this Course of Life: for as she had got Dereham into her service, so she had brought one of the Women, who had been formerly privy to their familiarities, to serve about her Bed-chamber. One Culpeper was also charged upon vehement suspicion: For when the King was at Lincoln, by the Lady Rochford's means, he was brought into the Queen's Chamber at 11 a Clock in the night, and stayed there till four the next morning. The Queen also gave him a Gold Chain, and a rich Cap. He being examined confessed the Crime; for which, both Deirham, and he suffered. Others were also indicted of misprision of Treason, and condemned to perpetual Imprisonment. But this occasioned a new Parliament to be Summoned.

The Queen's ill life is discovered;

And confessed by her self and others.

1542. On the 16*th* of January the Parliament met: to which, the Bishops of Westminster, Chester, Peterborough and Gloucester, had their Writs. The Lord Cromwel also had his Writ, though I do not find by any Record that he was restored in Blood. On the 28*th* of January, the Lord Chancellor moved the House of Lords, to consider the case the King was in, by the Queens ill carriage: and that there might be no ground of suspicion or complaint, he proposed that some of their number should be sent to examine the Queen. Whereupon the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Southampton and the Bishop of Westminster, were sent to her. How much She Confessed to them, is not very clear, neither by the Journal, nor the Act of Parliament; which only says, That she confessed, without mentioning the particulars. Upon this, the processes of those that had been formerly attainted, being also brought as an Evidence, the Act passed in both Houses. In it they Petitioned the King,

A new Parliament called.

First,

'First, Not to be troubled at the matter, ſince that might be a 'means to ſhorten his Life. 1542.

'Secondly, To pardon every thing that had been ſpoken againſt the Queen. The Act about the Queen.

'Thirdly, That the Queen and her Complices might be attainted 'of High Treaſon, for her taking Deirham into her ſervice; and a-'nother Woman into her Chamber, who had known their former ill 'Life; by which it appeared what ſhe intended to do: and then 'admitting Culpeper, to be ſo long with Her, in a vile place ſo many 'hours in the night. Therefore it is deſired, that ſhe and they, with 'the Bawd, the Lady Rochford, may be attainted of Treaſon; and 'that the Queen and the Lady Rochford ſhould ſuffer the pains of 'Death.

'Fourthly, That the King would not trouble himſelf to give his 'Aſſent to this Act in his own Perſon, but grant it by his Letters Pa-'tents under his Hand and Great Seal.

'Fifthly, That the Dutcheſs Dowager of Norfolk, Counteſs of 'Bridgwater, the Lord William Howard and his Lady, the four other 'Men, and five Women, who were already attainted by the Courſe 'of Common-Law, (except the Dutcheſs of Norfolk, and the Coun-'teſs of Bridgwater,) that knew the Queens vicious Life, and 'had concealed it, ſhould be all attainted of Miſpriſion of Trea-'ſon.

'It was alſo Enacted, That whoſoever knew any thing of the In-'continence of the Queen, (for the time being,) ſhould reveal it with 'all poſſible ſpeed under the pains of Treaſon. And that if the King 'or his Succeſſors ſhould intend to marry any Woman, whom they 'took to be a pure and clean Maid; if ſhe, not being ſo, did not de-'clare the ſame to the King, it ſhould be High Treaſon; and all who 'knew it, and did not reveal it, were guilty of Miſpriſion of Treaſon. 'And if the Queen, or the Prince's Wife, ſhould procure any by Meſ-'ſages, or words, to know her carnally; or any other by Meſſages or 'Words ſhould ſollicite them; they, their Councellors, and Abbettors, 'are to be adjudged high Traitors.

This Act being aſſented to by the King's Letters Patents, the Queen, and the Lady Rochford, were beheaded on Tower-Hill the 12*th* of February. The Queen confeſſed the miſcarriages of her former life, before the King married her. But ſtood abſolutely to her denial, as to any thing after that: and proteſted to Dr. White, afterwards Biſhop of Wincheſter, That ſhe took God and his Angels to be her Witneſſes, upon the Salvation of her Soul, that ſhe was guiltleſs of that Act of defiling her Soveraign's bed, for which ſhe was condemned. Yet the Laſciviouſneſs of her former Life, made People incline to believe any ill thing that could be reported of her. But for the Lady Rochford, every body obſerved God's Juſtice on her; who had the chief hand, both in Queen Anne Boleyn's, and her own Husband's death: and it now appearing ſo evidently what ſort of Woman ſhe was, it tended much to raiſe their Reputations again, in whoſe Fall, her Spite, and other Artifices had ſo great a hand. She had been a Lady of the Bed-Chamber to the laſt four Queens: But now it was found how unworthy ſhe was of that Truſt. Cenſures paſſed upon it.

It

1542. It was thought extream cruelty to be ſo ſevere to the Queens kindred, for not diſcovering her former ill life. Since the making ſuch a diſcovery had been inconſiſtent with the Rules of Juſtice or Decency. The old Dutcheſs of Norfolk, being her Grandmother, had bred her of a Child: and it was ſaid, for her to have gone, and told the King, That ſhe was a Whore, when he intended to marry her, as it was an unheard-of thing, ſo the not-doing of it could not have drawn ſo ſevere a puniſhment, from any but a Prince of that King's temper. But the King pardoned her, and moſt of the reſt; tho ſome continued in Priſon after the reſt were diſcharged.

But for the other part of this Act, obliging a Woman to reveal her own former Incontinence; if the King intended to marry her, (which by a miſtake the Lord Herbert ſays was paſſed in another Act, taking it from Hall, and not looking into the Record:) It was thought a piece of grievous Tyranny; ſince if a King, eſpecially one of ſo imperious a temper, as this was, ſhould deſign ſuch an honour to any of his Subjects, who had failed in their former life; they muſt either defame themſelves, by publiſhing ſo diſgraceful a ſecret, or run the hazard of being afterwards attainted of Treaſon. Upon this, thoſe that took an indiſcreet liberty to rally that Sex injuſtly and ſeverely, ſaid the King could induce none that was reputed a Maid to Marry him: ſo that not ſo much choice, as neceſſity, put him on Marrying a Widow about two years after this. But this part of the Act was afterwards repealed in the firſt Parliament of King Edward the 6th.

Act about Hoſpitals, &c. There paſſed another Act in this Parliament, that made way for the diſſolution of Colleges, Hoſpitals, and other Foundations of that nature. The Courtiers had been practiſing with the Preſidents and Governors of ſome of theſe, to make Reſignations of them to the King; which were conceived in the ſame ſtile that moſt of the ſurrenders of Monaſteries did run in. Eight of theſe were all really procured, which are enrolled. But they could not make any great progreſs, becauſe it was provided by the Local Statutes of moſt of them, that no Preſident, or any other Fellows could make any ſuch Deed, without the Conſent of all the Fellows in the Houſe; and this could not be ſo eaſily obtained. Therefore all ſuch Statutes were annulled, and none were any more to be ſworn to the obſervation of them.

The Papiſts deſign to ſuppreſs the Engliſh Bible. In the Convocation that ſate at that time, which as was formerly obſerved, Fuller miſtakes for the Convocation in the 31ſt year of this King; the Tranſlation of the Bible was brought under examination, and many of the Biſhops were appointed to peruſe it. For it ſeems complaints were brought againſt it. It was certainly the greateſt eyeſore of the Popiſh Party: and that which they knew would moſt effectually beat down all their projects. But there was no oppoſing it directly, for the King was fully reſolved to go through with it. Therefore the way they took, was once to load the Tranſlation then ſet out, with as many faults as they could; and ſo to get it firſt condemned, and then to promiſe a new one: in the making and publiſhing of which, it would be eaſie to breed many delays. But Gardiner had another ſingular conceit: He fancied there were many words in the New Teſtament, of ſuch Majeſty, that they were not to be Tranſlated; but muſt ſtand in the Engliſh Bible as they were in the Latin.

A hundred of these he put into a Writing, which was read in Convocation. His design in this was visible; That if a Translation must be made, it should be so daubed all through with Latin words, that the People should not understand it much the better for its being in English. A taste of this the Reader may have by the first twenty of them; Ecclesia, Penitentia, Pontifex, Ancilla, Contritus, Olocaustа, Justitia, Justificatio, Idiota, Elementa, Baptizare, Martyr, Adorare, Sandalium, Simplex, Tetrarcha, Sacramentum, Simulacrum, Gloria. The design he had of keeping some of these, particularly the last save one, is plain enough; that the People might not discover that visible opposition, which was between the Scriptures, and the Roman Church in the matter of Images. This could not be better palliated, than by disguising these places, with words that the People understood not. How this was received Fuller has not told us. But it seems Cranmer found, that the Bishops were resolved, either to condemn the Translation of the Bible, or to proceed so slowly in it, that it should come to nothing. Therefore he moved the King to refer the perusing of it to the two Universities. The Bishops took this very ill, when Cranmer intimated it to them in the King's name; and objected that the Learning of the Universities was much decayed of late, and that the two Houses of Convocation were the more proper Judges of that, where the Learning of the Land was chiefly gathered together. But the Arch-Bishop said he would stick close to the King's pleasure, and that the Universities should examine it. Upon which, all the Bishops of his Province, except Ely and St. Davids, protested against it; and soon after the Convocation was dissolved. 1542.

Not long after this, I find, Bonner made some Injunctions for his Clergy; which have a strain in them, so far different from the rest of his Life, that it's more probable they were drawn by another Pen, and imposed on Bonner by an Order from the King. They were set out in the 34th year of the King's Reign; but the time of the year is not expresst. The Reader will find them in the Collection at their full length. The Substance of them is, Bonner's Injunctions.

'First, That all should observe the King's Injunctions. Coll. Numb. 26.

'Secondly, That every Clergy-man should read and study a Chapter 'of the Bible every day, with the exposition of the Glos, or some 'approved Doctor; which having once studied, they should retain it 'in their memories, and be ready to give an account of it, to him, 'or any whom he should appoint.

'Thirdly, That they should study the Book set forth by the Bishops, 'of the Institution of a Christian man.

Fourthly, That such as did not reside in their Benefices, should bring their Curates to him, or his Officers to be tried.

'Fifthly, That they should often exhort their Parishioners to make 'no private contracts of Marriage.

'Sixthly, That they should Marry none who were Married before, 'till they were sufficiently assured that the former Husband or Wife 'were dead.

'Seventhly, That they should instruct the Children of their several 'Parishes; and teach them to read English, that they might know 'how to believe, and pray, and live according to the Will of God.

1542. 'Eighthly, That they ſhould reconcile all that were in Enmity, and 'in that be a good Example to others.

'Ninthly, That none ſhould receive the Communion, who did not 'Confeſs to their own Curates.

'Tenthly, That none ſhould be ſuffered to go to Taverns, or Ale-'Houſes, and uſe unlawful Games on Sundays, or Holy-days, in time 'of Divine Service.

'Eleventhly, That twice every quarter, they ſhould declare the ſeven 'deadly ſins, and the Ten Commandments.

'Twelfthly, That no Prieſt ſhould go but in his Habit.

'Thirteenthly, That no Prieſt ſhould be admitted to ſay Maſs, with-'out ſhewing his Letters of Orders to the Biſhop or his Officers.

'Fourteenthly, That they ſhould inſtruct the People to beware of 'Blaſphemy, or Swearing by any parts of Chriſt body; and to ab-'ſtain from Scolding and Slandering, Adultery, Fornication, Glutto-'ny or Drunkenneſs; and that they ſhould preſent at the next Viſita-'tion, thoſe who were guilty of theſe ſins.

'Fifteenthly, That no Prieſt ſhould uſe unlawful Games, or go to 'Ale-houſes or Taverns, but upon an urgent neceſſity.

'Sixteenthly, No Plays or Enterludes to be acted in the Churches.

'Seventeenthly, That there ſhould be no Sermons Preached, that 'had been made within theſe two hundred or three hundred years. 'But when they Preached, they ſhould explain the whole Goſpel and 'Epiſtle for the day, according to the mind of ſome good Doctor al-'lowed by the Church of England: and chiefly to inſiſt on thoſe pla-'ces that might ſtir up the People to good works, and to prayer; and 'to explain the uſe of the Ceremonies of the Church. That there 'ſhould be no railing in Sermons; but the Preacher ſhould calmly and 'diſcreetly ſet forth the excellencies of Vertue, and the vileneſs of Sin; 'and ſhould alſo explain the Prayers for that day, that ſo the People 'might pray with one heart; and ſhould teach them the uſe of the 'Sacraments, particularly of the Maſs; but ſhould avoid the reciting 'of Fables, or Stories for which no good Writer could be vouched; and 'that when the Sermon was ended, the Preacher ſhould in few words 'reſume the ſubſtance of it.

'Eighteenthly, That none be ſuffered to Preach under the degree of a 'Biſhop, who had not obtained a Licence, either from the King, or 'him their Ordinary.

The manner of Preaching at that time.

Theſe Injunctions, eſpecially when they are conſidered at their full length, will give great light into the temper of men at that time: and particularly inform us of the deſign and method in Preaching, as it was then ſet forward. Concerning which the Reader will not be ill pleaſed to receive ſome information. In the time of Popery there had been few Sermons but in Lent: for their diſcourſes on the Holy-days, were rather Panegyricks on the Saint, or the vain magnifying of ſome of their Reliques, which were laid up in ſuch or ſuch places. In Lent there was a more ſolemn and ſerious way of Preaching; and the Friars, who chiefly maintained their credit by their performances at that time, uſed all the force of their skill and induſtry to raiſe the People into heats, by paſſionate and affecting diſcourſes. Yet theſe generally tended to raiſe the value of ſome of the Laws of the Church, ſuch as

Abſtinence

Abſtinence at that time, Confeſſion, with other Corporal Severities; or ſome of the little devices, that both inflamed a blind Devotion, and drew Money; ſuch as Indulgences, Pilgrimages, or the enriching the Shrines and Reliques of the Saints. But there was not that pains taken to inform the People of the hateſulneſs of Vice, and the excellency of Holineſs, or of the wonderful love of Chriſt, by which men might be engaged to acknowledge and obey him. And the deſign of their Sermons was rather to raiſe a preſent heat, which they knew afterwards how to manage, than to work a real Reformation on their Hearers. They had alſo intermixt with all Divine Truths ſo many Fables, that they were become very extravagant; and that alloy had ſo embaſed the whole, that there was great need of a good diſcerning, to deliver People from thoſe prejudices, which theſe mixtures brought upon the whole Chriſtian Doctrine. Therefore the Reformers ſtudied with all poſſible care, to inſtruct the People in the Fundamentals of Chriſtianity, with which they had been ſo little acquainted. From hence it came, that the People ran after thoſe New Preachers with wonderful zeal. It is true, there ſeem to be very foul and indiſcreet reflections on the other Party, in ſome of their Sermons. But if any have applied themſelves much to obſerve what ſort of men, the Friars, and the reſt of the Popiſh Clergy were at that time, they ſhall find great excuſes of thoſe heats. And as our Saviour laid open the Hypocriſies and impoſtures of the Scribes and Phariſees, in a Style which ſuch corruptions extorted; ſo there was great cauſe given to treat them very roughly: though it is not to be denied, but thoſe Preachers had ſome mixtures of their own reſentments, for the cruelties and ill uſage which they received from them. But now that the Reformation made a greater progreſs, much pains was taken to ſend eminent Preachers over the Nation: not confining them to particular charges; but ſending them with the King's Licence, up and down to many places. Many of theſe Licences are enrolled, and it is likely that many were granted that were not ſo carefully preſerved. But proviſion was alſo made for Peoples daily Inſtruction: and becauſe in that ignorant time, there could not be found a ſufficient number of good Preachers; and in a time of ſo much jugling, they would not truſt the Inſtruction of the People to every one; therefore none was to Preach except he had gotten a particular Licence for it, from the King, or his Dioceſan. But to qualifie this, a Book of Homilies was Printed: in which the Goſpels and Epiſtles of all the Sundays, and Holidays of the year were ſet down, with an Homily to every one of theſe, which is a plain and practical Paraphraſe on theſe parcels of Scripture. To theſe are added many ſerious exhortations, and ſome ſhort explanations of the moſt obvious difficulties, that ſhew the Compiler of them was a man both of good judgment and learning. To theſe were alſo added, Sermons upon ſeveral occaſions, as for Weddings, Chriſtnings, and Funerals; and theſe were to be read to the People by ſuch as were not Licenſed to Preach. But thoſe who were Licenſed to Preach, being oft accuſed for their Sermons, and Complaints being made to the King by hot men on both ſides, they came generally to write and read their Sermons: From thence the reading of Sermons grew into a practice in this Church: in which, if there was not that heat, and fire, which the 1542.

1542. Friars had shewed in their Declamations, so that the passions of the Hearers were not so much wrought on by it; yet it has produced the greatest Treasure of weighty, grave and solid Sermons, that ever the Church of God had; which does in a great measure compensate that seeming flatness to vulgar ears, that is in the delivery of them.

Plays and Enterludes then acted.

The Injunctions take notice of another thing, which the sincerity of an Historian obliges me to give an account of, though it was indeed the greatest blemish of that time. These were the Stage-plays and Enterludes, that were then generally acted, and often in Churches. They were representations of the corruptions of the Monks, and some other feats of the Popish Clergy. The Poems were ill contrived, and worse expressed; if there lies not some hidden wit in these Ballads, (for verses they were not,) which at this distance is lost. But from the representing the immoralities and disorders of the Clergy, they proceeded to act the Pageantry of their Worship. This took with the People much, who being provoked by the miscarriages and cruelties of some of the Clergy, were not ill pleased to see them and their Religion exposed to publick scorn. The Clergy complained much of this; and said it was an introduction to Atheism, and all sort of Irreligion. For if once they began to mock sacred things, no stop could be put to the petulant humour. The grave and learned sort of Reformers disliked and condemned these courses, as not suitable to the genius of true Religion: but the political men of that Party, made great use of them, encouraging them all they could; for they said, Contempt being the most operative and lasting affection of the mind, nothing would more effectually drive out many of those Abuses, which yet remained, than to expose them to the contempt and scorn of the People.

War between England and Scotland.

In the end of this year a War broke out between England and Scotland, set on by the instigation of the French King; who was also beginning to be an uneasie Neighbour to those of the English Pale about Callice. The King set out a long Declaration, in which he very largely laid out the pretensions the Crown of England had, to an Homage from the Kings of Scotland. In this I am no fit person to interpose; the matter being disputed by the learned men of both Nations. The Scots said it was only for some Lands their Kings had in England, that they did Homage: as the Kings of England did for Normandy and Guienne, to the Kings of France. But the English Writers cited many Records, to shew that the Homage was done for the Crown of Scotland. To this the Scots replied, that in the Invasion of Edward the First, he had carried away all their Ancient Records; so these being lost, they could only appeal to the Chronicles that lay up and down the Nation in their Monasteries: That all these affirmed the contrary, and that they were a free Kingdom; till Edward the First taking advantage of their disputes about the Succession to their Crown, upon the death of Alexander the Third, got some of the Competitors to lay down their pretensions at his feet, and to promise Homage: That this was also performed by John Balliol, whom he preferred to the Crown of Scotland; but by these means he lost the hearts of the Nation, and it was said, that this Act of Homage could not give away the Rights of a free Crown and People. And they said, that whatsoever submissions had been made since that time, they were only extorted by force; as the

the effects of Victory and Conqueſt, but gave no good right, nor juſt Title. To all this the Engliſh Writers anſwered, That theſe ſubmiſſions by their Records, (which were the ſolemn Inſtruments of a Nation, that ought never to be called in queſtion,) were ſometimes freely made; and not by the Kings only, but by the conſent of their States. In this uncertainty I muſt leave it with the Reader. 1542.

But after the King had opened this Pretenſion, 'he complained of 'the diſorders committed by the Scots; of the unkind returns he had 'met with from their King for his care of him, while he was an 'Infant; taking no advantage of the confuſions in which that King-'dom then was, but on the contrary, protecting the Crown, and qui-'eting the Kingdom. But that of late many depredations and acts of 'hoſtility had been committed by the Scots; and though ſome Trea-'ties had been begun, they were managed with ſo much ſhuffling and 'inconſtancy, that the King muſt now try it by War. Yet he concluded his Declaration ambiguouſly, neither keeping up nor laying down his Pretenſions to that Crown: but expreſſing them in ſuch a manner, that which way ſoever the ſucceſs of the War turned, he might be bound up to nothing, by what he now declared.

But whatſoever juſtice might be in the King's Title, or Quarrel, his Sword was much the ſharper. He ordered the Duke of Norfolk to march into Scotland, about the end of October, with an Army of 10000 men. Hall tells us, they burnt many Towns, and names them. But theſe were only ſingle Houſes, or little Villages; and the beſt Town he names is Kelſo, which is a little open Market-Town. Soon after they returned back into England: whether after they had ſpoiled the neighbouring Country, they felt the inconveniences of the Seaſon of the year, or whether hearing the Scots were gathering, they had no mind to go too far, I cannot determine; for the Writers of both Nations diſagree, as to the reaſon of their ſpeedy return. But any that knows the Country they ſpoiled, and where they ſtopt, muſt conclude that either they had ſecret Orders only to make an Inroad, and deſtroy ſome places that lay along the River of Tweed, and upon the Border, which done, without driving the Breach too far, to retire back; or they muſt have had apprehenſions of the Scotch Armies coming to lie in theſe Moors and Hills of Sautrey, or Lammer-Moor, which they were to paſs if they had gone farther: and there were about 10000 men brought thither, but he that commanded them was much blamed for doing nothing; his excuſe was that his number did not equal theirs. About the end of November, the Lord Maxwell brought an Army of 15000 men, together with a Train of Artillery of 24 pieces of Ordnance. And ſince the Duke of Norfolk had retired towards Berwick, they reſolved to enter England on the Weſtern ſide by Solway Frith. The King went thither himſelf, but fatally left the Army, and yet was not many miles from them when they were defeated. The truth of it was, that King, who had hitherto raiſed the greateſt expectation, was about that time diſturbed in his fancy, thinking that he ſaw apparitions, particularly of one, whom it was ſaid, he had unjuſtly put to death; ſo that he could not reſt, nor be at quiet. But as his leaving the Army was ill adviſed, ſo his giving a Commiſſion to Oliver Sinclair, that was his Minion, to command in Chief, did extreamly diſguſt the Nobility

Duke of Norfolks Inroad into Scotland.

1542. Nobility. They loved not to be commanded by any but their King, and were already weary of the insolence of that Favourite, who being but of ordinary birth, was despised by them; so that they were beginning to separate. And when they were upon that occasion in great disorder, a small body of English, not above 500 Horse, appeared. But they apprehending it was the Duke of Norfolk's Army, refused to fight, and fell in confusion. Many Prisoners were taken; the chief of whom were, the Earls of Glencairn, and Cassillis, the Lords Maxwell, Sommervell, Oliphant, Gray, and Oliver Sinclair; and about 200 Gentlemen and 800 Souldiers; and all the Ordnance and Baggage was also taken. The news of this being brought to the King of Scotland, encreased his former disorders: and some few days after, he died, leaving an infant Daughter, but newly born, to succeed him.

The Scotish Army defeated.

Many Prisoners taken.

The Lords that were taken Prisoners, were brought to London, where after they had been charged in Council, how unkindly they had used the King, they were put in the keeping of some of the greatest quality about Court. But the Earl of Cassillis had the best luck of them all for being sent to Lambeth, where he was a Prisoner upon his parole. Cranmer studied to free him from the darkness and fetters of Popery; in which he was so successful, that the other was afterwards a great Promoter of the Reformation in Scotland. The Scots had been hitherto possessed with most extraordinary prejudices against the Changes that had been made in England: which concurring with the ancient Animosities between the two Nations, had raised a wonderful ill opinion of the King's proceedings. And though the Bishop of St. Davids (Barlow) had been sent into Scotland with the Book of the Institution of a Christian Man, to clear these ill impressions; yet his endevours were unsuccessful. The Pope, at the instance of the French King, and to make that Kingdom sure, made David Beaton, Arch-Bishop of St. Andrews, a Cardinal; which gave him great Authority in the Kingdom: so he with the rest of the Clergy diverted the King from any correspondence with England, and assured him of Victory if he would make War on such an Heretical Prince. The Clergy also offered the King 50000 Crowns a year, towards a War with England; and possessed all the Nation with very ill thoughts of the Court and Clergy there. But the Lords that were now Prisoners, (chiefly the Earl of Cassillis, who was best instructed by his Religious Host;) conceived a better opinion of the Reformation; and carried home with them those seeds of knowledge, which produced afterwards a very fruitful Harvest. On all these things I have dwelt the longer, that it might appear, whence the inclination of the Scotish Nobility to Reform, did take its first rise, though there was afterwards in the Methods, by which it was advanced, too great a mixture of the heat and forwardness that is natural to the Genius of that Country.

When the news of the King of Scotland's death, and of the young Queen's birth that succeeded him, came to the Court, the King thought this a very favourable conjuncture to unite and settle the whole Island. But that unfortunate Princess was not born under such happy Stars, though she was Mother to him, in whom this long-desired Union took effect. The Lords that were then Prisoners began the motion motion; and that being told the King, he called for them to Hampton Court, in the Christmas-time; and said now an opportunity was put in their hands, to quiet all troubles that had been between these two Crowns, by the Marriage of the Prince of Wales to their young Queen: In which he desired their assistance, and gave them their Liberty, they leaving hostages for the performance of what was then offered by them. They all promised their Concurrence, and seemed much taken with the greatness of the English Court, which the King always kept up, not without affectation: they also said they thought God was better served there than in their own Country. So on New-years-day they took their Journey towards Scotland; but the sequel of this will appear afterwards. 1542.

A Parliament was summoned to meet the two and twentieth of January, which sate to the 12th of May. So the Session begun in the 34th and ended in the 35th year of the King's Reign; from whence it is called in the Records, the Parliament of the 34th and 35th year. Here both the Temporality and Spirituality gave great Subsidies to the King, of six Shillings in the Pound, to be paid in three years. They set forth in their Preambles. 'The expence the King had been at, in 'his War with Scotland, and for his other great and urgent occasions, by which was meant a War with France, which broke out the following Summer. But with these, there passed other two Acts of great importance to Religion. The Title of the first was, An Act for the advancement of True Religion, and abolishment of the contrary. The King was now entred upon a War; so it seemed reasonable to qualifie the severity of the late Acts about Religion, that all might be quiet at home. Cranmer moved it first; and was faintly seconded by the Bishops of Worcester, Hereford, Chichester, and Rochester, who had promised to stick to him in it. At this time a League was almost finished between the King and the Emperor, which did again raise the Spirits of the Popish Faction. They had been much cast down ever since the last Queens fall. But now that the Emperor was like to have an Interest in English Councils, they took heart again; and Gardiner opposed the Arch-Bishops motion with all possible earnestness. And that whole Faction fell so upon it, that the timerous Bishops not only forsook Cranmer, but Heath of Rochester, and Skip of Hereford, were very earnest with him to stay for a better opportunity: but he generously preferred his Conscience to those arts of Policy, which he would never practise; and said, he would push it as far as it would go. So he plied the King, and the other Lords so earnestly, that at length the Bill passed, though clogg'd with many Proviso's, and very much short of what he had designed. 1543. A new Parliament. Cranmer promotes a Reformation.

'The Preamble set forth, That there being many dissentions about Religion, the Scriptures, which the King had put into the hands of his People, were abused by many seditious persons, in their Sermons, Books, Plays, Rythmes, and Songs: from which great Inconveniences were like to arise. For preventing these, it was necessary to establish a Form of sincere Doctrine, conformable to that which was taught by the Apostles. Therefore all the Books of the Old and New Testament, of Tindal's Translation (which is called Crafty, False, and Untrue,) are forbidden to be kept or used, in the King's Dominions: An Act about it.

1543. 'nions: with all other Books, contrary to the Doctrine set forth in 'the year 1540. with Punishments and Fines, and Imprisonment up- 'on such as sold or kept such Books. But Bibles that were not of 'Tindal's Translation were still to be kept, only the Annotations, or 'Preambles, that were in any of them, were to be cut out, or dashed; 'and the King's Proclamations and Injunctions, with the Primmers 'and other Books Printed in English, for the Instruction of the Peo- 'ple before the year 1540, were still to be in force: and among these, 'Chaucer's Books are by name mentioned. No Books were to be Prin- 'ted about Religion, without the King's Allowance. In no Plays, nor 'Enterludes, they might make any Expositions of Scripture; but only 'reproach Vice, and set forth vertue in them. None might read the 'Scripture in any open Assembly, or expound it; but he who was Li- 'censed by the King or his Ordinary; with a Proviso, that the Chan- 'cellors in Parliament, Judges, Recorders, or any others, who were 'wont in publick occasions to make Speeches, and commonly took 'place of Scripture for their Text, might still do as they had done 'formerly. Every Nobleman, or Gentleman, might cause the 'Bible to be read to him, in or about his House, quietly and without 'disturbance. Every Merchant that was a Housholder, might also 'read it. But no Woman, nor Artificers, Apprentices, Journeymen, 'Serving-men, under the degree of Yeomen; nor no Husbandmen, 'or Labourers, might read it. Yet every Noble Woman, or Gentle- 'woman, might read it for her self: and so might all other Persons 'but those who were excepted. Every person might read and teach 'in their Houses, the Book set out in the year 1540. with the Psalter, 'Primmer, Paternoster, the Ave, and the Creed in English. All Spi- 'ritual Persons, who preached or taught contrary to the Doctrine set 'forth in that Book, were to be admitted, for the first conviction, to 'renounce their errors; for the second to abjure, and carry a Faggot; 'which if they refused to do, or fell into a third offence, they were to 'be burnt. But the Laity, for the third offence, were only to forfeit 'their Goods and Chattels, and be liable to perpetual Imprisonment. 'But these offences were to be objected to them, within a year after 'they were committed. And whereas before, the Party accused was 'not allowed to bring Witnesses for his own Purgation; this was now 'granted him. But to this a severe Proviso was added, which see- 'med to overthrow all the former favour; that the Act of the six 'Articles was still in the same force, in which it was before the making 'of this Act. Yet that was moderated by the next Proviso; That the 'King might at any time hereafter at his pleasure change this Act or 'any provision in it.

This last Proviso was made stronger by another Act, made for the due execution of Proclamations, in pursuance of a former Act to the same effect, of which mention was made in the 31st year of the King's Reign. By that former Act there was so great a number of Officers of State, and of the King's Household, of Judges, and other persons, to sit on these Trials, that those not being easily brought together, the Act had never taken any effect. Therefore it was now appointed that nine Councellors should be a sufficient number for these Trials. At the passing of that Act the Lord Montjoy protested against it, which is the ſingle Inſtance of a Proteſtation againſt any publick Bill, through this King's whole Reign. 1542.

The Act about Religion, freed the Subjects from the fears under which they were before. For now the Laity were delivered from the hazard of burning; and the Spirituality were not in danger, but upon the third Conviction. They might alſo bring their own witneſſes, which was a great favour to them. Yet that high power which was given the King, of altering the Act or any parts of it, made, that they were not abſolutely ſecured from their fears, of which ſome inſtances afterwards appeared. But as this Act was ſome mitigation of former ſeverities, ſo it brought the Reformers to depend wholly on the King's Mercy, for their Lives: ſince he could now chain up, or let looſe, the Act of the ſix Articles upon them, at his pleaſure.

A League between the King and Emperor.

Soon after the end of this Parliament, a League was ſworn between the King and the Emperor on Trinity Sunday; Offenſive and Defenſive, for England, Calais, and the places about it, and for all Flanders; with many other particulars, to be found in the Treaty ſet down at large by the Lord Herbert. There is no mention made of the Legitimation of the Lady Mary; but it ſeems it was promiſed, That ſhe ſhould be declared next in the Succeſſion of the Crown, to Prince Edward, if the King had no other Children; which was done in the next Parliament, without any reflections on her Birth; and the Emperor was content to accept of that, there being no other terms to be obtained. The Popiſh Party, who had ſet up their reſt on bringing the King and Emperor to a League, and putting the Lady Mary into the Succeſſion, no doubt preſt the Emperor much to accept of this: which we may reaſonably believe was vigorouſly driven on by Bonner, who was ſent to Spain, an Ambaſſador for concluding this Peace, by which alſo the Emperor gained much; for having engaged the Crowns of England, and France in a War, and drawn off the King of England from his League with the Princes of Germany, he was now at more leiſure to proſecute his deſigns in Germany.

A Treaty for a match with the Queen of Scotland.

But the negotiation in Scotland ſucceeded not to the King's mind, though at firſt there were very good appearances. The Cardinal, by forging a Will for the dead King, got himſelf and ſome of his Party to be put into the Government. But the Earl of Arran (Hamilton,) being the neareſt in blood to the young Queen, and being generally beloved for his Probity, was invited to aſſume the Government: which he managed with great moderation, and an univerſal applauſe. He ſummoned a Parliament which confirmed him in his Power, during the Minority of the Queen. The King ſent Sir Ralph Sadler to him, to agree the Marriage, and to deſire him to ſend the young Queen into England. And if private ends wrought much on him, Sadler was empowred to offer another Marriage of the King's ſecond Daughter, the Lady Elizabeth, to his Son. The Earl of Arran was himſelf inclinable to Reformation, and very much hated the Cardinal. So he was eaſily brought to conſent to a Treaty for the Match, which was concluded in Auguſt. By which the young Queen was to be bred in Scotland, till ſhe was ten years of age: but the King might ſend a Nobleman, and his Wife, with other Perſons, not exceeding 20, to wait on her. And for performanance of this, ſix Noblemen were to be ſent from Scotland for Hoſtages. The Earl of Arran being then Governor, kept the Cardinal 1543. under restraint till this Treaty was Concluded: But he, corrupting his Keepers, made his escape, and joining with the Queen Mother, they made a strong Faction against the Governor; all the Clergy joyned with the Cardinal to opposed the Match with England, since they looked for ruine if it succeeded. The Queen, being a sister of Guise, and bred in the French Court, was wholly for their Interests; and all that had been obliged by that Court, or depended on it, were quickly drawn into the Party. It was also said to every body, that it was much more the Interest of Scotland to match with France, than with England. If they were united to France, they might expect an easie Government. For the French being at such distance from them, and knowing how easily they might throw themselves into the Arms of England, would certainly rule them gently, and avoid giving them great Provocations. But if they were united to England, they had no remedy, but must look for an heavier yoke to be laid on them. This meeting with the rooted Antipathy, that by a long continuance of War, was grown up among them to a savage hatred of the English Nation; and being inflamed by the considerations of Religion, raised an universal dislike of the Match with England, in the greatest part of the whole Nation; only a few men of greater Probity, who were weary of the depredations and Wars in the Borders, and had a liking to the Reformation of the Church, were still for it.

The different Interests there.

The French Court struck in vigorously with their Party in Scotland, and sent over the Earl of Lenox; who, as he was next in blood to the Crown, after the Earl of Arran, so was of the same family of the Stewards, which had endeared him to the late King. He was to lead the Queens Party against the Hamiltons. Yet they employed another Tool, which was John Hamilton, base Brother to the Governor, who was afterwards Arch-Bishop of St. Andrews. He had great power over his Brother, who being then not above four and twenty years of age, and having been the only lawful Son of his Father in his old age, was never bred abroad: and so understood not the Policies and arts of Courts, and was easily abused by his base Brother. He assured him, that if he went about to destroy Religion, by matching the Queen to an Heretical Prince, they would depose him from his Government, and declare him Illegitimate. There could be indeed nothing clearer than his Fathers Divorce from his first Wife. For it had been formerly proved, that she had been married to the Lord Tester's Son, before he married her, who claimed her as his Wife; upon which, her Marriage with the Earl of Arran was declared Null in the year 1507. And it was ten years after, that the Earl of Arran did Marry the Governor's Mother: Of which things the Original Instruments are yet extant. Yet it was now said that that Precontract with the Lord Tester's Son was but a forgery, to dissolve that Marriage: and if the Earl of Lenox, (who was next to the Crown, in case the Earl of Arran was Illegitimated,) should by the assistance of France procure a review of that Process from Rome, and obtain a Revocation of that Sentence, by which his Fathers first Marriage was annulled; then it was plain that the second Marriage, with the issue by it, would be of no force. All this wrought on the Governor much, and at length drew him off from the Match with England, and brought him over to the French Interests

The French Party prevails.

Intereſts. Which being effected, there was no further uſe of the Earl of Lennox; ſo he finding himſelf neglected by the Queen, and the Cardinal, and abandoned by the Crown of France, fled into England: where he was very kindly received by the King, who gave him in marriage his Neece, Lady Margaret Douglaſs, whom the Queen of Scotland had born to the Earl of Angus, her ſecond Husband. From which Marriage iſſued the Lord Darnly, Father to King James. 1543.

When the Lords of the French Faction had carried things to their mind in Scotland, it was next conſidered, what they ſhould do to redeem the Hoſtages whom the Lords, who were Priſoners in England, had left behind them. And for this, no other Remedy could be found, but to let them take their hazard, and leave them to the King of England's mercy: To this they all agreed, only the Earl of Caſſillis had too much Honour and Vertue to do ſo mean a thing. Therefore, after he had done all he could for maintaining the Treaty about the Match, he went into England, and offered himſelf again to be a Priſoner. But as generous Actions are a reward to themſelves, ſo they often meet with that entertainment which they deſerve. And upon this occaſion, the King was not wanting to expreſs a very great value for that Lord. He called him another Regulus, but uſed him better. For he both gave him his Liberty, and made him noble Preſents, and ſent him and his Hoſtages back, being reſolved to have a ſeverer reparation for the Injury done him. All which I have opened more fully, becauſe this will give a great light to the affairs of that Kingdom: which will be found in the Reigns of the ſucceeding Princes, to have a great intermixture with the Affairs of this Kingdom. Nor are they juſtly repreſented by any who write of theſe times; and having ſeen ſome Original Papers relating to Scotland at that time, I have done it upon more certain information.

A War with France.

The King of England made War next upon France: The grounds of this War are recited by the Lord Herbert. One of theſe is proper for me to repeat; 'That the French King had not deſerted the Biſhop of 'Rome, and conſented to a Reformation, as he had once Promiſed. 'The reſt related to other things, ſuch as the ſeizing our Ships; 'The detaining the yearly Penſion due to the King; The fortifying 'Ardres to the prejudice of the Engliſh pale; The revealing the King's 'ſecrets to the Emperor; The having given, firſt his Daughter, and 'then the Duke of Guiſe's Siſter, in Marriage, to his Enemy, the King 'of Scotland; and his confederating himſelf with the Turk. And 'Satisfaction not being given in theſe particulars a War is declar-'ed.

A new perſecution of Proteſtants.

In July the King married Katherine Parre, who had been formerly married to Nevil Lord Latimer. She was a ſecret Favourer of the Reformation; yet could not divert a ſtorm, which at this time fell on ſome in Windſor. For that being a place to which the King did oft retire, it was thought fit to make ſome examples there. And now the League with the Emperor, gave the Popiſh Faction a greater intereſt in the King's Councels. There was at this time a Society at Windſor, that favoured the Reformation. Anthony Perſon, a Prieſt, Robert Teſtwood, and John Marbeck Singing Men, and Henry Filmer of the Town of Windſor, were the chief of them. But thoſe were much 1543. favoured by Sir Philip Hobby and his Lady, and several others of the King's Family. During Cromwel's power none questioned them; but after his fall they were looked on with an ill eye. Doctor London, who had by the most servile Flatteries insinuated himself into Cromwel, and was much employed in the suppression of Monasteries, and expressed a particular zeal in removing all Images and Relicks which had been abused to Superstition, did now, upon Cromwel's fall, apply himself to Gardiner, by whose means he was made a Prebendary there. And to shew how dextrously he could make his Court both ways, or to make compensation for what he had formerly done, he took care to gather a whole Book of Informations, against these in Windsor, who favoured the New Learning, (which was the modest phrase by which they termed the Reformation.) He carried this Book to Gardiner, who moved the King in Council, that a Commission might be granted for searching suspected Houses at Windsor, in which it was Informed there were many Books against the six Articles. The King granted the Warrant for the Town, but not for the Castle. So those before named, were seized on, and some of these Books were found in their Houses. Dr. Hains, Dean of Exceter, and Prebendary of Windsor, being informed against, was also put in Prison; so was likewise Sir Philip Hobby. But there were likewise some Papers of Notes on the Bible, and of a Concordance in English, found in Marbeck's house, written with his own hand: and he being an Illiterate Man, they did not doubt but these were other Men's Works, which he was writing out. So they began with him, and hoped to draw discoveries from him. He was frequently examined, but would tell nothing that might do hurt to any other Person. But being Examined, who wrote these Notes, he said they were his own: for he read all the Books he could light on, and wrote out what every Man had written on any place of Scripture. And for his Concordance, he told them, that being a poor Man, he could not buy one of the Bibles, when they came first out in English, but set himself to write one out: by which another perceiving his Industry, suggested to him, that he would do well to write a Concordance in English; but he said, he knew not what that was: so the other Person explaining it to him, he got a Latin Concordance, and an English Bible; and having learned a little Latin, when he was young, he, by comparing the English with the Latin, had drawn out a Concordance, which he had brought to the Letter L. This seemed so extravagant a thing to Gardiner, and the other Bishops that examined him, that they could by no means believe it. But he desired they would draw out any words of the letter M, and give him the Latin Concordance, with the English Bible, and after a little time they should see whether he had not done the rest. So the Trial was made, and in 4 days time he had drawn out three sheets of Paper, upon those words that were given him. This both satisfied and astonished the Bishops, wondering at the Ingeniousness and Diligence of so poor a Man. It was much talked of, and being told the King, he said, Marbeck employed his time better than those that examined him. For the others, they were kept in Prison at London, till the 24*th* of July, that the King gave orders to try them at Windsor.

Marbeck's great ingeniousness.

There

There was a Court held there, on the 27th of July, where Capon, Biſhop of Sarum, and Franklin, Dean of Windſor, and Fachel, Parſon of Reading, and three of the Judges, ſate on thoſe four Men. They were Indicted for ſome words ſpoken againſt the Maſs. Marbeck only for writing out an Epiſtle of Calvin's againſt it; which, he ſaid, he copied before the Act of the ſix Articles was made. The Jury was not called out of the Town, for they would not truſt it to them, but out of the Farms of the Chappel. They were all found guilty, and ſo condemned to be burnt, which was Executed on three of them the next day: only Marbeck was recommended to the Biſhop of Wincheſter's care, to procure his Pardon, which was obtained. The other three expreſſed great compoſure of mind in their Sufferings, and died with much Chriſtian Reſolution and Patience; forgiving their Perſecutors, and committing themſelves to the Mercies of God through Jeſus Chriſt. 1543. Three burnt at Windſor.

But in their Tryal, Doctor London, and Simmonds, a Lawyer and an Informer, had ſtudied to fiſh out Accuſations againſt many of the King's Servants, as Sir Philip Hollby, and Sir Thomas Cardine, with their Ladies, and ſeveral others who had favoured thoſe Men. With theſe Informations, Okam, that had been the Clerk of the Court, was ſent to Gardiner: But one of the Queens ſervants who had diſcovered the deſign, was before him at Court. Upon the advertiſement which he had brought, Okam was ſeized on at his coming to Court, and all his Papers were examined; in which they diſcovered a Conſpiracy againſt thoſe Gentlemen, with other Plots, that gave the King great Offence; but the particulars are not mentioned. So Doctor London and Simmonds were ſent for, and examined upon this diſcovery. But they, not knowing that their Letters were intercepted, denyed there was any ſuch Plot; and being put to their Oaths, ſwore it. Then their own hand-writing was produced againſt them. Upon which, they being thus Perjured, were ordered to be carried on Horſeback, with their faces to the Horſe tails, and Papers on their Foreheads, for their Perjury; and then to be ſet in the Pillory, both in Windſor, Reading and Newbury, where the King was at that time. This was accordingly executed on them; but ſunk ſo deep in Doctor London's heart, that he died ſoon after. From all this it will appear what ſort of Men the Perſecutors at that time were. Their Perſecutors are perjured.

But this was a ſmall part of what Gardiner had Projected: For he looked on theſe, as Perſons unworthy of his diſpleaſure. Cranmer was chiefly aimed at by him. And therefore all that Party were ſtill infuſing it into the King's mind, that it was great Injuſtice to proſecute poor Men with ſo much ſeverity, and let the chief Supporter of Hereſie ſtand in ſo eminent a degree, and in ſuch favour about him. At length the King, to diſcover the bottom of their deſigns, ſeemed to give ear to their accuſations, and deſired to hear what particulars could be objected againſt him. This gave them great encouragement; for till that time, the King would let nothing be ſaid againſt Cranmer. So they concluded he would be quickly ruined, ſince the King had opened his ear to their Informations. Therefore many particulars were quickly laid together, and put into the King's hands; who a little after that, going to divert himſelf on the River, ordered A Conſpiracy againſt Cranmer.

1543. ed his Bargeman to Row towards Lambeth; which being perceived by some of the Arch-Bishop's Servants, they acquainted him with it, who hasted down to his stairs to do his duty to the King. When the King saw him, he called him into the Barge; and they being alone, the King lamented the growth of Heresie, and the dissensions and confusions that were like to follow upon it; and said, he intended to find out the chief Encourager and Favourer of these Heresies, and make him an Example to the rest. And he asked the Arch-Bishop's opinion about it. Who answered him, That it was a good resolution; but entreated the King to consider well what Heresie was, and not to condemn those as Hereticks, who stood for the Word of God, against humane Inventions. But after some discourse, the King told him he was the Man, who, as he was informed, was the chief Encourager of Heresie; and then gave him the Articles that were brought against him, and his Chaplains, both by some Prebendaries of Canterbury, and the Justices of Peace in Kent. When he read them, he kneeled down, and desired the King would put the matter to a Tryal. He acknowledged he was still of the same mind he was of, when he opposed the six Articles; but that he had done nothing against them. Then the King asked him about his Wife. He frankly confessed he had a Wife; but said, That he had sent her to Germany, upon the passing the Act against Priests having Wives. His candor and simplicity wrought so on the King, that he discovered to him the whole Plot that was laid against him; and said, That instead of bringing him to any Tryal about it, he would have him try it out, and proceed against those his Accusers. But he excused himself, and said it would not be decent for him to sit Judge in his own Cause. But the King said to him, he was resolved none other should Judge it, but those he should name. So he named his Chancellor, and his Register; to whom the King added another: And a Commission being given them, they went into Kent, and sate three weeks to find out the first Contrivers of this Accusation. And now every one disowned it, since they saw he was still firmly rooted in the King's esteem and favour. But it being observed, that the Commissioners proceeded faintly, Cranmer's friends moved that some man of Courage and Authority, might be sent thither to canvass this Accusation more carefully. So Doctor Lee, Dean of York, was brought up about All-hallowtide, and sent into Kent. And he, who had been well acquainted with the Arts of discovering secrets, when he was one of the Visitors of the Abbeys, managed it more vigorously. He ordered a search to be made of all suspected Persons; among whose Papers Letters were found, both from the Bishop of Winchester, and Doctor London, and some of those whom Cranmer had treated with the greatest freedom and kindness, in which the whole Plot against him was discovered. But it was now near the Session of Parliament, and the King was satisfied with the discovery, but thought it not fit to make much noise of it. And he received no Addresses from the Arch-Bishop to prosecute it further: who was so noted for his Clemency, and following our Saviour's Rule, of doing Good for Evil, that it was commonly said, The way to get his favour, was to do him an Injury. These were the only Instances in which he expressed his resentments. Two of the Conspirators against him, had been Persons signally obliged by him: The one was the Bishop Suffragan of Dover; the other was a Civilian, whom he had imployed much in his business. But all the notice he took of it, was to shew them their Letters, and to admonish them to be more faithful and honest for the future. Upon which he freely forgave them, and carried it so to them afterwards, as if he had absolutely forgotten what they had contrived against him. And a Person of Quality coming to him about that time, to obtain his favour and assistance in a Sute, in which he was to move the King, he went about it, and had almost procured it: but the King calling to mind, that he had been one of his secret Accusers, asked him whether he took him for his friend; he answered, that he did so. Then the King said, the other was a Knave, and was his mortal Enemy; and bid him, when he should see him next, call him a Knave to his Face. Cranmer answered, that such Language did not become a Bishop. But the King sullenly commanded him to do it; yet his modesty was such, that he could not obey so harsh a Command. And so he passed the matter over. When these things came to be known, all Persons, that were not unjustly prejudiced against him, acknowledged that his behaviour was suitable to the Example and Doctrine of the meek and lowly Saviour of the World: And very well became so great a Bishop, and such a Reformer of the Christian Religion; who in those sublime and extraordinary Instances practised that which he taught others to do. The year in which this fell out is not expresst by those who have recorded it; but by the concurring circumstances, I judge it likeliest to have been done this year. 1543.

Soon after this, the Parliament met, that was Summoned to meet the 14*th* of January, in the 35*th* year of the King's Reign; in which the Act of the Succession of the Crown passed. Which contains, 'That the King being now to pass the Seas, to make War upon 'his ancient Enemy, the French King, and being desirous to settle 'the Succession to the Crown; It is Enacted, That in default of Heirs 'of Prince Edward's body, or of Heirs by the King's present Marriage, 'the Crown shall go to the Lady Mary, the King's Eldest Daughter: and in default of Heirs of her body, or if she do not observe 'such limitations or conditions as shall be declared by the King's Letters Patents under his great Seal, or by his last Will under his hand, 'it shall next fall to the Lady Elizabeth, and her Heirs; or if she 'have none, or shall not keep the conditions declared by the King, 'it shall fall to any other that shall be declared by the King's Letters Patents, or his last Will Signed with his Hand. There was also an Oath devised, instead of those formerly sworn, both against 'the Pope's Supremacy, and for maintaining the Succession in all 'Points according to this Act: which whosoever refused to take, 'was to be adjudged a Traytor; and whosoever should, either in words, 'or by writing, say any thing contrary to this Act, or to the peril 'and slander of the King's Heirs, limited in the Act, was to be adjudged a Traytor. This was done, no doubt, upon a secret Article of the Treaty with the Emperor; and did put new life into the Popish Party, all whose hopes depended on the Lady Mary. But how 1544.

Act about the Succession.

1542. how much this leſſened the Prerogative, and the Right of Succeſſion, will be eaſily diſcerned; the King in this affecting an unuſual extent of his own Power, though with the diminution of the Rights of his Succeſſors.

There was another Bill about the qualifying of the Act of the ſix Articles, that was ſent divers times from the one houſe to the other. It was brought to the Lords the 1ſt of March, and read the firſt time; and ſtuck till the 4th, when it was read the ſecond time; on the 5th it was read the third time, and paſſed, and was ſent down to the Commons, with words to be put in, or put out of it. On the 6th, the Commons ſent it up with ſome alterations: And on the 8th, the Lords ſent it down again to the Commons: where it lay till the 17th, and then it was ſent up with their agreement. And the King's Aſſent was given by his Letters Patents on the 29th of March. The Preamble was, 'That whereas untrue Accuſations, 'and Preſentments, might be maliciouſly contrived againſt the King's 'Subjects, and kept ſecret till a time were eſpied to have them by 'malice convicted: Therefore it was Enacted, That none ſhould be 'Indicted, but upon a preſentment by the Oaths of twelve Men, two 'at leaſt, three of the Commiſſioners appointed by the King: and 'that none ſhould be Impriſoned, but upon an Indictement, except 'by a ſpecial Warrant from the King, and that all Preſentments 'ſhould be made within one year after the Offences were committed; 'and if words were uttered in a Sermon, contrary to the Statute, they 'muſt be complained of within forty days, unleſs a juſt cauſe were gi-'ven why it could not be ſo ſoon: Admitting alſo the Parties Indicted 'to all ſuch Challenges as they might have in any other caſe of Fe-lony. This Act has clearly a Relation to the Conſpiracies mentio-ned the former year, both againſt the Arch-Biſhop, and ſome of the King's Servants.

Act againſt Conſpiracies.

Another Act paſſed, continuing ſome former Acts for reviſing the Canon-Law, and for drawing up ſuch a body of Eccleſiaſtical Law, as ſhould have Authority in England. This Cranmer preſſed often with great vehemence; and to ſhew the neceſſity of it, drew out a ſhort Extract of ſome paſſages in the Canon-Law, (which the Rea-er will find in the Collection,) to ſhew how undecent a thing it was, to let a Volume, in which ſuch Laws Were, be ſtudyed or con-ſidered any longer in England. Therefore he was earneſt to have ſuch a Collection of Eccleſiaſtical Laws made, as might regulate the Spi-ritual Courts. But it was found more for the greatneſs of the Pre-rogative, and the Authority of the Civil Courts, to keep that un-determined; ſo he could never obtain his deſire during this King's Reign.

Collect. Numb. 27.

Another Act paſſed in this Parliament for the remiſſion of a Loan of Money, which the King had raiſed. This is almoſt copied out of an Act to the ſame effect, that paſſed in the twenty firſt year of the King's Reign: with this addition, That by this Act, thoſe who had got payment, either in whole, or in part, of the Sums ſo lent the King, were to repay it back to the Exchequer. All buſineſs being finiſhed, and a general pardon paſſed, with the ordinary exceptions of ſome Crimes, among which, Hereſie is one, the Parliament was

Prorogued

Prorogued on the 29*th* of March, to the 4*th* of November. 1544.

The King had now a War both with France and Scotland upon him. And therefore to prepare for it, he both enhanced the value of Money, and embaſed it: for which, he that writes his vindication gives this for the reaſon; That the Coin being generally embaſed all over Europe, he was forced to do it, leſt otherwiſe all the Money ſhould have gone out of the Kingdom. He reſolved to begin the War with Scotland, and ſent an Army by Sea thither, under the command of the Earl of Hartford, (afterwards Duke of Somerſet,) who landing at Grantham, a little above Leith, burnt and ſpoiled, Leith and Edinburgh; in which they found more riches than they thought could poſſibly have been there; and they went through the Country, burning and ſpoiling it every-where, till they came to Berwick. But they did too much if they intended to gain the hearts of that People, and too little if they intended to ſubdue them. For as they beſieged not the Caſtle of Edinburgh, which would have coſt them more time and trouble; ſo they did not fortifie Leith, nor leave a Garriſon in it, which was ſuch an inexcuſable Omiſſion, that it ſeems their Counſels were very weak and ill laid. For Leith being fortified, and a Fleet kept going between it and Berwick or Tinmouth, the Trade of the Kingdom muſt have been quite ſtopt, Edinburgh ruined, the Intercourſe between France and them cut off, and the whole Kingdom forced to ſubmit to the King. But the Spoils this Army made, had no other effect, but to enrage the Kingdom, and unite them ſo entirely to the French Intereſts; that when the Earl of Lennox was ſent down by the King, to the Weſtern Parts of Scotland, where his Power lay, he could get none to follow him. And the Governor of Dunbritton Caſtle, though his own Lieutenant, would not deliver that Caſtle to him, when he underſtood he was to put it in the King of England's hands, but drove him out; others ſay, he fled away of himſelf, elſe he had been taken Priſoner.

The Wars againſt Scotland ſucceſsful.

The King was now to croſs the Seas: but, before he went, he ſtudied to ſettle the matters of Religion, ſo that both Parties might have ſome content. Audley the Chancellor dying, he made the Lord Wriotheſley, that had been Secretary, and was of the Popiſh Party, Lord Chancellor; but made Sir William Petre, that was Cranmer's great friend, Secretary of State. He alſo committed the Government of the Kingdom in his abſence, to the Queen, to whom he joyned the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Hartford, and Secretary Petre. And if there was need of any Force to be raiſed, he appointed the Earl of Hartford his Lieutenant; under whoſe Government the Reformers needed not fear any thing. But he did another Act, that did wonderfully pleaſe that whole Party, which was, the Tranſlating of the Prayers, for the Proceſſions, and Litanies, into the Engliſh Tongue. This was ſent to the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury on the 11*th* of June, with an Order that it ſhould be uſed over all his Province, as the Reader will find in the Collection. This was not only very acceptable to that Party, becauſe of the thing it ſelf; but it gave them hope, that the King was again opening his ears to motions for Reformation, to which they had been ſhut now about ſix years: And therefore they looked that more things of 1544. that nature would quickly follow. And as these Prayers were now set out in English, so they doubted not, but there being the same reason to put all the other Offices in the vulgar tongue, they would prevail for that too.

Things being thus setled at home, the King having sent his Forces over before him, crossed the Seas with much pomp, the Sails of his Ship being of Cloth of Gold. He Landed at Calais the 14*th* of July. The Emperor pressed his marching straight to Paris. But he thought it of more importance to take Bulloign, and after two months Siege, it was surrendred to him; into which he made his Entry with great Triumph on the 18*th* of September. But the Emperor having thus engaged those two Crowns in a War; and designing, while they should fight it out, to make himself Master of Germany, concluded a Treaty with the French King the very next day, being the 19*th* of September; which is set down at large by the Lord Herbert. On the 30*th* of September, the King returned into England: in October following Bulloign was very near lost by a surprise, but the Garrison put themselves in order, and beat back the French. Several Inroads were made into Scotland, but not with the same success, that the former Expedition had. For the Scots, animated with supplies sent from France, and inflamed with a desire of revenge, resumed their wonted courage, and beat back the English with considerable loss.

Bulloign taken.

1545. Next year the French King, resolving to recover Bulloign, and to take Calais, that so he might drive the English out of France, intended first to make himself Master of the Sea. And he set out a great Fleet of an hundred and fifty greater Ships, and sixty lesser ones, besides many Gallies brought from the Streights. The King set out about an hundred Ships. On both sides these were only Merchant Ships that were hired for this War. But after the French Fleet had looked on England, and attempted to Land with ill success, both in the Isle of Wight, and in Sussex, and had engaged in a Sea-fight for some hours; they returned back without any considerable action: Nor did they any thing at Land. But the King's Fleet went to Normandy, where they made a descent, and burnt the Country. So that this year was likewise glorious to the King. The Emperor had now done what he long designed: And therefore being courted by both Crowns, he undertook a Mediation, that under the Colour of Mediating a Peace, he might the more effectually keep up the War.

The German Princes mediate a Peace.

The Princes of Germany saw what mischief was designed against them. The Council of Trent was now opened, and was condemning their Doctrine. A League was also concluded between the Pope and the Emperor, for procuring Obedience to their Canons and Decrees: And an Army was raised. The Emperor was also setting on foot old quarrels with some of the Princes: A firm Peace was concluded with the Turk. So that if the Crowns of England and France were not brought to an Agreement, they were undone. They sent Ambassadors to both Courts to mediate a Peace. With them Cranmer joyned his endeavours, but he had not a Cromwell in the Court, to manage the King's temper; who was so provoked with the ill Treatment he had received from France, that he would not come to an Agreement; nor would he restore Bulloign, without which the French would hear of no Peace. Cranmer had at this time almost prevailed with the King to make some further steps in a Reformation. But Gardiner, who was then Ambassador in the Emperor's Court, being advertised of it, wrote to the King; That the Emperor would certainly joyn with France against him, if he made any further Innovation in Religion. This diverted the King from it; and in August this year the only great Friend that Cranmer had in the Court died, Charles Duke of Suffolk, who had long continued in the height of Favor; which was always kept up, not only by an agreement of humours between the King and him, but by the constant success which followed him in all his exploits. He was a Favourer of the Reformation, as far as could consist with his interest at Court, which he never endangered upon any account. 1545.

Now Cranmer was left alone, without friend or support. Yet he had gained one great Preferment in the Church, to a man of his own mind. The Arch-Bishoprick of York falling void by Lee's death, Robert Holgate, that was Bishop of Landaff, was promoted to that See in January; Kitchin being made Bishop of Landaff, who turned with every Change that was made under the three succeeding Princes. The Arch-Bishop of York set about the Reforming of things in his Province, which had layn in great confusion all his Predecessors time: So on the third of March he took out a Licence from the King for making a Metropolitical Visitation. Bell, that was Bishop of Worcester had resigned his Bishoprick the former year, (the reason of which is not set down.) The Bishop of Rochester, Heath, was Translated to that See: and Henry Holbeach, that favoured the Reformation, was made Bishop of Rochester. And upon the Translation of Sampson, from Chichester to Coventry and Litchfield, Day that was a Moderate man, and inclinable to Reformation, was made Bishop of that See. So that now Cranmer had a greater Party, among the Bishops than at any time before. Church Preferments given to Reformers.

But though there were no great Transactions about Religion in England this year, there were very remarkable things done in Scotland, though of a different nature; which were the burning of Wishart, and some Months after that, the killing of Cardinal Beaton; the account of both which, will not (I hope) be Ingrateful to the Reader.

Mr. George Wishart was descended of a Noble Family; he went to finish his studies in the University of Cambridge, where he was so well instructed in the Principles of true Religion, that returning to Scotland, Anno 1544. He Preached over the Country, against the Corruptions which did then so generally prevail. He stayed most at Dundee, which was the chief Town in these parts. But the Cardinal offended at this, sent a threatning Message to the Magistrates; upon which one of them, as Wishart ended one of his Sermons, was so obsequious as to forbid him to Preach any more among them, or give them any further trouble: to whom he answered, 'That God 'knew he had no design to trouble them, but for them to reject 'the Messengers of God, was not the way to escape trouble; when 'he was gone, God would send Messengers of another sort among Wishart's sufferings in Scotland. Spotswood.

1544. that nature would quickly follow. And as theſe Prayers were now ſet out in Engliſh, ſo they doubted not, but there being the ſame reaſon to put all the other Offices in the vulgar tongue, they would prevail for that too.

Things being thus ſetled at home, the King having ſent his Forces over before him, croſſed the Seas with much pomp, the Sails of his Ship being of Cloth of Gold. He Landed at Calais the 14*th* of July. The Emperor preſſed his marching ſtraight to Paris. The Emperor had now done what he long deſigned: And therefore being courted by both Crowns, he undertook a Mediation, that under the Colour of Mediating a Peace, he might the more effectually keep up the War.

The German Princes mediate a Peace.

The Princes of Germany ſaw what miſchief was deſigned againſt them. The Council of Trent was now opened, and was condemning their Doctrine. A League was alſo concluded between the Pope and the Emperor, for procuring Obedience to their Canons and Decrees: And an Army was raiſed. The Emperor was alſo ſetting on foot old quarrels with ſome of the Princes: A firm Peace was concluded with the Turk. But Gardiner, who was then Ambaſſador in the Emperor's Court, being advertiſed of it, wrote to the King; That the Emperor would certainly joyn with France againſt him, if he made any further Innovation in Religion. He was a Favourer of the Reformation, as far as could conſiſt with his intereſt at Court, which he never endangered upon any account. 1545.

Now Cranmer was left alone, without friend or ſupport. Yet he had gained one great Preferment in the Church, to a man of his own mind. The Arch-Biſhoprick of York falling void by Lee's death, Robert Holgate, that was Biſhop of Landaff, was promoted to that See in January; Kitchin being made Biſhop of Landaff, who turned with every Change that was made under the three ſucceeding Princes. Mr. George Wiſhart was deſcended of a Noble Family; he went to finiſh his ſtudies in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was ſo well inſtructed in the Principles of true Religion, that returning to Scotland, Anno 1544. He Preached over the Country, againſt the Corruptions which did then ſo generally prevail. He ſtayed moſt at Dundee, which was the chief Town in theſe parts. But the Cardinal offended at this, ſent a threatning Meſſage to the Magiſtrates; upon which one of them, as Wiſhart ended one of his Sermons, was ſo obſequious as to forbid him to Preach any more among them, or give them any further trouble: to whom he anſwered, 'That God 'knew he had no deſign to trouble them, but for them to reject 'the Meſſengers of God, was not the way to eſcape trouble; when 'he was gone, God would ſend Meſſengers of another ſort among 'them. Wiſhart's ſufferings in Scotland. Spotſwood.

1545. 'them. He had to the hazard of his Life, Preached the word of 'Salvation to them, and they had now rejected him: but if it was 'long well with them, he was not led by the Spirit of Truth; and 'if unlooked for trouble fell on them, he bade them remember this 'was the Cause of it, and turn to God by Repentance. From thence he went to the western parts, where he was also much followed. But the Arch-Bishop of Glasgow, giving order, that he should not be admitted to Preach in Churches, he Preached often in the fields: and when in some places his followers would have forced the Churches, he checkt them and said, it was the word of Peace, that he Preached, and therefore no blood should be shed about it. But after he had stayed a month there, he heard that there was a great Plague in Dundee, which broke out the fourth day after he had left it: upon which, he presently returned thither and Preached oft to them, standing over one of the Gates, having taken care that the Infected Persons should stand without, and those that were clean within the Gate. He continued among them and took care to supply the poor, and to visit the sick, and do all the Offices of a faithful Pastor in that extremity. Once as he ended his Sermon, a Priest coming to have killed him, was taken with the weapon in his hand, but when the People were rushing furiously on him, Wishart got him in his Arms and saved him from their rage, for he said he had done no harm, only they saw what they might look for. He became a little after this more than ordinary serious and apprehensive of his end: he was seen sometimes to rise in the night, and spend the greatest part of it in Prayer; and he often warned his hearers, that his Sufferings were at hand, but that few should suffer after him, and that the Light of true Religion should be spread over the whole Land. He went to a great many places, where his Sermons were well received, and came last to Lothian, where he found a greater neglect of the Gospel, than in other parts, for which he threatned them, That Strangers should chase them from their dwellings and possess them. He was Lodged in a Gentleman of Qualities house Cockburn, of Ormeston, when in the night the house was beset by some horsemen, who were sent by the Cardinals means to take him. The Earl of Bothwel that had the chief Jurisdiction in the County, was with them, who promising that no hurt should be done him, he caused the Gate to be opened, saying, The Blessed will of God be done, When he presented himself to the Earl of Bothwel, he desired to be proceeded with according to Law, for he said, he feared less to die openly, than to be Murdered in secret. The Earl promised upon his honour, that no harm should be done him, and for some time seemed resolved, to have made his words good, but the Queen Mother and Cardinal in the end prevailed with him, to put Wishart in their hands, and they sent him to St. Andrews, where it was agreed to make a Sacrifice of him. Upon this the Cardinal called a meeting of the Bishops to St. Andrews against the 27th of February, to destroy him with the more Ceremony, but the Arch Bishop of Glasgow moved, that there should be a Warrant procured from the Lord Governor for their proceedings. To this the Cardinal consented, thinking the Governor was then so linked to their Interests, that he would deny them nothing; but the

Governor

Governor bearing in his heart a ſecret love to Religion, and being plainly dealt with by a Noble Gentleman of his name Hamilton, of Preſton, who laid before him the juſt and terrible Judgments of God he might look for, if he ſuffered poor Innocents to be ſo Murdered at the appetite of the Clergy; ſent the Cardinal word not to proceed till he himſelf came, and that he would not conſent to his death, till the cauſe was well examined; and that if the Cardinal proceeded againſt him, his blood ſhould be required at his hands. But the Cardinal reſolved to go on at his peril, for he apprehended, if he delayed it, their might be either a Legal or a violent reſcue made: ſo he ordered a mock Citation of Wiſhart to appear; who being brought the next day to the Abbey-Church, the Proceſs was opened with a Sermon, in which the Preacher delivered a great deal of good Doctrine concerning the Scriptures, being the only Touchſtone by which Hereſie was to be tryed. After Sermon, the Priſoner was brought to the Bar: he firſt fell down on his knees, and after a ſhort Prayer, he ſtood up and gave a long account of his Sermons, That he had Preached nothing, but what was contained in the ten Commandments, the Apoſtles Creed, and the Lords Prayer; but was interrupted with reproachful words, and required to anſwer plainly to the Articles objected to him. Upon which he appealed to an indifferent Judge: he deſired to be tryed by the word of God and before my Lord Governor, whoſe Priſoner he was: but the Indictment being read, he confeſſing and offering to juſtifie moſt of the Articles objected againſt him, was judged an obſtinate Heretick, and condemned to be burnt: All the next night he ſpent in Prayer: In the Morning, two Friars came to Conſeſs him, but he ſaid, he would have nothing to do with them, yet if he could, he would gladly ſpeak with the Learned man, that preached the day before. So he being ſent to him, after much Conference, he asked him, if he would receive the Sacrament? Wiſhart anſwered, he would moſt gladly do it, if he might have it as Chriſt had inſtituted it, under both kinds; but the Cardinal would not ſuffer the Sacrament to be given him. And ſo breakfaſt being brought, he diſcourſed to thoſe that were preſent, of the death of Chriſt, and the ends of the Sacrament, and then having bleſſed and conſecrated the Elements, he took the Sacrament himſelf, and gave it to thoſe that were with him. That being done, he would taſte no other thing, but retired to his Devotion. Two hours after the Executioners came, and put on him a Coat of black Linen, full of bags of Powder and carried him out to the place of Execution, which was before the Cardinals Caſtle. He ſpake a little to the People, deſiring them not to be offended at the good word of God, for the ſufferings that followed it, it was the true Goſpel of Chriſt that he had Preached, and for which with a moſt glad heart and mind he now offered up his Life. The Cardinal was ſet in ſtate in a great Window of his Caſtle, looking on this ſad ſpectacle. When Wiſhart was tyed to the Stake, he cryed aloud, O Saviour of the World have Mercy upon me! Father of Heaven I recommend my Spirit into thy Holy hands. So the Executioners kindled the fire, but one perceiving after ſome time, that he was yet alive, encouraged him to call ſtill on God: to whom he anſwered, 'The flame hath ſcorched my body, yet hath it not daunted my 'Spirit; 1545.

1545. 'Spirit, but he who from yonder high place (looking up to the Car'dinal) beholdeth us with such pride, shall within few days lie in 'the same, as ignominiously as now he is seen proudly to rest himself.
The executioner drawing the Cord that was about his neck straiter, stopt his breath so, that he could speak no more, and his body was soon consumed by the fire. Thus died this eminent servant and witness of Christ, on whose Sufferings I have enlarged the more, because they proved so fatal to the Interests of the Popish Clergy, for not any one thing hastned forward the Reformation more than this did, and since he had both his Education and Ordination in England, a full account of him seems no impertinent Digression.

The Clergy rejoyced much at his death, and thought (according to the constant Maxim of all Persecutors) that they should live more at ease, now when Wishart was out of the way. They magnified the Cardinal for proceeding so vigorously, without, or rather against the Governors Orders: But the People did universally look on him as a Martyr, and believed an extraordinary measure of Gods Spirit had rested on him, since besides great innocency and purity of Life, his predictions came so oft to pass, that he was believed a Prophet as well as a Saint: And the Reformation was now so much opened by his Preaching, and that was so confirmed by his death that the Nation was generally possessed with the love of it. The Nobility were mightily offended with the Cardinal, and said Wishart's death was no less than Murder, since the Clergy without a Warrant from the Secular Power, could dispose of no mans Life: So it came universally to be said, that he now deserved to die by the Law, yet since he was too great for a Legal Tryal, the Kingdom being under the feeble Government of a Regency, it was fit private persons should undertake it; and it was given out, that the killing an Usurper, was always esteemed a commendable Action, and so in that state of things, they thought secret practices might be justified. This agreeing so much with the temper of some in that Nation, who had too much of the heat and forwardness of their Country, a few Gentlemen of Quality, who had been ill used by the Cardinal, conspired his death. He was become generally hateful to the whole Nation, and the Marriage of his Bastard Daughter to the Earl of Crawford's eldest Son, enraged the Nobility the more against him; and his carriage towards them all was insolent and provoking. These offended Gentlemen came to St. Andrews the 29th of May, and the next Morning, they and their attendants, being but twelve in all, first attempted the Gate of his Castle, which they found open, and made it sure; and though they were no fewer than an hundred reckoned to be within the Castle, yet they knowing the passages of the House, went with very little noise, to the Servants Chambers, and turned them almost all out of doors; and having thus made the Castle sure, they sent to the Cardinals door: He who till then was fast asleep, suspecting nothing, perceived at last by their rudeness, that they were not his friends, and made his door fast against them. So they went for fire to set to it, upon which he treated with them, and upon assurance of Life he opened the door: but they rushing in, did most cruelly and treacherously Murder him. A Tumult was raised in the Town, and many of his friends came to rescue reſcue him, but the Conſpirators carryed the dead Body and expoſed it to their view, in the ſame Window out of which he had not long before lookt on, when Wiſhart was burnt, which had been univerſally cenſured as a moſt indecent thing in a Church-man, to delight in ſuch a Spectacle. But thoſe who condemned this Action, yet acknowledged God's Juſtice in ſo exemplary a Puniſhment, and reflecting on Wiſhart's laſt words, were the more confirmed in the opinion they had of his Sanctity. This Fact was differently cenſured; ſome juſtified it, and ſaid, it was only the killing of a mighty Robber, others that were glad he was out of the way, yet condemned the manner of it, as treacherous and inhumane. And though ſome of the Preachers did afterwards fly to that Caſtle as a Sanctuary, yet none of them, were either Actors or Conſenters to it: it is true they did generally extenuate it, yet I do not find that any of them juſtified it. The exemplary and ſignal ends of almoſt all the Conſpirators, ſcarce any of them dying an ordinary death, made all People the more inclined to condemn it. The day after the Cardinal was killed, about 140 came into the Caſtle and prepared for a Siege. The Houſe was well furniſhed in all things neceſſary, and it lying ſo near the Sea, they expected help from King Henry, to whom they ſent a Meſſenger for his Aſſiſtance, and declared for him. So a Siege following, they were ſo well ſupplyed from England, that after five months the Governor was glad to treat with them, apprehending much the footing the Engliſh might have, if thoſe within being driven to extremities, ſhould receive a Garriſon from King Henry: They had the Governor alſo more at their mercy, for as the Cardinal had taken his Eldeſt Son into his houſe, under the pretence of educating him, but really as his Father's Hoſtage, deſigning likewiſe to infuſe in him a violent hatred of the new Preachers; ſo the Conſpirators finding him in the Caſtle, kept him ſtill to help them to better terms. A Treaty being agreed on, they demanded their Pardon for what they had done, together with an Abſolution to be procured from Rome, for the killing of the Cardinal; and that the Caſtle and the Governor's Son, ſhould remain in their hands, till the Abſolution was brought over. Some of the Preachers apprehending the Clergy might revenge the Cardinal's death on them, were forced to fly into the Caſtle; but one of them John Rough (who was afterwards burnt in England in Queen Mary's time) being ſo offended at the licentiouſneſs of the Souldiers that were in the Caſtle, who were a reproach to that which they pretended to favour, left them, and went away in one of the Ships, that brought Proviſions out of England. When the Abſolution came from Rome, they excepted to it, for ſome words in it, that called the killing of the Cardinal Crimen irremiſſibile, an unpardonable Crime; by which they ſaid the Abſolution gave them no ſecurity, ſince it was null, if the Fact could not be pardoned. The truth was, they were encouraged from England, ſo they refuſed to ſtand to the Capitulation, and rejected the Abſolution. But ſome Ships and Souldiers being ſent from France, the Caſtle was beſieged at Land, and ſhut up alſo by Sea, and which was worſt of all a Plague broke out within it, of which many died. Upon this no help coming ſuddenly from England, they were forced to deliver up the Place on

The Caſtle was demoliſhed according to the Canon Law, that appoints all places where any Cardinal is killed to be razed. This was not compleated this year, and not till two years after, only I thought it beſt to joyn the whole matter together and ſet it down all at once.

A Parliament ſits.

In November following a New Parliament was held, where toward the expence of the King's Wars, the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury granted a continuation of the former Subſidy of ſix Shillings in the Pound, to be payed in two years. But for the Temporality, a Subſidy was demanded from them of another kind: There were in the Kingdom ſeveral Colleges, Chappels, Chanteries, Hoſpitals, and Fraternities, conſiſting of Secular Prieſts, who enjoyed Penſions for ſaying Maſs for the Souls of thoſe who had endowed them. Now the belief of Purgatory being left indifferent, by the Doctrine ſet out by the Biſhops, and the Trade of redeeming Souls being condemned; it was thought needleſs to keep up ſo many Endowments to no purpoſe. Thoſe Prieſts were alſo generally ill-affected to the King's proceedings, ſince their Trade was ſo much leſſened by them. Therefore many of them had been dealt with to make reſignation: And four and twenty of them had ſurrendered to the King. It was found alſo, that many of the Founders of theſe Houſes had taken them into their own hands, and that the Maſter, Wardens and Governors of them had made agreements for them, and given Leaſes of them: Therefore now a Subſidy being demanded, all theſe were given to the King by Act of Parliament; which alſo confirmed the Deeds that any had made to the King: Empowering him in any time of his life to iſſue out Commiſſions for ſeizing on theſe Foundations, and taking them into his own poſſeſſion: which being ſo ſeized on, ſhould belong to the King and his ſucceſſors for ever. They alſo granted another Subſidy for the War. When all their buſineſs was done, the King came to the Houſe, and made a long Speech, of which I cannot ſufficiently wonder that no Entry is made in the Journals of the Houſe of Lords; Yet it is not to be doubted but he made it, for it was publiſhed by Hall ſoon after.

Chapters and Chanteries given to the King.

When the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons had preſented the Bills, with a Speech full of reſpect and complement, as is uſual upon theſe occaſions; The King anſwered, 'Thanking them for the Subſidie, and the Bill about the Colleges and Chanteries; and aſſured them that he ſhould take care, both for ſupplying the Miniſters, for encouraging Learning, and relieving the Poor; and they ſhould quickly perceive that in theſe things their expectations ſhould be anſwered, beyond what they either wiſhed or deſired. And after he had expreſſed his affection to them, and the aſſurance he had of their duty and fidelity to him, he adviſed them to amend one thing; which was, that in ſtead of Charity and Concord, Diſcord and Diviſion reled every where. He cited St. Paul's words, That Charity was gentle, and not envious, nor proud. But when one called another Heretick, and the other called him Papiſt, and Phariſee, were theſe the ſigns of Charity? The fault of this he charged chiefly on the Fathers and Teachers of the Spiritualty, who preached one againſt another, without Charity

The King's ſpeech to the Houſes.

'Charity or Diſcretion; ſome being too ſtiff in their old Mumpſimus, 1545.
'others too buſie and curious in their new Sumpſimus; and few Preached the Word of God truly and ſincerely. And how could the poor 'People live in concord, when they ſowed debate among them? Therefore he exhorted them to ſet forth God's Word, by true Preaching, 'and giving a good Example; or elſe he, as God's Vicar, and high Miniſter, would ſee theſe Enormities corrected, which if he did not 'do, he was an unprofitable Servant and an untrue Officer. He next 'reproved them of the Temporality, who railed at their Biſhops and 'Prieſts: whereas if they had any thing to lay to their charge, they 'ought to declare it to the King, or his Council, and not take upon them to judge ſuch high Points. For tho they had the Scriptures 'given them in their Mother-Tongue, yet that was only to inform their own conſciences, and inſtruct their Children and Families; but not to diſpute, nor from thence to rail againſt Prieſts, 'and Preachers, as ſome vain Perſons did. He was ſorry that ſuch a 'Jewel, as the Word of God, was ſo ill uſed; that Rithms and Songs 'were taken out of it: but much more ſorry that Men followed it ſo 'little; for Charity was never fainter, a godly life never leſs appeared, 'and God was never leſs reverenced and worſhipped. Therefore he 'exhorted them to live as Brethren in Charity together, to love, dread, 'and ſerve God; and then the love and union between Him and them 'ſhould never be diſſolved. And ſo exhorting them to look to the Execution of the Laws which themſelves had deſired, he gave his 'Royal Aſſent to the Bills, and diſmiſſed the Parliament.

The King gave at this time a Commiſſion to the Biſhops of Weſtminſter, Worceſter and Chicheſter, and the Chancellor of the Court of Augmentation, Sir Edward North, containing, 'That whereas the King 'had founded many Cathedrals, in which he had given large allowances, both to be diſtributed to the poor, and to be laid out for the 'mending of High-ways; To Canterbury 100 pounds for the Poor, 'and 40 pounds for the High-ways: To Rocheſter 20 pounds for the 'Poor, and 20 pounds for the High-ways: To Weſtminſter, 100 pounds 'for the Poor, and 40 pounds for the High-ways: To Wincheſter 100 'Marks for the Poor, and 50 for the High-ways: To Briſtol, Gloceſter, 'Cheſter, Burton upon Trent, Thornton, Peterborough and Ely, 20 pounds 'a piece for the Poor, and as much for the High-ways: To Worceſter '40 pounds for the Poor, and 40 Pounds for the High-ways: To Dureſm 100 Marks for the Poor, and 40 pounds for the High-ways: 'And to Carliſle 15 pounds for the Poor, and as much for the High-ways: In all about 550 pounds a year to the Poor, and about 400 'pounds a year for the High-ways: They were to enquire how this 'Money was diſtributed; and, if they ſaw cauſe, they might order it 'to be applied to any other uſe which they ſhould judge more charitable and convenient. But what followed upon this, does not appear by the Records.

The King confirms the Rights of the Univerſities.

After the Parliament was diſſolved, the Univerſities made their applications to the King, that they might not be included within the general Words in the Act of Diſſolution of Colleges and Fraternities. And Dr. Cox Tutor to the Prince, wrote to Secretary Paget, to 'repreſent to the King the great want of Schools, Preachers, and 1546. 'Houſes for Orphans; that Beggery would drive the Clergy to Flat'tery, Superſtition, and the old Idolatry: There were ravenous

'Wolves about the King, that would devour Univerſities, Cathedrals, 'and Chantries, and a thouſand times as much. Poſterity would 'wonder at ſuch things: Therefore he deſired the Univerſities might 'be ſecured from their Spoyls. But the King did quickly free them from theſe fears.

Now I enter into the laſt year of this King's Reign. The War in France was managed with doubtful ſucceſs: yet the loſſes were greater on the Engliſh ſide. And the Forces being commanded by the Earl of Surrey, who was brave, but unſucceſsful, he was not only blamed but recalled, and the Earl of Hertford ſent to Command in his room. But he being a Man of an high Spirit, and diſdaining the Earl of Hertford, who was now preferred before him, let fall ſome words of high reſentment, and bitter contempt, which not long after wrought his ruine. The King was now alone in the War, which was very chargeable to him; and obſerving the Progreſs that the Council of Trent was making, where Cardinal Poole being one of the Legates, he had reaſon to look for ſome ſevere Decree to be made againſt himſelf; ſince none of the Hereticks of Germany were ſo much hated by the Court of Rome, as he was: Therefore he liſtned to the Counſels of Peace. And tho he was not old, yet he felt ſuch decays in his ſtrength, that being extreamly corpulent, he had no reaſon to think he could live very long: Therefore that he might not leave his young Son involved in a War of ſuch conſequence, Peace was concluded in June; which was much to the King's honour, though the taking and keeping of Bulloign, (which by this Peace the King was to keep for eight years,) coſt him above 1300000 pounds.

Peace with France.

A new deſign for Reformation.

Upon the Peace, the French Admiral Annebault came over to England. And now again a Reſolution of going on with a Reformation was ſet on foot: for it was agreed between the King and the Admiral, That in both Kingdoms, the Maſs ſhould be changed into a Communion; and Cranmer was Ordered to draw a Form of it. They alſo reſolved to preſs the Emperor to do the like in his Dominions, otherwiſe to make War upon him. But how this Project failed, does not appear. The Animoſities which the former War had raiſed between the two Kings, were converted into a firm Friendſhip: which grew ſo ſtrong on France's Part, that he never was ſeen glad at any thing, after he had the news of the King's death.

Shaxton's Apoſtacy.

But now one of the King's angry fits took him at the Reformers, ſo that there was a new proſecution of them. Nicholas Shaxton, that was Biſhop of Salisbury, had been long a Priſoner: but this year, he had ſaid in his Impriſonment, in the Counter in Bread-ſtreet, That Chriſt's natural Body was not in the Sacrament, but that it was a Sign and Memorial of his Body that was crucified for us. Upon this he was Indicted, and condemned to be burnt. But the King ſent the Biſhops of London, and Worceſter, to deal with him to recant; which on the 9th of July he did, acknowledging, 'That that year he had fallen in his old 'Age in the Hereſie of the Sacramentaries. But that he was now con'vinced of that error, by their endeavours whom the King had ſent
'to him. And therefore he thanked the King for delivering him, both from

'from Temporal and Eternal fire: and ſubſcribed a Paper of Articles, which will be found in the Collection. Upon this, he had his pardon and diſcharge ſent him the 13 of July, and ſoon after preached the Sermon at the burning of Anne Askew; and wrote a Book in defence of the Articles he had ſubſcribed. What became of him all Edward the 6ths time, I cannot tell: But I find, he was a cruel proſecutor and Burner of Proteſtants, in Queen Mary's day. Yet it ſeems thoſe to whom he went over, did not conſider him much, for they never raiſed him higher than to be Biſhop Suffragan of Ely. Others were alſo Indicted upon the ſame Statute, who got off by recantation, and were pardoned. But Anne Askew's Trial had a more bloody Concluſion. 1546. Collect. Numb. 28.

She was nobly deſcended, and educated beyond what was ordinary in that age to thoſe of her Sex. But ſhe was unfortunately Married, to one Kyme, who being a violent Papiſt, drave her out of his Houſe, when he found ſhe favoured the Reformation. So ſhe came to London, where information being given of ſome words, that ſhe had ſpoken againſt the Corporal preſence in the Sacrament, ſhe was put in Priſon: upon which, great applications were made by many of her friends, to have her let out upon Bail. The Biſhop of London examined her, and after much pains, ſhe was brought to ſet her hand to a Recantation, by which ſhe acknowledge, 'That the Natural Body of Chriſt was preſent in the Sa-'crament, after the Conſecration; whether the Prieſt were a good 'or an ill Man: and that, whether it was preſently conſumed, or re-'ſerved in the Pix, it was the true Body of Chriſt. Yet ſhe added to Her ſubſcription, that ſhe believed all things according to the Catholick Faith, and not otherwiſe. With this the Biſhop was not ſatisfied; but after much ado, and many importunate addreſſes, ſhe was Baiſed in the end of March this year. But not long after that, ſhe was again apprehended, and examined before the King's Council then at Greenwich, where ſhe ſeemed very indifferent what they did with her. She anſwered them in general words, upon which they could fix nothing, and made ſome ſharp reparties upon the Biſhop of Wincheſter. Some liked the wit and freedom of her diſcourſe, but others thought ſhe was too forward. From thence ſhe was ſent to Newgate, where ſhe wrote ſome devotions, and Letters, that ſhew her to have been a Woman of moſt extraordinary parts. She wrote to the King, 'That as to the Lord's Supper, 'ſhe believed as much as Chriſt had ſaid in it, and as much, as the Catho-'lick Church from him did Teach. Upon Shaxton's Recantation they ſent him to her to prevail with her. But ſhe inſtead of yielding to him, charged his Inconſtancy home upon him. She had been oft at Court, and was much favoured by many great Ladies there; and it was believed the Queen had ſhewed kindneſs to her. So the Lord Chancellor examined her of what Favour or Encouragement ſhe had from any in the Court, particularly from the Dutcheſs of Suffolk, the Counteſs of Hertford, and ſome other Ladies. But he could draw nothing from her, ſave that one in Livery had brought her ſome Money, which he ſaid came from two Ladies in the Court. But they reſolved to extort further Confeſſions from her. And therefore carried her to the Tower, they cauſed her to be laid on the Rack, and gave her a taſte of it. Yet ſhe confeſſed nothing. That ſhe was rackt is very certain, for I find it in an Original Journal of the Tranſactions in the Tower, written by An- The troubles of Anne Askew.

1546. thony Anthony: But Fox adds a passage that seems scarce credible, the thing is so extraordinary, and so unlike the Character of the Lord Chancellor, who though he was fiercely zealous for the old Superstition, yet was otherwise a great Person: it is, That he commanded the Lieutenant of the Tower to stretch her more; but he refused to do it, and being further prest, told him plainly he would not do it The other threatned him, but to no purpose; so the Lord Chancellor throwing off his Gown, drew the Rack so severely, that he almost tore her Body asunder: yet could draw nothing from her, for she endured it with unusual Patience and Courage. When the King heard this, he blamed the Lord Chancellor for his Cruelty, and excused the Lieutenant of the Tower. Fox does not vouch any Warrant for this, so that though I have set it down, yet I give no entire credit to it: if it was true, it shews the strange influence of that Religion, and that it corrupts the Noblest natures; yet the poor Gentlewomans being Rackt, wrought no pity in the King towards her, for he left her to be proceeded against according to the Sentence: she was carried to the Stake in Smithfield a little after that in a Chair, not being able to stand through the Torments of the Rack. There were brought with her at the same time, one Nicolas Belenian a Priest, John Adams a Taylor, and John Lassels one of the King's Servants, (it is likely he was the same Person that had discovered Queen Katherine Howard's incontinency, for which, all the Popish Party, to be sure, bore him no good will.) They were all convicted upon the Statute of the Six Articles, for denying the Corporal presence of Christ in the Sacrament. When they were brought thither, Shaxton, to compleat his Apostasie, made a Sermon of the Sacrament, and inveighed against their Errors. That being ended, they were tied to the Stake; and then the Lord Chancellor sent and offered them their Pardon, which was ready passed under the Seal, if they would recant. But they loved not their lives so well, as to redeem them by the loss of a good Conscience; and therefore encouraging one another to suffer patiently for the Testimony of the Truth: so they endured to the last, and were made Sacrifices by fire unto God. There were also two in Suffolk, and one in Norfolk, burnt on the same account a little before this.

She endures the Rack.

And is burnt with some others.

A new design against Cranmer.

But that Party at Court having incensed the King much against those Hereticks, resolved to drive it further; and to work the ruine, both of the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and of the Queen: Concluding, that if these attempts were successful, they should carry every thing else. They therefore renewed their Complaints of the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; and told the King, That though there were evident proofs ready to be brought against him, yet because of his Greatness, and the King's Carriage upon the former Complaints, none durst appear against him. But if he were once put in the Tower, that Men might hope to be heard, they undertook to bring full and clear Evidences of his being a Heretick. So the King consented, That he should be the next day called before the Council, and sent to the Tower, if they saw cause for it. And now they concluded him ruined. But in the night, the King sent Sir Anthony Denny to Lambeth, to bring the Arch-Bishop to speak with him. And when he came, the King told him what Informations had been brought against him, and how far he had yielded to them, that he ſhould be ſent to the Tower next day: And therefore deſired to hear from himſelf what he had to ſay upon it. Cranmer thanked him, that he had not left him in the dark, to be ſurprized in a matter that concerned him ſo nearly. He acknowledged the Equity of the King's proceedings; and all that he deſired, was, That he might be brought to make his anſwer: And that ſince he was to be Queſtioned for ſome of his Opinions, Judges might be aſſigned who underſtood thoſe matters. The King heard this with aſtoniſhment, wondering to ſee a Man ſo little concerned in his own perſervation. 'But pleaſantly told him, he was a 'Fool that looked to his own ſafety ſo little. For did he think that 'if he were once put in Priſon, abundance of falſe witneſſes would 'not be ſuborned to ruine him. Therefore ſince he did not take care 'of himſelf, he would look to it. And ſo he ordered him to appear next day before the Council, upon their Summons; and when things were objected to him, to ſay, that ſince he was a Privy-Councellor, he deſired they would uſe him, as they would look to be uſed in the like caſe: And therefore to move that his Accuſers might be brought face to face, and things be a little better conſidered before he was ſent to the Tower. And if they refuſed to grant that, then he was to appeal perſonally to the King, (who intended to be abſent that day,) and in token of it, ſhould ſhew them the King's Seal-Ring which he wore on his finger, and was well known to them all. So the King, giving him his Ring, ſent him privately home again. Next Morning a Meſſenger of the Council came early, and Summoned him to appear that day before the Council. So he went over, but was long kept waiting in the Lobby, before he was called in. At this unuſual ſight many were aſtoniſhed. But Doctor Buts, the King's Phyſician, that loved Cranmer, and preſumed more on a diſeaſed King than others durſt do, went and told the King what a ſtrange thing he had ſeen: 'The Primate of all England waiting at the Council-'door, among the foot-men and Servants. So the King ſent them word, That he ſhould be preſently brought in; which being done, they ſaid, That there were many Informations againſt him, that all the Hereſies that were in England came from him and his Chaplains. To which he anſwered as the King had directed him. But they inſiſting on what was before projected, he ſaid, he was ſorry to be thus uſed, by thoſe with whom he had ſate ſo long at that Board, ſo that he muſt appeal from them to the King: And with that took out the King's Ring, and ſhewed it: This put them in a wonderful confuſion, but they all roſe up and went to the King; who checkt them 'ſeverely for uſing the Arch-Biſhop ſo unhandſomely. He ſaid, he 'thought he had a wiſer Council, than now he found they were. 'He proteſted by the Faith he owed to God, laying his hand on his 'Breaſt, That if a Prince could be obliged by his Subject, he was 'by the Arch-Biſhop, and that he took him to be the moſt faithful 'Subject he had, and the Perſon to whom he was moſt beholding. The Duke of Norfolk made a trifling excuſe, and ſaid, They meant no harm to the Arch-Biſhop, but only to vindicate his Innocency by ſuch a Tryal, which would have freed him from the aſperſions that were caſt on him. But the King anſwered, he would not ſuffer men that

He knew the Factions that were among them, and the malice that ſome of them bore to others; which he would either extinguiſh or puniſh very ſpeedily. So he commanded them all to be Reconciled to Cranmer: Which was done with the outward Ceremony of taking him by the hand; and was moſt real on his part, though the other Party did not ſo eaſily lay down the hatred they bore him. This I place at this time; though Parker, who related it, names no year nor time in which it was done; but he leads us very near it, by ſaying, it was after the Duke of Suffolk's death; and this being the only time after that, in which the King was in an ill humor againſt the Reformers, I conclude it fell out at this time.

Another deſign againſt the Queen.

That Party finding it was in vain to puſh at Cranmer any more, did never again endeavour it. Yet one Deſign failing, they ſet on another againſt the Queen. She was a great favourer of the Reformers, and had frequently Sermons in her Privy-Chamber, by ſome of thoſe Preachers; which were not ſecretly carried; but became generally known: When it came to the King's ears, he took no notice of it. And the Queen carried her ſelf, in all other things, not only with an exact conduct, but with that wonderful care about the Kings perſon, which became a Wife that was raiſed by him to ſo great an honour, that he was much taken with her: So that none durſt adventure on making any complaints againſt her. Yet the King's diſtempers encreaſing, and his peeviſhneſs growing with them, he became more uneaſie; and whereas ſhe had frequently uſed to talk to him of Religion, and defended the Opinion of the Reformers, in which he would ſometimes pleaſantly maintain the Argument; now, becoming more impatient, he took it ill at her hands. And ſhe had ſometime in the heat of diſcourſe gone very far. So one night, after ſhe had left him, the King being diſpleaſed, vented it to the Biſhop of Wincheſter that ſtood by: And he craftily and maliciouſly ſtruck in with the King's anger, and ſaid all that he could deviſe againſt the Queen, to drive his reſentments higher: and took in the Lord Chancellor into the deſign to aſſiſt him. They filled the King's head with many ſtories of his Queen, and ſome of her Ladies: and ſaid, They had favoured Anne Askew, and had Heretical Books amongſt them; and he perſuaded the King, that they were Traitors as well as Hereticks. The matter went ſo far, that Articles were drawn againſt her, which the King Signed; for without that, it was not ſafe for any to Impeach the Queen. But the Lord Chancellor putting up that Paper carelelly it dropt from him: And being taken up by one of the Queens Party, was carried to her. Whether the King had really deſigned her ruine, or not, is differently repreſented by the Writers who lived near that time. But ſhe ſeeing his hand to ſuch a Paper, had reaſon to conclude her ſelf loſt. Yet by advice of one of her Friends, ſhe went to ſee the King, who received her kindly, ſet on a Diſcourſe about Religion. But ſhe anſwered, that women, by their firſt Creation, were made ſubject to Men; and they being made after the Image of God, as the Women were after their Image, ought to inſtruct their Wives: who were to learn of them: and ſhe much more, was to be taught by his Majeſty, who was a Prince of ſuch excellent lent Learning and Wiſdom. Not ſo by St. Mary, ſaid the King, you are become a Doctor, able to Inſtruct us, and not to be Inſtructed by us. To which ſhe anſwered, That it ſeemed he had much miſtaken the freedom ſhe had taken to argue with him, ſince ſhe did it partly to engage him in diſcourſe, and ſo put over the time, and make him forget his pain; and partly to receive Inſtructions from him, by which ſhe had profited much. And visit even ſo? Said the King, then we are friends again. So he embraced her with great affection, and ſent her away with very tender aſſurances of his conſtant Love to her. But the next day had been appointed for carrying her, and ſome of her Ladies, to the Tower. The day being fair, the King went to take a little air in the Garden, and ſent for her to bear him company. As they were together, the Lord Chancellor came in, having about forty of the Guard with him, to have arreſted the Queen. But the King ſtept aſide to him, and after a little diſcourſe, he was heard to call him Knave, Fool and Beaſt, and he bade him get him out of his Sight. The Innocent Queen who underſtood not that her danger was ſo near, ſtudied to mitigate the King's diſpleaſure, and interceded for the Lord Chancellor. But the King told her, ſhe had no reaſon to plead for him. 1546.

So this deſign miſcarried, which as it abſolutely diſheartned the Papiſts, ſo it did totally alienate the King from them; and in particular from the Biſhop of Wincheſter, whoſe ſight he could never after this endure. But he made an humble Submiſſion to the King which though it preſerved him from further puniſhment, yet could not reſtore him to the King's favour. But the Duke of Norfolk, and his Son, the Earl of Surrey, fell under a deeper Misfortune. The Duke of Norfolk had been long Lord Treaſurer of England: He had done great ſervices to the Crown on many ſignal Occaſions, and ſucceſs had always accompanied him. His Son, the Earl of Surrey, was alſo a brave and noble Perſon, Witty and Learned to an high degree, but did not command Armies with ſuch Succeſs. He was much provoked at the Earl of Hertford's being ſent over to France in his room, and upon that had ſaid, That within a little while they ſhould ſmart for it; with ſome other expreſſions that ſavoured of Revenge, and a diſlike of the King, and a hatred of the Counſellors. The Duke of Norfolk had endeavoured to ally himſelf to the Earl of Hertford, and to his Brother Sir Thomas Seimour, perceiving how much they were in the King's favour, and how great an Intereſt they were like to have under the ſucceeding Prince. And therefore would have engaged his Son, being then a Widower, to Marry that Earls Daughter: And preſſed his Daughter, the Dutcheſs of Richmond, Widow to the King's Natural Son, to Marry Sir Thomas Seimour. But though the Earl of Surrey adviſed his Siſter to the Marriage projected for her, yet he would not conſent to that deſigned for himſelf, nor did the Propoſition about his Siſter take effect. The Seimours, could not but ſee the Enmity the Earl of Surrey bore them, and they might well be jealous of the Greatneſs of that Family; which was not only too big for a Subject of it ſelf, but was raiſed ſo high by the dependence of the whole Popiſh Party, both at home and abroad, that they were like to be very dangerous Competitors for the chief Government of Affairs;

The cauſes of the Duke of Norfolk's diſgrace.

1546. fairs, if the King were once out of the way; whose disease was now growing so fast upon him, that he could not live many weeks. Nor is it unlikely that they persuaded the King, that if the Earl of Surrey should Marry the Lady Mary, it might embroil his Sons Governme-t, and perhaps ruine him. And it was suggested, That he had some such high Project in his thoughts, both by his continuing unmarried, and by his using the Arms of Edward the Confessor, which of late he had given in his Coat, without a Diminution. But to compleat the Duke of Norfolk's ruine, his Dutchess who had complained of his using her ill, and had been separated from him about four years, turned Informer against him. His Son and Daughter were also in ill terms together. So the Sister informed all that she could against her Brother. And one Mrs. Holland, for whom the Duke was believed to have an unlawful affecti n, discovered all she k-ew; but all amounted to no more, than some passionate Expressions of the Son, and some Complaints of the Father, who thought he was not beloved by the King, and his Counsellors, and that he was ill used, in not being trusted with the secret of affairs. And all Persons being encouraged to bring Informations against them, Sir Richard Southwell charged the Earl of Surrey in some Points that were of a higher nature: which the Earl denied, and desired to be admitted, according to the Marrial Law, to fight in his shirt with Southwell. But that not being granted, he and his Father were committed to the Tower. That which was most insisted on, was, their giving the Arms of Edward the Confessor which were only to be given by the Kings of England. This the Earl of Surrey justified: and said, they gave their Arms, according to the opinion of the King's Heraulds. But all excuses availed nothing, for his Father and he were designed to be destroyed, upon reasons of State: for which, some colours were to be found out.

1547. The Earl of Surrey Executed.

The Earl of Surrey being but a Commoner, was brought to his Tryal at Guildhall; and put upon an Inquest of Commoners consisting of nine Knights and three Esquires, by whom he was found guilty of Treason, and had Sentence of death passed upon him; which was executed on the 19*th* of January at Tower-Hill. It was generally condemned, as an Act of high injustice and severity, which loaded the Seimours with a popular Odium that they could never overcome. He was much pitied, being a Man of great Parts and high Courage, with many other Noble Qualities.

The Duke's submission to the King.

But the King who never hated nor ruined any body by halves resolved to compleat the Misfortunes of that Family, by the Attainder of the Father. And as all his Eminent Services were now forgotten, so the Submissions he made, could not allay a displeasure, that was only to be satisfied with his Life and Fortune. He wrote to the King, protesting his Innocency: 'That he had never a thought 'to his prejudice, and could not imagine what could be laid to his 'Charge: He had spent his whole Life in his Service, and did not 'know that ever he had offended any Person; or that any were dis-'pleased with him, except for prosecuting the breakers of the Act 'about the Sacrament of the Altar. But in that, and in every thing 'else, as he had been always obedient to the King's Laws, so he was 'resolved still to obey any Laws he should make. He desired he might be

'be examined with his Accuſers face to face, before the King, or 1547.
'at leaſt before his Council; and if it did not appear that he was 'wrongfully accuſed, let him be puniſhed as he deſerved. In Con-
'cluſion he begged the King would have pity on him, and reſtore
'him to his favour; taking all his Lands or Goods from him, or as 'much of them, as he pleaſed. Yet all this had no effect on the King. So he was deſired to make a more formal Submiſſion; which he did on the 12*th* of January under his hand, ten Privy Councellors being Witneſſes. In it he confeſſed, 'Firſt his diſcovering the 'Secrets of the King's Council. Secondly, his concealing his Son's Trea-'ſon, in uſing to give the Arms of St. Edward the Confeſſor, which 'did only belong to the King, and to which his Son had no Right. 'Thirdly, That he had ever ſince his Father's death, born in the firſt 'quarter of his Arms, the Arms of England: with a difference of the 'Labels of Silver, that are the proper Arms of the Prince; which was 'done in prejudice of the King and the Prince: and gave occaſion 'for diſturbing or interrupting the Succeſſion to the Crown of the 'Realm. This he acknowledged was High Treaſon, he confeſſed he 'deſerved to be attainted of High Treaſon; and humbly begged the 'King's Mercy and Compaſſion. He yielded to all this, hoping by ſuch a Submiſſion and Compliance to have overcome the King's diſ-pleaſure. But his expectations failed him.

A Parliament was called, the reaſon whereof was pretended to be the Coronation of the Prince of Wales. But it was thought the true cauſe of calling it, was, to Attaint the Duke of Norfolk: for which they had not colour enough, to do it in a Tryal by his Peers. Therefore an Attainder by Act of Parliament was thought the better way. So it was moved, that the King intending to Crown his Son, Prince of Wales, deſired they would go on with all poſſible haſte in the Attainder of the Duke of Norfolk; that ſo theſe Places which he held by Patent, might be diſpoſed of by the King to ſuch as he thought fit, who ſhould Aſſiſt at the Coronation. And upon this ſlight pretence, ſince a better could not be found; the Bill of Attainder was read the firſt time on the 18*th* of January: And on the 19*th* and 20*th* it was read the ſecond and third time; and ſo paſſed in the Houſe of Lords, and was ſent down to the Commons, who on the 24*th* ſent it up alſo paſſed. On the 27*th* the Lords were ordered to be in their Robes, That the Royal Aſſent might be given to it: which the Lord Chancellor, with ſome others joyned in Commiſſion, did give by virtue of the King's Letters Patents. And it had been executed the next Morning, if the King's death had not prevented it. Upon what grounds this Attaindor was founded, I can only give this Account from the 34*th* Act of the firſt Parliament of Queen Mary; in which this Act is declared null and void, by the Common Law of the Land; for I cannot find the Act it ſelf upon Record. In the Act of Repeal it is ſaid, 'That there was no ſpecial matter in the Act of 'Attainder, but only general words of Treaſons and Conſpiracies; 'and that out of their care of the preſervation of the King and the 'Prince, they paſſed it. But the Act of Repeal ſays alſo, That the 'only thing with which he was charged, was, For bearing of Arms, 'which he and his Anceſtors had born, both within and without the

'genitors: which they might Lawfully bear and give, as by good
'and substantial matter of Record it did appear. It is also also added, 'That the King died after the date of the Commission, That the 'King only empowered them to give his Assent, but did not give
'it himself: And that it did not appear by any Record, that they 'gave it. That the King did not Sign the Commission with his own 'hand, his Stamp being only set to it, and that not to the upper, but the neither part of it, contrary to the King's custom. All these particulars, though cleared afterwards, I mention now, because they give light to this matter.

His death prevented by the King's.

As soon as the Act was passed, a Warrant was sent to the Lieutenant of the Tower, to cut off his head the next Morning; but the King dying in the night, the Lieutenant could do nothing on that Warrant. And it seems it was not thought advisable, to begin the new King's Reign with such an Odious Execution. And thus the Duke of Norfolk escaped very narrowly. Both Parties descanted on this differently. The Conscientious Papists said, it was Gods just Judgment on him, who had in all things followed the King's pleasure, oftentimes against his own Conscience; That he should smart under that Power, which himself had helped so considerably to make it be raised so high. The Protestants could not but observe an hand of God, in measuring out such a hard measure to him, that was so heavy on all those poor People that were questioned for Heresie. But Cranmer's carriage in this matter was suitable to the other parts of his Life, for he withdrew to Croydon, and would not so much as be present in Parliament, when so unjust an Act was passed, and his absence at this time was the more considerable, since the King was so dangerously ill, that it must be concluded it could be no slight Cause that made him withdraw at such a time. But the Duke of Norfolk had been his constant Enemy, therefore he would not so much as be near the publick Councils, when so strange an Act was passing. But at the same time the Bishop of Winchester was officiously hanging on in the Court: and though he was forbid to come to Council, yet always when the Councellors went into the King's Bed-Chamber, he went with them to the door, to make the World believe he was still one of the number, and staying at the door till the rest came out, he returned with them. But he was absolutely lost in the King's Opinion.

The Emperor's designs against the Protestants.

There is but one other step of Foreign business in this Reign; which was an Embassy sent over by the Duke of Saxony, to let the King know of the League between the Pope and the Emperor, for the Extirpation of Heresie: and that the Emperor was making War on him, and the other Princes, in pursuance of that League. Therefore he desired the King's Assistance. But at the same time, the Emperor did by his Agents every-where disown, that the War was made upon a Religious Account: and said it was only to maintain the Rights of the Empire; which those Princes had affronted. So the King answered, that as soon as it did appear to him, that Religion was the cause of the War, he would assist them. But that which made this so involved, was, That though at Rome the Pope declared it was a Holy War, and ordered Prayers and Processions to be made, for Succeſs; yet the Emperor in all his Declarations took no notice of Religion: He had alſo divided the Proteſtant Party, ſo that ſome of them joyned with him, and others were Neutrals. And when in Germany it ſelf this matter was ſo little underſtood, it was eaſy to abuſe Strangers by giving them a wrong account of it. 1547.

for

The King was overgrown with corpulency and fatneſs, ſo that he became more and more unwieldy. He could not go up or down ſtairs, but as he was raiſed up, or let down by an Engine. And an old ſore in his Leg became very uneaſy to him; ſo that all the humors in his Body ſinking down into his Leg, he was much pained, and became exceeding froward and intractable, to which his inexcuſable ſeverity to the Duke of Norfolk and his Son may be in a great meaſure imputed. His Servants durſt ſcarce ſpeak to him, to put him in mind of his approaching end. And an Act of Parliament which was made for the ſecurity of the King's Life, had ſome words init againſt the Foretelling of his death; which made every one afraid to ſpeak to him of it: leſt he in his angry and imperious humors ſhould have Ordered them to be Indicted upon that Statute. But he felt nature declining apace, and ſo made the Will, he had left behind him at his laſt going into France, be written over again; with this only difference, That Gardiner Biſhop of Winchester, whom he had appointed one of the Executors of his Will, that of the Councellors to his Son, till he came of Age, was now left out: Of which when Sir Anthony Brown put the King in mind, apprehending it was only an Omiſſion, he anſwered, That he knew Gardiner's temper well enough, and though he could Govern him, yet none of them would be able to do it; and that he would give them much trouble. And when Brown at another time repeated the motion to the King: he told him, if he ſpake more of that, he would ſtrike him out of his Will too. The Will was ſaid to be Signed the 30th of December. It is Printed at large by Fuller; and the moſt Material parts of it by Heylin. So I need ſay little of it, only the moſt ſignal Clauſe in it, was, That he excluded the Line of Scotland out of the Succeſſion, and preferred the two Daughters of the French Queen by Charles Brandon to them. And this leads me to diſcover ſeveral things concerning this Will, which have been hitherto unknown. I draw them from a Letter Written to Sir William Cecil, then Secretary of State to Queen Elizabeth, (afterwards Lord Burleigh,) by William Maitland of Lethingtoun Secretary of State to the Queen of Scotland. This Maitland was accounted a Man of the greateſt parts of any in his Nation at that time; though his Treachery in turning over to the Party that was againſt the Queen, very much blemiſhed his other Qualities: but he expiated his fault by a real Repentance; which appeared in his returning to his duty, and loſing all afterwards in her quarrel. His Letter will be found in the Collection. The Subſtance and deſign of it is, to clear the Right his Miſtreſs had to the Crown of England: in caſe the Queen ſhould die without Heirs of her Body. Therein after he had anſwered other Objections, he comes to this of the Will. To it he ſays. 'That according to the Act of Parliament, the King's Will was to be Signed with his own hand; but 'this Will was only Signed by the Stamp. Then the King never Or-1547. 'dered the Stamp to be put to it: He had been oft desired to Sign 'it, but had always put it off; but when they saw his death approach- 'ing, one William Clark servant to Thomas Hennage put the Stamp 'to it, and some Gentlemen that were waiting without, were cal- 'led in to Sign it as Witnesses. For this he appeal'd to the depo- 'sition of the Lord Paget, and desired the Marques of Winchester, 'and Northampton, the Earl of Pembroke, Sir William Petre, Sir Hen- 'ry Nevil, Sir Maurice Berkeley, Sir Anthony Denny, Doctor Buts, and 'some others, might be examined; and that their Depositions might 'be entred into the Chancety. He also appealed to the Original Will, 'by which it would appear, That it was not Signed, but only Stamp- 'ed; and that not being according to the Act of Parliament, which 'in such extraordinary things must be strictly taken, the Will was of no force, Thus it appears, what vulgar Errors pass upon the World. And though for seventy five years, the Scotish Race has enjoyed the Crown of England, and after so long a possession it is very superfluous to clear a Title which is universally acknowledged; yet the Reader will not be ill pleased to see how ill-grounded that pretence was, which some managed very seditiously during the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, for excluding that Line.

But if this Will was not signed by the King, other Grants were certainly made by him on his death-bed: one was to the City of London, of 500 Marks a year for endowing an Hospital which was called Christs Hospital; and he ordered the Church of the Franciscans a little within Newgate to be opened, which he gave to the Hospital. This was done the 3d of January. Another was of Trinity College in Cambridge one of the Noblest Foundations in Christendom. He continued in a decay till the 27 of the month; and then many signs of his approaching end appearing, few would adventure on so unwelcom a thing as to put him in mind of his change then imminent: but Sir Anthony Denny had the honesty and courage to do it, and desired him to prepare for death, and remember his former Life, and to call on God for Mercy through Jesus Christ. Upon which the King expressed his grief for the Sins of his past Life, yet he said he trusted in the mercies of Christ, which were greater than they were. Then Denny asked him if any Churchman should be sent for; and he said, if any, it should be Arch-Bishop Cranmer: and after he had rested a little, finding his Spirits decay apace, he ordered him to be sent for to Croydon, where he was then. But before he could come, the King was speechless. So Cranmer desired him to give some sign of his dying in the Faith of Christ, upon which he squeezed his hand, and soon after died, after he had Reigned 37 years, and 9 months, in the six and fiftieth year of his age. His death was kept up three days, for the Journals of the House of Lords shew, that they continued reading Bills, and going on in business till the 31st. and no sooner did the Lord Chancellor signify to them that the King was dead, and that the Parliament was thereby dissolved. It is certain the Parliament had no being after the King's breath was out; so their sitting till the 31st shews, that the Kings death was not generally known all those three days. The reasons of concealing it so long might either be, that they were considering what to do with the Duke of Norfolk, or that the Seymours were were laying their matters, ſo as to be ſecure in the Government before they publiſhed the King's Death. I ſhall not adventure on adding any further Character of him, to that which is done with ſo much Wit and Judgment by the Lord Herbert, but ſhall refer the Reader wholly to him: only adding an account of the blackeſt part of it, the Attaindors that paſſed the laſt 13 years of his life: which are comprehended within this Book, of which I have caſt over the Relation to the Concluſion of it. 1547.

An account of the King's ſeverities againſt the Popiſh Party.

In the latter part of his Reign, there were many things that ſeem great ſeverities, eſpecially as they are repreſented by the Writers of the Roman Party; whoſe Relations are not a little ſtrengthned by the faint excuſes and the miſtaken accounts, that moſt of the Proteſtant Hiſtorians have made. The King was naturally impetuous and could not bear provocation; the times were very tickliſh; his Subjects were generally addicted to the old Superſtition, eſpecially in the Northern parts; the Monks and Friars were both numerous and wealthy; the Pope was his implacable Enemy, the Emperor was a formidable Prince, and being then Maſter of all the Netherlands, had many advantages for the War he deſigned againſt England. Cardinal Pool his kinſman, was going over all the Courts of Chriſtendom, to perſwade a League againſt England; as being a thing of greater neceſſity and merit than a War againſt the Turk. This being without the leaſt aggravation, the ſtate of affairs at that time, it muſt be confeſſed he was ſore put to it. A Superſtition that was ſo blind and headſtrong, and Enemies that were both ſo powerful, ſo ſpiteful, and ſo induſtrious, made rigour neceſſary: nor is any General of an Army more concerned to deal ſeverely with Spies and Intelligencers, than he was to proceed againſt all the Popes adherents, or ſuch as kept a correſpondence with Pool. He had obſerved in Hiſtory, that upon much leſs provocation than himſelf had given, not only ſeveral Emperors and Foreign Princes had been diſpoſſeſſed of their Dominions; but two of his own Anceſtors, Henry the 2d and King John, had been driven to great extremities, and forced to unuſual and moſt indecent ſubmiſſions by the means of the Popes and their Clergy.

The Popes power over the Clergy was ſo abſolute, and their dependance and obedience to him was ſo implicite; and the Popiſh Clergy had ſo great an intereſt in the ſuperſtitious multitude, whoſe conſciences they governed, that nothing but a ſtronger paſſion could either tame the Clergy, or quiet the People. If there had been the leaſt hope of impunity, the laſt part of his Reign would have been one continued Rebellion; therefore to prevent a more profuſe effuſion of blood, it ſeemed neceſſary to execute Laws ſeverely in ſome particular inſtances.

There is one calumny that runs in a thread through all the Hiſtorians of the Popiſh ſide, which not a few of our own have ignorantly taken up, That many were put to death for not ſwearing the King's Supremacy. It is an impudent falſhood; for not ſo much as one perſon ſuffered on that account; nor was there any Law for any ſuch Oath before the Parliament in the 28th year of the King's Reign, when the unſufferable Bull of Pope Paul the 3d, engaged him to look a little more to his own ſafety. Then indeed in the Oath for maintaining

ing

1547. ing the succession of the Crown, the Subjects were required under the pains of Treason, to swear that the King was supream head of the Church of England; but that was not mentioned in the former Oath that was made in the 25th, and enacted in the 26th year of his Reign. It cannot but be confessed, that to enact under pain of death that none should deny the King's Titles, and to proceed upon that against offenders, is a very different thing from forcing them to swear the King to be the Supream Head of the Church.

Some Carthusians executed for denying the King's Supremacy.

The first instance of these Capital proceedings was in Easter-Term, in the beginning of the 27th year of his Reign. Three Priors and a Monk, of the Carthusian Order, were then indicted of Treason, for saying, that the King was not supream Head under Christ of the Church of England. These were John Houghton Prior of the Charter-house near London, Augustin Webster Prior of Axholme, Robert Laurence Prior of Bevoll, and Richard Reynolds a Monk of Sion: this last was esteemed a learned man, for that time, and that Order. They were tried in Westminster-Hall by a Commission of Oyer and Terminer: they pleaded not guilty, but the Jury found them guilty, and Judgment was given that they should suffer as Traitors. The Record mentions no other particulars; but the Writers of the Popish side make a splendid recital of the courage and constancy they expressed both in their Tryal, and at their Death. It was no difficult thing for men so used to the Legend, and the making of fine stories for Saints and Martyrs of their Orders, to dress up their Narratives with much pomp. But as their pleading Not Guilty to the Indictment, shews no extraordinary resolution, so the account that is given by them of one Hall a Secular Priest that died with them, is so false, that there is good reason to suspect all. He is said to have suffered on the same account; but the Record of his Attainder gives a very different relation of it.

And Hall a Priest for conspiring against the King.

He, and Robert Feron, were indicted at the same time, for having 'said many spiteful and Treasonable things, as, That the King was a 'Tyrant, an Heretick, a Robber, and an Adulterer; that they hoped 'he should die such a death as King John, and Richard the 3d died; 'that they looked when those in Ireland and Wales should invade England; and they were assured that three parts of four in England would 'be against the King: they also said that they should never live merrily till the King and the Rulers were plucked by the Pates, and 'brought to the Pot, and that it would never be well with the Church 'till that was done. Hall had not only said this, but had also written it to Feron the 10th of March that year. When they were brought to the Bar, they at first pleaded Not Guilty; but full proof being brought, they themselves confessed the Indictment, before the Jury went aside, and put themselves on the King's mercy: upon which this being an imagining and contriving both War against the King, and the King's death, judgment was given as in cases of Treason: but no mention being made of Feron's death it seems he had his pardon. Hall suffered with the four Carthusians who were hanged in their habits.

Three other Monks Executed.

They proceeded no further in Easter-Term: but in Trinity-Term there was another Commission of Oyer and Terminer, by which Humphrey Middlemore, William Exmew, and Sebastian Nudigate, three Monks of the the Charter-house near London, were Indicted of Treason, for having said on the 25th of May, 'that they neither could nor would con 'sent to be obedient to the King's Highness, as true, lawful and obedi- 'ent Subjects; to take him to be Supream Head on Earth of the Church of England. They all pleaded Not Guilty, but were found Guilty by the Jury; and Judgment was given. When they were condemned, they desired that they might receive the body of Christ before their death. But (as Judge Spelman Writ) the Court would not grant it, since that was never done in such cases but by Order from the King. Two days after that, they were Executed. Two other Monks of that same Order, John Rochester, and James Wolver, suffered on the same account at York in May this year. Ten other Carthusian Monks were shut up within their Cells; where nine of them dyed, the tenth was hanged in the beginning of August. Concerning those persons I find this said in some Original Letters, that they had brought over into England, and vented in it, some Books that were written beyond Sea, against the King's Marriage, and his other proceedings, which being found in their House, they were pressed to peruse the Books that were written for the King, but obstinately refused to do it; they had also been involved in the business of the Maid of Kent, for which, though all the Complices in it, except those who suffered for it, were pardoned by Act of Parliament, yet such as had been concerned in it were still under jealousie: and it is no wonder that upon new provocations they met with the uttermost rigor of the Law. 1547.

These Tryals made way for two others that were more Signal: of the Bishop of Rochester, and Sir Thomas More. The first of these had been a Prisoner above a year, and was very severely used: he complained in his Letters to Cromwell, that he had neither Cloths, nor Fire, being then about fourscore. This was understood at Rome, and upon it, Pope Clement, by an officious kindness to him, or rather in spite to King Henry, declared him a Cardinal, and sent him a Red hat. When the King knew this, he sent to Examine him about it; but he protested he had used no endeavors to procure it, and valued it so little, that if the Hat were lying at his feet, he would not take it up. It never came nearer him than Picardy: yet this did precipitate his ruin. But if he had kept his opinion of the King's Supremacy to himself, they could not have proceeded further. He would not do that, but did upon several occasions speak against it, so he was brought to his Tryal on the 17th of June. The Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk, and some other Lords, together with the Judges, sate upon him by a Commission of Oyer and Terminer. He pleaded Not Guilty, but being found Guilty, Judgment was passed on him to die as a Traitor; but he was by a Warrant from the King, beheaded. Upon the 22d of June, being the day of his Execution, he dressed himself with more than ordinary care; and when his man took notice of it, he told him he was to be that day a Bridegroom. As he was led to the place of Execution, being stopt in the way by the croud, he opened his New Testament, and prayed to this purpose; That, as that Book had been his Companion and chief comfort in his imprisonment, so then some place might turn up to him, that might comfort

Fisher's Tryal and death.

1547. comfort him in his last passage: This being said, he opened the Book at a venture, in which these words of St. John's Gospel turned up: This is life eternal to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. So he shut the Book with much satisfaction, and all the way was repeating and meditating on them. When he came to the Scaffold he pronounced the Te Deum, and after some other devotions his head was cut off.

His Character. Thus died John Fisher Bishop of Rochester, in the 8th year of his Age. He was a Learned and Devout Man, but much addicted to the superstitions in which he had been bred up: And that led him to great severities against all that opposed them. He had been for many years Confessor to the King's Grand-Mother, the Countess of Richmond; and it was believed that he perswaded her to those Noble designs for the advancement of Learning, of Founding two Colleges in Cambridge, St. John's, and Christ's College, and Divinity Professors in both Universities. And in acknowledgment of this, he was chosen Chancellor of the University of Cambridge. Henry the 7th gave him the Bishoprick of Rochester, which he, following the Rule of the Primitive Church, would never change for a better; he used to say his Church was his Wife, and he would never part with her, because she was poor. He continued in great favour with the King, till the business of the Divorce was set on foot; and then he adhered so firmly to the Queen's cause, and the Pope's Supremacy, that he was carried by that, headlong into great Errors, as appears by the business of the Maid of Kent Many thought the King ought to have proceeded against him rather upon that, which was a point of State, than upon the Supremacy, which was matter of Conscience. But the King was resolved to let all his Subjects see, there was no Mercy to be expected by any that denied his being Supream head of the Church; and therefore made him and More, two Examples for terrifying the rest. This being much censured beyond Sea, Gardiner, that was never wanting in the most servile compliances, wrote a vindication of the King's proceedings. The Lord Herbert had it in his hands, and tells it was written in elegant Latin, but that he thought it too long, and others judged it was too vehement, to be inserted in his History.

More's Tryal and Death. On the 1st of July, Sir Thomas More was brought to his Tryal. The special matter in his Endictment, is, that on the 7th of May proceeding, before Cromwell, Bedyl, and some others that were pressing him concerning the King's Supremacy, he said he would not meddle with any such matter: and was fully resolved to serve God, and think upon his passion, and his own passage out of this World. He had also sent divers Messages by one George Gold to Fisher to encourage 'him in his obstinacy; and said, the Act of Parliament is like a 'Sword with two edges, for if a man answer one way, it will confound 'his Soul, and if he answer another way, it will confound his Body. He had said the same thing on the third of June, in the hearing of the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Norfolk; and others; and that he would not be the occasion of the shortning his own Life. And when Rich the King's Sollicitor came to deal with him further about it, but protested that he came not with any Authority to examine him, the they discourſed the matter fully; Rich preſſed him, 'that ſince the 1547.

'Parliament had Enacted that the King was Supream Head, the Sub'jects ought to agree to it; and ſaid Rich, what if the Parliament
'ſhould declare me King, would you not acknowledge me? I would,
'ſaid More, Quia (as it is in the Indictment) Rex per Parliamentum fieri
'poteſt, & per Parliamentum deprivari; but More turned the Argument
'on Rich, and ſaid, what if the Parliament made an Act that God
'was not God; Rich acknowledged it could not bind: but replyed to 'More, that ſince he would acknowledge him King, if he were made
'ſo by Act of Parliament, why would he not acknowledge the King
'Supream Head, ſince it was enacted by Parliament? To that More
'anſwered, That the Parliament had power to make a King, and the 'People were bound to acknowledge him, whom they made; but for 'the Supremacy, though the Parliament had enacted it, yet thoſe in 'foreign Parts had never aſſented to it. This was carried by Rich to the King, and all theſe particulars were laid together, and judged to amount to a denyal of the Supremacy. Judge Spelman writ, that More being on his Tryal, pleaded ſtrongly againſt the Statute that made it Treaſon to deny the Supremacy, and argued that the King could not be Supream Head of the Church: When he was brought to the Bar, he pleaded not Guilty, but being found Guilty, Judgment was given againſt him as a Traitor. He received it with that equal temper of mind, which he had ſhewed in both conditions of Life, and then ſet himſelf wholly to prepare for death; he expreſſed great contempt of the World, and that he was weary of Life, and longed for death; which was ſo little terrible to him, that his ordinary faceticuſneſs remained with him even on the Scaffold. It was cenſured by many, as light and undecent; but others ſaid, that way having been ſo natural to him on all other occaſions, it was not at all affected; but ſhewed that death did no way diſcompoſe him, and could not ſo much as put him out of his ordinary humour. Yet his rallying every thing on the Scaffold, was thought to have more of the Stoick than the Chriſtian in it. After ſome time ſpent in ſecret devotions, he was beheaded on the 6th of July.

Thus did Sir Thomas More end his days, in the 53d year of his age. His Character.
He was a Man of rare Vertues, and excellent Parts: In his youth he had freer thoughts of things, as appears by his Utopia, and his Letters to Eraſmus; but afterwards he became ſuperſtitiouſly devoted to the Intereſts and Paſſions of the Popiſh Clergy: and as he ſerved them when he was in Authority, even to aſſiſt them in all their cruelties; ſo he employed his Pen in the ſame cauſe, both in writing againſt all the new Opinions in general, and in particular againſt Tindal, Frith, and Barnes, as alſo an unknown Writer, who ſeemed of neither Party, but reproved the corruptions of the Clergy, and condemned their cruel Proceedings. More was no Divine at all, and it is plain to any that reads his Writings, that he knew nothing of Antiquity; beyond the quotations he found in the Canon-Law, and in the Maſter of the ſentences: (only he had read ſome of St. Auſtin's treatiſes,) for upon all Points of Controverſie, he quotes only what he found in theſe Collections; nor was he at all converſant in the critical learning upon the Scriptures; but his peculiar excellency in writing, was, that he had a

But there is one thing unjuſtly added to the praiſe of theſe two great Men, or rather feigned, on deſign to leſſen the King's honour; that Fiſher and he penned the Book which the King wrote againſt Luther. This Sanders firſt publiſhed, and Bellarmin and others ſince have taken it up upon his Authority. Strangers may be pardoned ſuch errors, but they are inexcuſable in an Engliſh Man. For in More's printed works there is a Letter written by him out of the Tower to Cromwell, in which he gives an account of his behaviour concerning the King's Divorce and Supremacy: among other particulars one is, 'That 'when the King ſhewed him his Book againſt Luther, in which he 'had aſſerted the Pope's Primacy to be of Divine right, More deſired him to leave it out; ſince as there had been many conteſts between Popes and other Princes, ſo there might fall in ſome between 'the Pope and the King; therefore he thought it was not fit for the 'King to publiſh any thing, which might be afterwards made uſe of 'againſt himſelf: and adviſed him either to leave out that point, or 'to touch it very tenderly; but the King would not follow his coun'ſel, being perhaps ſo fond of what he had writ, that he would rather run himſelf upon a great inconvenience, than leave out any thing that he fancied ſo well written. This ſhews that More knew the Book was written by the King's own Pen; and either Sanders never read this, or maliciouſly concealed it, leſt it ſhould diſcover his foul dealing.

Theſe Executions ſo terrified all People, that there were no further Provocations given: and all Perſons either took the Oaths, or did ſo dextrouſly conceal their opinions, that till the Rebellions of Lincolnſhire, and the North, broke out, none ſuffered after this upon a public account. But when theſe were quieted, then the King reſolved to make the chief Authors and Leaders of thoſe Commotions publick examples to the reſt. The Duke of Norfolk proceeded againſt many of them by Martial Law, there were alſo Tryals at Common Law of a great many more that were taken Priſoners, and ſent up to London. The Lords Darcy and Huſſie were tryed by their Peers, the Marquis of Exeter ſitting Steward. And a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer being iſſued out for the Tryal of the reſt, Sir Robert Conſtable, Sir John Bulmer and his Lady, Sir Francis Pigot, Sir Stephen Hamilton, and Sir Thomas Piercy and Aſk, that had been their Captain; with the Abbots of Whalley, Jerveaux, Bridlington, Lenton, Woburn and Kingſtead, and Mackrall the Monk that firſt raiſed the Lincolnſhire Rebellion, with fifteen more were Indicted of High Treaſon, for the late Rebellion. And after all the ſteps of the Rebellion were reckoned up, it is obded in the Indictment, that they had met together on the 17*th* of January, and consulted how to renew it, and prosecute it further, being encouraged by the new Risings that were then in the North; by which they had forfeited all the favour, to which they could have pretended, by virtue of the Indemnity that was granted in the end of December, and of the pardons which they had taken out. They were all found Guilty, and had Judgment as in cases of Treason; divers of them were carried down into Lincolnshire, and Yorkshire, and executed in the Places where their Treasons were committed; but most of them suffered at London, and among others the Lady Bulmer, (whom others call Sir John Bulmer's Harlot) was burnt for it in Smithfield. 1537. Hall.

The only censure that passed on this, was, that advantages were taken on too slight grounds to break the King's Indemnity and Pardon: since it does not appear, that after their Pardon they did any thing more than meet and consult. But the Kingdom was so shaken with that Rebellion, that if it had not been for the great conduct of the Duke of Norfolk, the King had by all appearance lost his Crown. And it will not seem strange that a King, (especially so tempered as this was,) had a mind to strike terror into the rest of his Subjects, by some signal Examples, and to put out of the way the chief Leaders of that Design: nor was it to be wondered at, that the Abbots and other Clergy-men who had been so active in that Commotion, were severely handled. It was by their means that the discontents were chiefly fomented; they had taken all the Oaths that were enjoyned them, and yet continued to be still practising against the State; which, as it was highly contrary to the peaceable Doctrines of the Christian Religion, so it was in a special manner contrary to the Rules which they professed; that obliged them to forsake the World, and to follow a Religious and Spiritual course of Life. Censures past upon it.

The next Example of Justice was a year after this, of one Forrest an Observant Friar; he had been, as Sanders said, Confessor to Queen Katherine, but it seems departed from her interests; for he insinuated himself so into the King, that he recovered his good Opinion. Being an ignorant and lewd Man, he was accounted by the better sort of that House, to which he belonged in Greenwich, a Reproach to their Order, (concerning this, I have seen a large account in an Original Letter written by a Brother of the same House.) Having regained the King's good Opinion, he put all those who had favoured the Divorce under great fears, for he proceeded cruelly against them. And one Rainscroft, being suspected to have given secret Intelligence of what was done among them, was shut up, and so hardly used that he dyed in their hands, which was (as that Letter relates) done by Friar Forrest's means. This Friar was found to have denyed the King's Supremacy: for though he himself had sworn it, yet he had infused it into many in Confession, that the King was not the Supream Head of the Church. Being questioned for these practices, which were so contrary to the Oath that he had taken, 'he answered, that he took that Oath with his outward Man, but his inward 'Man had never consented to it. Being brought to his Tryal, and accused of several Heretical Opinions that he held, he submitted him- 1538. Forrest's Equivocation and Heresie. Hall.

Upon this he had more freedom allowed him in the Prison; but some coming to him diverted him from the Submission he had offered; so that when the Paper of Abjuration was brought him, he refused to set his hand to it: upon which he was judged an Obstinate Heretick. The Records of these Proceedings are lost, but the Books of that time say, That he denied the Gospel; it is like it was upon that pretence, that without the determination of the Church it had no Authority, upon which, several writers of the Roman Communion have said undecent and scandalous things of the holy Scriptures. He was brought to Smithfield, where were present the Lords of the Council, to offer him his pardon, if he would abjure. Latimer made a Sermon against his errors, and studied to persuade him to recant; but he continued in his former opinions, so he was put to death in a most severe manner. He was hanged in a Chain about his middle, and the great Image that was brought out of Wales, was broken to pieces, and served for fewel to burn him. He shewed great unquietness of mind, and ended his Life in an ungodly manner, as Hall says, who adds this Character of him, 'that 'he had little knowledge of God and his sincere truth, and less trust in 'him at his ending.

The proceedings against Cardinal Pool's friends.

In Winter that year a correspondence was discovered with Cardinal Pool, who was bare-faced in his Treasonable designs against the King. His Brother Sir Geofrey Pool discovered the whole Plot. For which the Marques of Exeter, (that was the King's Cousin-german by his Mother, who was Edward the 4ths Daughter,) the Lord Montacute, the Cardinal's Brother, Sir Geofrey Pool, and Sir Edward Nevil, were sent to the Tower in the beginning of November. They were accused for having maintained a correspondence with the Cardinal, and for expressing an hatred of the King, with a dislike of his proceedings, and a readiness to rise upon any good opportunity that might offer it self.

The special matter brought against the Lord Montacute, and the Marques of Exeter, who were tried by their Peers on the 2*d* and 3*d* of December, in the 30*th* year of this Reign, is, 'That whereas Cardinal Pool, and others, had cast off their Allegiance to the King, 'and gone and submitted themselves to the Pope, the King's mortal 'Enemy, the Lord Montacute did on the 24*th* of July in the 28*th* year 'of the King's Reign, a few Months before the Rebellion broke out, say 'that he liked well the proceedings of his Brother the Cardinal, but 'did not like the proceedings of the Realm; and said, I trust to see a 'change of this World; I trust to have a fair day upon those Knaves 'that rule about the King; and I trust to see a merry World one day. Words to the same purpose were also charged on the Marques: the Lord Montacute further said, 'I would I were over the Sea with my 'Brother, for this World will one day come to stripes: it must needs 'so come to pass, and I fear we shall lack nothing so much as honest 'Men: he also said, he had dreamed that the King was dead, and 'though he was not yet dead, he would die suddenly; one day his 'Leg will kill him, and then we shall have jolly stirring; saying 'also, that he had never loved him from his childhood, and that Cardinal Wolsey would have been an honest Man, if he had had an hon-

'nch

'neſt Maſter. And the King having ſaid to the Lords he would leave 1538.
'them one day, having ſome apprehenſions he might ſhortly die, that 'Lord ſaid, if he will ſerve us ſo, we ſhall be happily rid; a time
'will come, I fear we ſhall not tarry the time, we ſhall do well e'nough. He had alſo ſaid, he was ſorry the Lord Abergavenny was 'dead, for he could have made ten thouſand Men; and for his part
'he would go and live in the Weſt, where the Marqueſs of Exeter
'was ſtrong: and had alſo ſaid upon the breaking of the Northern 'Rebellion, that the Lord Darcy played the fool, for he went to pluck
'away the Council, but he ſhould have begun with the head firſt,
'but I beſhrew him for leaving off ſo ſoon. Theſe were the Words charged on thoſe Lords, as clear diſcoveries of their Treaſonable deſigns; and that they knew of the Rebellion that brake out, and only intended to have kept it off to a fitter opportunity: they were alſo accuſed of Correſpondence with Cardinal Pool, that was the King's declared Enemy. Upon theſe Points the Lords pleaded not Guilty, but were found Guilty by their Peers, and ſo Judgment was given.

On the 4*th* of December were Indicted Sir Geofrey Pool, for holding Correſpondence with his Brother the Cardinal, and ſaying that he approved of his proceedings, but not of the King's; Sir Edward Nevill, Brother to the Lord Abergavenny, for ſaying, the King was a Beaſt, and worſe than a Beaſt; George Crofts, Chancellor of the Cathedral of Chicheſter, for ſaying, the King was not, but the Pope was, Supream Head of the Church; and John Collins, for ſaying, the King would hang in Hell one day for the plucking down of Abbeys: All thoſe, Sir Edward Nevill only excepted, pleaded Guilty, and ſo they were condemned; but Sir Geofrey Pool was the only Perſon of the number that was not Executed, for he had diſcovered the matter. At the ſame time alſo, Cardinal Pool, Michael Throgmorton Gentleman, John Hilliard and Thomas Goldwell Clerks, and William Peyto a Franciſcan of the Obſervance, were Attainted in Abſence; becauſe they had caſt off their duty to the King, and had ſubjected themſelves to the Biſhop of Rome, Pool being made Cardinal by him; and for writing Treaſonable Letters, and ſending them into England. On the 4*th* of February following, Sir Nicholas Carew, that was both Maſter of the Horſe, and Knight of the Garter, was Arraigned for being an adherent to the Marquiſs of Exeter, and having ſpoke of his Attaindor as unjuſt and cruel, he was alſo Attainted and Executed upon the 3*d* of March. When he was brought to the Scaffold, he openly acknowledged the Errors and Superſtition in which he had formerly lived; and bleſſed God for his Impriſonment, 'for he then began to reliſh 'the Life and Sweetneſs of God's holy Word, which was brought him 'by his Keeper, one Phillips, who followed the Reformation, and had 'formerly ſuffered for it.

After theſe Executions, followed the Parliament in the year 1539, 1539.
in which not only theſe Attaindors that were already paſſed were confirmed, but new ones of a ſtrange and unheard-of nature were Enacted. It is a blemiſh never to be waſhed off, and which cannot be enough condemned, and was a breach of the moſt ſacred and unalterable Rules of Juſtice, which is capable of no excuſe; it was the Attainting of ſome Perſons, whom they held in cuſtody, without bringing

Some Attaindors without hearing the Parties.

1539. bringing them to a Tryal. Concerning which, I shall add what the great Lord Chief Justice Cook writes, 'Although I question not the 'Power of the Parliament, for without question the Attaindor stands 'of force in Law, yet this I say of the manner of proceeding, Au- 'ferat Oblivio, si potest, si non utrumque silentium tegat. For the more 'high and absolute the Jurisdiction of the Court is, the more just 'and honourable it ought to be in the proceedings, and to give Ex- 'ample of Justice to inferior Courts. The chief of these were the Marchioness of Exeter and the Countess of Sarum. The special matter charged on the former, is, her confederating her self to Sir Nicolas Carew in his Treasons; to which is added, 'That she had com- 'mitted divers other abominable Treasons. The latter is said to have 'confederated her self with her Son the Cardinal, with other aggra- 'vating words. It does not appear by the Journal, that any Witnesses were examined; only that day that the Bills were read the third time in the House of Lords, Cromwel shewed them a Coat of white silk, which the Lord Admiral had found among the Countess of Sarum's Cloths, in which the Arms of England were wrought on the one side, and the Standard that was carried before the Rebels was on the other side. This was brought as an evidence that she approved of the Rebellion. Three Irish Priests were also Attainted for carrying Letters out of Ireland, to the Pope and Cardinal Pool, as also Sir Adrian Fortescue for endeavouring to raise Rebellion, Thomas Dingley a Knight of St. John of Jerusalem, and Robert Granceter Merchant, for going to several Foreign Princes, and persuading them to make War upon the King, and assist the Lords Darcy and Hussie in the Rebellion they had raised. Two Gentlemen, a Dominican Friar, and a Yeoman, were by the same Act Attainted, for saying that, that venemous Serpent, the Bishop of Rome, was Supream Head of the Church of England. Another Gentleman, two Priests, and a Yeoman are Attainted for Treason in general, no particular crime being specified. Thus fifteen Persons were in this manner Attainted, and if there was any Examination of Witnesses for convicting them, it was either in the Star-Chamber, or before the Privy Council; for there is no mention of any evidence that was brought in the Journals: There was also much haste made in the passing this Bill: it being brought in the 10*th* of May, was read that day for the first, and second time, and the 11*th* of May for the third time. The Commons kept it five days before they sent it back, and added some more to those that were in the Bill at first; but how many were named in the Bill Originally, and how many were afterwards added, cannot be known. Fortescue and Dingley suffered the 10*th* of July. As for the Countess of Sarum, the Lord Herbert saw in a Record, that Bulls from the Pope were found in her House, 'that she kept correspondence with her Son, and that she forbade 'her Tenants to have the new Testament in English, or any other 'of the Books that had been published by the King's Authority. She was then about seventy years of Age, but shewed by the answers she made, that she had a vigorous and masculine mind. She was kept two years Prisoner in the Tower, after the Act had passed, the King by that reprieve designing to oblige her Son to a better behaviour; but upon a fresh provocation by a new Rebellion in the North, she was beheaded,

headed, and in her, the name and line of Plantagenet determined. The Marchioneſs of Exeter died a natural death. In November this year were the Abbots of Reading, Glaſſenbury and Colcheſter Attainted of Treaſon, of which mention was made formerly. 1547.

In the Parliament that ſate in the year 1540 they went on to follow that ſtrange precedent, which they had made the former year. By the 56th Act Giles Heron was Attainted of Treaſon, no ſpecial matter being mentioned.

By the 57th Act, Richard Fetherſtoun, Thomas Abell, and Edward Powel Prieſts, and William Horn a Yeoman, were Attainted for denying the King's Supremacy, and adhering to the Biſhop of Rome: by the ſame Act, the Wife of one Tirrell Eſq; was Attainted, for refuſing he duty of Allegiance, and denying Prince Edward to be Prince and Heir of the Crown; and one Laurence Cook of Doncaſter was alſo Attainted for contriving the King's death.

By the 58th Act, Gregory Buttolph, Adam Damplip, and Edward Brindeholm Clerks, and Clement Philpot Gentleman, were Attainted, for adhering to the Biſhop of Rome, for correſponding with Cardinal Pool, and endeavouring to ſurprize the Town of Callais: By the ſame Act Barnes, Gerrard and Jerome were Attainted, of whoſe ſufferings an account has been already given.

By the 59th Act, William Bird a Prieſt, and Chaplain to the Lord Hungerford was attainted, for having ſaid to one that was going to Aſſiſt the King againſt the Rebels in the North, 'I am ſorry thou go-'eſt, ſeeſt thou not how the King plucketh down Images and Abbeys 'every day? And if the King go thither himſelf, he will never come 'home again, nor any of them all which go with him, and in truth it 'were pity he ſhould ever come home again; and at another time 'upon ones ſaying, O good Lord, I ween all the World will be Here-'ticks in a little time: Bird ſaid, Doeſt thou marvel at that? I tell thee 'it is no marvel, for the great Maſter of all is an Heretick, and ſuch a 'one as there is not his like in the World.

By the ſame Act the Lord Hungerford was likewiſe Attainted. 'The 'Crimes ſpecified are, That he knowing Bird to be a Traitor, did enter-'tain him in his houſe as his Chaplain; that he ordered another of his 'Chaplains, Sir Hugh Wood, and one Dr. Maudlin to uſe Conjuring, 'that they might know how long the King ſhould live, and whether 'he ſhould be victorious over his Enemies or not; and that theſe three 'years laſt paſt he had frequently committed the deteſtable Sin of Sodo-'my with ſeveral of his Servant: All theſe were Attainted by that Parliament. The Lord Hungerford was Executed the ſame day with Cromwell; he dyed in ſuch diſorder that ſome thought he was frenetick, for he called often to the Executioner to diſpatch him, and ſaid he was weary of Life, and longed to be dead, which ſeemed ſtrange in a Man that had ſo little cauſe to hope in his death. For Powel, Fetherſtoun, and Abell, they ſuffered the ſame day with Barnes and his friends, as hath been already ſhewn.

This year Sampſon Biſhop of Chicheſter, and one Doctor Wilſon were put in the Tower, upon ſuſpicion of correſpondence with the Pope. But upon their ſubmiſſion they had their pardon and liberty. In the year 1541, five Prieſts and ten ſecular Perſons, ſome of them being Gentlemen 1549. tlemen of Quality, were raising a new Rebellion in Yorkshire; which was suppressed in time, and the Promoters of it being apprehended, were Attainted and Executed, and this occasioned the death of the Countess of Sarum, after the Execution of the Sentence had been delayed almost two years.

The last instance of the King's severity was in the year 1543, in which one Gardiner that was the Bishop of Winchester's Kinsman and Secretary, and three other Priests, were tryed, for denying the King's Supremacy, and soon after executed. But what special matter was laid to their charge, cannot be known, for the Record of their Attainder is lost.

The Conclusion. These were the Proceedings of this King against those that adhered to the interests of Rome: in which, though there is great ground for just censure, for as the Laws were rigorous, so the Execution of them was raised to the highest that the Law could admit; yet there is nothing in them to justifie all the clamours, which that Party have raised against King Henry, and by which they pursue his memory to this day; and are far short, both in number and degrees, of the cruelties of Queen Mary's Reign, which yet they endeavour all that is possible to extenuate or deny.

To Conclude, we have now gone through the Reign of King Henry the 8*th*, who is rather to be reckoned among the Great than the Good Princes. He exercised so much severity on Men of both Persuasions, that the Writers of both sides have laid open his faults, and taxed his cruelty. But as neither of them were much obliged to him, so none have taken so much care to set forth his good Qualities, as his Enemies have done to enlarge on his Vices: I do not deny that he is to be numbred among the ill Princes, yet I cannot rank him with the worst.

The End of the Third Book and of the first Part.

After ſome of the ſheets of this Hiſtory were wrought off, I met with Manuſcripts of great Authority, out of which I have Collected ſeveral particulars, that give a clear light to the proceedings in thoſe times, which ſince they came too late to my knowledge to be put in their proper places, I ſhall here add them with references to the places to which they belong.

THere it is ſaid, that the Earl of Wiltſhire, Father to Queen Anne Boleyn, was one of the Peers that Judged her.

In this I too Implicitly followed Doctor Heylin, he ſeeming to write with more than ordinary care for the Vindication of that Queen, and with ſuch aſſurance, as if he had ſeen the Records concerning her, ſo that I took this upon truſt from him. The reaſon of it was, that in the ſearch I made of Attainders, I did not find the Record of her Tryal; ſo I concluded, That either it was deſtroyed by Order during her Daughters Reign, or was accidentally loſt ſince that time: And thus having no Record to direct me, I too eaſily followed the Printed Books in that particular. But after that part of this Hiſtory was wrought off, I by chance met with it in another Place where it was miſlaid; and there I diſcovered the error I had committed. The Earl of Wiltſhire was not one of her Judges; thoſe by whom ſhe was tryed were the Duke of Suffolk, the Marquiſs of Exeter, the Earls of Arundell, Oxford, Northumberland, Weſtmoreland, Derby, Worceſter, Rutland, Suſſex and Huntington, and the Lords Audley, Delaware, Mountague, Morley, Dacres, Cobham, Maltravers, Powis, Mounteagle, Clinton, Sands, Windſor, Wentworth, Burgh, and Mordant: in all twenty ſix, and not twenty eight as I reckoned them upon a Vulgar Error. The Record mentions one particular concerning the Earl of Northumberland, that he was taken with a ſudden fit of ſickneſs, and was forced to leave the Court before the Lord Rochford was Tryed. This might have been only Caſual: but ſince he was once in Love with the Queen, and had deſigned to Marry her (ſee Page 44) it is no wonder if ſo ſad a change in her Condition, did raiſe an unuſual diſorder in him.

When I had diſcovered the miſtake I had made, as I reſolved to publiſh this free Confeſſion of it; ſo I ſet my ſelf not without ſome Indignation to examine upon what Authority Doctor Heylin had led me into it. I could find no Author that went before him in it, but Sanders; the chief deſign of whoſe writing, was to defame Queen Elizabeth, and to blaſt her Title to the Crown. To that end it was no ill piece of his skill, to perſuade the World of her Mothers lewdneſs, to ſay, that her own Father was convinced of it, and condemned her for it. And Doctor Heylin took this, as he has done many other things, too easily upon Sanders Testimony.

Collect. Addenda Numb. 1. The Articles of Religion of which an abstract is there set down, are indeed published by Fuller: but he saw not the Original, with all the Subscriptions to it; which I have had in my hands, and therefore I have put it in the Collection with three other Papers, which were soon after offered to the King by Cranmer.

Collect. Addenda Numb. 2. The one is in the form of fifteen queries, concerning some abuses by which the People had been deceived; as namely, by these Doctrines, that without Contrition Sinners may be reconciled to God: that it is in the Power of the Priest, to pardon or not pardon sin at his pleasure; and that God's Pardon cannot be attained without Priestly Absolution. Also he complained that the People trusted to outward Ceremonies; and their Curates for their own gain encouraged them in it. It was observed that the opinion of Clergy-mens being exempted from the Secular Judge was ill grounded; that Bishops did ordain without due Care and Tryal: that the Dignified Clergy misapplyed their Revenues, did not follow their first Institution, and did not reside upon their Benefices.

Collect. Addenda Numb. 3. And in fine he moves that the four Sacraments, which had been left undetermined by the former Articles, might be examined: the outward signs and actions, the promises made upon them, and the efficacy that was in them being well considered.

The second Paper consists of two Resolutions, made concerning Confirmation by the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and Stokesly Bishop of London, (by which I perceive the way of examining matters by giving out of questions to Bishops and Divines was sooner practised, than when I first took notice of it, page 286.) There are several other Papers concerning Confirmation, but these are only Subscribed: and the rest do generally follow these two Prelates who were then the heads of two different Parties. The Arch-Bishop went on this ground, that all things were to be tryed by the Scripture; but Stokesly and almost the whole Clergy, were for receiving the Tradition of the Church, as not much inferior to the Scriptures, which he asserts in his Subscription.

Collect. Addenda Numb. 4. The third Paper was offered to the King by Cranmer, to persuade him to proceed to a further Reformation: that things might be long and well considered before they were determined, that nothing might be declared a part of God's faith, without good proofs from Scripture: the departing from which rule had been the occasion of all the Errors that had been in the Church: that now men would not be led as they had been, but would examine matters: that many things were now acknowledged to be truths, such as the unlawfulness of the Pope's Usurped Power, for which many had formerly suffered death. Whereupon he desires that some points might be Examined by Scripture; as, whether there is a Purgatory; whether departed Souls ought to be Invocated; whether Tradition ought to be believed; whether there be any satisfaction besides the satisfaction of Christ; whether free will may may diſpoſe it ſelf to grace, and whether Images ought to be Kiſſed, or uſed to any other end, but as repreſentations of a piece of Hiſtory? In all theſe he deſired the King would ſuſpend his Judgment; and in particular, that he would not determine againſt the Lawfulneſs of the Marriage of the Clergy, but would for ſome time ſilence both Parties. He alſo propoſed that this Point might by order from the King, be examined in the Univerſities before indifferent Judges: that all the Arguments againſt it, might be given to the Defendants twelve days before the publick diſputation; and he offered, that if thoſe who ſhould defend the Lawfulneſs of Prieſts Marriage, were in the Opinion of indifferent Judges overcome, they ſhould willingly ſuffer death for it; but if otherwiſe, all they deſired was, That in that Point the King might leave them in the liberty to which the Word of God left them.

I have ſeen a much fuller Paper concerning Orders and Eccleſiaſtical Functions (which the Reader will find in the Collection) ſigned by Cromwell, the two Arch-Biſhops and eleven Biſhops, and twenty Divines and Canoniſts, Declaring that the Power of the Keys and other Church-functions is formally diſtinct from the Power of the Sword. That this Power is not abſolute, but to be limited by the Rules that are in the Scripture; and is ordained only for the edification and good of the Church: that this Power ought to be ſtill preſerved, ſince it was given by Chriſt as the mean of reconciling ſinners to God. Orders were alſo declared a Sacrament, ſince they conſiſted of an outward action inſtituted by Chriſt, and an inward grace conferred with them: But that all Inferiour Orders, Janitors, Lectors, &c. were brought into the Church to beautifie and adorn it, and were taken from the Temple of the Jews: And that in the New Teſtament there is no mention made but of Deacons or Miniſters, and Prieſts or Biſhops: nor is there belonging to Orders any other Ceremony mentioned in the Scripture, but Prayer and Impoſition of hands. This was ſigned either in the year 1537, or 1538, ſince it is Subſcribed both by John Hilſey Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Edward Fox Biſhop of Hereford, for the one was conſecrated in 1537, and the other dyed in May 1538. Collect. Addenda Numb. 5.

On this Paper I will add two remarks, the one is, that after this I do never find the Inferiour Degrees under a Deacon mentioned in this Church; ſo it ſeems at this time they were laid aſide. They were firſt ſet up in the Church about the end of the ſecond, or the beginning of the third Century, in the middle of which we find both Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, and St. Cyprian mentioning them as Orders that were then eſtabliſhed; and it ſeems they were deſigned as previous ſteps to the Sacred Functions, that none might be Ordained to theſe, but ſuch as had been long before ſeparated from a ſecular ſtate of Life, and had given good Proofs of themſelves in theſe lower degrees. But it turned in the Church of Rome to be only a matter of form; and many took the firſt Tonſure, that they might be exempted from the Secular Power, and be qualified for Commendams, and ſome other Wordly advantages to which theſe lower Orders were ſufficient, by thoſe Rules which the Canoniſts had brought in.

Another thing is, that both in this Writing and in the Neceſſary Erudition of a Chriſtian Man, Biſhops and Prieſts are ſpoken of as one and the ſame Office. In the Ancient Church they knew none of thoſe Subtilties which were found out in the latter Ages. It was then thought enough that a Biſhop was to be dedicated to his Function by a new Impoſition of Hands, and that ſeveral Offices could not be performed without Biſhops, ſuch as Ordination, Confirmation, &c. but they did not refine in theſe matters, ſo much as to enquire whether Biſhops and Prieſts differed in Order and Office or only in degree. But after the Schoolmen fell to examine matters of Divinity with Logical and unintelligible Niceties, and the Canoniſts began to Comment upon the Rules of the Ancient Church, they ſtudied to make Biſhops and Prieſts ſeem very near one another, ſo that the difference was but ſmall. They did it with different deſigns. The Schoolmen having ſet up the grand Myſtery of Tranſubſtantiation, were to exalt the Prieſtly Office as much as was poſſible: for the turning the Hoſt into God was ſo great an action, that they reckoned there could be no Office higher than that which qualified a Man to ſo mighty a Performance: therefore as they changed the form of Ordination from what it was Anciently believed to conſiſt in, to a delivering of the Sacred Veſſels, and held that a Prieſt had his Orders by that rite, and not by the Impoſition of Hands; ſo they raiſed their Order or Office ſo high as to make it equal with the Order of a Biſhop: But as they deſigned to extol the Order of Prieſthood, ſo the Canoniſts had as great a mind to depreſs the Epiſcopal Order. They generally wrote for preferment, and the way to it was to exalt the Papacy. Nothing could do that ſo effectually as to bring down the Power of Biſhops. This only could juſtifie the Exemptions of the Monks and Friars, the Popes ſetting up Legantine Courts, and receiving at firſt Appeals, and then Original cauſes before them; together with many other Encroachments on their Juriſdiction: All which were unlawful, if the Biſhops had by Divine right, Juriſdiction in their Dioceſſes: Therefore it was neceſſary to lay them as low as could be, and to make them think that the Power they held, was rather as Delegates of the Apoſtolick See, than by a Commiſſion from Chriſt or his Apoſtles: So that they looked on the declaring Epiſcopal Authority to be of Divine right, as a blow that would be fatal to the Court of Rome; and therefore they did after this at Trent uſe all poſſible endeavours to hinder any ſuch Deciſion. It having been then the Common ſtyle of that Age to reckon Biſhops and Prieſts as the ſame Office, it is no wonder if at this time the Clergy of this Church, the greateſt part of them being ſtill leavened with the old Superſtition, and the reſt of them not having enough of ſpare-time to examine leſſer matters, retained ſtill the former phraſes in this particular.

On this I have inſiſted the more, that it may appear how little they have conſidered things, who are ſo far carryed with their zeal againſt the eſtabliſhed Government of this Church, as to make much uſe of ſome Paſſages of the Schoolmen and Canoniſts that deny them to be diſtinct Offices; for theſe are the very dregs of Popery, the one raiſing the Prieſts higher for the ſake of Tranſubſtantiation, the other pulling the Biſhops lower for the ſake of the Pope's Supremacy, and by by such means bringing them almost to an equality. So partial are some Men to their particular conceits, that they make use of the most mischievous Topicks when they can serve their turn, not considering how much further these Arguments will run if they ever admit them.

The Princes of Germany did always press the King to enter into a Religious League with them: the first League that was made in the year 1536 was conceived in general terms, against the Pope as the Common Enemy, and for setting up true Religion according to the Gospel: But they did afterwards send over Ambassadors to treat about particulars; and they having presented a Memorial of these, there were Conferences appointed between them and some Bishops and Divines of this Church. I find no Divines were sent over hither but Frederick Miconius Minister of Gotha, by whom Melanthon, who could not be spared out of Germany, sent several Letters to the King; the fullest and longest of them will be found in the Collection. It is all to this purpose, to persuade the King to go on vigorously in the Reforming of Abuses, according to the word of God. The King sent over the particulars which they proposed in order to a perfect agreement, to Gardiner who was then at Paris: Upon which he sent back his Opinion touching them all; the Original of which, under his own hand I have seen, but it relates so much to the other Paper that was sent him, which I never saw, that without it his meaning can hardly be understood, and therefore I have not put it in the Collection. The main thing in it, at which it chiefly drives, is to press the King to finish first a Civil League with them, and to leave those particulars concerning Religion to be afterwards treated of. The King followed his advice so far as to write to the German Princes to that effect. But when the King declared his resolution to have the six Articles established, all that favoured the Reformation were much alarmed at it, and pressed their friends in Germany to interpose with the King for preventing it. I have seen an Original Letter of Hains Dean of Exeter, in which he laments the sad effects that would follow on that Act, which was then preparing; that all the Corruptions in the Church rose from the establishing some Points without clear Proofs from Scripture: he wished the Germans would consider of it, for if the King and Parliament should make such a Law, this was a President for the Emperor to make the like in the Diet of the Empire. Neither were the German Ambassadors backward in doing their friends in England all the service they could: for after they had held several conferences with these that were appointed by the King to treat with them; they finding they could not prevail with them, wrote a long and Learned Letter to the King, against the taking away the Chalice in the Sacrament, and against private Masses and the Celibate of the Clergy, with some other abuses which the Reader will find in the Collection, as it is Copied from the Original which I have seen. To this I have added the Answer which the King wrote to it: He employed Tonstall Bishop of Duresm to draw it, for I have seen a rude draught of a great part of it written with his hand. By both both these compared together, every indifferent Reader will clearly see the force and simplicity of the Arguments on the one hand, and the art and shuffling that was used on the other side. As soon as the Act was past, notwithstanding all their endeavours to the contrary, they in an Audience before the King, represented the great concern their Masters would have, when the King on whom they had relyed so much, as the Defender of the Faith, should proceed with the severity expressed in that Act, against those that agreed with them in Doctrine, and pressed the King earnestly to put a stop to the Execution of it. The King promised he would see to it, and that though he judged the Act necessary to restrain the Insolence of some of his Subjects; yet it should not be Executed but upon great provocation: he also proposed the renewing a Civil League with them, without mentioning matters of Religion. To this the Princes made answer, that the League as it was at first projected, was chiefly upon a design of Religion, and therefore without a common consent of all that were in their League, they could not alter it: they lamented this passing of the late Act, but writ their thanks to the King for stopping the Execution of it, and warn'd him that some of his Bishops, who set him on to these courses, were in their hearts still for all the old Abuses, and for the Pope's Supremacy, and were pressing on the King to be severe against his best Subjects, that they might thereby bring on a design which they could not hope to effect any other way: they advised the King to beware of such Counsels. They also proposed that there might be a Conference agreed on between such Divines as the King would name, and such as they should depute, to meet either in Gueldres, Hamburgh, Bremen, or any other place that should be appointed by the King, to examine the Lawfulness of private Masses, of denying the Chalice, and the Prohibiting the Marriage of the Clergy. On these things they continued treating till the Divorce of Anne of Cleve and Cromwell's fall, after which I find little Correspondence between the King and them.

When I mentioned the King's Letters, directing the Bishops how to proceed in a Reformation, I had not seen them, but I have since seen an Original of them subscribed by the King's hand. In these he challenged the Clergy as guilty of great Indiscretions: that the late Rebellion had been occasioned by them; therefore he required the Bishops to take care, that the Articles formerly published should be exactly obeyed; and to go over their Dioceses in Person, and preach Obedience to the Laws, and the good ends of those Ceremonies that were then retained, that the People might neither despise them, nor put too much trust in them: and to silence all disputes and contentions concerning things indifferent; and to signifie to the King's Council, if there were any Priests in their Dioceses that were Married, and yet did discharge any part of the Priestly Office. All which, will be better understood by the Letter it self, that I have put into the Collection.

I do there acknowledge that I knew not what Arguments were uſed againſt the neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion: But I have made ſince that time, a Conſiderable diſcovery in this particular, from an Original Letter written all with the King's own hand to Tonſtall; by which it appears, there had been conferences in the Houſe, and that the Arch-Biſhop of York, the Biſhop of Wincheſter and Dureſm had pleaded much for it, as neceſſary by a Divine Inſtitution, and that both the King and the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury had maintained, that though it was good and profitable, yet it was not neceſſary by any precept of the Goſpel: and that though the Biſhops brought ſeveral texts out of Scripture and Ancient Doctors, yet theſe were ſo clearly anſwered by the King, and the Arch-Biſhop, that the whole Houſe was ſatisfied with it: Yet Tonſtall drew up in a writing all the reaſons he had made uſe of in that debate, and brought them to the King, which will be found in the Collection, with the Annotations and reflections which the King wrote on the Margent, with his own hand, taken from the Original; together with the King's Letter written in anſwer to them: By this it will appear that the King did ſet himſelf much to ſtudy Points of Divinity, and examined matters with a ſcrupulous exactneſs. The iſſue of the debate was, that though the Popiſh Party endeavoured to have got Auricular Confeſſion declared to be Commanded by Chriſt, as a part of the Sacrament of Pennance; yet the King over-ruled that, ſo it was enacted that Auricular Confeſſion was neceſſary and expedient to be retained in the Church of God. Theſe debates were in the Houſe of Lords, which appears not only by the King's Letter, that ſpeaks of the Houſe, but by the Act of Parliament, in the Preamble of which it is ſaid, That the King had come himſelf to the Parliament, and had opened ſeveral Points of high Learning to them.

There I mention the King's diligence in drawing an Act of Parliament with his own hand; but ſince that was Printed, I have ſeen many other Acts and Papers, if not Originally Penned by the King, yet ſo much altered by his Corrections, that in ſome ſort they may be eſteemed his draughts. There are two draughts of the Act of the ſix Articles, both corrected in many places by the King, and in ſome of theſe the Correction is three lines long. There is another Act concerning Precontracts of Marriage, likewiſe Corrected very much by his Pen. Many draughts of Proclamations, particularly theſe about the uſe of the Bible in Engliſh are yet extant interlined and altered with his Pen. There is a large Paper written by Tonſtall, of arguments for Purgatory, with Copious Animadverſions on it, likewiſe written by the King; which ſhew that then he did not believe there was a Purgatory. I have alſo ſeen the draught of that part of the Neceſſary Erudition for a Chriſtian Man, which explains the Creed, full of Corrections with with the King's own Pen; as also the Queries concerning the Sacraments mentioned page 289. with large Annotations written with his hand on the Margent; likewise an Extract all written with his own hand of passages out of the Fathers against the Marriage of the Clergy: and to conclude there is a Paper with which the Collection ends, containing the true Notion of the Catholick Church, which has large Emendations added with the King's hand, those I have set by themselves on the Margent of the Paper.

WIllielmus permissione divina Cantuar. Archiepiscopus, totius Angliæ Primas & Apostolicæ sedis Legatus, venerabili confratri nostro Domino Ricardo Dei Gratia London. Episcopo, salutem & fraternam in Domino caritatem. Cum nuper Ecclesia Anglicana, quæ majorum nostrorum temporibus, multis ac magnis libertatibus & immunitatibus gaudere solebat, quorundam iniquorum hominum malitiis, & nequitiis fortiter fuerit inquietata & perturbata, qui omnia quæ à majoribus nostris sancte & pie, ob tranquillitatem dictæ Ecclesiæ fuerunt ordinata ac sancita, vel prava & sinistra interpretatione prope subvertentes, vel personas Ecclesiasticas male tractántes, ac eas contemptui habentes, dictam Ecclesiam pene prostraverunt ac pedibus conculcarunt: Ne igitur dicta Ecclesia Anglicana ad calamitatem insignem seu ruinam ac jacturam, si quod absit, desolationem perveniat, quas diu eadem Ecclesia Anglicana per diversas personas, ut præfertur præ oculis suis Deum non habentes, nec censuras Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ timentes, sustinuit & sustinebat, prout de verisimili Reformatione non habita in futurum sustinere debeat: Nos prout tenemur, congruum remedium in hac parte providere cupientes, & ob id ipsum Prælatos & Clerum nostræ Cantuar. Provinciæ convocare volentes; Fraternitati vestræ igitur committimus & mandamus, quatenus omnes & singulos dictæ nostræ Cant. Ecclesiæ Suffraganeos infra nostram Provinciam constitutos, & absentium Episcoporum si qui fuerunt Vicarios in Spiritualibus generales, ac Diocesium vacantium Custodes Spiritualitatis, & Officiales citetis seu citari faciatis, peremptorie, & per eos Decanos & Priores Ecclesiarum Cath. ac singula Capitula eorundem, Archidiaconos, Abbates & Priores, Conventus sub se habentes, & alios Ecclesiarum Prælatos exemptos, & non exemptos, Clerumq; cujuslibet Dioceseos Provinciæ nostræ antedictæ, citari peremptorie & præmoneri

V. The Preamble of the Act of Subsidy granted by the Clergy.

QUum Illustrissimus & Potentissimus Dominus noster Rex Angliæ & Franciæ, Defensor Fidei & Dominus Hibern. semper extitit constantissimus Ecclesiæ Protector & Patronus optime meritus, atq; superioribus annis, in diebus fœlicis recordationis Julii ejus nominis Papæ secundi, grave Schisma in Ecclesia Romana exortum pacavit & extinxit; & postea ipsam Ecclesiam Romanam contra vim & potentiam Gallorum, qui tunc Italiam & Urbem Romanam in servitutem redigere moliebantur, validissimo exercitu & bello longe omnium sumptuosissimo fæliciter defendit, & securam reddidit: Ac præterea postremis his diebus Lutheranas Hæreses, in Ecclesiæ Sacramenta Ecclesiæq; statum furiose debaechantes doctissimo & nunquam satis laudato libello contudit & superavit; vicissim tam gladio quam calamo hostes Ecclesiæ strenuissime profligans, quibus meritis suam clarissimam famam immortali gloriæ pariter consecravit, tales laudes & gratias sua incomparabili bonitate ab Ecclesia promeruit, quales nunquam satis dignas quisquam mortalium referre poterit, sed Deus effatim persolvet præmia digna. Quumq; idem Rex noster & Protector illustrissimus à Rege Gallorum per Mare & per Terras, incolas hujus Regni contra percussum fœdus, promissam fidem, & suum ipsius salvum conductum assidue infestante, & Scotos contra Regnum hoc instigante ac suis stipendiis conducente, atq; Ducem Albaniæ in perniciem principis Scotorum nostri Regis ex sorore Nepotis impellente, aliasq; injurias multas & graves contra Regiam Majestatem suosq; amicos & subditos quotidie multiplicante, provocatur, irritatur atq; urgetur ut bellum suscipiat, suumq; Regnum tam contra Gallos quam contra Scotos ut decet invictissimum Principem potenter defendat; non enim ultra pacem colere vel pacem longius expectare convenit, postquam Rex Gallorum summum Pontificem bene moventem, & quæ pacis sunt suadentem, audire recusat, exercitum instruens & bellum apparans, fortassis in multos annos duraturum: dignissimum est ob præfata tam præclara facinora, ut sicut Rex noster illustrissimus plus cæteris Regibus antecessoribus suis pro Ecclesiæ defensione, utilitate & honore insudavit, & plus expensarum sustinuit; ita ad sustinendâ

An. Dom. 1523. Regist. Cuthberti Tonstall. Folio 40.

nenda bellorum onera imminentia, pro Ecclesiæ & totius Regni hujus defensione, per Ecclesiam tali subsidio adjuvetur quale anterioribus Regibus nunquam antehac concessum est, nec fortassis posterioribus Regibus unquam simile, nisi ob talia benefacta vel extremam bellorum necessitatem postea concederetur. Quocirca ut Regia Majestas ad fovendam & protegendam Ecclesiam, & Clerum Angliæ, magis indies animetur, & ut jura, libertates & privilegia Ecclesiæ concessa benigne Ecclesiæ foveat, & ab aliis servari faciat, & nè præfata benefacta in ingratos conferre videatur.

NOs Prælati & Clerus Cant. Provinciæ in hac Sacra Synodo Provinciali sive Prælatorum & Cleri ejusdem Convocatione, in Ecclesia Cathed. Divi Pauli London. vicesimo die mensis Aprilis Anno Dom. millesimo quingentesimo vicesimo tertio inchoata, ac usq; ad & in decimum quartum diem mensis Augusti proxime extunc sequentis de diebus in dies continuata, congregati, Illustrissimo Domino Regi perpetuo & potentissimo Fidei & Ecclesiæ defensori, subsidium dare & concedere decrevimus, quam nostram Benevolentiam ut gratam & acceptam habet humillime deprecamur, protestantes expresse, quod per præsentem concessionem, quam tanquam novam & ante insolitam pro nostra singulari & personali in Regiam Majestatem observantia sine exemplo donamus, omnino nolumus Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ aut successoribus nostris in alterius præjudicium generari, nec casum hunc singularem ad sequen. trahi: Quod si præsentem Concessionem pro exemplo & (ut vocant) pro Præsidente similes unquam Concessiones exigendas accipiendam fore præsentium series in eam omnino consentire recusassemus; quandoquidem subsidium sub modis, formis, conditionibus, exceptionibus ac provisionibus, & protestatione super & infrascriptis, & non aliter, neq; alio modo, Damus & Concedimus, viz. Subsidium se extendens ad Medietatem sive medianpartem valoris omnium fructuum, reddituum, & proventuum, possessionum, unius anni, omnium & singulorum Episcoparuum, Ecclesiarum Cathed. & Collegiatarum, Dignitatum, Hospitalium, Monast. Abbatiarum, Prioratuum aliarumq; domorum Religiosarum, necnon quorumcunq; beneficiorum & Possessionum Ecclesiasticarum, &c.

Regist. Tonst. Fol. 138.

CUthbertus permissione Divina London. Episcopus Clarissimo & Egregio viro Domino Thomæ More fratri & amico Charissimo Salutem in Domino & benedict. Quia nuper, postquam Ecclesia Dei per Germaniam ab hæreticis infestata est, juncti sunt nonnulli iniquitatis Filii, qui veterem & damnatam hæresim Wyckliffianam & Lutherianam, etiam hæresis Wycliffianæ alumni transferendis in nostratem vernaculam linguam corruptissimis quibuscunq; eorum opusculis, atq; illis ipsis magna copia impressis, in hanc nostram Regionem inducere conantur; quam sane pestilentissimis dogmatibus Catholicæ fidei veritati repugnantibus maculare atq; inficere magnis conatibus moliuntur. Magnopere igitur verendum est ne Catholica veritas in totum periclitetur nisi bonis & eruditi viri malignitati tam prædictorum hominum ſtrenue occurrant; id quod nulla ratione melius & aptius fieri poterit, quam ſi in lingua Catholica veritas in totum expugnans hæc infana dogmata ſimul etiam ipſiſſima prodeat in lucem. Quo fiet ut Sacrarum Literarum imperiti homines in manus ſumentes novos iſtos Hæreticos Libros, atque una etiam Catholicos ipſos reſellentes, vel ipſi per ſe verum diſcernere, vel ab aliis quorum perſpicacius eſt judicium recte admoneri & doceri poſſint. Et quia tu, Frater Chariſſime, in lingua noſtra vernacua, ſicut etiam in Latina, Demoſthenem quendam præſtare potes, & Catholicæ veritatis aſſertor acerrimus in omni congreſſu eſſe ſoles, melius ſubciſivas horas, ſi quas tuis occupationibus ſuffurari potes, collocare nunquam poteris, quam in noſtrate lingua aliqua edas quæ ſimplicibus & ideotis hominibus ſubdolam hæreticorum malignitatem aperiant, ac contra tam impios Eccleſiæ ſupplantatores reddant eos inſtructiores: habes ad id exemplum quod imiteris præclariſſimum, illuſtriſſimi Domini noſtri Regis Henrici octavi, qui Sacramenta Eccleſiæ contra Lutherum totis viribus ea ſubvertentem aſſerere aggreſſus, immortale nomen defenſoris Eccleſiæ in omne ævum promeruit. Et ne Andabatarum more cum ejuſmodi larvis lucteris, ignorans ipſe quod oppugnes, mitto ad te infanas in noſtrate lingua iſtorum ineptias, atque una etiam nonnullos Lutheri Libros ex quibus hæc opinionum monſtra prodierunt. Quibus abs te diligenter perlectis, facilius intelligas quibus latibulis tortuoſi ſerpentes ſeſe condant, quibuſq; anfractibus elabi deprehenſi ſtudeant. Magni enim ad victoriam momenti eſt hoſtium conſilia explorata habere, & quid ſentiant quove tendant penitus noſſe: nam ſi convellere pares quæ iſti ſe non ſenſiſſe dicent, in totum perdas operam. Macte igitur virtute, tam ſanctum opus aggredere, quo & Dei Eccleſiæ proſis, & tibi immortale nomen atq; æternum in Cœlis gloriam pares: quod ut facias atque Dei Eccleſiam tuo patrocinio munias, magnopere in Domino obſecramus, atq ad illum finem ejuſmodi libros & retinendi & legendi facultatem atque licentiam impertimur & concedimus. II. The King's Proteſtation againſt the Marriage.

Cotton Libr. Vitell. B. 12.

IN Dei Nomine, Amen. Coram vobis Reverendo in Chriſto Patre & Domino Domino Richardo Dei & Apoſtolicæ ſedis gratia Epiſcopo Wintonienſi, Ego Henricus Walliæ Princeps, Dux Cornubiæ & Comes Ceſtriæ, dico, allego & in his Scriptis propono, Quod licet ego minorem ætatem agens, & intra annos pubertatis notorie exiſtens, cum Sereniſſima Domina Katharina Hiſpaniarum Regis Filia, Matrimonium de facto contraxerim, qui quidem Contractus, quamvis obſtante ipſa minore ætate mea de ſe jam invalidus, imperfectus, nullius efficaciæ aut vigoris extiterit ; quia tamen annis pubertatis & matura ætate jam ſuperveniente, Contractus ipſe per tacitum Conſenſum, mutuam cohabitationem, munerum aut interſignium dationem ſeu receptionem, vel aliis quæ quemcunq; modum jure declaratum, forſan exiſtimari ſeu videri poterit apparenter validatus aut confirmatus; Ea-propter, Ego Henricus Walliæ Princeps prædictus, jam proximus pubertati exiſtens, & anno pubertatis attingens, Proteſtor, quod non intendo eundem prætenſum contractum per quæcunque per me dicta ſeu dicenda, facta aut facienda, in aliquo approbare, validare, ſeu ratum habere, ſed nunc in præſenti, non vi, dolo, nec prece inductus, ſed ſponte & libere, nullo modo coactus, contra hujuſmodi Contractum reclamo, & eidem diſſentio, volcque & omnino intendo ab eodem contractu Matrimoniali prætenſo, melioribus modo & forma, quibus de jure melius, validius, aut efficacius potero & poſſim, penitus reſilire, & eidem expreſſe diſſentire, prout in præſenti contra eundem reclamo, & eidem diſſentio. Proteſtorq; quod per nullum dictum, factum, actum, aut geſtum per me, aut nomine meo per alium quemcunque, quandocunque aut qualemcunque, impoſterum faciendum, agendum, gerendum, aut explicandum, volo aut intendo in præfatum contractum Matrimonialem, aut in dictam Dominam Catharinam tanquam Sponſam, aut Uxorem meam conſentire. Super quibus vos omnes teſtimonium perhibere volo, requiro, rogo, atque obteſtor.

Per me Henricum Walliæ Principem.

Cotton libr. Vitell. B. 9.

DOmine Gregori, Poſt meam cordatiſſimam Commendationem, poſt ultimum veſtrum à me diſceſſum ex compendio ad vos ſcripſi, ut ob nonnullas maximi momenti cauſas procurare differretis quod de Regiæ Majeſtatis negotio in quibuſdam nobis traditis Commiſſionibus continebatur, quoad rurſus vobis ſignificarem quid ea in re fieri vellemus. Ubi vero ad Regiam Majeſtatem rediiſſem, variis crebriſq; cum ea habitis ſermonibus, adeo abunde ac diſtincte illi apperui quam ex animo ac diligenter, & quam ſincere & ex fide, diu noctuque exopteris eidem Regiæ Majeſtati inſervire; neque ullum unquam laborem, periculum aut moleſtiam vos velle recuſare, ut omni ſtudio ac viribus id fideliter præſtare poſſitis quod illi gratum aut acceptum quoquo modo eſſe poſſe cognoveritis, omnemq; induſtriam vos eſſe adhibituros quo veſtræ fidei curæque commiſſa optatum finem conſequantur; quem veſtrum animum perpenſiſſima voluntate ſic ſub mea fide Regiæ Majeſtati inſinuavi, ut meam hanc relationem atque ſponſionem pectori ſuo conſtantiſſime adſciverit, certiſſimaque fiducia concepit, omnino futurum ut noſtræ tunc expectationi quacunque in re & occaſione reſpondeatis: Ex quo fit ut noſtræ operæ, curæ atque prudentiæ ea nunc tractanda & procuranda committat, quibus nihil magis cordi habeat, nihil ardentius exoptet, ac majoris ſit momenti vel gravioris ſucceſſus, nec ullum habet Conſilium, utcunque intimum, cui graviora poſſit committere. Quum itaque, me intercedente & procurante, nunc vos Regia Majeſtas præ cæteris hoc fidei adſciverit & elegerit, ut in re tam gravi fideliſſima veſtra opera & miniſterio utatur, fidemque illi meam de vobis jam ei adſtrinxerim, nil ambigens quin poſtquam ejus animam ac voluntatem cognoveritis, ſeritiſque abunde inſtructi quam maximi hæc quæ nunc expono ſuæ momenti, utpote quæ potiſſimum concernunt Regiæ conſcientiæ exonerationem animæque ſuæ ſalutem, vitæ conſervationem & incolumitatem, Regii Stemmatis continuationem, publicumque commodum & quietem ſubditorum omnium, eorum pariter qui ſub ejus imperio nunc vivunt vel qui poſtea unquam in hoc ſuo Regno vivent; quumque perſpicue ſedulum veſtrum Miniſterium hoc in negotio impendendum omnino redundaturum eſſe in præcipuam veſtram exaltationem & utilitatem, poſquam infelices iſtos jam paſſos ſucceſſus occaſionem ſe obtuliſſe videat, qua veſtra familia hujuſmodi operam huic Sereniſſimo Principi navare poſſit, quod ſtatum omnem veſtrum in longe meliorem quam antea ſit haud dubie reſtituturus & adaucturus, certiſſimum compertiſſimumque habeo, quod ob has tam urgentes cauſas & tam graves ſucceſſuros effectus, adeo toto pectore vires omnes veſtras induſtria ac ſtudio tantæ conficiendæ rei addicetis, ut omnia queatis ad optatum exitum perducere atque ita promiſſum fidemque meam præſtabitis, tam optimum Regiæ Majeſtatis inſtitutum juvabitis, ejus deſiderio & expectationi omni ex parte ſatisfacietis, & præter bene peractæ rei honorem & laudem comparandam, mercedem quoque reportabitis tanti Principis liberalitate dignam, quæ certiſſime cedet in perpetuum veſtrum totiuſque veſtræ familiæ commodum & incrementum: Et quum jam mihi perſuadeam furum omnino ut officiis actionibusque vestris sitis promissis sponsionibusque meis omnino satisfacturi, ad id pluribus verbis neutiquam adhortabor, proinde ad rem nunc ipsam venio. Ante hoc tempus vobis aperui, quemadmodum Regia Majestas, partim assiduo suo studio & eruditione, partim relatu ac judicio multorum Theologorum, & in omni Doctrinæ genere Doctorum virorum asseveratione, existimans conscientiam suam non esse sufficienter exoneratam, quod in conjugio existeret cum Regina, Deumque primo & ante omnia ac animæ suæ quietem & salutem respiciens, mox vero suæ Successionis securitatem, perpendensque accurate quam gravia hinc mala provenirent, aperte sentit quam maxime surrum sit Deo molestum, inhonorificum sibi, & ingratum apud homines, suisque subditis periculosum, ex hoc non sufficienti conjugio, si deprehenderetur dicta Majestas sciens ac volens in eo perstare, & vivere præter modum debitum, juxtaque ritum & legitima Ecclesiæ Statuta: quibus igitur ex causis longo jam tempore, intimo suæ conscientiæ remorsu, summique Dei rationem habens, existimat animam suam læsam & offensam, adeo quod, quum in suis conatibus actionibusque quibuscunque Deum potissimum sibi semper proponat, ingenti cum molestia cordisque perturbatione in hoc Matrimonio degit; super qua re maturum sanumque judicium consuluit clarissimorum celeberrimorumq; Doctorum aliorumque complurimum in omni eruditionis genere excellentiorum virorum ac Prælatorum, partim Theologorum, partim Jurisperitorum, tum in suo Regno, tum alibi existentium, ut aperte vereque cognosceret, an Dispensatio antea concessa pro se & Regina, ex eo quod Regina Fratris sui uterini Uxor antea extiterit, valida & sufficiens foret, necne; deinumque a variis multisq; ex his Doctoribus asseritur, quod Papa non potest dispensare in primo gradu affinitatis, tanquam ex jure Divino, moraliter, naturaliterque prohibito, ac si potest, omnes affirmant & consentiunt quod hoc non potest, nisi ex urgentissimis & arduis causis, quales non subfuerunt; Bulla præterea Dispensationis fundatur & concessa est ob quibusdam rationibus falso suggestis & enarratis, in ea namque asseritur, quod hæc Regia Majestas Matrimonium hoc cum Regina percupiebat, pro bono pacis inter Henricum septimum Ferdinandū & Elizabetham, quum revera nulla tunc dissentio aut belli suspicio esset inter dictos Principes, vel Regiam Majestatem prædictam, quæ in teneris adhuc annis, nec in discretione aut judicio constitutis agebat; nunquam deinde audierit, aut quicquam cognovit de hujusmodi bullæ Impetratione, nec unquam hoc Matrimonium optavit, aut aliquid de eo accepit ante bullæ impetrationem. Quocirca ab his omnibus Doctoribus atq; Prælatis judicatur hujusmodi Dispensationem non adeo validam & idoneam esse ac efficacem, ut prædictum Matrimonium manifeste justum legitimumque sit; sed potius quod multa possunt objici, magnis probabilibusque fundata & corroborata rationibus, in non leve periculum Regiæ prolis, totiusque Regni ac subditorum gravem perturbationem. Ad hæc postquam Regia Majestas, qui Walliæ Princeps tunc erat, decimum quartum annum artigisset, contractus Revocatio subsequuta est, Rege Patre exigente nolente quod hujusmodi Matrimonium ullo pacto sortiretur effectum. His causis Rex hic Serenissimus, tanquam bonus & Catholicus Princeps, timens ne ob tam diuturnam cum Regina continuationem, indignatus & iratus Deus citius ex humanis evocaverit Masculam è Regina susceptam prolem, gravisque à Deo supplicium expaverit si in Matrimonio trimonio hoc non legitimo perſeveraverit; ex hac ideo occaſione, intimis præcordiis hunc Conſcientiæ ſcrupulum concepit, in animo nihilominus habens, pro animi conſcientiæque ſuæ quiete & ſalute, proliſque ſecuritate, ad Sanctam Domini noſtri ſedemque Apoſtolicam confugere, tantæ rei remedium impetraturus confidens, quod ob complura ſua erga eam merita & officia tum calamo ingeniique viribus, tum armis præſtita, ſubſidia in Eccleſiæ calamitatibus prompte ſubminiſtrata, Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter non gravabitur ſua benignitate, Authoritate ac facultate, intimum hunc Regiæ Majeſtatis cordi inhærentem dolorem amovere, eumque modum ac rationem inire qua Regia Majeſtas prædicta Uxorem aliam ducere, &, Deo volente, maſculam prolem in ſuæ ſucceſſionis ſecuritatem queat ex ea ſuſcipere, & tam certam quietem in ſuo Regno conſtituere: Quumque ejus Sanctitas ab his nunc captiva detineatur, qui pro virili ſua forſan conabuntur impedire, turbareque hoc Regiæ Majeſtatis deſiderium & Statutum, ipſa præterea cogitur vias omnes excogitare, quibus dicta Sanctitas de hac re dexterius & commodius inſtrui & facilius adduci queat ad ea concedenda, quorum medio & vigore Regiæ Majeſtatis animus & deſiderium queat optatum ſortiri effectum: Proinde ipſa Regia Majeſtas de fide, induſtria, dexteritate prudentiaque veſtra plenisſime confidens, vult ut ſtatim his literis acceptis, rebus aliis omnibus quibuſcunque ab eo vel à quovis alio vobis commiſſis omnino poſthabitis, ea modoſque omnes poſſibiles excogitetis quibus poteſtis ſecretiſſime, mutato habitu & tanquam alicujus Miniſter, vel tanquam Commiſſionem habens à Duce Ferrariæ pro nonnullis inter Pontificem & eum componendis controverſiis, vel alia qua licuerit ſecuriori via, ad Pontificis præſentiam & colloquium accedendi, omnibus arbitris ſemotis, ſi fieri poſſit, pro veſtris obeundis mandatis; quorum obtinendorum gratia, ſi ita expedire judicaveritis, eam mercedem ac pecuniarum ſummam promitteris ac tradetis, his qui revera volent atq; poterunt hoc negotium ad effectum pertrahere, quam ſummam, & ejus limitationem, judicio, prudentiaque veſtræ integram Regia Majeſtas remittit; etiam ſi his danda foret quæ Pontificem aſſervant, vel cuicunque alio qui vos tuto ad ſecretum cum ſua Sanctitate Sermonem adducere, in locumque tutum reducere poſſit. Cujus rei gratia, aliiſque ad hunc finem conſequendum ſuſtinendis occurrentibus neceſſariis, pecuniæ ad ſummam decem mille ducatorum, per Mercatorios Venetias tranſmittentur, qui illic in promptu aderunt, perſolvendas & conſignandæ. Prothonotario Fratri veſtro, Regio illic exiſtenti Oratori; per eumque de tempore in tempus ad vos tranſmitti ea ſumma poterit quam huic obtinendo negotio conducere poſſe exiſtimaveritis, nihil ambigo quin dictam pecuniam fideliter collocetis, ex Regiæ Majeſtatis utilitate, expectatione atque ſententia. Atque ubi ad Sanctum Dominum noſtrum acceſſeritis, poſt filiales & cordatiſſimas Regiæ Majeſtatis meæ devotas & humilimas commendationes, & poſt exhibitas à Regia Credentiæ literas, in quibus in negotii adjumentum clauſula vehementer propria ejus manu conſcripta, ut ex earum exemplo cognoſcetis, eidem Sanctitati exponetis quam grave, moleſtumq; Regiæ Majeſtati & mihi audire infœliciſſimos eventus, calamitatemque miſerandam, in qua nunc ejus Sanctitas cum Reverendiſſ. Cardinalib. verſatur, cum graviſſimo patrimonio irreparabilique ſedis Apoſtolicæ illiuſque Patrimonii jactura, quæ mala ſublevanda & corrigenda nullum in Regia Majeſtate officium deſiderabitur, quod ab ullo erga Sanctam Domini noſtri vel ſedem Apoſtolicam blicam observantissimo Principe queat excogitari; in eoq; omne meum ministerium ac studium non minus promptum aderit, quam si ex ea solum possem mihi cœlum comparare: quemadmodum experientia, aliqua in parte, jam docuit, & Deo duce posthac uberius comprobabit; quam rem copiosius optimisq; verbis agetis, præsertim, quum sciatis quanto & quam sincero affectu Regia Majestas ejus Sanctitatem prosequatur, & quanta mea sit in ipsam devotio, in hisque sermonibus insistetis prout loci, temporis, negotiique ratio videbitur judicio vestro posse.

Secundo, Sanctissimo Domino nostro solita vestra dexteritate aperietis id quod in his ipsis literis ad vos scripsi concernens hujus Matrimonii insufficientiam, ab hisq; rationibus & causis fundamentum capietis, quæ superius enarrantur, integrumq; discursum ejus Sanctitati declaratis, non omittentes intrinsecum dolorem, conscientiæ scrupulum, Dei rationem, Masculæ prolis respectum, hujus Regni bonum, & alia omnia ut superius scripta sunt: addentes insuper, nihil vehementius optari à tota Regni Nobilitate, subditisque omnibus nullo discrimine, quam è Regiæ Majestatis corpore Masculum hæredem à Deo sibi dari, in perpetuam consolationem, gaudium, quietem, ac totius Regni securitatem, posteritatisque firmissimum columen; prudentiorumq; opinionem esse, quod Deus omnipotens à tanto bono concedendo divinam istam manum substrahit, ob errorem, culpamque in dicto Matrimonio hactenus admissam, quæ nisi mature corrigatur, graviora ex hac occasione in hoc Regno mala succedent, quam antea unquam fuerunt audita; necnon si hoc negotium in suspenso & indiscussum relinqueretur, hujusmodi possent quæstiones, controversiæ & contentiones ac factiones post defunctum Regem exoriri, ob Regni hæreditatem, quæ non possent in multorum ævo restingui, ut antea olim ex causa longe leviori accidit, ergo ex re tam ambigua, tam sævæ olim depopulationes, bella, intestinæq; controversiæ exortæ, & ad multum tempus continuatæ sunt, in extremum & ferme ultimum Regni excidium; quæ quum tam gravia sint, Sanctissimus Dominus noster veluti pater & gubernator Christianitatis prospicere ex officio debet, & quibuscunque modis potest, pro viribus adniti & conari, ut hæc Regna ac dominia quæ nunc supersunt in fide & obedientia Ecclesiæ assidue contineat, inter quæ, Deo sit gratia, hoc Regnum haud recensendum est inter minima, sed tanquam illud quod hactenus juvavit, & posthac pro tuto præsidio semper haberi poterit, adversus ea quæ cedere possent in Ecclesiæ Catholicæ vel Sanctæ Sedis detrimentum.

Tertio, Sanctissimo Domino nostro proponetis præsentem Ecclesiæ statum, rogabitisque ut in mentem velit redigere, quo nunc in statu res Sanctitatis res cum Christianis Principibus versentur, cumq; privatæ contentiones, quæ illi sunt cum magna eorum Principum parte, additæ ambitione immoderatoq; regum appetitu & ex arbitrio suo, Temporale jus omne atq; Spirituale tractandi, Ecclesiasticamq; Jurisdictionem & Authoritatem invertendi, eo certe animo ut sedis Apostolicæ dignitatem extinguant; his omnibus in unum connexis ac bene consideratis, cognoscet Sanctitas manefeste, Principem nullum, neq; portum, aut refugium tam tutum, cui in omnem eventum queat inhærere, sibi dictum esse, quam hæc Regia Majestas est quæ nihil sibi vendicat, nil habet, quod præjudicio esse possit dictæ Sanctitati, sed ejus, Apostolicæque quæ sedis, semper fuit, est, esseq; decrevit firmissimum scutum, munimq; propugnaculum, ita suas actiones cum cæteris Principibus humanis & connectens, ut semper ex ea occasione in suam hanc opinionem sententiam reliquos possit attrahere, adeo quod Regi tam optimo Sanctissimum Dominum nostrum affecto nihil denegari debeat, utcunque maximum quod possit ab ejus Sanctitate præstari ordinaria vel absoluta sua Authoritate; tam procul dubio, post vias modosq; omnes tentatos omnino perspicietur omnia alia amicitiæ officia, si huic quod petitur comparentur, esse perquam exigua, & hoc amicum officium hujusmodi futurorum, ex quo reliqua queant incrementum capere, sine eo fundamento quasi parvi ac nullius fere momenti.

Tertio, probe notandum est, quod res hanc apertam & petitam, a qua gia q; Majestate tantopere optata, ex tam magno conscientiæ scrupulo cordisq; remorsu oritur, ut unicuiq; debita sit, quamcumcunq; maximam quam Regia Majestas sit de Sanctissimo Domino nostro merito. Quæ circa judicat, & pro re comperta sibi persuadet, quod si ulla rerum vel officiorum ratio haberetur, nunc ipsius Sanctitas huic suo desiderio & petitioni benignissime liberrimeque adjuvet, nullo pacto sus dubio, difficultate, contradictione aut mora injecta. Negotium hujusmodi est, ut cognita Dispensationis insufficientia, quam si non requisivisset Rex, ultro proponi offerrique debuisset ab eadem Sanctitate tanquam à Patre Spirituali, in ejus salutis & conscientiæ beneficium.

In gratiam igitur & contemplationem præmissorum omnium instantissime vehementissimeque à Sanctissimo Domino nostro requires contenderis, ut dubio, metuque omni sepposito, respicere velit ad status, & ad ea quæ subsequutura videantur, rationemq; habere minorum commodorum, quæ ex hac re suæ Sanctitati Apostolicæ inde proveniant, rem hanc statim, absq; temporis tractu, & cautelæ cumstantia, nemini eam aperiens, libere concedere & indulgere, nullo communicata speciale Commissionem ad hunc effectum & finem effectam in forma Brevis concedere, & ad me dirigere, Facultatem addens, ut mihi liceat quoscunq; voluero ad me vocare, mihiq; assistere ad procedendum in hac causa, & inquirendum de dictæ Bullæ Dispensationis sufficientia, juxta formam ac tenorem expressum in quodam libello hujus rei gratia confecto; quem cum his ad vos mitto, ita debita forma conscriptum & digestum ut non sit futurum opus quod denuo ab ullo alio exscribatur, si forsan periculosum putaretur eam rem ante patefacere vel in dubium aut dilationem protractum iri negotium, si ex Sanctissimi Domini nostri officiariis committeretur rursus consulendum; sed quod in hujusmodi periculi eventum possit ejus Sanctitas ullo discrimine vel alicujus cognitione eam dicto libello signaturam, sigillumq; apponere, ut aperte inde constet, Pontificis meram voluntatem sic esse, illiusque Signaturæ ac Sigilli vigore, legitime & sufficienter possim ego procedere ad inquisitionem de dictæ Dispensationis insufficientia, cognitionem & aliarum causarum & rationum, quæ adduci possunt pro dicti Matrimonii invaliditate.

Item cum his ad vos mitto Dispensationem in debita forma confectam & scriptam in modum Brevis, secreto impetrandam & expediendam eidem Signaturam vel Sigillum apponendo, vel alio quovis modo quo do: Et quamvis ex hac re multa pendeant, ob quæ ista requirunt

Hac autem cauſa ipſius Sanctitati à vobis, ut dictum eſt, expoſita & declarata, neutiquam dubitandum eſt, quin benevole atq; libenter ſtatim annuat Regiæ Majeſtatis expectationi & quod huic aſſentiet, dictam Commiſſionem ſecreto modo ipſa concedens, neminem de ea re ut dictum eſt, participem faciens; qui modus ſervandus eſt, ſi videritis hæc effici non poſſe, niſi cum periculo quin hæc res eis communicetur, qui eam ſint perturbaturi, vel ſi id præſtare fuerit in Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri arbitrio, tunc ejus Sanctitas non gravetur, per Brevia, vel per Bullas, aput validius & magis ſufficiens fore judicaverit, præmiſſa omnia considere, ad quod veſtram omnem induſtriam, prudentiam, ſtudium, diligentiamq; adhibebitis: Sic omnia prudenter ac circumſpecte agentes, ne in discrimen deveniatur negotium hoc his detegendi, qui illud vel impedire vel retardare forsan voluerint aut poterint, sed potius quam ad id periculi res deducatur contenti eritis sola dictorum libellorum Se. natura, in eam formam confecta, quum ex ea palam constet, Pontifici assensum in id actualiter concurrisse, qui postea recentioribus scriptis, si ita opus fuerit, firmius confirmari corroborariq; poterit.

Et quoniam incertum est, utrum ante vestrum ad Pontificem accessum, ejus Sanctitas fuerit in suam libertatem restituta, necne, quæ forsan libera non tanti faciet Regiæ Majestatis amicitiam & conjunctionem, vel allegabit, se nec audere nec posse, ex suis cum Cæsare conventionibus ista concedere, nec secreto ullo modo, vel ullo colore, quod ita re fecisset apud Cæsarem justificare, & potuisset antea in Regiæ Majestatis auxilio pro sua liberatione sperans, dum adhuc detineretur captivo, eo casu Sanctissimo Domino nostro in mentem redigetis, quam parum dere possit ullis sibi factis à Cæsare promissis, quum nulla in parte tuta dare possit in commodum aut securitatem, sed solum in extremum exidium ac detrimentum sedis Apostolicæ; & licet ad breve tempus utile videretur Cæsar in ejus Sanctitatis gratiam facturus, compertissimum semen semper Pontifici esse debet Cæsarianos ea facere, semperq; facturos quæ Cæsarem possint exaltare, & tendant ad usurpationem, potius oppressionem status Ecclesiastici, quam ad ejus continuationem, vel conservationem; & quotiens adversus Ecclesiam ista tentarentur, Regia Majestas in hac sua petitione passa repulsam, quæ alioquin ejus Sanctitati in omnem eventum firmissime adhæsisset, & alios suos consectatos in eandem sententiam pertraxisset, quam, ea deficiente, in contrarium facile possent alici, quo animo futura sit, & quam bene suum affectum & observantiam collocasse existimatura: summæ est prudentiæ omnia considerare.

Haud incognitum præterea est Sanctissimum Dominum nostrum Cæsaris instantiam, quum non multam ab ejus Sanctitate gratiam promeritus esset, ei concessisse Dispensationem & Absolutionem à jurejurando ab illo præstito, de ducenda in Conjugem Domina Principissa, nullo par fuisset à Regia Majestate habito, seu petito consensu, non obstante quod Cæsar in validissima forma, non solum præstito jurejurando, sed cautione & Ecclesiasticarum censurarum & pœnarum adhibita, quæ perstringeretur de dicto Matrimonio perimplendo, ac si Pontifex contentus esse potuit, tantum ei ostendere gratitudinem, quum veluti hac indies certior tunc poterat haberi, & qui majora parabat quam justum esset optare, suis petitionibus, Regia Majestate inconsulta, neutiquam consecens, quanto propensius ejus Sanctitas adnuere debet ejus Principis, cuius fidem & observantiam vere filialem sæpe experta est. Verumtamen si Sanctissimus Dominus noster difficulter visus fuerit posse adduci ut in meam Personam dictæ Commissioni assentiat, allegans quod insum indifferens, cui ex suæ Sanctitatis honore hoc negotium committi possit, cum Regiæ Majestati sum subditus & intimus consiliarius, tunc tamdiu perstitetis ea in re, quoad vobis visum fuerit conveniens, nec tii expeditionem non ideo protrahentes, aut differentes, sed instantes ut juxmodi Commissio concedatur; affirmabitisq; me pro re nulla quantalibet grandi, nullo favore, aut commodo, quicquam effecturum quod aversetur officio meo, & erga Christum præstitæ professioni, unquam à recto, vero, justoq; tramite digressurum; Et quin Cælis ſim & Apoſtolicæ ſedis de latere Legatus, ejus Sanctitatis honor, integraque conſcientia, à me omnino conſervaretur, ex hujuſmodique conceſſa Commiſſione, omni ex parte exoneraretur. Tandem ſi ad hoc, nullis rationibus Pontifex potuerit adduci, ab ejus Sanctitate requiretis, ut dictam velit Commiſſonem concedere in perſonam Domini Staphylei Decani Rotæ, qui & vir indifferens eſt, & hujuſmodi rei ob eruditionem accommodatus, nullo pacto omittentes Diſpenſationis expeditionem, ut dictum eſt; & hujus rei gratia Commiſſionem nunc ad vos mitto, in debita forma confectam & paratam, quæ ſignetur ad dictum Dominum Staphyleum directa, quam Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro redderis, ſalvo quo alia nequeat obtineri, rogabitiſq; ut cum dicta Diſpenſatione eam velit concedere. Et quoniam fieri poſſit quod dum fieret mentio de me excipiendo, forſitan ejus Sanctitas aliquem alium quam Dominum Staphyleum nominaret, ad quem Commiſſio hujuſmodi dirigeretur, hoc eam in loco tenaciſſime inſiſtetis, firmiterq; inhærebitis ei rei, nec in illum aliquem virum exterum ullo pacto conſentientes, ſed ſolum pro eodem Domino Staphyleo inſtantes ejus Sanctitatem ſummis precibus quam clementiſſime rogantes, & rationibus omnibus ſuadentes, ne alium ullum nominare velit, aſſerentes quod quum in Inſtructionibus veſtris non contineatur, nec de alio ullo fiat mentio, niſi illo, me recuſato, iterum atq; iterum ab eadem Sanctitate petetis, ut nomine hujus Auditoris Rotæ hæc res expediatur Commiſſio, vos nec audere nec poſſe vobis præſcriptos fines transgredi.

De Regii vero deſiderii ac petitionis fruſtratione ſuper dicta Commiſſione obtinenda dicetis unum & idem eſſe, hanc illi denegare, vel alii concedere quam in veſtris Inſtructionibus contineatur, non quod Regia Majeſtas aliorum rectitudine aut indifferentia quicquam ſuſpicetur, vel quod judicet eorum aliquem affectibus obnoxium; ſed quod pro re certiſſima credidit, quod Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter in neminem tam facile condeſcenderet, quam indictæ Rotæ Decanum, ob idque de eo in Inſtructionibus veſtris mentionem fecit: ſed Commiſſiones in debita forma cum his nominibus fieri & conſcribi juſſit, quod ſi hic credidiſſemus, Dom. Staphyleum habitum iſtic iri pro ſuſpecto, affirmare poteſtis me fuiſſe omnino miſſurum conſimilem Commiſſionis formulam, ſpatio relicto pro aliquo alio inſcribendo nomine, aliquamq; aliam ſuper ea re Inſtructionem me daturum fuiſſe; & haud dubie, ſi de nominibus duntaxat fuerit controverſia, hæ rationes facile poterunt Pontificem attrahere, ut in me conſentiat, vel in Staphyleum. De aliis vero neminem admittetis, eos tamen Pontifici aperietis vos, ne id faciatis habere in mandatis, ſed ſuperius enarratas Cauſas in veſtram excuſationem allegantes, omnino ut vobis injungitur, ea in re inſiſtetis.

Quod ſi nullis modis dictam Commiſſionem & Diſpenſationem impetrare poteritis, ad id q; nequiverit Pontifex adduci, niſi rem prius alicui ex Cardinalibus vel Officiariis communicaverit, in eo tunc caſu, ejus Sanctitati in memoriam reducite, quot & quam gravia mala ex hujus negotii longiore poſſent provenire, ſi ex ea occaſione aliquæ contrarietates vel impedimentum ſuboriretur, unde Regiæ Majeſtatis expectatio poſtmodum fruſtraretur; Quo igitur, ſi ullæ injiciantur in hac re tractandæ difficultates, ut Pontifex etiam facilior ad Regium votum concedendum promptiorq; reddatur, alias etiam præter has literas ſeorſim ad vos ſcripſi, quas una cum his accipietis, in quibus copioſe aggeſſi, quam multas magni momenti rationes, ob quas ſententia judiciumq; meum eſt, ne ullo pa cto Pontifex hanc petitionem Regiæ Majeſtatis deneget; quas literas quum in eis argumentum vehemens eſt, nec ob prolixitatem tædioſas aut moleſtum quod legatur, modum aliquem ipſius Sanctitati legendi invenietis; ſpemq; certam habeo, ſi earum ſumma, tenor, atq; ſententia profunde perpendatur, quam ſatis id eſſe poterit ad omnem tollendam difficultatem, quæ poſſit obverſari in dicta Commiſſione Diſpenſatione que obtinenda, in eis contenta ſigillatim exponetis adeo, quod hoc negotium confici queat, Arbitris aut Conſiliariis ad id neutiquam accitis ſi fieri poſſit: ſi tamen Pontifex ſperaverit ſe poſſe hæc omnia eos cele qui huic rei forſan voluerint refragari, & omnino decreverit aliqu Cardinales vel officiarios iſtius cauſæ participes facere, omnem tunc induſtriam ſtatim adhibebitis, ut his cognitis, eorum gratiam & favore in re vobis comparetis, partim eis reſpectus, & cauſas omnes in meis literis contentas, etiam in cauſæ commodum facientes, uberius exponendo, partim vero eam remunerationem illis dantes, quæ judicio veſtro conveniens habebitur, dummodo optatum res ſortiatur effectum. Et ut omnia queatis præſtare commodius cum his, meas literas accipietis quas ad Cardinalem Sanctorum Quatuor & Collegium Cardinalium ſcribo, eaſque reddetis ut expedire cenſueritis, plane confidens nihil à vobis omitti iri, ut hac in re eorum gratiam atq; favorem queatis obtinere, in quem eventum ea munera offeretis, quæ convenientia viſa fuerint, Regia Majeſtas quicquid ejus nomine promiſeritis, id fideliſſime, uberrime præſtabit, pro quarum rerum expeditione, illis pecuniis uti poteritis per literas Cambii Venetias tranſmiſſis, quouſq; ſuffecerint, neceſſarias vos exiſtimaveritis rei impetrandæ. Et quum ambiguum ſit an vobis cuerit hoc tempore ad Pontificis præſentiam accedere, hujuſmodi acceſſus defectus, ſi aliæ rem ad bonum exitum perducendi rationes non cogitarentur, cauſa eſſe poſſet longioris moræ, & totius rei impedimento; proinde Regia Majeſtas, ut modos omnes experiatur, nec ullo ſoli inhæreat, hæc eadem in mandatis dedit Domino Secretario, quæ non procul ab Urbe eſſe intelleximus, quemadmodum in his aliiſq; non brevioribus literis continentur, ita quod alter veſtrum, vel uterque ſi fieri poſſit, ad Pontificis præſentiam acceſſum habeat, nihil tamen ſi ſpe Domini Secretarii, veſtræ vos diligentiæ aut induſtriæ omittet nec ille ſub ſpe veſtra, in re hac modis omnibus promovenda remiſſus erit, ſed nihil conjunctim aut diviſim intentatum relinquetis. Quod uterq; veſtrum ad Pontificem admittatur, alter de altero neſcius, non oberit, ſed multum proficiet, etiam ſi ante alterius adventum negotium hoc alter impetraſſet, ſed ſi aliquis veſtrum cognoverit causam hanc expeditam eſſe, omniaq; pro certo impetrata eſſe, tunc labori ſumptibus Pontificem pro eadem re accedendi parcere poteritis, neq; eam amplius ingerere, neq; neceſſarium aut opportunum erit, ut pro alia re in præſentia quam pro hac apud Sanctiſſimum Dominum noſtrum agatis, ſed ſolum nunc procurabitis de Commiſſione & Diſpenſatione formam ad vos miſſam obtinenda, necnon de feſtinatione illa, quo compendio ad vos dedi, in quibus omnibus & ſingulis apte tractatis Regia Majeſtas magnam fiduciam in veſtra prudentia collocavit, in quibus cum tam magni ſint momenti, ex Regiæ Majeſtatis ſententia tum vobis maxime elaborandum eſt.

Deniq; quum intelligam Dominum Lautrek nonnihil mirari, quo

Regiæ Majeſtatis iſtic agentis, nullam ſuorum mandatorum partem cum eo conferunt, ad eum nunc ſcribo, & nonnulla Domino Roberto Jernyngham ei exponenda committo, concernentia actiones cum Ferrariæ Duce, & alia quædam eodem Domino Lautrek; ſignificans, vos miſſos eſſe ad dictas cauſas juvandas, & Pontificis liberationem promovendam, quemadmodum ex literarum ad Dominum Jernyngham exemplo cognoſcetis: expediens itaq; fuerit, ut præ ſe feratis, vos dictæ rei gratia miſſos eſſe, ne forſan Dominus Lautrek in falſam aliquam conjecturam aut ſuſpicionem incideret, quæ communibus rebus nocere poſſet, & in veſtrarum quoq; actionum impedimentum redundare.

Illud deinde reticere nolui, quod ſi ullo pacto vobis liceat ad Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri præſentiam accedere, nihil omittatis in favorem & gratiam Reverendi Domini Datarii, de cujus animo nihil dubitamus, comparandam, eiq; aſſeretis quod quum in noſtris omnibus occurrentiis illius opera ac Patrocinio ſemper uſi fuerimus, ipſe vero tanta ſemper fide ac ſedulitate omnia effecerit quæ nobis grata & optata eſſe cognovit, ut noſtram omnem operam ſuis rebus reddiderit promptiſſimam, & ſuæ utilitatis & exaltationis cupidiſſimam. Quocirca hæc Regia Majeſtas hac in re, qua nullam magis cordi habet, nec gravioris momenti quicquam ſibi accidere poſſe judicat, ex animi ſui ſententia conficienda, poſt Sanctiſſimum Dominum noſtrum, in Domino Datario ſpem omnem collocavit, qui ex hac occaſione, ſi operam ſuam ad optatum uſq; exitum interponere non gravetur, Regiæ Majeſtatis animum & pectus, ſic omni ex parte promerebitur, ut dicta Majeſtas non ſolum omnia curatura ſit, quæ ex Domini Veronenſis commodo & ornamento fuerint, ſed eam etiam munificentiam & gratitudinem addet, quæ majorem vel integram partem, à captivitate Redemptionis perſolvendæ compenſabit; in me vero non aliam fidem & amicitiam experietur, quam ab ullo fratre poſſet expectare. IV. Two Letters of Secretary Knights to the Cardinal and the King, giving an account of his Conference with the Pope about his Divorce. Taken from the Originals.

PLeaſe it your Grace to underſtand, That immediately upon the receipt of your Grace's Letters, ſeverally directed unto Mr. Gregory and me; he and I reſorted unto the Pope his Holineſs, making congratulation of his reſtitution unto liberty on yours and his behalf, to his ſingular comfort and conſolation; and ſo much the more, becauſe that I was the firſt that made like ſalutation in any great Prince's Name; He being well aſſured that I ſpake the ſame on the behalf of his two chief, ſincere, & unfeigned Friends: Wherefore with great high thanks, and long diſcourſe, Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 10.

diſcourſe, with rehearſal of the King's and your merits and Acts, in moſt vertuous and Catholick manner, employed for his reſtitution, and your continual and effectual ſtudy how the See Apoſtolique might recover the priſtine Reputation and Dignity; He confirmed as much as I had ſpoken. After this Mr. Gregory and I entred into our Charge, ſhewing at length the high deſerts of the Princes and Realm of England, the devotion of the ſame towards the Church; how expedient it was, as well for the See Apoſtolique, as for the ſaid Realm, to foreſee and provide that all occaſions of Diſſention and War were extinct and put away; which for lack of Heir Male of our Sovereign's Line, and Stemm, ſhould undoubtedly follow, with other conſiderations at length contained in our Inſtructions. We deſired his Holineſs to commit the knowledg of the Diſpenſation that was obtained in time of Julius, of famous memory, for Matrimony to be had between the King and the Widow, Relict late of Prince Arthur; and that we might have it in form as that was that your Grace ſent hither. His Holineſs anſwered, That our ſayings had great likelyhood of truth, for lacking of Iſſue Male of the King's Stemm, conſidering the nature of Men being prone unto Novelties, and diſpoſed unto Parties and Factions, the Realm of England would not onely enter into their accuſtomed Diviſions, but alſo would owe or do ſmall devotion unto the Church; Wherefore his Holineſs was right well content and ready to abhibit all Remedy that in him was poſſible as this time would ſerve. And becauſe he was not expert in making of Commiſſions, he would conſult with the Cardinal Sanctorum Quatuor, and uſe his advice, which we ſhould ſhortly know.

We perceiving that the obtaining of our Charges after the King's and your Grace's pleaſure, depended much upon the Advice of Sanctorum Quatuor, did prevent his going unto the Pope, and delivering your Grace's Letters with Recommendations accordingly, we deſired him to be good and favourable unto our Requeſts in the King's behalf; and for the better obtaining of our deſires, we promiſed to ſee unto him with a competent reward. And this communication had, we ſhewed unto him the Commiſſion, which he ſaid could not paſs without perpetual diſhonour unto the Pope, the King, and your Grace; and a great part of ſuch Clauſes as be omitted, he hath touched and laid reaſon for the ſame in a Writing, which I do ſend unto your Grace with this. Conſidering his great Experience, Wiſdom, Learning, and the entire affection that he beareth unto the King and your Grace; and that it was far from the King's deſire, and nothing for your purpoſes, that I ſhould firſt have ſent the ſaid Cardinal's Sayings unto your Grace to abide anſwer, and eft-ſoons prevent to do the ſame: Conſidering alſo that the ſaid King deſireth a Commiſſion convenient and ſufficient, we deſired him to make the minute of one, which he gladly did; When it was made, the Pope ſaid, That at his being in the Caſtle of St. Angelo the General of the Obſervants in Spain, required his Holineſs, in the Emperor's Name, not to grant unto any Act that might be preparative, or otherwiſe, to a Divorce to be made between the King and the Queen; and moreover deſired an Inhibition, that the ſaid Cauſe ſhould not come in knowledg before any Judge within the King's Dominions. The Pope anſwered that Inhibitio non datur niſi poſt litem motam. And as unto the firſt his Holineſs was content, if any like thing were demanded ed, to advertiſe the Emperor before, that he did let it paſs; and this was in a manner for his Holineſs being in Captivity. But his Holineſs being yet in Captivity, as your Grace reports, and eſteemeth him to be as long as the Almaines and Spaniards continueth in Italy; he thought if he ſhould grant this Commiſſion, that he ſhould have the Emperor his perpetual Enemy, without any hope of reconciliation: Notwithſtanding he was content rather to put himſelf in evident ruine, and utter undoing, than the King, or your Grace, ſhould ſuſpect any point of ingratitude in him, heartily deſiring cum ſuſpiriis & lacrymis, that the King and your Grace, which have always been faſt and good unto him, will not now ſuddenly precipitate him for ever; which ſhould be done, if immediately upon delivering of the Commiſſion, your Grace ſhould begin Proceſs. He intendeth to ſave all upright thus: If Monſieur de Lautrech would ſet forwards, which he ſaith daily that he will do, but yet he doth not, at his coming the Pope's Holineſs may have good colour to ſay, He was required by the Ambaſſadour of England of a like Commiſſion. And denying the ſame, becauſe of his promiſe unto the General, he was eft ſoons by Monſieur de Lautrech, to grant the ſaid Commiſſion, inaſmuch as it was but a Letter of Juſtice. And by this colour he would cover the matter, ſo that it might appear unto the Emperor, That the Pope did it not as he that would gladly do diſpleaſure unto the Emperor, but as an indifferent Prince that could not, nor might deny Juſtice, ſpecially being required by ſuch Perſonages; and immediately he would diſpatch a Commiſſion, bearing date after the time that Monſieur Lautrech had been with him or nigh unto him. The Pope moſt inſtantly beſeecheth your Grace, to be a mean that the King's Highneſs may accept this in a good part, and that he will take patience for this little time, which as it is ſuppoſed will be but ſhort, and (in omnem eventum) I do bring a Commiſſion with me, and a Diſpenſation, which muſt the King and your Grace will like well.

We have given unto my Lord Cardinal Sanctorum Quatuor 4000 Crowns, and unto the Secretary 30 Crowns.

With this Your Grace ſhall receive a Letter from the Pope's Holineſs, how, a Councel of Oldrand. that giveth light unto the King's Cauſe; I ſhall make the moſt diligence homeward that I can. Our Lord Jeſus preſerve Your Grace.

At Orvieto, this firſt day of January.

Your moſt humble Servant and Chaplain,
W. Knight.

Rome

Rome Jan. 1. 1528.

To the KING.

PLeaſe it your Highneſs to underſtand, That as ſoon as the Pope was at liberty, and came unto Orvieto, I reſorted unto his Holineſs with all diligence; and at my coming unto him, did make congratulation on your Highneſs behalf; foraſmuch as he was reſtored unto his Liberty, which he accepted very joyfully and thankfully, giving unto your Highneſs manifold and high thanks for your great goodneſs, as well proved in his adverſity, as when he was in his moſt felicity. After this he rehearſed my being at Rome, how dangerous it was, inaſmuch as when my being there was detect, eſpial was made, and I was not paſſed out of Rome by the ſpace of two hours, e're two hundred Spaniards invaded and ſearched the Houſe. He ſhewed alſo that he had received all ſuch Letters as I at my being in Rome did ſend unto his Holineſs; whereby he did perceive the Effect of your Highneſs deſire concerning your Deſpenſation: And albeit he did ſend me word that I ſhould depart, and his Holineſs would ſend unto me the ſaid Diſpenſation fully ſped. Nevertheleſs he truſted that your Highneſs would be content to tarry for a time: for the General of the Obſervants in Spain being lately in Rome, had required him, according unto his Inſtructions, that he ſhould ſuffer nothing to paſs that might be prejudicial or againſt the Queen, directly or indirectly, but that the Pope ſhould firſt advertiſe thereof certain of the Caſaxians here. And foraſmuch as this Diſpenſation might encourage your Grace to cauſe my Lord Legate Auctoritate Legationis to hear and decern in the Cauſe that your Highneſs intendeth, and his Holineſs ſtandeth as yet in manner in captivity and perplexity: His Holineſs therefore beſought your Grace to have patience for a time, and it ſhould not be long e're your Highneſs ſhould have, not only that Diſpenſation, but any thing elſe that may lie in his Power. I replied unto this, That his Holineſs had once granted it, and that I had diſpatched a Poſt, and made relation thereof, by my Writings, unto your Highneſs; ſo that I could not imagine by what reaſon I might perſwade unto you that he would perform the promiſe that he had once broken. In concluſion; He was content that your Highneſs ſhould have it, but he would have it delivered with this condition; That the Prothonotary and Gambora and I, ſhould beſeech your Highneſs not to attempt any thing in your Cauſe againſt the Queen, till ſuch time as the Pope were frankly at his Liberty; which could not be as long as the Almaynes and Spaniards did thus reign in Italy; and promiſe made, we ſhould deliver the Diſpenſation: and in my poor judgment, it was beſt alwaies to be in poſſeſſion of this Diſpenſation. After this he ſhewed the Minute unto the Cardinal Sanctorum Quatuor, willing him to reform it according to the ſtile of this Court; which done, he ſhewed it unto me, and after ſaid, That he thought good I ſhould depart, becauſe I rode but competent Journies, and the Prothonotary Gambora ſhould follow by Poſt and bring the Bull with him, which is of the ſame form and ſubſtance that your Highneſs's Minute is of: And if there be any thing omitted ted, or to be added, his Holineſs is alwayes content to reform it, and to put it under the ſame date that the ſame Diſpenſation now beareth; the Copy whereof I do ſend unto your Highneſs with this, the Commiſſion General and Proteſtation being void, becauſe they were conceived durante captivitate only. And here on my behalf, none other thing being to be done, I took my leave of the Pope and departed. At my coming unto Scarperii near unto Bonony, I did meet with Thadeus this Courier; which brought certain Expeditions Triplicat; the one unto the Protho-notar Gambora, the other unto Gregory de Caſſali, and the third unto me; among which was a general Commiſſion Triplicat, the one to be committed to my Lord Legate, and if that could not be obtained, becauſe my Lord Legate might be thought partial, then the ſame to be committed unto Staphileus. Item; There was a Copy of a Diſpenſation, where I perceived, by your Grace's Letter, that your pleaſure was to have your Diſpenſation in form, after the minute that Barlow brought; which was then ſped, and already paſſed; ſo remained nothing to be ſped, but the Commiſſion your Highneſs pleaſes. This knowing, I cauſed my Servants to continue their Journey, and with one Servant and the Courier, I returned unto Orvieto with Poſt-Horſes, where Mr. Gregory and I, with much Buſineſs, have obtained a Commiſſion directed unto my Lord Legate, not in the form that was conceived in England, but after ſuch manner as is ſufficient for the Cauſe, and as I truſt ſhall content your Highneſs; wherein the Lord Cardinal Sanctorum Quatuor, hath taken great pains to pen, as well your Diſpenſation as the Commiſſion; for which, and that hereafter he may do unto your Highneſs the better ſervice, Mr. Gregory and I have rewarded him with 4000. Crowns, of ſuch Money as your Highneſs hath cauſed to be made unto Venice for the furtherance of your Cauſes. But albeit that every thing is paſſed according to your Highneſs pleaſure, I cannot ſee, but in caſe the ſame be not in execution at this time, the Pope is utterly undone, and ſo he ſeeth himſelf. The Imperialiſts do daily ſpoil Caſtles and Towns about Rome; Monſieur de Lautrek is yet at Bonony, and ſmall hope is of any great Act that he intends. The Ceſarians have taken within theſe three days, two Caſtles lying within ſix miles of this: and the Pope being in this perplexity, not aſſured of any one Friend but of your Highneſs, that lieth too far off; if he do at this time any diſpleaſure unto the Emperour, he thinketh he is undone for ever; wherefore he puts his Honour and Health wholly into your Highneſs Power and Diſpoſition. This morning I return homewards, and Gregory de Caſſali goeth in my Company as far as unto Florence; and from thence he goeth unto Monſieur de Lautrek, to ſolicit him forwards, if it may be. The Holy Ghoſt ſend your Highneſs a proſperous New Year, and many.

At Orvieto, the laſt day of January.

Your moſt humble Subject, Servant, and Chaplain,

V. A part of an Original Letter from the ſame Perſon to Cardinal Wolſey, by which it appears that the Diſpenſation was then granted and ſent over.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 10. YOur Grace commandeth, That I ſhould ſend the Commiſſion and Diſpenſation with diligence, in caſe they were ſped, before the receit of your Grace's Letters ſent at this Time. Wherefore the Protonotar Gambora and I being commanded ſub pœna Excommunicationis to deliver the ſame, with a certain Requeſt to be made to the King's Highneſs and his Grace, at the time of delivery, I ſend the ſame at this time unto Gambora, requiring him in any wiſe to make diligence towards the King's Highneſs, and not to abide my coming; the Requeſt and cauſe thereof your Grace ſhall perceive by mine other Letters adjoined herewith. And ſuppoſing that when your Grace hath ſeen my Letters, and the Diſpenſations, and conſidered this time well, it may chance that the King and your Grace will be rather well content with that that is paſſed, without ſueing for any other thing that could not be obtained without long tract, and peradventure not ſo. Your Grace hath committed as much unto Gregory de Caſſali at this time, as unto me, which being near unto the Pope, will without fail do his beſt diligence: And if it ſhall be thought good unto the King's Highneſs, and your Grace, that I do return unto Orvieto, I ſhall do as much as my poor Carcaſe may endure, and thereby at Turine I ſhall abide the knowledge of your Grace's pleaſure. The Datary hath clean forſaken the Court, and will ſerve no longer but only God and his Cure. The Cardinal Campegius continueth in Rome ſore vexed with the Gout; The Cardinals Piſane, Triuulcis, Urſine, Gadis and Ceſis, remaineth for Hoſtages. The Cardinals, Monte, Sanctorum Quatuor, Ridulph, Ravenna, and Perusin, be with the Pope; the reſt abides abſent. Our Lord Jeſus preſerve your Grace.

At Aſte the 10*th* day of January.

VI. Gregory Caſſali's Letter about the Method in which the Pope ordered the Divorce ſhould be managed. Taken from a Copy written by Cardinal Wolſey's Secretary.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 10. HEri & hodie ad multam diem ſum alloquutus Sanctũ Dominũ noſtrũ de mittendo legato, inſequens ordinem à Reverendiſſimo Domino Eboracen. ſuis literis 27. Decemb. mihi præſcriptum. Pontifex oſtendit se cupidissimum satisfaciendi Regiæ Excellentiæ, cui omnia se debere fatetur, & nunc habuit mecum longum de hac re colloquium, ut inveniatur modus omnia bene, firme & secure faciendi, quo facto & tueri possit; ideoq; consulere voluit judicium Cardinalis Sanctorum Quatuor & Symonettæ, qui excellentior & doctior Auditor Rotæ est, cum quibus sub sigillo Confessionis egit, ut ex eorum consilio inveniatur modus ad moram tollendam, & causam secure peragendam: Atq; ita Pontifex cum illis, in hoc quod sequitur, se revolvit, videturq; optimus, verus & securus modus, & me rogavit, ut nullo pacto dicam hoc obtinuisse ab ejus Sanctitate sicuti revera obtinui, nam Cæsariani eum statum pro suspecto allegarent, sed quod dicam me habuisse à Cardinali Sanctorum Quatuor & à dicto auditore. Dicunt quod Rex deberet committere istic causam Cardinali, ratione Commissionis quam attulit Secretarius, vel propria Authoritate Legationis, quod facere potest; & ubi causa fuerit commissa, si Rex conscientiam suam persentiat coram Deo exoneratam, & quod recte possit facere quod quærit, quia nullus Doctor in mundo est, qui de hac re melius decernere possit quam ipse Rex, itaq; si in hoc se resolverit, ut Pontifex credit, statim causam committat, aliam Uxorem ducat, litem sequatur, mittatur publice pro Legato, qui Consistorialiter mittetur, ita enim maxime expediret: nam Cardinalis Sanctorum Quatuor & Symonetta dicunt hoc certum esse, quod si Regina citetur illa nihil volet respondere nisi quod protestabitur locum & judices suspectos esse, & Cæsariani petent à Pontifice per viam Signaturæ, justitiæ Inhibitionem, qua Rex aliam nullam possit Uxorem capere, & si capiat proles non sit legitima donec causa non definiatur, & petent Commissionem qua Causa audiatur in Curia; de Inhibitione vero Pontifex non potest negare, neq; & Commissionem nisi injustitia & mera vis inferatur, adversus quam omnis mundus exclamaret. Quod si Rex aliam Uxorem ceperit, hoc non possunt petere, & si petant, negabit Pontifex quod jure possit, nec aliud dicere poterunt vel allegare, nisi quod Cardinalis Eboracen. & Cardinalis mittendus & locus sit suspectus, & petere quod Causa videatur hic, in quo si deducatur, statim feretur sententia quam Pontifex maturabit, non servatis terminis propter momentum negotii & alias rationes, quas sciet Pontifex adducere, & ita hic obtinebuntur sententiæ quæ per totum Orbem approbabuntur, quibus nullus Hispanus aut Germanus poterit contradicere, & mittentur in Angliam declarandæ per Cardinales prout Rex voluerit, & hoc etiam non obstante Pontifex mittet Cardinalem.

Tandem hic est modus rebus omnibus secure medendi, ad quem sequendum vos Pontifex hortatur, & rogat, ut nihil dicatur quod ab eo procedat. Iste modus non videtur inutilis, quia hic Auditor asserit, non aliter esse faciendum si bene volumus; & quia Reverendissimus Cardinalis Dominus Eboracen. instat pro celeritate, interim accersiri poterit qualiscunq; Legatus Rex voluerit, & magis satisfiet vulgo in mittendo Legato, veluti ad definiendam causam, & hic etiam ut dixi omnia fient quæ super id Rex petierit.

Præterea Pontifex, id quod fecit ut me resolverem ad has Literas scribendum, contentus est mittere quemcunq; Cardinalem ego petiero, sed ait oportere ut aliquis mittatur habilis, id est Doctor in Jure, vel in Theologia, qui sunt isti Campegius, Cæsarinus, Senensis, Cesis, Araceli, Simbre, qui senex est & immobilis; Cesis in obsidem ivit Neapolim. Cæ- ſarinus Epiſcopatum habet in Hiſpania, Araceli podagra laborat & Frater eſt, Senenſis eſt Imperialis & non valde prudens, Campegius eſſet maxime ad propoſitum, ſed Romæ eſt locum tenens Pontificis, unde non poſſet diſcedere, continuantibus diſcordiis inter Germanos & Hiſpanos, neq; auderet egredi à caſtro; ſed hoc periculum & dubium breui expedietur, nam intra octo dies Cæſariani cogentur ſibi conſulere ut eant in Regnum, ſi Dominus Lautrek eo progrediatur, vel ibunt Senas per iter Florentiæ, & tunc Campegius poterit exire, & ſi Rex ita jusſerit ſtatim accingetur itineri. Pontifex juſſit ut ſcribam, quod nunquam ingenio aut ſtudio deerit in excogitando ut adimpleat deſiderium & voluntatem Regis, & quod ſolum iſta proponit pro meliori ſecuritate, ut iſta fiant quæ poſtea referri debeant, quod pareret dilationem & difficultatem, & quantum ego poſſim conjicere Pontifex exoptat ſatisfacere Regiæ voluntati. Pontifex denuo replicavit quod ſe totum rejicit in Brachia Regiæ Majeſtatis, & quod certus eſt quod Cæſar nunquam hoc illi ignoſcet, & quod ex hac occaſione vocabit eum ad Concilium, vel nihil aliud quæret niſi ut eum omni ſtatu & vita privet; & dicta Sanctitas parvam ſpem habet in Gallis, niſi quantum operabitur per Regiam Majeſtatem & Reverendiſſimum Dominum Eboracen. Ad quod Reſpondi, illum ex præteritis & præſentibus poſſe judicare futura. Tandem affirmo, quod ſi ſemel tollatur Cæſarianorum metus, poteritis ex arbitrio veſtro diſponere de Sede Apoſtolica.

Cardinalis Campegius ad Pontificem ſcripſit, quod ſunt tres dies ex quo frater Generalis communicaverat ſecum negotium Regiæ Majeſtatis, & quod dixerat ut ad ejus Sanctitatem ſcriberet, ut omnino faceret, aliquam Inhibitionem ne cauſa iſtic tractaretur. Ad quod Pontifex non reſpondit, ſed reſpondebit, ſe nihil de eo poſſe facere, quia non pendet cauſa.

VIII. A Duplicate of the Cardinal's Letter to the Pope, about the Divorce; corrected with his own hand

BEatiſſime Pater, poſt humillimam Commendationem, & Sanctiſſimorum pedum oſcu'a, doleo atq; graviſſime excrucior, quod ea quæ tanta ſolicitudine, literis & nuntiis apud Beatitudinem veſtram ago, nequeam, ut unice & rerum omnium maxime vellem, prius tractare, hoc eſt, negotium Potentiſſimi Domini mei Regis, negotium inquam rectiſſimum, honeſtiſſimum ac ſanctiſſimum, in quo procurando non aliter me interpono, quam in ejus Regiæ Majeſtatis ſalute tuenda, in hoc Regno conſervando, in publica tranquillitate fovenda, in Apoſtolica Autoritate, in mea deniq; vita & anima protegenda debeo. Beatiſſime Pater, ad veſtræ Sanctitatis genua provolutus, obſecro & obteſtor, ut ſi me Chriſtianum virum, ſi bonum Cardinalem, ſi S. Sancto iſto Senatu dignum, ſi Apoſtolicæ Sedis membrum non ſtupidum & inutile, ſi recti, juſtitiæque cultorem, ſi fidelem Creaturam ſuam, ſi demum æternæ ſalutis cupidum me exiſtimet, nunc velit mei Conſilii & interceſſionis rationem habere, & pientiſſimis hujus Regis precibus, benigne, prompteq; adnuere; quas niſi rectas, ſanctas ac juſtas, eſſe ſcirem, omne prius ſupplicii genus ultro ſubirem, quam eas promoverem, pro hiſq; ego vitam meam & animam ſpondeo. Alioquin vereor (quod tamen nequeo tacere) ne Regia Majeſtas humano, divinoq; jure (quod habet ex omni Chriſtianitate ſuis his actionibus adjunctum) freta, poſtquam viderit Sedis Apoſtolicæ gratiam, & Chriſti in terris Vicarii clementiam deſperatam, Cæſaris inimici, in cujus manu neutiquam eſt tam Sanctos conatus reprimere, ea tunc moliatur, ea ſuæ cauſæ perquirat remedia, quæ & non ſolum huic Regno, ſed etiam aliis Chriſtianis Principibus, occaſionem ſubminiſtrarent, Sedis Apoſtolicæ Autoritatem & Juriſdictionem imminuendi, & vilipendendi non abſq; Chriſtianæ Reip. perturbatione: quibus malis poteſt veſtra Sanctitas ſua autoritate & prudentia mederi. Hæc loquor ut Chriſtianus, & ut devotiſſimum iſtius Sedis membrum ſincere ſuadeo; non affectus, non Principis amor, non ſervitutis vinculum me impellit, ſed ſola rectitudine ad id adducor. Cæterum animi ſolicitudo non ſinit plura exprimere. Veſtra Sanctitas, in tam juſto Regis voto adnuendo, ſic ejus Majeſtatis animum ſibi devinciet & conſervabit, ut non ſolum ipſe & ego, ſed omnes ejus ſubditi ſint ad omnem occaſionem, opes, vires, & ſanguinem in Sanctitatis veſtræ, Apoſtolicæ Sedis beneficium, libentiſſime profuſuri. Mitto ad Beatitudinem veſtram hujus rei gratia, Dominum Stephanum Gardinerum, Primarium Secretiſſimorum Conciliorum Secretarium, mei dimidium, & quo neminem habeo cariorem; referet ille cuncta diſtinctius, meum pectus aperiet. X. The Decretal Bull that was desired in the King's Cause.

Dilecto, &c. Salutem & Apostolicam Benedict. Sedis Apostolicæ Suprema Autoritas potestatis suæ copiam sic omnibus exhibet, ut pro causarum, personarum & temporum qualitate remedia singulis ad ædificationem subministrare, & causas ad Canonum Sanctiones expensas æquissima certissimaq; lance trutinans, laborantibus conscientiis & fluctuantibus consulere, summamque ipsis tranquillitatem statuere contendat. Cum itaque Clarissimus in Christo Filius noster Henricus Octavus Angliæ Rex, Fidei Defensor, & Dominus Hiberniæ, sua nobis conquestione monstraverat, quod cum Annos abhinc decem & octo nobilem Mulierem Catharinam Ferdinandi quondam Hispaniarum Regis Filiam, Illustris Principis Arthuri Fratris sui defuncti quondam Uxorem, hortatu, fusu, ac consiliis eorum, quibus se totum in prima Regni sui Administratione crediderat, quadam sedis Apostolicæ Dispensatione prætensa sit bona fide Matrimonio copulasset, ac ab eo tempore hactenus cum eadem tanquam cum Uxore cohabitasset, prole interim fœmina suscepta & superstite ex eadem, ac jam tandem post desperatam prolem Masculam, de stabilienda & confirmanda ejusdem Filiæ suæ successione cogitaret, lustratisque Scriniis dictam super Matrimonio præfato Dispensationem fieret proferri, doctorumque Virorum judicia examinari, cujus quidem Dispensationis tenor sequitur, & est talis, &c. Cotton Libr: Vitel: B. 12.

Quidam Sanctionum & Canonum Ecclesiasticorum consulti, datum esse cum narratis ejusdem conferentes, aliasque nonnullas circumstantias tum ante dictæ Dispensationis impetrationem, quæ etiam post eandem impetratam intervenerunt, ponderantes, tum quod causa quæ in dicta prætensa est pacis continuandæ, viz. quæ ipsa tum coaluerat, fœderibus percussis firma constiterat, mutuis etiam populorum commerciis aucta, nullum suæ violationis timorem incutiens, qui justus & non omnino vanus dici posset, nec urgentissima proinde nec evidentissima videretur, qualem prohibitionis relaxatio exigat & requirat; tum quod preces falsi erant dum narrabatur Prædecessori nostro, eundem Carissimum Filium nostrum tum cupere cum dicta charissima Domina Catharina contrahere Matrimonium, ad hoc ut pacis fœdera diutius continuarentur, cum eo tempore, ut asserit, impetrationem prorsus ignoraret, & per ætatis immaturitatem, duodecimum, viz. annum non excedentis, affectum hujusmodi inducere non potuerat; tum quod Protestatione postmodum interveniente & vim Renunciationis habente, Dispensatio tunc per Renunciationem extincta videretur; Denique quod principes inter quos fœdera conservarentur, ante mandatam executioni Bullam fatis concesserant; Bullam ipsam, tum ex surreptionis & obreptionis vitiis, quam aliis etiam de Causis minus validam & inefficacem esse renunciarunt & retulerunt, scrupulum dicti Regis animo conscientiæque gravem incutientes eamque illi opinionem inducentes, ut Matrimonium prædictum non consistere, neque hactenus jure constitisse judicaret. Porro autem non frequentius apud se, ut asserit, animo volveret, ac meditaretur, tales exitus hujusmodi nuptiæ præfatæ habuerunt, ex quibus, viz. aliquot quot partus masculi imperfecti parumque vitales prodiere, atque ideo omni spe successoris prorsus destitui, quo suam familiam ad paucos redactam conservaret, occurrente simul memoriæ Divina interminatio quæ Fratris sui turpitudinem revelanti, & illius Uxorem contra S. Sancti Dei præcepta accipienti inscribitur, præsertim ubi Dispensatio non interveniat, quæ ex omni sua parte valeat & consistat, nonnullis etiam affirmantibus nostram non eatenus potestatem patere ut in ea specie gratiam faciamus, etiamsi ut scribit de nostræ potestatis plenitudine non dubitet, juste duntaxat legitimeque interpositæ, quam sanctam in terris agnoscit & veneratur, ad improbandas illas nuptias tantum undique videt consensum ut illas animo abhorreat, nec aliorum rationibus possit dissuaderi quin abominandas eas judicet, & Divinæ Majestati odiosas. Denique idem Carissimus Filius noster debita cum instantia nos precibus sollicitaverit, quatenus personæ suæ & Regni nobis semper devotissimi rationem habentes, maturo judicio ab angustiis liberemus, quibus ex præsentis Matrimonii per legem conscientiæ privatum, nec ad alios per leges publicas ante sententiam admissum, vehementer conqueritur comprehensum esse. Nos igitur considerantes quot, quanta, tum in Sedem Apostolicam, tum in fidem Christianam officia præ cæteris exhibendo promeritus eo nomine ut nostræ vicissim potestatis gratiam uberrimam & promptissimam referat, aliamque illius causam atque privati esse, ex quo nimirum pendeat salus plurimorum, nec posse dictæ causæ decisionem diutius proferri & protelari sine gravi discriminis periculo, dicti vero Principis cruciatu maxima quæ nos ex gratitudinis vicissitudine mutuo ret debeamus, qua decet festinatione procedi facientes ut ad finem ejusmodi lerrime perducatur, de Consilio Fratrum nostrorum, quorum in hac causa tam gravi atque urgenti judicium adhibuimus, ac etiam eorum qui & Sacræ Theologiæ peritissimos & juris Ecclesiastici callentissimos ac super consulendos audiendosque putavimus, quoniam vitia & defectus prædictos ejusmodi esse comperimus, quæ penitus præfatæ Prohibitionis naturâ, vires ipsius Bullæ merito enervarent; quo magis, vir, attestamur & palam faciamus, quanta animi cura & solicitudine præfati Carissimi Filii nostri conscientiam hujusmodi scrupulis & difficultatibus impeditam implicari atque vexari sustineamus, cum alioquin te dilectum Filium nostrum Cardin. XI. The Cardinal's Letter to John Caſſali about it; Taken from a Duplicate written by his Secretary.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 10.

REverende Domine Protonotari, tanquam Frater Amantiſſime, cum aliis meis literis copioſe ad vos perſcripſi Regiæ Majeſtatis animum, & deſiderium ſuper his rebus quas vobis in præſentia commiſit, ſuo nomine S. D. N. declarandas.

Nunc vero ob humillimam ſinceramq; meam Devotionem, quæ ex jure & officio non ſolum ejus Sanctitati, ſed miſeris Eccleſiæ ſublevandis rebus, dignitatiq; Apoſtolicæ reſtituendæ adſtringor, his literis vos inſtruam ſuper quibuſdam rebus, præcipue & accurate notandis & conſiderandis, quas poſt humillimam, reverentiſſimamq; meam commendationem dictæ Sanctitati, meo nomine ſigillatim, ſpeciatim declarabitis: & cum cauſam concernant, quam Regia Majeſtas nunc maxime operæ requirit, eandem Sanctitatem vehementiſſime rogabitis, ut cuncta legere & bene notare non gravetur.

Primo itaq; indolens infœlicem adverſumq; præſentium rerum ſucceſſum, in quo S. D. N. Cardinaliumq; Collegium verſatur, diuq; ac ſedulo mente volvens, quo pacto quibuſve modis, totis meis viribus, omni ſumptu moleſtiaq; neglecta, & cum proprii ſanguinis vitæque effuſione, miniſterium aliquod impendere, tantæque afflictioni ſolamen afferre, & Eccleſiæ Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri collapſo ſtatui opitulari, in quam rem haud dubie quoadq; vita ſuppetet incumbam; mihique in hac cogitatione verſanti, in mentem recordationemq; ſubiit, mirus quidem & grandis affectus. Qui divina ſic diſponente Providentia, ex inſtanti aſſiduæque mea opera provenit, ut hunc optimum Dominum meum Regem inducerem, eique perſuaderem quod ad arctiſſimam iſtam intimamque cordis & animi conjunctionem deveniret erga, S. D. N. Eccleſiæq; & ſedis Apoſtolicæ tutelam ac patrocinium ſuſcipiendum, memoriæque ſuccurrunt innumeræ rationes à me adductæ, ut Regiam Majeſtatem, quæ Cæſari tenaciſſime inhærebat, adducerem, ad S. D. N. defenſionem, rerumq; Italicarum tutelam amplectendam, ac inter omnes allegatas rationes, nulla fuit validior aut vehementior, vel quæ Regiæ Majeſtatis pectus magis permoveret, quam intima ſecuritas, perfectaque conſtantia, quam ei aſſidue indeſinenterq; inſinuavi de ejus Sanctitatis vera optimaq; & flagrans correſpondentia in amore perpetuo indiſſolubiliq; amicitia, animo & voluntate, petitionibus ſemper ſuæ R. Majeſt. & deſideriis concedendis, quod

Eccleſiæ

Eccleſiæ Theſaurus & Autoritas ejus Sanctitati Chriſti Vicario conceſſa permittit, vel quoad ſe extendit, ſeu poſſit extendere; ſuper idq; omnia uberrime promiſi, meam etiam ſalutem, fidem, honorem animamque adſtringens, quod omnia ex ipſius Regiæ Majeſtatis votis, in omne tempus præſtarentur, abſq; ulla prorſus occaſione aut ſcrupulo, ab hujuſmodi indulgendis petitionibus digrediendi, adeo quod Regia Majeſtas, ex hoc meo aſſeveranti relatu, hunc propenſum S. D. N. in ſe animum perſpiciens, mihique ejus Sanctitatis nomine, veluti Legato, & ſedis Apoſtolicæ membro loquenti, firmam, certamq; fidem adhibens, periculis omnibus poſthabitis, laboribus ſumptibuſq; ſpretis, nullaq; ſui Regni aut ſubditorum habita ratione, animum adfixit, prorſuſq; ſtatutum & decretum in omnibus ſe adjungere, atque perpetuo & conſtanter cum S. D. N. in affectu concurrere, in eoq; certum habeo velle decreviſſeque perſtare, ad mortem uſque, niſi forſan ex eventibus, longe diverſis à meo promiſſo & ejus expectatione, occaſio ſubminiſtretur ſuam Regiam Majeſtatem ab hoc animi ſui decreto amovendi. Id ſi illi accideret (quod avertat Deus) merito mihi poſſet adſcribere perfidiam, levitatem, violationemque promiſſionis, quo caſu quid mox officii aut miniſterii poſſem Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro præſtare, aut quæ fides in Eccleſiæ rebus mihi haberetur, ſingulari ejus Sanctitatis prudentiæ judicandum relinquo: nunquam enim meo in arbitrio poſthac eſſet, quicquam alicujus momenti hinc efficere, in ejus Sanctitatis commodum, hac nunc in re Regiæ Majeſtatis concepta ſpe, aut expectatione fruſtrata.

Eſt ſecundo accurate conſiderandum quantopere hoc negotium Regiæ Majeſtati interſit, & quanti ſit momenti, unde namque, præter Conſcientiæ Regiæ exonerationem, omnis quoque Regiæ lineæ, & ſtemmatis continuatio pendet; huic adnectitur totius Regni fœlicitas, vel excidium, hic ſecuritas & ſalus eorum conſiſtit, qui ſub Regis ſunt Imperio, & qui ullo unquam tempore naſcentur in ejus Regno, qua ex re oriri poteſt occaſio, & fomes tranquillitatis perpetuæ, aut diſcordiæ belliq; atrociſſimi in univerſum Chriſtianum Orbem, quæ omnia majoris ſunt momenti & vigilantius proſpicienda quam cujuſq; Principis vel Principiſſæ gratia, favor & expectatio.

Tertio, Cauſa ex ſe eſt hujuſmodi ut in animam meam ſpondere auſim, ejus conceſſionem, futuram non ſolum in conſcientiæ, honoriſq; Pontificis exonerationem coram Deo & hominibus, ſed in Cœlis quoq; gratam, acceptamque extituram: In hac deinde re ſecreta inſunt nonnulla, ſecreto S. D. N. exponenda, & non credenda literis, quas ob cauſas, morboſq; nonnullos, quibus abſq; remedio Regina laborat, & ob animi etiam conceptum ſcrupulum, Regia Majeſtas nec poteſt, nec vult ullo unquam poſthac tempore, ea uti, vel ut Uxorem admittere, quodcunque advenerit. Non exigua præterea habenda eſt ratio eorum, quæ aliis meis literis continentur, concernentia, quæ pro ingenti Theſauro S. D. N. habere queat, tam certam Regiæ Majeſtatis amicitiam, cum ejus Sanctitate conſtantiſſime conjunctam futuram in proſperis & adverſis, in quas etiam partes amicos ſuos omnes pertraxit, & aſſidue pertrahit: ad Eccleſiæ defenſionem, Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri conſervationem, cauſas omnes ſuas & actiones dirigens; poſſentq; hi omnes, Regia Majeſtate deficiente, in contrarium verti, &, ut vera loquar, nullum Principem video in quo S. D. N. poſſit, quam in Regia Majeſtate plenius aut perfectius confidere, vel cujus medio Apoſtolicæ ſedis ſtatus in priſtinam ſuam dignitatem queat certius reſtitui, cum abſq; ejus ſubſidio, niſi ſolus Deus ex immenſa ſua bonitate manum citiſſime apponat, omnino imminutus iri videatur. Quod ſi Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter nunc (quod abſit) in his Regiis petitionibus durum ſe, aut difficilem ſe exhibuerit, mihi certe moleſtiſſimum eſt futurum vivere diutius, ob innumera mala, quæ inde ſubſecutura videntur, hoc præſertim firmo, tutoq; Regio ſubſidio tam ingrate abjecto; hocq; ſolum, & certum, & ſalubre remedium videtur tantæ corrigendæ calamitati ſupereſſe, quo neglecto omnia corruant neceſſe eſt. Hac autem in re S. D. N. ſua erga Regiam Majeſtatem animi gratitudine comprobata, poterit de illius amicitia & conjunctione quæcunque volet ſibi polliceri, adverſus eos omnes, qui ejus Autoritatem aut dignitatem voluerint oppugnare. Tandem his cauſis rationibuſq; omnibus in unum congeſtis, mecum ipſe reputans, quam multa graviſſimi momenti in hujus conjugii Diſſolutione occurrant, in tanta æquitate juſtoq; fundamento poſita, ob quæ hæc Diſſolutio nec poſſit abſq; graviſſimo detrimento, nec debeat diutius protrahi aut intermitti; videns quoq; quid allegari poſſit & allegabitur omnino ad Regiæ Majeſtatis conſcientiam coram Deo purgandam, etiamſi id à S. D. N. neutiquam admittatur, quæ in hujuſmodi allegationibus conſiſtit, vereor ne in tanta rerum extremitate conſtituta, potius quam ingentia mala, quæ hinc apertiſſime imminent, ſuccedant, dicta Regia Majeſtas ex duobus malis minus malum eligat, & ſoli ſuæ puræq; conſcientiæ innitens, id agat, quod nunc tam reverenter à Sedis Apoſtolicæ Authoritate exigit, unde Sedis contemptus indies gravior excreſceret, hoc præſertim tempore admodum periculoſo: quæ omnia ſunt à S. D. N. ſumma ſua prudentia alte conſideranda, nullo prorſus dubio aut difficultate in re tam gravi mature concedenda interjecta; nec eam retardare debet cujuſquam mortalis inſtantia, contemplatio vel ſatisfactio, præſertim quum in multis aliis rebus, forſan non tam manifeſtis & apparentibus, Sanctitas ſua liberalem, facilemq; erga alios ſe ſæpe præſtiterit; cui humillima reverentia præmiſſa meo nomine dicetis, quod hæc loquor tanquam fidele, utcunq; Eccleſiæ indignum membrum, omnia excogitans quæ poſſent in Eccleſiæ augmentum & exiſtimationem cedere, ea etiam admovens & conſulens ut evitentur, quæ ceſſura videantur in contrarium. Quocirca Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro affirmabitis, quod præmiſſis omnibus tam maximi momenti exiſtentibus probe conſideratis, non veluti Mediator aut Interceſſor, ob privatum illum affectum quem Regiæ Majeſtatis cauſis, ut mei juris eſt, promovendis gero, ſed tanquam is qui in re tanta & ex tam certa ſcientia & cognitione, velim Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro ſuadere, ut quod nunc petitur omnino concedat, idq; ſuaderem etiam ſi in hoc Regnum nunquam veniſſem, neque hic commune quicquam haberem; rogoque, precor, & obteſtor ejus Sanctitatem, ut omni dubio, reſpectu, metuque depoſito, nullo pacto neget aut differat ea concedere aut adnuere, quæ Regia Majeſtas urgentiſſimas ob cauſas tanta nunc animi ſollicitudine expoſcit; ſed his potius benignius liberaliterq; adnuat, & omnia concedere non gravetur in pleniorem modum qui hujus rei gratia poſſit excogitari, compertiſſimumque ſibi ſua Sanctitas habeat, ſe id affecturum, quod coram Deo & hominibus juſtum omnino habebitur, arctiſſimeque Regiam Majeſtatem devinciet ad ſuæ Sanctitatis, Eccleſiæ Apoſtolicæque Sedis, cauſaſque omnes pro viribus juvandas protegendaſque, nec ea in re, ulli labori, ſumptui,

Regio

Regno vel Subditis parcet, nec (ſi opus fuerit) propriam Perſonam exponere recuſabit, in ea opinione conſtantiſſime permanſura, in eandemque ſententiam Gallorum Regem & alios confœderatos attrahet, tum pro ſuæ Sanctitatis & Cardinalium liberatione, tum pro ſedis Apoſtolicæ Auroritatis & dignitatis reſtitutione; & præterquam quum dicta Sanctitas mei humillimæ ſuæ Creaturæ fidem & exiſtimationem conſervabit, quo in omnem eventum & neceſſitatem ea poſſim hic facilius commodiuſque tractare quæ in Eccleſiæ commodum, beneficium & ſecuritatem ceſſura videbuntur, in quæ officia omnem meam induſtriam, zelum, ſtudiumque adhibebo, hunc quoque Sereniſſimum Regem in perpetuum ſibi lucrifaciet. Quod ſi harum rerum rationem non habuerit, vereor ne ſit futurum in mea poteſtate, ut ullo modo hanc Regiam Majeſtatem vel alium ullum Principem ad ea adducam, quæ Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro ſolatio aut ſubſidio eſſe poſſunt. Sed confido ab ipſius Sanctitate tantam malorum occaſionem ſublatam iri, gratiſſimo, benigniſſimo, liberrimoque animo, omnia ut petuntur conceſſuram eſſe, nullo objecto impedimento, contradictione aut mora.

Cotton Libr. Vitell. B. 10. REverendiſſime in Chriſto Pater, grata ſemper huic Regiæ Majeſtati extiterunt Veſtræ Reverend. Dominat. officia, ſed gratiſſimum omnium illud fuit, quod tanta fide & ſedulitate in ipſius promovenda cauſa ab ea fuiſſe præſtitum ex Reverendi Domini Jerdonen. ſermone cognovit: quam optimi amoris ſignificationem toto pectore amplexatur, juſſitq; ut ſuis nominibus ingentes veſtræ Reverendiſſime D. gratias haberemus: Cui ego eo quoq; nomine maxime quoque me debere fatear, nulla enim in re magis obnoxium me ſibi poteſt efficere, quam ſi totis ſuis viribus, omni gratia & Authoritate adnitatur, quo negotium hoc ex Regiæ Majeſtatis ſententia quam citiſſime conficiatur; hujuſmodi enim eſt ut nullum gravius poſſit accidere, dilationem nullam patitur, utpote quod totius hujus Regni conſervationem, Regiæ ſobolis continuationem & ejus animi ſalutem in ſe contineat: cauſa quidem manifeſtior eſt quam diſputatione egeat, & ſanctior quam debeat in controverſiam adduci, hanc unam gratiam & nunc primum à Sede Apoſtolica votis omnibus petit, & eam tum ex rei juſtitia, tum ex ſua in S. D. N. filiali devotione, ſpem concepit, ut nullo pacto ſibi perſuadeat unquam fieri poſſe ut ſua expectatione fruſtretur, quam ſit veſtræ R. D. opera ac pio patrocinio maxime poſſe juvari.

Iterum igitur atq; iterum Reverendiſſimam D. veſtram obſecro, ut poſtquam recenti & claro hoc teſtimonio purgavit quicquid antea in Regiam Majeſtatem fide ſiniſtre fuerit ad nos delatum, & noſtrum animum ſibi totum devinxit, non gravetur nunc ſtrenue in hoc Regio promovendo negotio ad optatum uſque finem perſeverare, quod ita cor noſtrum premit, ut vel proprio ſanguine id vellemus poſſe à S. D. N. impetrare. Cætera, veſtra Reverendiſſima D. uberius ac diſtinctius cognoſcet ex Reverendo Domino Epiſcopo Jerdonenſi, & ex Domino Stephano Gardinero intimo meo ſervo, & Domino Edwardo Foxo Regio familiari, quibus rogo ut certiſſimam in omnibus fidem velit habere. Et fœliciſſime valeat.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 10. MAgnifice Domine Gregori, &c. Ingentem Sereniſſima Regia Majeſtas & ego lætitiam concepimus, quum tum ex Domini Stephani literis, tum vero ex Domini Foxi relatu cognovimus, quanta fide, induſtria, ac vigilantia uſi ſitis in ejuſdem Regiæ Majeſtatis conficiendo negotio, quem veſtrum animum, etſi ſæpe antea arduis in rebus exploratiſſimum certiſſimumq; haberemus, hoc tamen tam claro teſtimonio nihil [illegible] vobis

N. nullis Arbitris seu consultoribus admissis concedenda, & secreto ad me mittenda, omnes vires ingenii, prudentiæ diligentiæq; vestræ adhibeatis, affirmabitisq; & in salutem animamq; meam eidem S. D. N. spondetis, quod dictam Bullam secretissime nullis mortalium oculis conspiciendam apud me asservabo, tanta fide & cautione, ut ne minimum quidem ex ea re periculum, vel periculi metum ejus Sanctitas sit sensura; non enim eo consilio aut animo eam Commissionem impetrari tam vehementer cupio, ut vell illius vigore ullus processus aut aliud præterea quicquid ageretur, vel eadem publice privatimve legere illa ulli exhiberetur, sed ut hac quasi arrha & pignore summæ paternæque S. D. N. erga Regiam Majestatem benevolentiæ apud me depositio, quum videat nihil illi denegaturum quod petiverit, perspiciatq; tantum fidei ejus Sanctitatem in me reposuisse, sic mea apud dictam Majestatem augeatur Authoritas, ut quanquam vires omnes suas opesq; Apostolicæ Sedis conservationi & in pristinum statum reparationi sic sponte dicaverit, me tamen suasore & consultore omnia in posterum, & in sanguinis effusionem sit concessura & effectura, quæ in ejusdem Sedis & suæ Beatitudinis securitatem, tranquillitatem & commodum, quaquam ratione cedere poterunt.

XV. The Brieve of Pope Julius for the King's Marriage; suspected to be forged.

Julius Papa Secundus. Dilecte Fili & dilecta in Christo Filia, salutem & Apostolicam Benedictionem. Romani Pontificis præcellens Authoritas concessa sibi desuper utitur potestate, prout (personarum, negotiorum & temporum qualitate pensata) id in Domino conspicit expedire. Oblatæ nobis nuper pro parte vestra petitionis series continebat, quod cum alias tu Filia Catharina, & tunc in humanis agens quondam Arthurus Carissimi in Christo Filii nostri Henrici Angliæ Regis illustrissimus primogenitus, pro conservandis pacis & amicitiæ nexibus & fœderibus inter præfatum Angliæ Regem, & Carissimum in Christo Filium nostrum Ferdinandum Regem, & Carissimam in Christo Filiam nostram Elizabeth. Reginam Catholicos Hispaniarum & Siciliæ, Matrimonium per verba legitime de præsenti contraxeritis, illudque carnali copula consummaveritis, quia tamen Dominus Arthurus prole ex hujusmodi Matrimonio non suscepta, decessit, & hujusmodi vinculum pacis & concordiæ inter præfatos Reges & Reginam ita firmiter verisimiliter non duraret, nisi etiam illud alio affinitatis vinculo consoveretur & corroboraretur, ex his & certis aliis causis, desideratis Matrimonium inter vos per verba legitime de præsenti contrahere: Sed quia desiderium vestrum vestrum in præmissis adimplere non potestis, Dispensatione Apostolica desuper non obtenta, nobis propterea humiliter supplicari fecistis, ut vobis providere in præmissis de Dispensationis gratia & benignitate Apostolica dignaremur. Nos igitur qui inter singulos Christi fideles, præsertim Catholicos Reges & Principes, pacis & concordiæ amœnitatem vigere intensis desideriis affectamus, his & aliis causis animum nostrum moventibus, hujusmodi supplicationibus inclinati, vobiscum, ut alio impedimento affinitatis hujusmodi ex præmissis proveniente non obstante Matrimonium inter vos contrahere, & in eo postquam contractum fuerit, remanere, libere & licite valeatis, Authoritate Apostolica per præsentes Dispensamus; & quatenus forsan jam Matrimonium inter vos de facto publice vel clandestine contraxeritis, ac carnali copula consummaveritis, vos & quemlibet vestrum ab excessu hujusmodi, ac Excommunicationis sententia quam propterea incurristis, eadem Authoritate absolvimus, ac etiam vobiscum ut in hujusmodi Matrimonio sic de facto contracto remanere, seu illud de novo contrahere, inter vos libere & licite valeatis, similiter Dispensamus, prolem ex hujusmodi Matrimonio sive contracto sive contrahendo suscipiendam legitimam decernendo. Volumus autem, si hujusmodi Matrimonium de facto contraxistis, Confessor, per vos & quemlibet vestrum eligendus, pœnitentiam, quam adimplere teneamini, propterea vobis injungat. Dat. Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 10. ILlud igitur video maxime necessarium superesse ut Decretalis Bulla, quam Reverendissimus Dominus Legatus secum defert, secreto legenda exhibeatur nonnullis ex Regis Consultoribus, eo quidem consilio, non ut in judicium proferatur, vel ad causam definiendam adhibeatur, sed solum ut perspicientes illi, quorum prudentia & Autoritas non parva est, nihil a me fuisse omissum, quod causam Regis possit secundam reddere, omniaq; fuisse a S. D. Proinde, Domine Gregori, iterum atq; iterum vos impense rogo, quod ad S. D. XVII. John Cassali's Letter about a Conference he had with the Pope. An Original.

QUum Tabellarius D. Vestræ Reverendissimæ cum ejus mandatis literisq; die 2. Novemb. datis Bononiam ad Equitem fratrem pervenisset, neq; ipse tunc posset præ debilitate properatis itineribus Romam venire, ne ad eam rem longioris temporis moram interponeret, misit per dispositos equos D. Vincentium Cassalium fratrem nostrum patruelem, volens ipsum statim subsequi; venit igitur D. Vincentius Cassalius. At ego vestræ Dominationis Reverendissimæ literis lectis ac perpensis, S.D.N. adivi, & ea quæ D. V. Reverendissima scripserat, diligenter ejus Sanctitati exposui, ipsasq; etiam literas recitavi, quæ prudentissime & efficacissime omnia explicabant. Atq; hujusmodi verbis sum loquutus. Cotton Libr. Vitell. B. 10.

Non locus hic nec tempus postulat, Beatissime Pater, ut ego nunc commemorem, quanto amore, quanto animi affectu, quibusq; officiis illa Regia Majestas Apostolicam Sedem Sanctitatemq; Vestram sit ubique omni tempore prosecuta, quantaq; observantia & fide Reverendissimus Dominus Eboracen. semper coluerit; nec recensendum hic videtur, quot labores, quot incommoda subiverint, quæ officia, quas multoties impensas effecerint, quærentes Ecclesiasticum statum, Christianam Religionem, & Catholicam Fidem protegere ac conservare: nec vestra Sanctitas ignorare debet, quibus laboribus, quantis precibus, quot tabellariis, quot oratoribus missis, quot non dicam literis, sed voluminibus conscriptis, post multa insuper Jurisperitorum consilia, tum ex Anglia allata, tum hic etiam formata, fuerit tandem à vestra Sanctitate impetratum, ut res eo, quo fuit pacto, componeretur: Qua ratione Regiæ Majestatis desiderio indulgebatur, & Beatitudinis vestræ honori ac conscientiæ, justitiæq; & æquitati consulebatur: At nunc Sanctitas Vestra animadvertit illos, præter omnium nostrum spem & opinionem, omni auxilio penitus esse destitutos: Reverendiss. Campegius non modo non ostendit, se adeo urgentibus precibus Serenissimi Regis obtemperare velle, sed ut primum ad Colloquium venit, rem totam pervertit, Regiam Majestatem à Divortio dissuasit, perinde ac si ei Legatio demandata fuerit, ut Serenissimo Regi ex parte Reginæ persuadere debeat, ut se à Divortio abstineat, adeo ut non possit Regia Majestas stimulum hunc Conscientiæ suo pectore evellere, semperque in ea mentis perturbatione illi sit commorandum, ut omnibus horis cogitet successorem sui Reghi ex suo semine defuturum. Neq; adhuc Reverendissimus Campegius ullam significationem dedit, velle se ad id exequendum descendere, quod esset illa generali Commissione continetur; verum, quod pejus etiam est, quum multis precibus Bulla Decretalis in hac causa Regia impetrata esset, promiserit; Vestra Sanctitas se permissurum ut Serenissimo Regi Reverendiss. D. Eboracen. ostenderetur, & eorum manibus crederetur, quam ipsi aliquibus ex Secretissimis Consiliariis ostenderent, ut Serenissimus Rex de totius negotii æquitate instructior fieret, noluit Reverendissimus Campegius eam credere Serenissimo Regi, aut Reverendis-simo Domino Eboracen. suo in ea causa Collegæ. Cur autem velit Vestra Sanctitas Regiam Majestatem in eam spem adduxisse, ut deinde hoc pacto illam frustretur ac deludat. Tunc S. D. N. injecta in meum brachium manu, me ulterius loqui prohibuit, se ira accensum non abscondens, dixit, non parum sibi de D. V. Reverendissima conquerendum esse, atque sub ejus fide se deceptum esse; Bullam Decretalem dedisse, ut eatum Regi ostenderetur, concremareturq; statim: ad hoc me (inquit) multis ille magnisque precibus protraxit, ostendens, si id non daretur, manifestum suæ saluti ruinam impendere; nunc autem eam Bullam quæ debuit esse Secretissima, vult divulgare, neque unquam se prorsus concessurum ut Consiliariis ostendatur: literas (inquit) ipsas Reverendissimi Eboracen. proferre possum, quibus id tantum, quod dixi, peto, & ipsum Equitem Cassalium testem volo, quod Dominus Stephanus Gardinerus & ipse nil aliud à me postulaverunt, nec si postulassent, quamquam amplius obtinuissent; atq; utinam aliter rem petissent, eam namq; facile denegassem, nec ad hanc pœnitentiam veniissem; ex qua vel unius digiti jactura (modo fieri possit) quod factum fuit revocarem, video enim quantum mali ex eo mihi subeundum sit. Quum S. D. N. hæc & similia contra suum morem dixisset, ego in eam sententiam subsequutus, sciendum esse, quod D. V. Reverendissima petit, non esse ab eo, quod ejus Sanctitas constitutum fuisse dicit alienum, nec D. V. Reverendissima hanc rem divulgari velle, aut secundum eam Bullam sententiam ferri. Cæterum Regiæ Majestati & sibi tradi, ut possent aliquibus fidelioribus cariorib usq; Consiliariis ostendere, ut ipsi de re tota fiant instructiores, quod perinde arcanum erit, ac si in nullius notitiam deveniisset. At nos (inquam) Sanctitas vestra plerosq; habet quibus quum aliquid arcani crediderit, putet id non minus celatum esse, quam si uno tantum pectore contineretur, quod multo magis Sereniissimo Angliæ Regi evenire debet, cui singuli in suo Regno sunt subjecti, neque etiamsi velint, possunt non esse fidelissimi: Væ namq; illis si vel parvo momento ab illius voluntate recederent. Quid hoc præterea obesse potest? an non sic pertum, sic constitutum fuit? quæ ratio Sanctitatem Vestram propositum mutare cogit? Ibi Pontifex iracundus, & concitatior etiam quam paulo ante: Haud (inquit) ita fuit constitutum, nec me latet, quid de ea Bulla facere cogitent, & cujusmodi ex eo mihi damnum redundaturum sit; firmum igitur illud habeatis, me decrevisse, neque sententiam mutaturum, neq; quicquam amplius hac in re permittere. At ego, nolit (quæso) vestra Sanctitas sic ex certa animi sententia loqui, ac potius in his literis Reverendissimi Domini Eboracen. consideret damna, ruinas, hæreses, quæ Vestræ Sanctitatis culpa in illo Regno orirentur: Regia enim Majestas male à Vestra Beatitudine tractata, injuria, & ignominia affecta, illum & voluntatem, quam semper optimam in Sedem Apostolicam habuit in contrariam partem convertere posset, hoc est Dominationi Vestræ pectore considerandum. Esto quod de hujus negotii æquitate disputum non sit, concedamus etiam hanc rem malam, & mali exempli ram (quod quidem secus esse judicaverunt omnes) an non Vestra Sanctitas novit pleraq; quæ non bona sunt, preferri nonnunquam à solere, ne pejora patiamur; atque hoc tum aliis in rebus, tum imprimis hæresium evitandarum causa providendum est, quas videmus, quum mel altiores radices egerint, non posse amplius extirpari: atq; ibi ad us pedes genibus flexis, eam precibus omnibus sum obtestatus, ut amici-

tam potentiſſimi Regis conſervare, obſervantiam Dominationis Veſtræ Reverendiſſimæ erga ejus Sanctitatem, noſtramq; ſervitutem reſpicere vellet; relicta namque Regiæ Majeſtatis amicitia, religionis imminutio ſubſequeretur, & Regni illius à tam antiqua cum ſede Apoſtolica conjunctione diſſolutio, ac Dominationis Veſtræ Reverendiſſimæ gratia & Autoritas apud Sereniſſ. Regem non ſuo merito deficeret, ejuſq; fortaſſe ſalus periclitaretur; Nos autem qui ſemper Beatitudini Veſtræ inſervivimus, pro qua tot bonis officiis functi ſumus, & tantum operæ perfecimus, ad integram amicitiam inter Regiam Majeſtatem & Veſtram Sanctitatem conſervandam, in medio noſtrarum actionum, Regni illius damna & calamitatem, Noſtramq; certiſſimam ruinam conſpiceremus. Ad hæc S. D. N. & brachiorum & totius corporis agitatione, animum commotum oſtendens, volo (inquit) ego ruinam, quæ mihi modo immineat, conſiderare, & idipſum quod feci valde me angit; Si hæreſes, vel alia mala oritura ſunt, quænam in eo mea culpa erit? ſatis meæ conſcientiæ fuerit me vacaſſe culpa, cui eſſem obnoxius, ſi hoc etiam quod nunc ex me petitur concederem: Nec Reverendiſſimus Dominus Eboracenſis, nec vos ullam cauſam de me conquerendi habetis, quicquid nunc pollicitus ſum præſtiti, neq; aliud unquam, etſi mihi faciendi eſſet facultas Regia Majeſtas & Reverendiſſimus Dominus Eboracen. à me petierunt, quod non promptiſſime conceſſerim, ut quiſque facile intelligat, quanti eas ſemper fecerim; ad aliqua etiam Veſtri cauſa faciliorem me præbui. Cæterum ubi vertitur meæ conſcientiæ integritas, omnia poſthabenda cenſeo, agant per ſe ipſi quod volunt, Legatum remittant eo prætextu, quod in cauſam ulterius procedi nolint, & deinceps ut ipſi volent rem conficiant, modo ne me autore injuſte quicquam agatur. Tunc ego, Nonne Veſtra Sanctitas vult, ut ex vigore Commiſſionis procedatur? quod quum velle affirmaſſet, dixi, igitur Reverendiſſimus Campegius Sanctitatis Veſtræ Voluntati adverſatur, Divortium enim Regi diſſuaſit; At Pontifex Ego (inquit) illi impoſui, ut Divortium Regi diſſuaderet, perſuaderet Reginæ; quod autem ad Commiſſionem pertinet, ſi requiratur, exequetur. Sumus ergo (inquam) concordes, Beatiſſime Pater, quod quum ita ſit, quid nocere poterit Decretalem Bullam aliquibus ſecretiſſimis ac juramento adactis Conſiliariis oſtendiſſe? Tum quaſſans caput, Scio (inquit) quid de ea facere conſtituant, verum nondum Campegii literas ex Anglia legi, quapropter die craſtino ad me redibitis. Hoc pacto S. D. N. primo die me dimiſit. Adfuit his ſermonibus Dominus Vincentius Caſſalius, quem ob equitem fratrem huc miſſum dixi, qui equitem ipſum excuſavit, quod quamvis ille animadverteret negotium hoc tanti momenti eſſe, ut etiam cum vitæ diſcrimine Romam per diſpoſitos equos ſibi properandum eſſe videret, nihilominus ſuperſediſſe videns quod ſi id feciſſet neceſſe ſibi futurum domi, & in lectulo, permanere potius, quam de re tanta coram ejus Sanctitate agere. Atque interim Dominus Vincentius multas rationes ad perſuadendum, equitis Caſſalii nomine adhibuit, quas eodem pacto ejus Sanctitas in ſequentem diem rejecit.

Poſtridie ejus diei ſignatura habita eſt, cui ego tanquam referendarius interfui, in veſperumq; eſt protracta, nec judicavi opportunum Pontificem ſignaturæ munere defeſſum aggredi, quum præſertim ejus Sanctitas diceret ſe nondum Campegii literas perlegiſſe. Res igitur iterum in diem proximum rejecta fuit, quo poſtea horam commodam nactus, Pontificem adivi, quumque omnium Capitum, quæ D. V. Reverendiſſimæ literis continebantur, quaſi ſummam effeciſſem, ne quicquam per oblivionem præterirem, ab ea primum parte cœpi, in qua dicitur ſuam Sanctitatem conceſſiſſe Commiſſionem generalem in ampliſſima forma, & promiſſe ferendam ſententiam, ſe ratificaturum. Pontifex hoc verum eſſe affirmavit, dicens ſe contentum eſſe, ut ad ſententiam procedatur; Quæ vero parte eſt, ejus ſanctitatem Bullam Decretalem conceſſiſſe, ut ſecretiores Regiæ Majeſtatis conſiliarios inſtrueret, id à veritate longe remotum dixit, poſſeq; ad id ſe literas D. V. Reverendiſſimæ oſtendere: Atque ea repetivit, quæ priore die ſuper hoc dixerat, viz. Dominum Stephanum Gardinerum & Equitem Caſſalium ſe teſtes habere, hanc Bullam non ea conditione petitam fuiſſe ut oſtenderetur cuiquam, præterquam Sereniſſimo Regi & D. V. Reverendiſſimæ, & Campegium nunc ad ſe ſcribere tantundem effeciſſe, quo facto ex conventione Bullam comburi deberi promiſſurum quoque ſe dixit, ut ſi quæ allegantur, probentur, ad ſententiam ferendam procedatur, ſe id ratum habiturum. Quumque ego quæſiſſem an vellet, quæ fierent per eam Bullam comprobare, minime id oportere dixit; negavit quoque eam conſiliariis oſtendendam eſſe, qui tametſi rem bonam non judicarent, approbarent tamen ſuper ea Sanctitatis Conſcientiam; ac ſæpius interim repetivit, non eſſe amplius in ea re commorandum. Ad aliam igitur partem deveni, in qua D. V. Reverendiſſima dicit, Reverendiſſimum Campegium Divortium inter Regem Sereniſſimum & Reginam conatum diſſuadere: Tum Pontifex Campegium ſcribere dixit, eo ſe etiam functurum officio, ut Reginæ Divortium perſuaderet, quam ab eo alienam invenerit; modeſte tamen eum ait, locutam fuiſſe, & Conſiliarios petiiſſe, qui ex Hiſpania denegati fuerint, ex Flandria autem conceſſi. Dixit etiam S. D. N. ſe literas ad Regem, Reverendiſſimo Campegio ex ſuo Chirographo dediſſe, ut Regia Majeſtas fidem his haberet, quæ Reverendiſſimus Campegius ex Sanctitatis nomine diceret. Ad illam deinde partem deveni, ubi de Cauſam Regis perinde differt, ac ſi nolit ad judicium, ſententiamque in partem ſuæ Majeſtatis ferendam deſcendere, donec S. D. N. certiorem prius effecerit, de his ad hanc cauſam concernentibus, quæ ibi vidit & audivit. Ad hæc reſpondit, Campegium quandocunq; requiſitus fuerit, proceſſurum, neq; de ſuperſedendo Commiſſionem habere; ſe tantum injunxiſſe, ut quum procedi cœptum eſſet, ſe certiorem faceret, ut tamen interim moræ aliquid interponeretur. At ubi eſt, nullo pacto adduci vult, ut mihi ſuo Collegæ Commiſſionem hanc Decretalem credat. Dixit verum id eſſe, ideo factum ne pluribus palam fieret, eaque conditione qua petitum fuit, oſtenſam nequicquam amplius expectandum, ea repetens, quæ prius etiam circa hoc dixerat. At ego, videat Sanctitas veſtra quod ex his verbis, quæ hic ſcripta ſunt loquor, quæ dicunt Sanctitatem veſtram Commiſſionem Decretalem conceſſiſſe, ea conditione ut aliquibus Regiis Conſiliariis oſtenderetur. Tum Pontifex iterum excandeſcens; Oſtendam (inquit) literas ipſius Reverendiſſimi Eboracen. nec loquor mendacia, & non minus meis verbis, literiſq; prioribus Reverendiſſimi Eboracen. fides eſt habenda quam his quas nunc affert. Tum ejus Sanctitatem mitigari quæſivi, ſi minus urgenter mandata exquerer, quoniam id à me fieri oportet. Quod ad Regni ruinas, damna, calamitates, ſcandala, & diminutionem Religionis, multa in eandem ſententiam dixit, in quam primo die locutus fuit; quum diceret, Egregium vero decus Sereniſſimo huic Regi fuerit, ſi ipſe, qui Fidei Defenſor & ſit & appelletur, qui libros etiam pro ejus defenſione ediderit, eandem quae impugnare cogatur; Ad hæc quam recte ſint venturi, viderint ipſi. Eo autem loco, in quo dicebatur aliquid de Regio negotio, inter Generalem Fratrum de obſervantia, & ejus Sanctitatem conveniſſe, & eo autore fœdus inter ejus Sanctitatem & Cæſarianos componendum, Dixit, id oſtendere, quod de Regio negotio nihil promiſerit, quod quicunq; pollicitus ſit, & quin poterit habita ratione ſuæ conſcientiæ, re ipſa præſtare velit: In eo autem quod de Pace tractanda affertur, dixit, ſe nullum modum in tali negotio invenire, neq; ſe adhuc ſcire, quod ille Generalis ullas pacis conditiones ſit allaturus; atq; ea inſuper addidit, quæ meis literis die 15 Novemb. datis D. V. Reverendiſſimæ ſignificavi.

Quum alio etiam die Pontificem otioſum nactus eſſem, multa cum ejus Sanctitate, de rebus præteritis diſſerui, deque eo, quod ego ad ejus utilitatem cum Venetis egiſſem, quoniam ſcirem Sereniſſimi Regis, & D. V. Reverendiſſimæ voluntatem eſſe, ut quotieſcunque occaſio daretur, pro ſuæ Sanctitatis commodo omnia fierent: Expoſui deinde quantopere elaboraſſem pro negotio Cerviæ & Ravennæ, utque multa Gallici Oratores egiſſent à D. V. Reverendiſſima potiſſimum inſtigati; Addidi eum efficaciſſima verba, quibus uſus eſt Dominus Stephanus Gardinerus. Ad omnia S. D. M. reſpondit, ſe ea de re Regiæ Majeſtati, & D. V. Reverendiſſimæ gratias habere, & mihi quoque gratias egit; dixitque, non tamen omnes ſimul tantum efficere potuiſſe, ut mihi meæ civitates redderentur. Scitis autem conditiones fœderis in quo ego quoque eram, fuiſſe, ut quum quis noſtrum injuria afficeretur, ab eo cæteri confœderati injuriam propulſarent, quod multo magis pro me faciendum erat, quum qui in ipſo fœdere eſſent, mihi injuriarentur; Et inde Cæſariani volunt mihi perſuadere Venetas non fuiſſe id facturos, ſi putaſſent Regi Angliæ aut Chriſtianiſſimo diſpliciturum: Neque interim deſiſtunt, multa, magnaq; mihi polliceri, unde ego quod alias etiam dixi, id quod affertur, quum aliter facere nequeam, accipere cogar. Illudq; etiam vos ſcire volo promiſſum mihi fuiſſe, ſi legatus ille in Angliam mitteretur, futurum ut mihi civitates à Venetis reſtituerentur. Tum ego, non omnia, Beatiſſime Pater, adhuc ſunt perfecta, Rex enim potentiſſimus omnino operam dabit, ut illæ civitates Beatitudini dini Veſtræ reſtituantur: An non, quæ ejus Majeſtas ſcribit, Veſtra Sanctitas animadvertit? Cui videndum imprimis eſt, ne de ipſa Sereniſſimo Regi ſit conquerendum; & ex hac occaſione iterum ad Regiam Cauſam redii. At ejus Sanctitas dixit, ſe omnia quæ potuiſſet pro Regia Majeſtate & D. V. Reverendiſſima feciſſe, facturamq; etiam libenter.

Nonne igitur, (inquam) poſſet ratio aliqua inveniri qua concederetur eam Bullam aliquibus ex Secretioribus Conſiliariis oſtendi poſſe? Tum Pontifex, non (inquit) Non poteſt hoc fieri, nec à me impetrari! quod ſi ullo modo fieri potuiſſet, minime tam multas magnaſque preces à Sereniſſimo Rege, & Reverendiſſimo Domino Eboracen. expectaſſem, quumque quibuſdam validis Argumentis inſtarem, prohibuit me ulterius de hujuſmodi re loqui. Nolui ego unquam dicere, equitem fratrem brevi eſſe venturum, ne Pontifex rem in illius adventum protraheret, ea tantum de cauſa, ut moram interponeret.

Omnibus deinde aliis diebus ſuper eodem negotio inſtiti, nunquam tamen Pontifex ſententiam ſuam ulla ex parte immutare voluit; tantum illud decrevit, Nuntium mittere velle, qui ſuam ſententiam verbis explicaret: quumq; nulla mihi amplius ſpes relinqueretur quicquam amplius impetrandi, tum demum dixi, Equitem fratrem Romæ futurum ſequenti die, qui quum adeo gravis momenti rem cerneret, noluerit ſuæ valetudini conſulere, & quod is minime putaſſet, ſuæ ſervitutis in ejus Sanctitatem merita hoc modo male tractanda fuiſſe. Gratum ſibi dixit Pontifex Equitis adventum fore, quodque cum ipſo & conſtitueremus omnia, negans ſe tamen ſe ullo pacto id quod nunc petitur conceſſurum: Venit itaq; Eques frater, qui non ſecus ac ſi nunquam quiſquam de hac re cum Pontifice egiſſet, ſingula de integro tractavit, omnibus his modis & rationibus tentatis quæ excogitari poterunt. Quæ omnia minutim Dominus Vincentius Caſſalius noſter patruelis, quem ad ipſum mittimus, verbis coram explicabat, egoque ne D. V. Reverendiſſimæ jam nimis moleſtus ſim, de hac ulterius non ſcribam.

Quod ad Wintonienſem Expeditionem ſpectat, multum hi Reverendiſſimi Domini Cardinales offendebantur, nunc ab ipſis pecuniarum remiſſiones poſtulari, quum deprædata eorum bona ſint, ipſiq; propterea ad paupertatem redacti. Quibus ego oſtendi, majus emolumentum ad ipſos venturum, ſi D. V. Reverendiſſima unam Eccleſiam acciperet, alteram deponeret, quam ſi alter tantum Wintonienſis Eccleſiæ expeditionem faceret; neque D. V. Reverendiſſimam nimis hanc permutationem optare dixi, quum Wintonienſis non multo Eccleſiæ Dunelmenſi ſit dotior. Ad hæc dixerunt, quod libentius D. V. Reverendiſſimæ quam cuiquam alteri erunt gratificaturi, quoniam ipſa de ſede Apoſtolica ſit ſemper bene merita, non tamen ſe vereri, quin D. V. Reverendiſſima Wintonienſem Eccleſiam illius Regni primariam ſit acceptura. Ego quam Pontificem, & deinde Cardinales eos qui magis rebus noſtris ſtudere ambiſſem, effeci ut Pontifex, de ea re in Conſiſtorio referret, quod ejus Sanctitas effecit, multis etiam additis laudibus D. V. Reverendiſſimæ quibus aliqui Cardinales, & maxime Neapolitani, reſponderunt ea quæ ſuperius dixi. Illud tandem decreverunt, quod quum D. V. Reverendiſſima ſolvere debeat, pro expeditione Wintonienſis Eccleſiæ, & pro retentione Eccleſiæ Eboracenſis & Abbatiæ Sancti Albani, habita ratione totius ſummæ, ejus pars dimidia V. D. Reverendiſſimæ condona-condonaretur, & ut ad 13 vel 14 millia aureorum remittant, & non multo plus eo, quod pro Wintonien. tum Eccleſia deberet ſolvere. Id Reverendiſſimis Cardinalibus ideo diſplicebat, quoniam nollent res hujuſmodi in exemplum trahi, quum præſertim Magnas Franciæ Cancellarius, ipſe quoque in magna quadam Expeditione, idipſum in præſentia flagitat, quod illi concedere nolunt.

Cætera ex Domino Vincentio D. V. Reverendiſſima copioſius coram intelligat; Quæ bene valeat. Dat. Romæ die 17 Decemb. 1528.

XXI. An

XXI. An Information given to the Pope about the Divorce. An Original.

Annotatio Summaria eorum quæ aliis libellis fusius explicata S. D. N. tum licere, tum expedire, persuadent, ut in Causa Regiæ Majestatis Sententiam divortii ferat.

PRimum licet atque etiam expedit dirimere hoc Matrimonium, quod juri tum divino tum humano repugnat. Cotton Lib. Vitel. B. 11.

Divinum enim jus duci prohibet Uxorem fratris, quin hic fratris Uxorem ductam fuisse sit notorium.

Humanum vero jus, duo hujus Matrimonii impedimenta continet, alterum affinitatis, quod divino jure inductum severissime sancivit; alterum publicæ Honestatis, & justitiæ, quod promulgavit Deus, si ex definitione Matrimonii, divini, humanique juris commutatio interveniret, quibusnam auspiciis hoc Matrimonium constare dicemus, quod utroque jure adversante ac repugnante, contractum est, coit, & utcunque consistit?

Sed cessavit, inquiunt, in hac specie juris utriusq; prohibitio per gratiam & Dispensationem summi Pontificis.

Respondetur quidem istis multis modis. Primo non esse videri, quod nullum est, nullum autem haberi quod sine Autoritate legitima fiat; deniq; Pontificis Autoritatem non eatenus pertinere, ut in gradibus divina lege prohibitis dispensare possit: non opinionibus Scripturiorum, qui Pontificis Authoritatem imminutam velint, sed ipsius Pontificis sententia constat, quem suæ Jurisdictionis modum, & optime noviſſe & ampliare velle potius quam restringere credendum est; quæ quum ita sint, etiam si humani juris prohibitio per Dispensationem sublata videatur, manet nihilominus immotum, quod divinum est, si ipsis contra seipsos credimus Pontificibus.

Deinde, ut posse Pontifices dispensare fateamur, & in ea parte tribuamus plus Authoritatis quam ipsi sibiipsis audeant arrogare, tamen non possim, non quocunque modo, non temere, & sine omni consideratione, posse eos dispensare; atq; fatendum est ne suo testimono Dissipatores verius, quam Dispensatores appellentur. Itaque ut causam urgentissimam & evidentissimam, tum etiam manifestissimam debet habere Dispensatio, precibus deniq; veris, non ementitis atque confictis inniti.

In Dispensatione autem, quo constat hoc Matrimonium, verbis quidem pacis causa proponitur, sed non ideo quia sic refertur, re ipsa subsistit, Pontificis facta non ad verborum superficiem, sed rei ipsius solidam veritatem expendi convenit.

Certum est, pacem multis modis, tum firmissimam fuisse unoque Matrimonio conciliatam, pactorum deniq; ac fœderum vi constantem; istud necessario Matrimonium non desideraſſe, & jam Dispensationem sine causa interveniſſe dicimus, & consequenter nullam esse, manereq; adhuc divinam prohibitionem atq; adeo & humanam.

Porro etiam, si aliqua sit, & causam haberet, tum mendaciis conflata est, subreptitia & obreptitia merito appellanda, jure tum divino, tum humano reprobata.

Nam quum quod alioqui Canonibus cautum sit, ipsius etiam Dispensationis proœmium contineat, "Romani Pontificis Autoritatem concessa "sibi desuper uti potestate, prout personarum, causarum, & temporum "qualitate pensata, id in Domino salubriter conspicit expedire; Quomodo potuit S. D. N. hujus Serenissimi Regis qualitates pensare quas ignoravit? Neque enim de ætate quicquam, quæ in contrahendo hoc testimonio præcipua qualitas erat, narrabatur, & tamen illum annum ex tempore duodecimum non excessisse notorium est; & tacita ad hunc modum ætate, mendacium pro causa suggestum est; manifestissimum; Cupisse viz. tunc Serenissimum Regem contrahere Matrimonium, ad hoc ut pacis fœdera continuarentur: facti veritas est, tum quid agebatur ignorasse, & etiamsi tum sciviset, tamen non fuisse verum quod cuperet ad hoc ut pacis fœdera continuarentur, ætas ostendit, quæ per communis juris dispositionem discretionem non admittit; cupere quidem affectus est, cæterum cupere contrahere Matrimonium, ad hoc ut pacis fœdera continuarentur, judicii est & discretionis. Porro autem, quum de continuandis inter duos Principes fœderibus ageretur, aliter ante mandatam executioni Bullam satis concessit, & re integra, causa, si qua fuit, cessavit.

Sed manet nihilominus eorum sententia, qui Pontificem non posse dispensare affirmant, secundum quos nec Breve nec Bulla consistit; deinde Breve falsum esse, & pro falso judicari debere, multis rationibus ostenditur; denique falsum cum sit, & tamen prioris Bullæ errores corrigat, illam opinionem merito confirmet, ne prior Dispensatio efficax videatur, vel eorum judicio, qui hoc Matrimonium defendere studuerunt, vix quæ veris allegationibus diffisi, ad falsas & confictas Dispensationes, vim objecta removentes confugere coacti sunt.

Ista, si singula minus sufficiant, saltem collata, obtineant & persuadeant licere. Illa vero opinio multis persuasa, Pontificem viz. non potuisse dispensare, ut sola infirmet Dispensationem, non petitur, sed hanc nihilominus aliquid considerationis; quanquam enim refellatur a quibusdam & reprobetur, manet tamen scripta, atque adeo testimonio Pontificis comprobata. Perpendatur deinde causa & suggestum veritas, si mendacium intervenisse apparet, & quod est notorium, illa Dispensationem adversariorum factis in novi Brevis fabricatione tam reprobari, quis non videt eo his causis licere ut sententia Divortii proferatur?

Postremo expedit ut id pronuntietur, quod in omnium sententia consentiat, Reprobatio autem Dispensationis cum omnibus conveniat opinionibus, sive quia Autoritas abfuit, sive quia non recte interposita dicatur; Approbatio vero cum istis dissentit omnibus.

Expedit ut firma sit & inconcussa Regni Successio, quæ contra has opiniones confirmari non potest.

Expedit ut conscientia Serenissimi Regis his scrupulis impedita, & turbata, expedita & tranquilla reddatur.

Breviter,

Breviter, expedit votis Sereniſſimi Regis ſatisfieri, qui pro genuinis & innatis ſuis virtutibus, non niſi optima cupit, & modo etiam optimo votorum ſuorum compotem effici laborat; ſi non virtutem ſpectaret, cætera nihil haberent difficultatis, ſed omnium virtutum cogitationem quandam eſſe animadvertens, ſuum juſtitiæ decorum, quod temperantia eſt, quærit, et juſtum, juſto modo, obtineat & aſſequatur. To my loving Friends Maſter Stephen Gardiner Doctor of both Laws; Sir Francis Brian, and Sir Gregory Caſſalis, Knights; and Mr. Peter Vannes Secretary to the King's Highneſs for the Latin Tongue; His Graces Orators, Reſidents in the Court of Rome.

XXII. The ſecond part of a long Diſpatch of the Cardinals concerning the Divorce. An Original.

ANother part of your Charge conſiſteth in expedition of the King's great and weighty Cauſe of Matrimony, whereupon depend ſo many high Conſequences, as for no earthly Cauſe to ſuffer or tolerate, tract or delay, in what caſe ſoever the Pope's Holineſs be of amendment or danger of life; nor as is aforeſaid, oweth to be by his Holineſs pretermitted, whether the ſame be in the ſtate of Recovery, or in any doubt or deſpair thereof: for one aſſured and principal fundamental and ground is to be regarded, whereupon the King's Highneſs doth plant and build his Acts and Cogitations in this behalf, which is from the reaſonable favour and juſtice, being the things from the which the Pope's Holineſs, in proſperis nec adverſis, may lawfully and honeſtly digreſs; and when the plainneſs of his cauſe is well conſidered, with the manifeſt Preſumptions, Arguments, and ſuſpicions, both of the inſufficiency of the Bull, and falſity of the Brief, ſuch as may lead any Man of reaſon or intendment, well to perceive, and know, that no ſufficiency or aſſured truth can be therein; How may the Pope's Holineſs, ex æquo & juſto, refuſe or deny to any Chriſtian Man, much leſs to a Prince of ſo high merits, and in a cauſe whereupon depend ſo many conſequences, to his Holineſs well known, for a vain reſpect of any Perſon, or by excuſe of any Sickneſs, juſtifie, colour, or defend any manner refuſal, tract, or delay, uſed in declaration of the truth in ſo great a Matter, which neither for the infinite conveniences that thereby might enſue, admitteth or ſuffereth to be delayed, nor by other than himſelf, his Act or Authority, may lawfully be declared? And well may his Holineſs know, That to none it appertaineth more to look unto the juſtneſs of the King's deſire in this behalf, than to his Highneſs his ſelf, whoſe Intereſt, whoſe Cauſe, with the ſame of his Realm and Succeſſion reſteth herein; for if his Grace were minded, or would intend to do a thing inique or unjuſt, there were no need to recur unto the Pope's Holineſs for doing thereof. But becauſe his Highneſs and his Council, who beſt know the whole of this Matter, and to whoſe part it

it belongeth moſt profoundly to weigh and ponder every thing concerning the ſame, be well aſſured of the truth of the Matter, needing none other thing but for obſervence of his Duty towards God and his Church, to have the ſame Truth alſo approbate and declared by him to whom the doing thereof appertaineth; his Grace therefore ſeeing an untruth alledged, and that ſo craftily as by undue and perverſe ways the ſame without good reaſon adhibited, may for a ſeaſon bring things into confuſion, doth communicate unto the Pope's Holineſs preſumptions and evidences enough, and ſufficient to inform the Conſcience of his Holineſs of the very truth: which then, if his Holineſs will not do but either for affection, fear, or other private cauſe, will hearken to every dilatory and vain allegation of ſuch as led upon undue ground would colour the Truth; What doth his Holineſs leſs therein, than under a right vain colour expreſly deny and refuſe the ſaid Juſtice, which to be done either in health or ſickneſs, in a matter of ſo great moment, is in no wiſe tolerable? But for the ſame reaſons that be before mentioned, is the thing, whether the Pope's Holineſs be in hope or deſpair of life, without further tract to be abſolved and determined; for if Almighty God grant his Holineſs life, this Act is, and always ſhall be able to bear it ſelf, and is meet to be an Example, a Preſident, and a Law, in all like Caſes emerging, the Circumſtances and Specialities of the ſame in every part concurring as they do in this; nor can the Emperor make exceptions at the ſame, when he beſt knowing, perceaſe, the truth ſhall ſee the grounds and occaſions, that of neceſſity and meer juſtice have enforced and conſtrained the Pope's Holineſs thereunto, which he could not refuſe to do, unleſs he would openly and manifeſtly commit expreſs injury and notorious injuſtice. For be it that the Pope's Holineſs hearkning to the ſaid frivolous and vain Allegations, will refuſe to declare the Law herein to the King's purpoſe, then muſt his Holineſs, either ſtanding in doubt, leave and ſuffer the Cauſe to remain in ſuſpence to the extream danger of the King's Realm and Succeſſion for ever, or elſe declare the Bull or Breve, or both to be good, which I ſuppoſe neither his Holineſs, nor any true Chriſtian Man can do, ſtanding the manifeſt occaſions, preſumptions, and apparent evidences to the contrary. Then if the matter be not to be left in ſuſpence, no Judgment can be truly given to the approbation of the Bull or Breve; how can the Pope's Holineſs of Conſcience, Honour or Vertue, living or dying, thus procraſtinate or put over the immediate finiſhing thereof according to the King's deſire? or how may his Holineſs find his Conſcience towards God exonerate, if either living he ſhould be the cauſe of ſo many evils as hereof may ariſe; or dying, wilfully leave this ſo great Matter, by his own default, in this confuſion, incertainty and perplexity? It is not to be ſuppoſed, that ever Prince moſt devout to the See Apoſtolick, could ſo long tolerate ſo high an injury, as being ſo merited towards the ſaid See, is both unacquitted for his kindneſs with any ſpecial Grace, and alſo denied upon his petition of that which is evident to be plain Juſtice. This thing is otherwiſe to be looked upon than for the Pope's Sickneſs, where moſt need were to put an end unto it, to be delayed, ſeeing that living and amending, it is of it ſelf expedient and juſtifiable, and dying, it ſhall be an act both neceſſary, meritorious and honourable For this cauſe ye now knowing the King's mind in this behalf, shall if ye have not already before this time spoken with the Pope's Holiness at length in these Matters, as the King's Grace trusteth ye have done, follicite as well by the means of Messire Nicolo Sylviati, as by the Bishop of Verone, and otherwise as ye can think best, to have such commodious access unto his Holiness, as ye may declare the Premises unto him; which by your wisdoms, in as effectual and vive manner as ye can, open it unto his Holiness. It is undoubtedly to be thought the same shall rather be to his comfort and encrease of Health, than to any his trouble or unquietness; and that his Holiness hearing these Reasons not evitable, will whether he be in way and hope of amendment, or otherwise, both proceed to the said indication, and also to the Declaration of the Law, and passing of a sufficient and ample Decretal, as hath been devised in the King's said Cause, with other such things, as by former Letters and instructions, by the Decrees mentioned in the same, that failing have been committed unto you, to be solicited and procured there; in the labouring wherof, albeit since your departures from hence, the things have by reason of the Pope's sore sickness, otherwise chanced than was here supposed, by means whereof ye not instructed what to do in any such case, were aventure not over-hasty or importune to labour these Matters, till the Pope's Holiness might be better amended, nor could percase find the means to have convenient access unto his presence for the same, ye shall nevertheless abhibit such diligence, as howsoever the sickness of his Holiness shall cease, amend, or continue, these things be not for the same, or any other cause tracted or left in longer suspense; but finding possible means to come unto the Pope's presence, to declare all such things unto the same, mentioned both in the former Letters and Instructions given unto you, and also in these presents, as may make to the purpose; and failing of often access in your own Persons to his Holiness, ye cause the Bishop of Verone, and other such assured Friends as ye can attain, being about him at such times as they may have with his Holiness, to inculcate unto him the said Points and Considerations, and all other that ye can excogitate and devise to the furtherance and advancement of these Matters, not forbearing or sparing also, if ye shall find difficulty at the Pope's hand, or in audience to be given to you or your Friends there, being about his Person, to break and open after a good fashion and manner the same unto such of the Cardinals, as ye may perceive assuredly and constantly to favour the King's Highness, and the French King in Election of a future Pope, in case (as God forbid) the Pope's Holiness should decease; and to shew unto the same Cardinals, all such things as you shall think meet, both for their more ample instruction in the truth and specialities of the Matters, as well concerning the Indication of Truce, as the King's said Cause, and the presumptuous Reasons, and plainer Evidences, leading to the insufficiency of the Bull, and apparent falsity of the said Breve; to the intent, that as many of the said Cardinals as ye can win, made sure in those Matters, they may, both in time of sickness, and also of amendment, move and induce the Pope's Holiness thereunto, laying before him as well the Merits and Honour that may ensue by the perfection of the Premises, as the danger imminent by the contrary: and semblably it shall be expedient that ye win and make sure to the same purpose, as many of the Officers of the Rota and other as ye can, who as ye write be not accustomed, nor will give counsel to any Person but the Pope's Holiness; for albeit ye cannot have them to be of the King's Council, yet nevertheless they may do as much good, or more, in training and counselling the Pope's Holiness, upon the great Reasons that you can shew unto them, to hearken unto your Overtures in this behalf. To which purpose you shall adjure, make and win, as many Friends of the Cardinals, of them, and other, as possibly may, as for the thing which the King's Highness and I esteem than twenty Papalities; and amongst other, ye shall insist, by all means and good persuasions ye can, for the continuance there of the said Bishop of Verone, so as he may countervail the Arch-Bishop of Cosuan; who, as it seemeth, is continually about the Pope's Person, and were necessary to be met with in the labours and persuasions, which by likelihood he maketh to the hindrance of the King's Purpose: For the better continuing of the which Bishop of Verone, not only the King's Highness and I write unto him at this time, as by the Copy of the same several Letters being herewith ye shall perceive, but also the French King will do the semblable. And furthermore, to the intent that the Pope's Holiness may well perceive that not only the said French King mindeth the King's said Cause, and taketh it to heart as much as it were his own, and will effectually join and concur with the King's Highness therein, but that also he is and will be conformable to the said Indication; He will send thither, with all speed, the Bishop of Bayon to further, sollicite, and set forth the same; who, before his departure from hence, which was a good season passed, was and is sufficiently and amply instructed in all things requisite to this purpose; and not only in these Matters, but also in such other as were written unto you by Vincent de Cassalis, and Hercules, upon advertisement given hither that the Popes Holiness was deceased; so as ye may be sure to have of him effectual concurrence and advice in the furtherance and sollicitation of your Charges, whether the Pope's Holiness amend, remain long sick, or (as God forbid) should fortune to die; trusting, that being so well furnished by all ways that can be devised, ye will not fail to use such diligence as may be to the consecuting and attaining of the King's Purpose: wherein, tho' ye be so amply and largely instructed, that more cannot be, yet nevertheless having lately received from the Bishop of Worcester a Memorial of divers great things to be well noted and considered, for trial of the falsity of the said Breve, I send you herewith a Copy of the same Memorial, to the intent ye substantially visiting and perusing the same, may follow and put in execution such part thereof for better trial of the falsity, as is to be done there, like as the rest meet to be done here, shall not fail to be executed with diligence accordingly.

Thus be ye with these, and other former Writings, sufficiently instructed what is to be done by you there, whether the Pope's Holiness continue long in his sickness, or whether the same fortune to decease sooner or soon, God willing, to amend. There resteth no more, but that ye always take for a perfect ground, That tho' to every new chance not before known, sufficient Provision and Instruction could not be given to you at your departure, ye always note, remember, and regard, That this the King's Cause admitteth nor suffereth any manner negation tract, or delay; wherefore knowing that ſo well as ye do, and alſo how much the Indiction of the Truce ſhall be commodious and neceſſary, both to the King's Highneſs in particular, and to all Chriſtendom in general, by means whereof his Grace ſhall avoid Contribution, and other Charges of the War, ye muſt now, if ever you will have thanks, laud, or praiſe for your Service, imploy your ſelves opportune & importune, to put an end to the Points to the King's ſatisfaction and deſire; and in every difficulty to ſtudy, by your Wiſdoms, the beſt and next Remedy, and not always to tract your doings, till upon your Advertiſement hither, ye ſhall have new knowledg from hence: For thereby the matter it ſelf, and alſo your demurr there, be of over long a continuance, and infinite inconveniences by the ſame may enſue. I therefore require you according to the ſpecial truſt and confidence that the King's Highneſs and I have in you, now for ever to acquit your ſelves herein with all effect poſſible, accordingly ſo as the King's Highneſs be not longer kept in this perplexity and ſuſpence, to his Grace's intolerable inquietneſs, and the great heavineſs of all thoſe that obſerve and love the ſame.

Furthermore, tho' it ſo be that the King's Truſt, and alſo mine is, Ye will by your Wiſdom find ſuch good means and ways as ye ſhall not fail, God willing, to open and declare unto the Pope's Holineſs, the whole of the King's Mind, and all and ſingular the Premiſſes, with the reaſons above mentioned in your former Inſtructions and Letters ſent unto you: Yet nevertheleſs conſidering what ye wrote of the doubt of continuance of the Pope's ſickneſs, and to make ſure for all Events and Chances, in caſe his Holineſs (as God forbid) ſhould long remain in ſuch ſtate, as he might either take upon him the naming of the Peace, journeying and repairing to the ſacred Diet, nor alſo hear the whole of the things by you to be opened and propounded touching the King's Divorſe: It hath been thought to the King's Highneſs convenient rather than theſe great and weighty Matters ſhould hang in longer ſuſpenſe, to excogitate ſome other good means and way how theſe Matters ſo neceſſary, may by ſome ways be conduced and brought to an end: And it is this; That the Pope's Holineſs not being able to travel to the place deviſed, where the Princes may be near him for Treaty, and managing of the peace, he do depute me and my Lord Cardinal Campegius, conjunctim & diviſim, as his Legates for that purpoſe, to do and execute all ſuch things in his Holineſs's Name, as the ſame ſhould do in that behalf if he were there preſent; whereunto, for the well of Chriſtendom, we ſhall be contented to condeſcend. ſo always, that as hath been written heretofore unto you, before I paſs or ſet forth to any Convention or Place, to the intent before ſpecified, the Kings Highneſs be fully ſatisfied and pleaſed in his ſaid matter of Matrimony, without which, neither with nor without the Pope's preſence, I will ever begin to take that Voyage: for performance whereof, this Article following is of new deviſed, to be by you propounded unto his Holineſs, if the Breves cannot be obtained, or ſome other thing, that ye ſhall well know and perceive, by advice of expert Counſel there, to be better to the Kings purpoſe than this thing now deviſed, and that may without doubt be paſſed or granted; that is to ſay, That his Holineſs do enlarge, extend, and amplify his Commiſſion given to me and my Lord Legate

Campegius,

Campegius, whereby we jointly and ſeverally may be ſufficiently furniſhed and authorized, to do as much in this cauſe of Matrimony, with all the emergents and dependencies upon the ſame, as his Holineſs may do of his ordinary and abſolute Power, with ſufficient and ample Clauſes, ad Decernend. & Interpretand. jura, leges, & Reſcripta quæcunq; hac Matrimonium concernentia, una cum omnibus & ſingulis dubiis in eadem cauſa emergentibus. And further, to make out Compulſories to any Princes, or Perſons of what preheminence, dignity, ſtate, or condition ſoever they be, Etiamſi Imperiali, Regali, vel alia quacunque dignitate perfulgeant, ſub quibuſcunq; pœnis, and in what Countries and places ſoever they be, to exhibit and produce any manner Witneſs, Records, Originals, Reſcripts or other thing, in what place, or time we, or the one of us ſhall require them, or any of them in this behalf, with all and ſingular the Circumſtances requiſite and neceſſary to ſuch a Commiſſion, after ſuch ample and aſſured manner, as the ſame once had, we ſhall not need for any Objections, doubt, or other thing that might infringe or lack, to ſend of new to the Pope's Holineſs for other proviſion, whereby the King's ſaid Cauſe might hang in any longer tract or delay. In which caſe of coming to this Commiſſion, ye Mr. Stevins muſt have ſpecial regard to ſee the ſame ſufficiently and ſubſtantially penned, by advice of the moſt expert Men that ye can find to that purpoſe: For the better doing whereof, I ſend unto you herewith a Copy of the ſaid Commiſſion to me and my Lord Campegius, with certain Additions thereunto noted in the Margin, ſuch as have been here deviſed; and alſo a Copy of certain Clauſes in a Bull, to the intent ye may ſee how amply the ſame be couched, to avoid appellations and other delays in Cauſes of far leſs moment and importance than the Kings is. Nevertheleſs ye muſt, if it ſhall come to the obtaining of this new Commiſſion, ſee to the penning and more fully perfecting thereof, ſo as the ſame may be in due perfection, without needing to ſend eftſoons for remedying of any thing therein, as is aforeſaid; looking alſo ſubſtantially whether the Chirograph of Pollicitation, being already in your hands, be ſo couched, as the Date, and every thing conſidered, it may ſufficiently oblige and aſtringe the Pope's Holineſs to confirm all that we, or one of us, ſhall do, by virtue of this New or the Old Commiſſion: And if it be not of ſuch efficacy ſo to do, then muſt ye in this caſe ſee, that either by ſufficient and ample words to be put in this new Commiſſion, if it may be ſo had, or by a new Chirograph the Pope's Holineſs may be ſo aſtringed; which Chirograph, with the Commiſſions before ſpecified, if ye obtain the ſame, the King's pleaſure is, That ye Sir Francis Bryan ſhall bring hither, in all poſſible diligence, after the having and obtaining thereof, ſolliciting nevertheleſs, whether the Pope be to be facilly ſpoken with, or not, the immediate Indication of the Truce, as is aforeſaid, without which in vain it were for me, either with or without the Pope, to travel for labouring and conducing of the Peace. And ſo by this way ſhould the Pope's Holineſs, with his merit and ſufficient juſtification, proceed for the Truce, as a fundament of Univerſal Peace, ſatisfy the King's deſires, and avoid any doubt of the Emperor; foraſmuch as his Holineſs might alledg, That being ſo extreamly ſick, that he was not able to know of the Cauſe himſelf, he could no leſs do of juſtice, than to commit it unto other, ſeeing that the ſame is of ſuch

mportance as ſuffereth no tract or delay. And finally, the King's Highneſs, God willing, by this means, ſhould have an end of this Matter. One thing ye ſhall well note, which is this; Albeit this new Device was now for doubt of the Pope's long continuance in ſickneſs, firſt excogitate; yet is it not meant, nor ye be limited to this Device, in caſe ye can obtain any other, nor ye be alſo commanded, to prefer this before all the other Devices: but now that ye ſhall ſee and underſtand what this Device is, and knowing what thing is like or poſſible to be obtained there, without long putting over of your purſuits, expend, conſider, and regard well with your ſelf, what thing of this, or any other that may beſt ſerve to the brief and good expedition of the King's Cauſe. So alwayes that it be a thing ſure, ſufficient, and available to his Grace's Purpoſe, that may without any further tract be there had; and then by your Wiſdom taking unto you the beſt Learned Counſel that ye can have there, leave you to the expedition of that which ſo may be moſt meet, as the times require and ſuffer, to the brief furniſhing of the King's ſaid Cauſe to this purpoſe, without tract or delay, and that ye may ſee is the thing, which as the matter ſtands, can ſpeedily be obtained and ſped, as is aforeſaid. For whether the Decretal be better than this, or this better than that, or which ſoever be beſt, far it ſhall be from Wiſdom to ſtick, and ſtill to reſt upon a thing that cannot be obtained; but ſince ye know the King's meaning, which is to have a way ſufficient and good for the ſpeedy finiſhing of this cauſe to his Grace's purpoſe, note ye now, and conſider with your ſelf, by advice of Learned Counſel, as is aforeſaid, how ye may bring that to paſs, and ſhall ye deſerve as high thanks as can be poſſible. So alwayes that it be ſo well provided and looked upon, that in it be no ſuch limitations or defaults, as ſhall compel us any more to write or ſend for reformation thereof: And coming to this Commiſſion, tho' percaſe ye can by no means or ſticking have it in every point as the Copy, which I ſend you with the Annotations do purport; yet ſhall ye not therefore refuſe it, but take it, or any other thing as can be had, after ſuch form as may ſubſtantially ſerve, and as ye can by your wiſdom and good ſolicitations obtain, for the ſpeedy finiſhing of the King's Cauſe to his purpoſe, as is aforeſaid, which is the ſcope whereunto we muſt tend at this time; and therefore ye be not limited or coacted within any ſuch bounds as ye ſhould thereby be compelled or driven, for lack of obtaining any thing or point mentioned in theſe or other your Inſtructions, or former Writings, to ſend hither again for further knowledg of the King's pleaſure; but ye be put at liberty ſo to qualify, ſo to add, detray, immix, change, chuſe or mend as ye ſhall think good; ſo alwayes that ye take the thing that beſt can be had, being ſuch as may as effectually as ye can bring about, ſerve to the King's purpoſe, and to put indelayed end to it, according to his Grace's deſire, without further tract, or ſending thither, which is as much as here can be ſaid or deviſed. And therefore at the reverence of Almighty God, bring us out of this perplexity, that this Vertuous Prince may have this thing ſped to the purpoſe deſired, which ſhall be the moſt joyous thing that this day in Earth may chance and ſucceed to my heart; and therefore I eſtſoons beſeech you to regard it accordingly: Howbeit if the Pope's Holineſs refuſing all your deſires, ſhall make difficulty and delay there, it is an evident ſign and token, that his Holineſs is neither favourable to the King's reaſonable Petitions, nor indifferent, but ſhould thereby ſhow himſelf both partial and expreſly averſe unto his Grace; wherefore in that caſe finding his Holineſs ſuch unreaſonableneſs, as it can in no wiſe be thought ſhall do, The King's pleaſure is, that ye proceed to the Proteſtation mentioned in the firſt Inſtructions given to you Mr. Stevins, for you and the reſidue of your Collegues; and that ye not only be plain and round with the Popes Holineſs therein, if ye come to his Speech, but alſo ye ſhow and extend unto the Cardinals, and other that be your Friends, which may do any good with him, the great peril and danger imminent unto the Church and See Apoſtolick; thereby exhorting them That they like vertuous Fathers have regard thereunto, and not to ſuffer the Pope's Holineſs, if he would thus wilfully, without reaſon or diſcretion to precipitate himſelf and the ſaid See, which by this refuſal is like to ſuffer ten times more detriment, than it could do for any mal contentment that the Emperor could take with the contrary: for ye ſhall ſay, ſure they may be, and ſo I for my diſcharge declare, both to the Pope's Holineſs and to them, If this Noble and Vertuous prince, in this ſo great and ſo reaſonable a Cauſe, be thus extreamly denied of the grace and lawful favour of the Church, the Pope's Holineſs ſhall not fail for the ſame to loſe Him and his Realm, the French King and his Realm, with many other their Confederates; beſides thoſe that have particular Quarrels to the Pope, and ſo aforeſaid will not fail, with adverſe other, as they daily ſeek occaſions, and provoke the King's Highneſs thereunto, which will do the ſemblable, being a thing of another ſort to be regarded, than the reſpect to the Emperor, for two Cauſes which nevertheleſs ſhall be had well enough, and the Emperor, neither ſo evil contented, nor ſo much to be doubted herein, as is there ſuppoſed. This, with other words mentioned in your Inſtructions concerning like matter, ye ſhall declare unto his Holineſs, and to the ſaid Cardinals, and others being your Friends, if it come to that point; whereby it is not to be doubted, but they perceiving the danger aforeſaid, ſhall be glad to exhort and induce his Holineſs, for the weal of himſelf and the Church, to condeſcend to the King's deſire; which is as much as can be here thought or deviſed, to be by you done in all Events and Chances: And therefore I pray you, eſt-ſoons, and moſt inſtantly require you, as afore, to handle this Matter with all effect poſſible. Coming to this new Commiſſion, when you ſhall have once attained ſuch things as ſhall be ſufficient for the Kings purpoſe as is aforeſaid; and that you have it in your hands and cuſtody, and not afore, leſt thereby ye might hinder the expedition thereof, ye ſhall by all wayes and means poſſible, labour and inſiſt, that the King's Highneſs, as need ſhall be, may uſe and enjoy the benefit of the Decretal, being already in my Lord Cardinal Campegius's hands, whereunto his Highneſs and I deſire you to put all your effectual labour for the attaining of the Pope's conſent thereunto accordingly.

Ye ſhall furthermore underſtand, That it is thought here, in caſe, as God forbid, the Pope ſhould die before ye ſhould have impetrate any thing that may ſerve to the abſolution of the King's Matter, That the Colledge of Cardinals have Authority, Power, and Juriſdiction, ſede vacante, to inhibit, avoke, & ex consequenti, to pass and decide the King's Matter, seeing that the same is of so high moment and importance concerning the surety of a Prince and his Realm, as more amply ye shall perceive in the Chapters, ubi Periculum de Electione, ne Romani, de Jurisdictione, & capite primo de Schismaticis; Wherefore the King's pleasure is, That ye Mr. Stevins shall diligently weigh and ponder the effect of the said Chapters, not only with your self, but also with such the King's learned Counsel as ye and your Collegues have conducted there; and what Jurisdiction, sede vacante, the Colledge of Cardinals have either by the Common Law, usage or prescription, which may far better be known there than here: And if ye find that the Cardinals have in this the King's Cause, and such other like Authority and Jurisdictions to inhibit, avoke and decern, then, in casu mortis Pontificis, quod Deus avertat, ye shall specially foresee and regard that for none Intercession or pursuit made by the Emperor and his Adherents, they shall either inhibit or avoke: And also if before such Death, ye shall not have obtained such thing to the Kings desire and purpose, as these present Letters before do purport, his Grace's pleasure is, That ye shall pursue the effectual expedition of the same, at the hands of the said Colledge, Sede vacante, rerisque nullam dilationem expostit, tantopere usque ad Electionem novi Pontificis quoquam modo differatur; using for this purpose all such Reasons, Allegations, and Perswasions mentioned in those Letters, and your former Instructions, as ye shall see and perceive to serve to that effect; and so to endeavour and acquit your self, that such things may be attained there, as may absolve this the King's Matter, without any further tract or delay; whereby ye shall as afore highly deserve the King and my special thanks, which shall be so acquitted, as ye shall have cause to think your pains and diligences therein in the best wise employed, trusting in God that howsoever the World shall come, ye shall by one means or other bring the Kings Matter, which so highly toucheth his Honour and quiet of Mind, unto the desired end and perfection.

Finally; Ye shall understand that the French King, among other things, doth commit at this time to the Bishop of Bayon, and Mr. Tobie power to treat and conclude the Confederation heretofore spoken of, between his Holiness, and the King's Highness, the French King, the Venetians, and other Potentates of Italy, for a continual Army to be entertained to invade Spain in case it stand by the Emperor, that the Peace shall not take effect: Wherefore the King's pleasure is, That ye having conference with them at good length in that Matter, do also for your parts, sollicite, procure, and set forth the same; entring also on the King's behalf unto the Treaty, and conclusion thereof, after such manner as your former Instructions and Writings do purport. So as like as the French King is determined, that his Agents shall join and concur with you in the Kings Pursuits and Causes; So ye must also concur with them in advancement of their Affairs, the successes whereof, and of all other your doings there, it shall be expedient ye more often certify hitherto than ye do, for many times in one whole month no knowledg is had from you, which is not meet in those so weighty Matters, specially considering that sometime by such as pass to Lyons, ye might find the means to ſend your Letters, which ſhould be greatly to the King's and my conſolation, in hearing thereby from time to time how the things ſucceed there; I pray you therefore to uſe more diligence therein, as the King's and my ſpecial truſt is in you. And heartily fare you well. From my Palace beſides Weſtminſter, the ſixth day of April.

The French King hath ſent hither an Ambaſſiate, Monſieur de Langey Brother to the ſaid Biſhop of Bayon, with certain clauſes in his Inſtructions, concerning the ſaid Treaty of Confederation, the Copy whereof ye ſhall receive herewith, for your better carrying on that Matter. Praying God to ſpeed you well, and to give you grace to make a good and ſhort end in your Matters. And eſt-ſoons fare ye well.

Your Loving Friend,

T. Cardin. Eborac.

XXIII. Another Diſpatch to the Ambaſſadours to the ſame purpoſe. A Duplicate.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 11. RIght well beloved Friends, I commend me unto you in my hearty manner, letting you wit, that by the hands of Thadeus bearer hereof, the Kings Highneſs hath received your ſeveral Letters of the ſame, directed with the Pope's Pollicitation mentioned in the ſame, and ſemblably I have received your Conjunct and ſeveral Letters of the date of the 18. and 29. days of March; the 8, 19, 20, and 22. of the ſame to me directed, wherein ye at right good length have made mention of ſuch Diſcourſes, Conferences, Audiences, and Communications as ye have had concerning your Charge, ſince the time of your former Advertiſements made in that behalf, with all ſuch Anſwers and Replications as have been made unto you by the Pope's Holineſs, and other on his behalf concerning the ſame. In the Circumſtances whereof ye have diligently, diſcreetly, and ſubſtantially, acquitted your ſelves, as not only your firm and fervent deſire, to do unto the King's Highneſs ſpecial and ſingular ſervice in this his great and weighty Cauſe, but alſo your Wiſdom, Learning, and perfect dexterities, heretofore well known, hath every one for his part thereby been largely of new ſhewed, approbate and declared to the Kings good contentment, my repoſe and gladneſs, and to your great laud and praiſe. For the which his Grace giveth unto you right hearty thanks, and I alſo for my part do the like lable; aſſuring you, in few words, though the time and ſtate of things hath not ſuffered that your deſires might at this time be brought unto effect, yet the King's Grace well knoweth, perceiveth, and taketh that more could not have been done, excogitated, or deviſed, that ye have largely endeavoured your ſelf unto for conducing the Kings purpoſe, which his Grace accepteth, as touching your merits and acquitin no leſs good and thankful part, than if ye finding the diſpoſition of things in more direct ſtate, had conſecute all your purſuits and deſires: Nor ye ſhall doubt or think, that either the Kings Highneſs or I have conceived, or thought any manner negligence in you for ſuch things as were mentioned, in the laſt Letters ſent unto you by Alexander, Meſſenger, but that albeit his Highneſs had cauſe, as the ſame wrote, to marvel of your long demor, and lack of expedition of one or other of the things committed to your charge; yet did his Highneſs right well perſuade unto himſelf the default not to be in you, but in ſome other cauſe, whereof his Grace not knowing the ſame, might juſtly and meritoriouſly be brought unto admiration, and marvel: And therefore be ye all of good comfort, and think your perfect endeavours uſed, and ſervices done, to be employed there, as it can right well, in every part regarded and conſidered.

In effect coming to the Specialities of the things now to be anſwered, The King's Highneſs having groundly noted and conſidered the whole continue and circumſtances of all your ſaid Letters and Advertiſements, findeth and perceiveth evidently, that whatſoever Purſuits, and Inſtances, and Requeſts have been, or ſhall be for this preſent time, made there by you on his Grace's behalf to the Pope's Holineſs, for the furtherance of the ſaid great and weighty Cauſe; and how much ſoever the neceſſity of Chriſtendom for the good of Peace, the importance of the Matter, the juſtneſs of the thing it ſelf, reaſon, duty, reſpect to good Merits, detecting of Falſities uſed, evident Arguments and Preſumptions to the ſame, or other thing whatſoever it be, making for the King's purpoſe, do weigh; the Times be now ſuch, as all that ſhall be done in any of the Premiſſes there, is apparent by ſuch privy Intelligence and promiſe as is between the Pope and the Emperor, to hang and depend upon the Emperor's Will, pleaſure, and Arbitre, as whom the Pope's Holineſs neither dare nor will in any part diſpleaſe, offend, or miſcontent, nor do by himſelf any thing notable therein, which he ſhall know or ſuppoſe to be of moment, the ſaid Emperor firſt inconſulted, or not conſenting thereunto. And for that cauſe, ſince the Emperor not only is the Adverſary of Univerſal Peace, Letter, and Impeacher thereof but alſo, as hath appeared by ſundry Letters heretofore, and now of late ſent out of Spain, doth ſhew himſelf adverſe, and enterponing himſelf as a Party againſt the Kings ſaid great Matter; It were in manner all one to proſecute the ſame at the Emperor's hands, as at the Popes, which totally dependeth upon the Emperor; and as much Fruit might be hoped of the one as of the other, ſo as far diſcrepant it were from any wiſdom in a thing ſo neceſſary, and which as ye know muſt needs be brought unto an end without any further delay, to conſume and ſpend the time where ſuch expreſs contrariety and in manner deſpair appeareth of no good therein, and where ſhould be none other but continual craft, colour, abuſes, refuſes and delays, but rather to proceed unto the ſame in place, and after ſuch form as may be appearance of ſome good and real effect to inſue. Wherefore to ſhew you in Counſel, and to be obſerved unto your ſelves, The King's Highneſs finding this ingratitude in the Pope's Holineſs, is minded for the time to diſſemble the Matter, and taking as much as may be had and attained there to the benefit of the Cauſe, to proceed in the Deciſion of the ſame here, by vertue of the Commiſſion already granted unto me and my Lord Legate Campegius.

And for becauſe that ye Mr. Stevins be largely ripened and acquainted in this Matter, and that both the King's Highneſs and I have right large experience of your entire zeal and mind to the ſtudying and ſeeking forth of ſuch things concerning the Law, as may be to the furtherance hereof; conſidering alſo that for any great thing like to be done there herein, ſuch Perſonages as be of good Authority, Wiſdom, and Experience, tho' they be not learned in the Law, may with ſuch Counſel as ye have retained there, right well ſerve to the accompliſhment of ſuch other things as ſhall occur, or be committed unto them on the King's behalf, tho' ſo many Ambaſſadors do not there remain and continue. His Grace therefore willing and minding to revoke you all by little and little, except you Sir Gregory being his Ambaſſadour there continually reſiding, willeth, That after ſuch things perfected and done, as hereafter ſhall be mentioned, ye Mr. Stevins, and you Sir Francis Bryan ſhall take your leave of the Pope's Holineſs, and with diligence return home. For if ne had been the abſence of you Mr. Stevins, ſeeing that there is ſmall appearance of any Fruit to be obtained there, the King's Highneſs would have entred into Proceſs here before this Whitſuntide. But becauſe his Grace would have you here preſent, as well for the forming of the ſaid Proceſs, and for ſuch things as he truſted that ye ſhall obtain and bring with you, as alſo for the better knowledge to be had in ſundry Matters, wherein you may be the better ripened and informed by means of your being in that Court, and otherwiſe, his Highneſs will ſomewhat the longer defer the commencement of the ſaid Proceſs, and reſpite the ſame, only for your coming; which his Grace therefore deſireth you ſo much the more to accelerate, as ye know how neceſſary it is, that all diligence and expedition be uſed in that Matter. And ſo ye all to handle and indeavour your ſelves there, for the time of your demor, as ye may do the moſt benefit and advantage that may be to the ſpeedy furtherance of the ſaid Cauſe.

And foraſmuch as at the diſpatch of your ſaid laſt Letters, ye had not opened unto the Popes Holineſs, the laſt and uttermoſt Device here conceived, and to you written in my Letters ſent by the ſaid Alexander, but that ye intended, as ſoon as ye might have time and acceſs, to ſet forth the ſame; wherein it is to be truſted, ſince that thing could by no colour or reſpect to the Emperor be reaſonably denied, ye have before this time done ſome good, and brought unto perfection; I therefore remitting you to ſuch Inſtructions as ye received at that time, adverteſe you that the King's mind and pleaſure is, ye do your beſt to attain the Ampliation of the ſaid Commiſſion, after ſuch form as is to you, in the ſaid laſt Letters and Inſtructions, preſcribed; which if ye cannot in every thing bring to paſs, at the leaſt to obtain as much to the King's purpoſe and the benefit of the Cauſe as ye can; wherein all good policy and dexterity is to be uſed, and the Pope's Holineſs by all perſwaſions to be induced thereunto; ſhewing unto the ſame how ye have received Letters from the King's Highneſs and me, reſponſives to ſuch as ye wrote of the Debates before rehearſed; whereby ye be advertiſed that the Kings Highneſs, perceiving the Popes ſtrange demeanour in this his great and weighty Cauſe, with the little reſpect that his Holineſs hath, either to

to the importance thereof, or to do unto his Holineſs at this his great neceſſity, gratuity and pleaſure; not only cannot be a little ſorry and heavy to ſee himſelf fruſtrate of the future hope and expectation that his Grace had, to have found the Pope's Holineſs a moſt loving, faſt, near and kind Father, and aſſured Friend, ready and glad to have done for his Grace, that which of his Power Ordinary or abſolute, he might have done in this thing, which ſo near toucheth the King's Conſcience, Health, Succeſſion, Realm, and Subjects; But alſo marvelleth highly, That his Holineſs, both in matters of Peace, Truce, in this the King's Cauſe, and in all other, hath more reſpect to pleaſe and content him of whom he hath received moſt diſpleaſures, and who ſtudieth nothing more than the detriment of the See, than his Holineſs hath either to do that which a good common Father, for the well of the Church, Himſelf, and all Chriſtendom, is bounden, and oweth to do, or alſo that which every thing well pondered, it were both of Congruence, Right Truth, Equity Wiſdom, and conveniency for to do. Thinking verily that his Highneſs deſerved to be far otherwiſe entreated, and that not at his moſt need in things neareſt touching his Grace, and where the ſame had his chief and principal confidence, thus to have his juſt and reaſonable Petitions rejected, and totally to be converted, to the arbitre of his Enemy, which is not the way to win, acquire and conſerve Friends to the Pope's Holineſs and See Apoſtolick, nor that which a good and indifferent Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, and common Father unto all Princes oweth and is bound to obſerve. Nevertheleſs ye ſhall ſay the King's Highneſs, who always hath ſhewed, and largely comprobate himſelf a moſt devout Son unto the See Apoſtolick, muſt and will take patience; and ſhall pray to God to put in the Pope's mind, a more direct and vertuous intent ſo to proceed in his acts and doings, as he may be found a very Father, upright, indifferent, loving and kind; and not thus for a partial reſpect, fear, or other inordinate Affection, or cauſe, to degenera e from his beſt Children, ſhowing himſelf unto them, as a Step-Father, nor the King's Highneſs ye ſhall ſay can perſuade unto himſelf, that the Pope's Holineſs is of that nature and diſpoſition, that he will ſo totally fail his Grace in this Matter of ſo high importance, but that by one good mean or other, his Holineſs will perfectly comprobate the intire love that always the ſame hath ſhewed to bear towards his Highneſs, wherein ye ſhall deſire him now to declare by his Acts the uttermoſt of his intent and diſpoſition; ſo as ye Mr. Stevins and Mr. Brian, who be revoked home, do not return with void hands, or bring with you things of ſuch meagerneſs, or little ſubſtance, as ſhall be to no purpoſe: And thus by theſe, or like words, ſeconding to the ſame effect, which as the time ſhall require, and as he ſhall have cauſe, ye by your Wiſdoms can qualifie and deviſe. It is not to be doubted, but that the Pope's Holineſs perceiving how the King's Highneſs taketh this Matter, and that two of you ſhall now return, will in expedition of the ſaid Ampliation of the Commiſſion, and other things requiſite, ſtrain himſelf to do unto the King's Highneſs as much gratuity and pleaſure as may be; for the better attaining whereof, ye ſhall alſo ſhew, how heavy and ſorry I with my Lord Legate Campegius be, to ſee this manner of proceeding, and the large promiſes which he and I ſo often have made unto the King's Highneſs, of the Popes faſt and aſſured mind, to do all that his Holineſs, etiam ex plenitudine poteſtatis, might do, thus to be diſappointed: moſt humbly beſeeching his Holineſs on my behalf, by his high Wiſdom to conſider, what a Prince this is; the infinite and excellent gratitudes which the ſame hath exhibited to the Pope's Perſon in particular, and to the See Apoſtolick in the general: the magnitude and importance of this Cauſe, with the Conſequences that may follow, by the good or ill entreating of the King's Highneſs in the ſame; wherein ye ſhall ſay, I have ſo largely written, ſo plainly for my diſcharge declared the truth unto his Holineſs, and ſo humbly, reverently, and devoutly, made interceſſion, that more can I not add or accumulate thereunto, but only pray unto God that the ſame may be perceived, underſtood, and taken, as the exigence of the Caſe, and the merits of this Noble Prince doth require; truſting always, and with fervent deſire, from day to day, abiding to hear from his ſaid Holineſs ſome ſuch thing as I ſhall now be able conſtantly to juſtifie and defend, the great things which I and my ſaid Lord Legate have ſaid and atteſted on his Holineſs behalf.

This, with all other ſuch matter as may ſerve to the purpoſe, ye ſhall extend as well as ye can, and by that means get and attain as much to your purpoſe for the corroboration and ſurety of all things to be done here as is poſſible, leaving to ſpeak any more, or alſo to take or admit any reſcripts for exhibition of the Brief, advocation of the Cauſe, or other of the former degrees, ſeeing that all which ſhall or can be done or attained there, ſhall hang meerly upon the Emperor's Will, Conſent, and Arbitre: and therefore nothing is now or hereafter to be procured, that may tend to any Act to be done, in deciſion of the Cauſe or otherwiſe there, or which may bring the adverſe Party to any advantage to be taken by the favour or partiality, that the ſame may have in that Court; but to convert and employ all your ſuit, to that thing which may be to the moſt convalidation and ſurety of the Proceſs, and things to be done here, as well by attaining, as ample, large, and ſufficient words, clauſes and ſentences as ye can get, for ampliation of the new Commiſſion.

As for the defeating of any thing that may be procured to the impeachment of the Proceſs thereof, and the corroboration of the things to be paſſed, and done, by virtue of the ſame. And amongſt other things, whereas ye with theſe laſt Legates, ſent the Pope's Pollicitation, for the non-inhibition or avoking of the Cauſe, the ratifying and confirming of the Sentence by us his Legates herein to be given, and other things mentioned in the ſame, ye ſhall underſtand, that the ſaid Pollicitation is ſo couched and qualified, as the Pope's Holineſs whenſoever he will may refile; like-as by certain Lines and Annotations, which in the Margin of a Copy of the ſaid Pollicitation I ſend you herewith, ye ſhall perceive more at large: And therefore after your other ſuits, for the ampliation of the new Commiſſion, if any ſuch may be attained, brought unto as good a purpoſe as ye can, ye ſhall by ſome good way find the mean to attain a new Pollicitation, with ſuch, or as many of the words and additions newly deviſed as ye can get; which ye may do under this form and colour, that is to ſay, to ſhew unto the Pope's Holineſs, by way of ſorrow and doleance, how your Courier, to whom ye committed the conveyance of the ſaid Pollicitation, ſo chanced, wet and water in the carriage thereof, as the Pacquet wherein it was, with such Letters as were with the same, and amongst others the Rescripts of Pollicitation, were totally wet, defaced, and not legible; so as the Pacquet and Rescript was and is deteined by him to whom ye direct your Letters, and not delivered amongst the other unto the King's hands; and unless his Holiness, of his goodness unto you, will grant your Double of the said Pollicitation, ye see not but there shall be some notable blame imputed unto you for not better ordering thereof, to the conservation of it from such chance. And thus coming to a new Pollication, and saying, ye will devise it as near as ye can remember, according to the former, ye by your Wisdoms, and namely ye Mr. Stevins, may find the means to get as many of the new and other pregnant, fat, and available words as is possible, the same signed and sealed as the other is, to be written in Parchment; the Politick handling whereof, the King's Highness and I commit unto your good discretions; for therein, as ye Mr. Stevins know, resteth a great strength and corroboration of all that shall be done there, in decision of the Kings said Cause; and as ye write, may be in manner as beneficial to the King's purpose, as the Commission Decretal.

And to the intent ye may the better know how to proceed in this Business, I advertise you that the King's Highness hath now received fresh Letters out of Spain, answering to those sent by Curson jointly with a Servant of the Queens, for exhibition of the Original Brief here, of whose expedition you Mr. Stevins were privy before your departure. The Letters were of sundry dates, the last whereof is the 21. of April, at which time the Emperor was at Cesar Augusta, upon his departure toward Barselona. In effect, the Emperor minding by his departure thither, and other his Acts, to make a great demonstration of his coming into Italy, who is to nothing, as the King's Ambassadours write, more unready and unfurnished than to that Voyage, not having any Gallies there but three, which lay on dry Land unrigged, as they have done a long time past, none assembly of the States of that Land, none order, provision of Victual, towardness in conscription of Men of War, or appearance of such thing, but that his going to Barselona, is chiefly under pretext to attain certain old Treasure there remaining, and to give the better reputation to his Affairs in Italy. As to the matter of Peace and Truce, he seemeth not so alien from it, but that he would, under colour thereof, be glad to separate and dis-join other from the sincerity of concord that is between them, working somewhat with the French King, which he himself confesseth to be but abuses. On the other side, he maketh overture of Peace, or Truce to be had with the King's Highness also; and in the mean time entertaineth the Pope's Holiness, as one whom won from the residue of the Confederates, he thinketh himself well assured of; Howbeit in all this his Business, ye may constantly affirm, that his Compasses cannot prevail in any thing that may be extorted to the separation of the King's Highness and the French King, who entirely proceed together, that the Emperour coming or not coming into Italy, the said French King intendeth to prosecute him in the place where his Person shall be. To whom the King's Highness now sendeth the Duke of Suffolk, with the Treasurer of his honourable Household; who, if the Pope will not really and actually intend to the maintaining of the Peace, coming to the convention of his Holiness, moved as the case shall require, shall be furnished of a substantial number of Men of War out of his Realm to the assistance of the said French King, if the Emperor happen to descend in Italy. So as his things there, be not like to be in such surety as might bring the Pope's Holiness to this extremity of fear and respect. And all the Premisses touching this knowledge had out of Spain, and the French King's Interest with the King's Concurrence as afore; It shall be well done ye declare to the Pope's Holiness, whereby peradventure the same shall be removed from some part of his said over much respect to that part.

As to sending of the Breve, the Emperor refusing to send it into England, sheweth some towardness of sending it to Rome, minding and intending to have the Kings Matter decided there and not here; howbeit all be but vain Collusions: For as ye shall perceive by such things as be extracted out of the Letters of the King's Orators Resident in Spain, a Copy whereof I send you herewith; the more the said Breve cometh into light and knowledge, the more falsities be deprehended therein; and amongst other, one there is specially to be noted; making if it be true, a clearer and manifest proof of the same falsity; which because if it were perceived by the adverse Party, or any of their Friends, Counsellers, or Adherents, it might soon by a semblable falsity be reformed, is above all other things to be kept secret, both from the Pope, and all other there, except to your selves: for in computation of the Year of our Lord is a diverse order observed in the Court of Rome in Bulls and Breves; That is to say, in the Bull beginning at the Incarnation of our Lord, in the Breve at the Nativity; so as the thing well searched, it is thought it shall be found, that the date presupposed to be of the Breve, which is 26. Decemb. Anno Dom. 1508. Pontificatus Julii anno primo, well conferred with the manner and usages of the Court: He that counterfeited the Breve, not knowing such diversity between the Date of the Bull and Breves, and thinking to make both Dates of one day, dated the Breve at a day before Pope Julius was Pope; which ye shall more plainly perceive by the said Copy, and specially if under some good colour ye inquire your selves there, whether the year in the date of Breves change upon Christmas day, or upon New-years day, wherein the King's pleasure is, that ye enforce and certifie here what ye shall know and perceive. And if ye shall by such inquiry find matter making to the purpose, as it is not doubted but ye shall do, then for the more sure justification and proof thereof before the Judges, It shall be expedient ye in writing make memorial of such doubts, finding the means that it may be answered and declared in the same Writing, by certain expert persons of the Secretaries, and other Officers of that Court, with subscription of their Answer and Names, whereby it may appear here before us as Judges, as a thing true and approved: Howbeit, great dexterity is to be used for the secrecy thereof; for if such Exceptions might come to the Knowledge of the Adverse Party, they might, as the said Orators write, soon reform that defect by detaching one Letter, or Title, or forging a new Breve, alleging error in the Transumpts, which might be the total disappointment deprehenſion of the falſity in that chief and principal point. I pray you therefore to regard that matter ſubſtantially, and to order it by your good Wiſdoms accordingly.

XXIV. The two Legates Letter to the Pope, adviſing a Decretal Bull. A Duplicate.

PRioribus noſtris ad Sanctitatem Veſtram literis quid hic ageremus, quove in ſtatu cauſa hæc eſſet expoſuimus; poſtea quum, & res ipſa, & deſiderium Regis admodum urgeret, ut ad Cauſæ ipſius merita agnoſcenda accingeremur, quando in ſuſpenſo, non modo horum Regum vota, ſed nec hujus Regni firmandi ratio, diutius haberi poteſt, omni ſuaſionis genere horum animis prius adhibito, ut alterius voluntati alter crederet, eique morem gererent, cum nihil profecerimus, ad Judicii inſtaurionem accedentes, de modo cauſam ipſam pertractandi, multa longioribus colloquiis inter nos commentati ſumus; qua in re, dum quæ neceſſaria ſunt adornantur, exhibitum eſt per Reginam exemplum Brevis Julii 2 eodem tempore quo & Bulla ſuper hac materia, dati & ſcripti, ſed attentiore cura & longe conſideratiore mente confecti, quod, quia in ſubſtantialibus etiam ab ipſa Bulla diverſum eſt, non modo Regium, ſed noſtrum quoque animum, mire ſuſpenſum habuit, uſque adeo ut de ejus veritate plurimum ſuſpicari libeat; nam præter inſperatam in tanta opportunitate ejus apparitionem, incredibile videtur, ut eodem tempore idem author, eiſdem partibus, in eadem Cauſa, diverſa admodum ratione caverit, & permanſuro Diplomati ejuſque Decreto, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, proferendo, & plumbeo charactere excudendo dormitaverit, brevioribus vero literis molli cera communiendis exactiſſimi ſtudii & fabricæ cogitationis ſpeciem impreſſerit: ne tamen Majeſtas hæc rem hanc damnatam priuſquam exploratam habeat, quippe quæ magis in veritate quam in voto ſuo, Cauſæ hujus eventum ſuſceptura videtur, ad ipſius Brevis exhibitionem inſtat, quod, quia honeſtum & rationi conſonum videtur, à nobis etiam probatur, propterea omni ſtudio curamus, ut Breve ipſum, quod in Hiſpaniis eſſe dicitur, & à quo exemplum hoc effigiatum aiunt proferatur; atque ut hoc expeditiore cura, & majore compendio aſſequamur, præter primam & ſummam illam de Cauſa cognoſcendi poteſtatem, quam à Sanctitate veſtra habemus, aliam quoque ad hunc ſpecialiter articulum habendam putamus, per quam poſſimus etiam per cenſuras, omnes etiam Regia & Imperiali Authoritate fulgentes, monere & adigere ut dictum Breve nobis exhibeant, ſine quo cauſa hæc nedum abſolvi, ſed nec commode tractari queat. Atque hoc primum eſt, quod Majeſtas hæc, in tanta animi fluctuatione qua nunc eſtuat, à nobis curandum putat, quo impetrato, Judicii via inſiſtentes ad Cauſæ cognitionem procedemus; quod ſi non proferatur, vel inutile & variatum, & fide ſua facile rejiciendum, prolatum fuerit, nihil prohibebit, hoc ſublato obice, quin ex officio noſtro reliqua proſequamur: ſin vero exhibeatur, & veritate ſua, vel adeo ſcite conficta fallacia, ita ſe meatur ut acriori examine id inquiri debeat, pateſacto jam patronorum cavillis & calumniis foro, quibus undis & judicii fluctibus non ſolum articulum hunc Brevis, ſed univerſam Cauſam implicaturi ſimus, nullus non viderit; neque enim decrunt quæ ſuſpectam ipſius Brevis fidem faciant, vel ex hoc maxime, quod cum maxime Regis & Regni hujus interſit, nihil prorſus de eo antehac auditum fuerit, nec ejus memoria ulla ratio ulla extet in Scriniis Regiis, in quibus etiam minima quæque ad Regnum ſpectantia aſſervari ſolent: nam veriſimile non eſt in Hiſpanis majorem Anglicæ rei curam fuiſſe quam in ipſa Anglia, neq; quempiam ſolerti & acri adeo ingenio fuiſſe, qui hujuſcemodi diſſidium vigeſimo quinto abhinc anno ſuboriturum, & hac ſola ratione ſublatum iri poſſe divinaverit, nulla ut diximus apud hunc Regem, & in hoc Regno talis rei memoria extante. Porro ſi ex Brevi ad Bullam, & ex Bulla ad Breve tranſitus fiat, atque illius jejunitatem & ariditatem inſectemur, hujus prægnantia verba, & ad omnes fere exceptiones tollendas, ſuperſtitioſam quodammodo vigilantiam conferamus, & quæ utrinque deduci poſſunt in Reſcriptis Apoſtolicis æquo animo audiamus, periclitaturi certe ſumus, ne, quod minime cupimus, Sedis Apoſtolicæ Authoritatem patientia noſtra in diſcrimen rapiamus, atque dum Regno, & Regi hanc ſuppetias ferre volumus, rem dignitatemque noſtram multo minorem faciamus, cui tum poſita etiam anima, favere & adeſſe ſemper cupimus & debemus. Propterea, Beatiſſime Pater, non ſolum pro Regis & Cauſæ hujus commodo, ſed pro dignitate quoq; Eccleſiaſtica & Sanctitatis Veſtræ Autoritate hic tuenda & conſervanda, nullo pacto committendum ducimus, ut nobis ſpectantibus & audientibus, de Poteſtate Romani Pontificis, de literarum Apoſtolicarum ſub plumbo & ſub annulo ſcriptarum fide, & repugnantia, deque juris divini abrogatione diſceptetur, maxime in Regum cauſa oppugnanda & defendenda, qui, ut ſublimiori ſunt faſtigio collocati, ita iniquiori animo patiuntur Cauſæ ſuæ cohonestationem qua & dignitatem & exiſtimationem ſuam diminutam iri intelligunt, quæ ſi ignobilium etiam animos quoſque exulcerare, ipſa rerum experientia docti cernimus, qualiter quæſo putamus Regios & generoſos affectura? Itaque quoniam hanc charybdim & hos ſcopulos evitaſſe ſemper tutum erit, propterea hujuſmodi incommoda quodammodo prævecti, ubi ad litis moleſtias & incertas fori fluctuationes cauſam deducendam perſpicimus, ſuadere, rogare & ſummis precibus pariq; reverentia contendere non deſinemus, ut ſi exhibito Brevi pura veritas ita latuerit, quod rectumne an falſum, vitiatum ſeu adulterinum fuerit judicare ac decernere minime valeamus, Sanctitas Veſtra Cauſam hanc ad ſe avocet, non ſolum ut tanto diſcrimine, & perplexitate nos eximat, ſed ut paterno affectu Cauſæ & Regi huic optimo ſubveniat & opem ferat, atque ex poteſtatis ſuæ plenitudine & ſumma prudentia finem huic rei optatum imponat, quæ non ſine magno hujus Regni & Eccleſiaſticæ dignitatis periculo diutius trahi poteſt: Speramus autem Sereniſſimum hunc Regem in hujuſmodi avocandæ Cauſæ conſilio facile quieturum, & lebroſa hæc litium itinera & labyrinthos evitaturum, modo in fide Sanctitatis Veſtræ chirographo manus ſuæ teſtata, cognoverit, ſe diutius ſuſpenſo in hac re animo detinendum non fore, atque ab hujuſmodi matrimonio ſe tandem liberandum, in quo nec humano nec divino jure permanere ſe poſſe putat, ex cauſis Sanctitati Veſtræ forſan notis, & per hos ſuos nuntios longioribus verbis explicandis. Quod ſi Sanctitas Veſtra commodius exiſtimaverit, Avocatione hujuſmodi poſthabita, per Decretalis unius conceſſionem huic cauſæ occurri & ſuccurri poſſe, in hanc quoque rationem regis animum paratum dabimus; & propterea concepta

quedam Decretalis modulo, cum per hos ipsos Majestatis suæ nuntios mittamus, ex quibus abunde intelliget, quodque non absque exemplo ejusmodi auxilia proponantur, & quam non temere nec absque ratione Majestas hæc desiderio huic suo inhæreat: interea vero, dum hac vel illa ratione huic rei occurritur & Breve ipsum perquireretur, posset utiq; Sanctitas Vestra iterum Reginæ animum tentare, & ad Religionem emollire, curando (ut quod maxime apud eam gratia & Autoritate esse debeant) & literis, & precibus, & nuntiis, omnique alia ratione, hac ipsa via, sibi, suisq; rebus omnibus atq; aliis optime consulat. Cujusmodi nostra, pro salute Regni & publica cum dignitate, tam tranquillitate animo agitamus, ut tandem optimo Regi præsidio simus, qui incredibili patientia & humanitate, nostram & Sanctitatis Vestræ opem expectat, sed tanta obsessus cura, sollicitudine & anxietate, ut nullus facile explicare possit, vix enim in hoc ipso, oculis & auribus nostris credimus; cujus usque adeo nos miseret, ut nihil ingrato magis animo audiamus quam ejus de hac re verba, querelas & cruciatum: jure, an injuria fecerimus nobis hoc, Beatissime Pater, cum Sanctitate Vestra tacere, ne præjudicium nobis aut aliis faciamus, sed quem non excitet tot annorum Conscientiæ Carnificina, quam ut transversum & modo in has & modo illas partes agant Theologorum disputationes, & Patrum decreta, nullus non videt; qua in re enucleanda ita ambiguo laboratur sensu, ut jam non doctioris sed melioris hominis lumine & pietate egeamus, & nequarea factum est ut cum ab utraq; parte stant assertores maximi, in illam magis Majestas sua inclinat, quæ ab offensionibus & periculis magis remota videtur. Quem præterea non moveat dulcis illa insitaque sobolis successio, in qua morientes & animam exhalaturi conquiescere, anima ipsa, videmur omnes? quem insuper non accendat, Regni atque imperii propagatio, & per solos liberos continuata quædam fruitio? quem denique; populorum fidei ac ejus curæ commissorum tranquillitas & securitas, quæ in designatis jam regibus & principibus nutritur & vivit, non sollicitet? ita ut tanti adeoq; communis boni fundamenta nulla à se ipsa, non doleat & suspiret, cum in extremis ejus diebus, extrema quoque tempora eis adventare sentiat, atq; secum omnia quodammodo in ruinam trahi? Majores habet, Beatissime Pater, Causa hæc anfractus & difficultates, quam superficie tenus inspectantibus offerantur, in qua vel hæ potissimæ sunt quod nec moram patitur, & in alteram partem non inclinat quidem, sed omnino cogit, ni velimus ab ea præcipites & maxima cum privatæ tum publicæ rei jactura cadere; nam qui vel Reginæ odio, vel speratæ, nec dum forsan notæ, futuræ conjugis illecebra & titillatione Regem agi putant, ii excordes plane & toto, quod aiunt, cœlo errare videntur: ut enim credere dignum est, nullis ullius quamlibet duris moribus aut injocunda consuetudine, vel ulterioris sobolis spe desperata, Regium animum tanto periculo ad odium impelli posse; ita nec in hominis bene sani menti cadere debet, Regem hunc imbecillo adeo esse animo, ut sensuum suadela eam abrumpere cupiat consuetudinem, in qua adolescentiæ suæ florentes annos exegerit persancte adeo, ut in hac quoq; fluctuatione, non sine reverentia & honore versetur. Noverit, credite omnes, voluntate ejus non modo divinæ legis timor, sed humani quoq; juris ratio eximia, hæcq; non privata sed publica, ad quam cum ejus animum trahant, utriusq; juris peritissimi, & Regni hujus sui proceres, & primates omnes, nihil tamen suo, aut suorum tantum

Quod si alia ratione vel aliunde paranda sibi fuerint auxilia, reremur ne de Regno & Rege hoc actum sit, quicquid enim alia manu huic vulneri impositum fuerit, nihil minus faciet quam sanitatem, seditionibus enim & tumultibus omnia exponentur, atq; imprimis Ecclesiastica Dignitas & Apostolicæ Sedis Authoritas hinc deturbabitur; quod non erit difficile, aut ingratum quibusdam, qui Rege cum Sanctitate Vestra nunc conjunctissimo, impietatis suæ venenum perbelle dissimulant. Cujusmodi jacturam si dura hæc tempora nostra fecerunt, quod deinde sperandum sit, non videmus. Conservandus itaq; Rex est, ejusq; animia in Apostolicam Sedem voluntas & fides, ne eo à nobis abalienemus, non modo Angliæ Regem, sed Fidei quoq; Defensorem amittamus, cujus virtutes & Religionem tanto plausu orbi commendavimus. XXV. Another Dispatch to Rome. An Original.

RIght well beloved Friends, I commend me unto you in my most hearty manner, by the hands of Alexander, Messenger; I have in good diligence received your Letters of the 4th of this Month; and semblably the King's Highness hath received your other Letters, sent by the same Messenger unto his Grace: By tenour whereof it well appeareth that the King's Highness is now frustrate of the good hope and expectation that his Grace and semblably I were in of the Pope's determination, to have done for his Highness in this great and weighty Cause of Matrimony, as his Holiness by his Chamberlain promised; not only that which might be done of power ordinary, but also of absolute; and that ye be utterly in despair to consecute or attain any thing to the purpose there, to the benefit of the said Cause, with the strange demeanour that hath been used in calling you to make answer, why the supplications presented by the Emperor's Ambassador for advocation of the Cause should not proceed; and how discreetly and substantially ye have answered and ordered your selves therein: Affirming finally, that as to that Matter, ye think it shall not serve to any purpose, but only to stop your suit in the obtaining of a new Commission; and desiring to be ascertained of the King's pleasure touching the Protestation mentioned in your Instructions, and how the same is meant and understood, with many other things comprised in your said Letters, right well and substantially couched and handled; for the which the King's Highness giveth you hearty thanks, and I also thank you in most hearty manner for my part.

Ascertaining you, that by Thadeus, Courier, upon receipt of your former Letters sent by him, who I trust be arrived with you long before this time; I wrote unto you the King's mind and pleasure, as well to forbear any further pursuits of the Degrees committed unto your Charge, except only the expedition of a new Commission and Pollicitation mentioned in the same, as also that you Mr. Stevins, and Sir Francis Brian, should return home, like as my said Letters purported. And forasmuch as now it appeareth, that there is no hope for you to attain the said Commission and Pollicitation, the King's Highness supposing that ye the said Mr. Stevins and Sir Francis be on your way homeward; and perceiving that it should be necessary for his Grace to have there a substantial Counsellor of his, well learned in the Laws, as well to defend all such things as shall be procured or set forth by the Cæsareans, to the hindrance of the King's Cause, as to let and impeach any Advocations, Inhibitions, or other thing that may be damnageable thereunto, hath dispatched thither this Bearer and Mr. Bennet, who hath commandment to ſhew unto you, and every of you, whereſoever he ſhall meet with or find you, his whole Inſtructions, by tenour whereof ye ſhall be advertiſed of the King's further mind and pleaſure in that Behalf; wherefore this ſhall be only to ſignifie unto you, how his Highneſs will that ye now forbear any further purſuit, either for Commiſſion, Pollicitation or Reſcript to be ſent to the Emperor for exhibition of the Brief, either here or at Rome, but that following in every part the tenor of the ſaid Inſtructions, ye Mr. Stevins and Sir Francis Bryan uſe all the diligence poſſible in your Voyage homeward, and the reſidue of you to intend to ſuch things as be mentioned in the ſaid Inſtructions; aſcertaining you, that whereas ye were in doubt what is meant by the Proteſtation ſpoken of in my former Letters and your Inſtructions, it was none other thing than in the ſame Inſtructions was plainly ſpecified and declared; That is to ſay, Failing of all your Requeſts and Purſuits touching the King's great Matter, to have ſhewed unto his Holineſs the danger that might enſue, by loſing the intire favour of this Prince, by mean of his ſo ſtrange and unkind dealing with his Grace; howbeit, conſidering in what ſtate the things now be, and how much the Pope's Holineſs leaneth to be enclined to the Emperors part; and yet as appeareth both by your Letters, and by ſuch other knowledge as the King hath, his Holineſs would gladly conſerve the King's Love and Favour, and is loth to do any thing to the prejudice of his Cauſe: It is no time to come to any rigorous or extream words with his Holineſs, but in gentle and modeſt manner to ſhew himſelf in ſuch words as be mentioned in my ſaid laſt Letters ſent by Thadeus; and ſo without irritation of him, but with conſervation of his favour to entertain his Holineſs in the beſt manner that may be, without medling in any other Proteſtation, but only to look what may be done touching ſuch Proteſtations apart, as is mentioned in the ſaid Inſtructions given to Mr. Bennet, which with theſe Letters ſhall be a ſufficient information of you all what to do in the Cauſes to you committed, not doubting but in all other particular ſuits of Bulls, and other things committed unto you, ye Mr. Stevins and Sir Francis Bryan have or will do your beſt to bring the ſame with you; the expedition whereof, if they be not ſped already, the King's Highneſs committeth to the Wiſdoms of ſuch of you as ſhall fortune to be in the Court of Rome at the receipt hereof; wherein, and in all other things, his Highneſs truſteth, and I do the ſemblable, that ye will order your ſelves with all effectual diligence, as the ſpecial confidence that is put in you doth appertain.

And foraſmuch as the greateſt thing that is to be looked unto is the importune Suit of the Ceſareans, not only to ſtop any further things to be granted to the King's Highneſs, but alſo to revoke the Commiſſion given to the Lord Legate Campegius and to me, which ſhould be a clear diſappointment and fruſtration of the King's Cauſe; ye ſhall therefore look ſubſtantially by all politick means to withſtand, that no ſuch thing be granted: aſſuring the Pope and all the Cardinals, and ſuch other as have reſpect to the well of the See Apoſtolick, that if he ſhould do ſuch an high injury to the King and his Realm, and an Act ſo contumelious to us his Legates, and ſo contrarious to his Faith and Promiſe, he ſhould thereby not fail ſo highly to irritate the King and all the Nobles of the Realm, that undoubtedly they ſhould decline from the obedience of the the See Apoſtolick, and conſequently all other Realms ſhould do the ſemblable, foraſmuch as they ſhould find in the Head of the ſame, neither juſtneſs, uprightneſs, nor truth; and this ſhall be neceſſary, as the caſe ſhall require, well to be inculked and put in his head, to the intent his Holineſs by the ſame may be preſerved from granting, paſſing, or condeſcending to any ſuch thing.

After theſe Letters perfected hither, and read unto the King's Highneſs, albeit that mention is made in ſundry places heretofore, that as well ye Mr. Stevins, and Sir Francis Brian, if ye be not returned from the Court of Rome, as alſo the reſt of the King's Ambaſſadours, which at the arrival of Mr. Doctor Bennet ſhall fortune to be there, ſhall forbear to make any further means or purſuit for the New Commiſſion and Pollication, but clearly to uſe ſilence therein; yet nevertheleſs regarding, and more profoundly conſidering the effect of your Letters laſt ſent, it doth plainly appear, that tho' after the overture made to the Pope's Holineſs of the ſaid New Commiſſion, the Buſineſs chanced to be made by the Emperor's Ambaſſador, upon preferring a ſupplication for advocation of the Cauſe; which thing by your writing Mr. Stevins, to Capiſucchi was well avoided; yet was there none expreſs refuſal made by the Pope's Holineſs to condeſcend unto the ſaid New Commiſſion, but order given that you ſhould conſult and confer with the Cardinal Ancomitane and Simonetta upon the ſame; which Conference, by means of the ſaid Anſidia, was deferred and diſappointed, without any final concluſion or reſolution taken thereupon. Wherefore inaſmuch as yet there appeareth no utter deſpair of obtaining the ſaid New Commiſſion and Pollicitation, with ſome more fat, pregnant, and effectual Clauſes than the other hath; The King's pleaſure is, That notwithſtanding any words before mentioned, both ye the ſaid Mr. Stevins, and Sir Francis Brian, if ye be not departed from the Court of Rome, do for the time of your remur there, which the King's pleaſure is ſhall not be long, but only for taking of your leave; and alſo the reſt of the King's ſaid Orators, after your departure, ſhall, as ye ſhall ſee the caſe require, endeavour your ſelves as much as may be, to obtain the ſaid New Commiſſion and Pollicitation, foreſeeing always that you handle the matter after ſuch manner, as thereby the Pope be not the rather induced to hearken and incline to any purſuits of the Imperials for advocation of the Cauſe, which were a total fruſtration of all the King's intent, but ſo to uſe your ſelves, as ye ſhall ſee to be to the benefit, and not to the hindrance thereof: Which done, the King's Grace doth refer the good handling of this thing to your wiſdoms and diſcretions, neither to leave the purſuit of the ſaid Commiſſion and Pollicitation, if it may without dammage be followed; nor to follow it, if thereby you ſhall ſee apparent danger of any ſuch Advocation, or advantage to enſue to the purpoſe of the Imperialiſts, like as his Highneſs doubteth not, knowing now the King's mind and pleaſure, you will with wiſdom and dexterity, order your ſelves therein accordingly.

And furthermore, you ſhall in any wiſe diſſuade the Pope for ſending hither by his Nuntio, to be ſent unto Spain, or otherwiſe, for the Original Bull: And if the Nuntio be already paſſed, having charge to ſpeak for ſending the ſame to the Court of Rome, then to find the means that a Commandment be by the Pope's Holineſs ſent after him, not to make any mention thereof: Which done to you, the King's said Ambassador shall have a good colour to induce the Pope's Holiness, saying, as of your self, That you have well considered your own pursuits for procuring the Brief at Rome; and because the Emperor might per-case think that the Pope were about to affect unto him the falsity of the said Brief, therefore you can be contented that that matter be put off, and no mention to be made thereof by his Nuntio, or otherwise; whereunto it is not to be doubted but the Pope's Holiness will have special regard, and facilly condescend to your desires in that behalf.

Finally, It appeareth also by certain your Letters sent, as well to the King's Highness as to me, that the Pope's Holiness is much desirous to study and find a mean and way to satisfie the King's Highness in this behalf: Amongst which one clause in his Letters to me is this; Tamen enim jurisperitorum consilium quæsiverimus, sed nihil reperimus, quod hoc oratoribus simul & supplicibus ad honori nostro satisfaceret; sed tamen omnia & veniamus unico modo Regiæ suæ Serenitati, ac circumspectioni satisfaciendi. (And he added in the Margin, with Wolsey's hand; Mr. Petre, referas mihi literis pervelim quid tibi & mihi Pontifex dixerit de modis excogitandis, & quomodo subridens dicebat, In somnis &c.)

Wherefore since his Holiness so plainly declared, that he seeketh the ways and means to satisfie the King's Highness, it shall be in any wise expedient, that you the said Orators perceiving any towardness of Advocation, lay this to the Pope's Holiness, saying, That that is not the way to satisfie his Grace; and yet besides that, by your Wisdoms to find the means to understand and know of his Holiness what be the ways and means, which his Holiness hath studied or can study to satisfie the King according to his writing in this behalf, whereof they shall say his Grace is glad, and is very desirous to know and understand the same; and as you shall perceive any towardness or unreadiness in the Pope in that behalf, so to set forth your pursuits to the said purpose accordingly. And thus heartily fare you well. From Richmond the 21 day of May.

Your loving Friend,

T. Cardin. Ebor.

XXVII. The King's Letter to his Ambaſſadours, to hinder an Avocation of the Suit: An Original.

By the King.

Henry Rex.

TRuſty and right well-beloved we greet you well. Since your departure from hence, we have received ſundry your Letters to us directed, whereof the laſt beareth date at Rome, the 4*th* day of the laſt month; and have alſo ſeen ſuch other as from time to time ye have ſent to the moſt Reverend Father in God, our moſt entirely well-beloved Counſeller the Lord Legate, Cardinal, Arch-Biſhop of York, Primate of England, and our Chancellour: By continue whereof, we have been advertiſed of the Succeſſes, as well of your Journey thitherwards, as of ſuch things as ye to that time had done in our Cauſes to you committed; for the which your diligent advertiſement, and good acquittal, we give unto you condign thanks: aſcertaining you, We do not a little marvel, that in your ſaid laſt Letters you ſhew ſo much deſperation of any great favour to be had at the Pope's hand in our ſaid Cauſes; conſidering that neither ye then had ſpoken with his Holineſs in the ſame, nor by Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 11.

ſuch Conferences as ye had had with Mr. Jacobo Salviati, or other on his behalf, we can perceive but all good favour and towardneſs; tho' per-caſe the ſuperiority of the Imperials, and the common fame, led you to think the contrary: Howbeit as you know no credence is to be given unto ſuch common report, nor we truſt the ſame ſhall prove more true, than hath done the Opinion that was of the Lord Legate Campegius now here Reſident, whom we find and certainly know to be of a far other ſort in his love and inclination towards us, than was ſpoken, not having ſuch affection towards the Emperor, as in him was ſuſpected. And to be plain with you, if ever he had been of other mind, we have ſaid ſomewhat to him after ſuch manner as might ſoon change that intention. So that little faith is to be given to the outward Sayings and Opinions of ſuch People as meaſure every thing at their pleaſure; which we doubt not but ye right wiſely do conſider, and that ye have before this time, by your diligent ſollicitation made to ſpeak with the Pope's Holineſs for declaration of your Charge, proved the contrary. Whereof we ſhall be glad and joyous to hear; willing and deſiring you therefore, according to the great and ſpecial confidence that we have in you, to pretermit no time in the diligent handling and execution of your ſaid Charge, but by one good way or other to find the mean, if you have not already done it, to declare the ſame unto the Pope, wherein the good advice and addreſs of the Biſhop of Verone ſhall, we truſt, do you great furtherance; and by whoſe means, if ye for the Pope's extreme debility or ſickneſs might in no wiſe be often admitted unto his preſence, ye may ſignify unto him at great length, our whole Mind, Deſire, and Intent, after ſuch form as your Inſtructions and Letters given and ſent unto you in that behalf do purport: For ſure ye may be, it ſhall highly confer unto the benefit of our Cauſes, that ye have there preſent one ſo faſt and aſſured Friend unto us, as we truſt the Biſhop of Verone is, who ſhall be able right largely to countervail, and meet with the malicious practices of the Arch-Biſhop of Capua, who is thought to be one of the chief Authors and contrivers of the Falſities, Crafts, and Abuſes, ſet forth to the hindrance of our ſaid Cauſes; which no Man ſhall more politickly and facilely deprehend, than the ſaid Biſhop of Verone may do: And therefore he is by you, with all good means and ways poſſible, to be entertained; as we doubt not but you will have ſpecial eye and regard to the making, winning, and conſervation of as many Friends to our purpoſe as ye can poſſibly obtain; ſo handling your ſelf, as now may appear your dexterity and perfect endeavour to conduce, with your diligent labour and pains, our Matters to the ſpeedy, indelayed, and deſired end and effect, which ye may be ſure we ſhall not put in oblivion, but will have the ſame in remembrance accordingly. Marvelling nevertheleſs, that though Mr. Stevins could not bring hitherto our great Cauſes to perfection, ye had not in the mean ſeaſon advertiſed us what is done touching ſuch Bulls as were to be ſped for our other particular Matters, whereof no mention is made in your ſaid Letters; willing and deſiring you therefore, by your next Letters, to advertiſe us in what ſtate and train the ſame be; knowing right well that ye being not only by the former Letters and Writings, but alſo by ſuch as be ſent unto you at this time, ſufficiently and amply inſtructed of our Mind and Pleaſure, will now ſo ſo acquit your ſelf, as ſhall correſpond to the perfect expectation, and firm opinion that we have of you, which we ſhall not fail to have in our tender conſideration to your well, as is aforeſaid. You ſhall alſo, in your Conferences with the ſaid Biſhop of Verone, underſtand and know of him, by what ways and means ye may beſt further his advancement to the Cardinality; exhorting him, for the manifold good effects that thereof may enſue, to conform himſelf to the acceptation thereof, if it may be obtained; for doubtleſs his Vertue, Wiſdom, Experience, Fidelity, and other great and commendable merits well conſidered, we think no Man more meet at this time to be preferred thereunto than him; And therefore our expreſs Mind and Pleaſure is, that ye do it by all the ways and means to you poſſible. And finally we will that ye ſhow unto him how effectually we have written unto you in that behalf, to the intent, being advanced thereunto, he may give us the better thanks, and in every way bear to us the more perfect affection. And by your next Letters, we will that ye advertiſe us what Advocates ye have on our part, with their Names and Qualities; finding the means alſo, if it is poſſible, to retain ſome notable and excellent Divine, a Frier, or other that may, can, or will firmly ſtick to our Cauſes, in leaning to that; Quod Pontifex ex Jure Divino non poteſt diſpenſare, &c. and of all the Succeſſes to advertiſe us, as our ſpecial truſt is in you. Given under our Signet, at our Manner of Greenwich, the 6th of this April.

XXVIII. The King's Letter to his Ambaſſadours, about his appearance before the Legates. An Original.

June 23. 1529.

To our truſty and right well-beloved Counſellers, Mr. William Bennet, Doctor of both Laws; Sir Gregory de Caſſalis, Knight; and Mr. Peter Vannes our Secretary for the Latine Tongue, our Ambaſſadours, reſident in the Court of Rome, and to every of them.

By the KING.

Henry R.

TRuſty and right well-beloved, we greet you well. By former Letters and Writings ſent to you Sir Gregory and Mr. Peter, with other of your Collegues then being at Rome, and by ſuch conference as was had with you Mr. Bennet before your departure, you were advertiſed in what ſtate then ſtood our Cauſe and Matter of Matrimony, and how it was intended that the Proceſs of the ſame ſhould with diligence be commenced before the Pope's Legates here, being authorized for that purpoſe. Since that time, enſuing the deliberation taken in that behalf, the ſaid Legates, all due Ceremonies firſt obſerved, have directed Citations

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 11.

Citations both to us and to the Queen, for our and for her appearing before them the 18*th.* of this Month; which appearance was duly on either Party kept, performed, and all requisite Solemnities accomplished: At which time the Queen trusting more in the Power of the Imperialists, than in the justness of her Cause, and thinking of likelyhood, by frustratory allegations and delays, to tract and put over the matter to her advantage, did protest at the said day, putting in Libels Recusatories of the Judges; and also made a provocation, alledging the Cause to be avoked by the Pope's Holiness, & litis pendentiam coram eodem; desiring to be admitted for probation thereof, and to have a term competent for the same: Whereupon day was given by the Judges till the 21. of the same month, for declaration of their minds and intentions thereunto; The Queen in Person, and we by our Proctor enjoined to appear the same day, to hear what the said Judges should determine in and upon the same. At which time both we and the Queen appeared in Person; and notwithstanding that the said Judges amply and sufficiently declared, as well the sincerity of their minds directly, justly to proceed without favour, dread, affection, or partiality; as also that in such Recusation, Appellation, or term for proving of Litis pendentia, could or might be by them admitted: yet she nevertheless persisting in her former wilfulness, and in her Appeal, which also by the said Judges was likewise recused: And they minding to proceed further in the Cause, the Queen would no longer make her abode to hear what the said Judges would fully discern, but incontinently departed out of the Court; wherefore she was thrice preconnisate, and called eft-soons to return and appear; which she refusing to do, was denounced by the Judges Contumax, and a Citation decerned for her appearance on Friday next, to make answer to such Articles and Positions as should be objected unto her: So as now it is not to be doubted, but that she will use all the ways and means to her possible, to impetrate and attain such things as well by her own pursute, as by her Friends, as may be to the impeachment of the rightful Process of this Cause, either by Advocation, Inhibition or otherwise: Wherefore seeing now in what state this our Matter standeth and dependeth, necessary and requisite for the great Consequences hanging upon the same, not only for the exoneration of our Conscience, but also for the surety of our Succession, and the weal of this our Realm and People, to be with all celerity perfected and observed; It was thought convenient to advertise you of the Premisses, to the intent ye being well and sufficiently instructed in all things concerning the same, shall by your wisdoms and diligences have special regard that nothing pass or be granted there by the Pope's Holiness, which may either give delay or disappointment to the direct and speedy Process to be used in this Cause, neither by advocation of the Cause, Inhibition or otherwise; but that if any such thing shall, by the Cardinal or by her Agents, or other, be attempted, or desired, the like Men of Wisdom, good Zeal, Learning, and Experience, diligently procure the stopping thereof, as well upon such Reasons and Considerations as before have been signified unto you, as by inferring the high and extreme dishonour, and intolerable prejudice that the Pope's Holiness therein should do to his said Legates; and also the contrariety both of his Bull and Commission, and also of his Promise and Pollicitation passed upon the same same, beside the notable and excellent displeasure thereby to be done by his Holiness to us, and our Realm, clear contrary to our merits and deserts; extending also the other dangers mentioned in the said former Writings, apparent to ensue thereby to his Holiness, and the See Apostolick, with the manifold, and in manner, infinite inconveniencies like to follow of the same to all Christendom, and all other such reasons, inductions and perswasions ye can make and devise for that purpose: putting him also in remembrance of the great Commodity coming unto his Holiness herein, by reason that this Cause being here decided, the Pope not only is delivered from the pains that he should in this time of Disease and Sickness, to the extream peril of his Life sustain with the same, seeing that it is of such moment and importance, as suffereth no trace or delay; but also his Holiness shall by such decision here eschew and avoid all displeasure that he should not fail to have, if it were or should be passed elsewhere: which matter is no little wisdom well to foresee and consider, and not only to forbear to do or pass any thing derogatory or prejudicial to his said Commission, but also by all means possible to corroborate and fortifie the same, and all such Acts judicial as shall pass by his said Legates by virtue thereof. Like as we doubt not but that the Pope's Holiness, of his Uprightness, Vertue, and perfect Wisdom will do; and rather like a most loving Father and Friend, tender and favour our good, just and reasonable Causes and Desires, putting thereunto all the furtherance he may do, than to do or consent to be done any thing hurtful, prejudicial, dammageable, or displeasant unto us, or this our said Cause. And finally, if need shall be, we wish ye also infer, as the case shall require, how inconvenient it were this our matter should be decided in the Court of Rome, which now dependeth totally in the Emperor's Arbitre, having such puissance near thereunto, that, as hath been written by the Pope's own Letters, their State and Life there is all in the Emperor's hands, who's Armies may famish or relieve them at their pleasure. And semblably ye shall not forget the prerogative of our Crown and Jurisdiction Royal, by the ancient Laws of our Realm, which admitteth nothing to be done by the Pope to the prejudice thereof, and also what danger they should incur that would presume to bring or present any such thing unto the same, as in our last Letters sent by Alexander was touched at good length. Wherein since ye be already so well and amply instructed, knowing also how much the Matter imports and toucheth us, and what profit and agreeable service ye may do unto us herein, with the high thanks that ye may deserve for the same; We shall not be more prolix, but refer the substantial, perfect, and assured handling hereof to your circumspections, fidelities, and diligences, not doubting but that ye will now above all other things, look vigilantly hereunto, and so acquit your selves in the same, as it may well appear that your Acts shall be correspondent to our firm trust and expectation, and no less tender this thing than ye know it to be imprinted in the bottom of our Heart, more than as ye know both the importance and high moment, and also the very necessity of the Matter doth require. In which doing, beside the fruit and praise that ye shall consecute thereby of all good Men, we shall have your acquittals in our remembrance, as ye shall have cause to to think your travels, pains, and ſtudies herein, in the beſt wiſe collocate and employed. Given under our Signet, at our Palace of Hatfield, the 23*d* day of June.

XXIX. Doctor Bennet's Letter to the Cardinal, ſhewing how little they might expect from the Pope. An Original.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 11. PLeaſe it your Grace to underſtand, that the 6*th* day of this month the Pope's Holineſs ſent for us: Albeit we had made great ſuit for Audience before to his Holineſs, ſoon after that we had underſtanding that his Holineſs was recovered of this his laſt Sickneſs, into the which he fell the ſecond day, after I had my firſt audience of his Holineſs, which was the 21. day of the laſt month: And after our long communication and reaſoning in the King's Highneſs Cauſe, which at length we have written to your Grace in our common Letter, for a confirmation of many inconveniences and dangers which we perſwaded to his Holineſs, to follow both to himſelf and to the See Apoſtolick, in caſe his Holineſs ſhould avoke the cauſe; I thought much convenient at that ſame time to deliver the King's familiar, and likewiſe your Grace's Letter, and ſo to ſhew your Grace's Credence to his Holineſs. After the foreſaid Letters delivered, and by his Holineſs read, his Holineſs ſhewed me, that he perceived by your Grace's Letters, that I had certain Credence to ſhew unto him of great moment and importance, concerning him and the See Apoſtolick. I ſhewed to his Holineſs your Grace's faith and obſervance, his Holineſs doth beſt know; moſt humbly beſeeching his Holineſs to believe theſe undoubtedly to follow, That if his Holineſs ſhould, at the labours of the Ceſareans, avoke the Cauſe, he ſhould not alonly offend the King's Highneſs, which hitherto hath been a ſtay, a help, and a defence of the See Apoſtolick; but alſo by reaſon of the injury, without remedy, ſhall alienate his Majeſty and Realms, with others, from the devotion and obedience of the See Apoſtolick. This I ſhewed his Holineſs, that your Grace doth evidently perceive to follow, in caſe his Holineſs ſhould incline to the Ceſareans deſire on this behalf: Yea further, I ſaid, that your Grace moſt clearly perceiveth alſo by that Act, the Church of England utterly to be deſtroyed, and likewiſe your Perſon; and that theſe your Grace, with weeping tears, moſt lamentably committed unto me to ſhew to his Holineſs. Furthermore I ſhewed to his Holineſs, that your Grace, howſoever you ſhould proceed in this Cauſe, did intend to proceed ſo ſincerely, indifferently, and juſtly, that you would rather ſuffer to be jointed, Joint by Joint, than either for affection or fear, do any act either againſt your Conſcience or Juſtice. Furthermore I ſaid, that ſeeing his Holineſs may be ſo well aſſured, that your Grace will do nothing but according to Juſtice in this Cauſe, he may the more boldly deny Avocations to the Ceſareans, ſeeing that the Queen and the Emperor can deſire but Juſtice, which they may have at your Grace's hand, and my Lord Campegius, as well there as here; and by this means his Holiness should deliver himself from great pains and unquietness of mind, which he should sustain in case the cause should be known here, where he should have the King's Highness on one part, and the Emperor on the other side, daily calling upon his Holiness. To this his Holiness most heavily, and with tears, answered and said, That now he saw the destruction of Christendom, and lamented that his fortune was such to live to this day, and not to be able to remedy it, (saying these words,) For God is my Judge, I would do as gladly for the King, as I would for my self; and to that I knowledge my self most bounden, but in this case I cannot satisfie his desire, but that I should do manifestly against Justice to the charge of my Conscience, to my rebuke, and to the dishonour of the See Apostolick; affirming, that his Counsel shews him, that seeing the Cause is in the Audience or Proxie of the Queen, to ask the Avocation in her Name, he cannot of Justice deny it, and the whole Signature be in that sense, opinion; so that though he would most gladly do that thing that might be to the King's pleasure, yet he cannot do it, seeing that Signature would be against him whensoever the Supplication should be up this And so being late, we took our leave of his Holiness, and departed, seeing that we could obtain nothing of the Pope for stopping the Avocation, we consulted and devised for the deferring of it, till such time as your Grace might make an end in the Cause there. And so concluded upon a new Device, which at length we have written in our common Letter, wherein I promise your Grace, Mr. Gregory has used great diligence, and taken great labours at this time, we can do no more for our lives: And if your Grace saw the importune labour of the Ambassadors of the Emperor's and Ferdinandoes, you would marvel, I promise your Grace they never cease, wherefore in staying hitherto, as we have done, it is marvel, as God knoweth, whom I pray to preserve your Grace in health and prosperity ad multos annos. I beseech your Grace most humbly to commend me to the King's Highness; and likewise I beseech your Grace to pardon my ill writing. At Rome the 9th day of July.

Act 26. Anno Regni 21. Henr. 8.

XXXI. An Act for the releasing unto the King his Highness of such Sums of Money as was to be required of him, by any his Subjects, for any Manner of Loan, by his Letters Missives, or other Way or manner whatsoever.

Item quædam alia billa formam cujusdam actus in se continens, exhibita præfato Domino Regi in Parliamento prædicto, cujus quidem billæ tenor sequitur in hæc verba. The King's humble, faithful, and loving subjects the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, considering and calling to their remembrances, the inestimable Costs, Charges, and Expences, which the King's Highness necessarily hath been compelled to support and sustain, since his assumption to his Crown, Estate, and Dignity Royal; as well first for the extinction of a right dangerous and damnable Schism sprung and risen in the Church; which by the providence of the Almighty God, and the high prudence, and provision, and assistance of the King's Highness, was, to the great honour, laud, and glory of his Majesty, repressed; the Enemies then being of the Church reformed, returned, and restored to the unity of the same, and peace over all componed and concluded, as also for the modifying of the insatiable and inordinate ambition of those which do aspire unto the Monarchy of Christendom, did put universal trouble, divisions in the same, intending, if they might, not only to have subdued this Realm, but also all the rest unto their Power and Subjection Subjection: For the resistance whereof, the Kings highness was compelled, after the Universal Peace, by the great study, labour, and travel of his Grace conduced, and the same by some of the Contrahents newly violate and infringed; in shewing the form of the Treatise thereupon made again, to take Armour. And over and besides the notable and excessive treasure and substance which his Highness in his first Wars had employed for the defence of the Church, the Faith Catholick, and this his Realm, and of the People and Subjects of the same, was eft-soons brought of necessity to new, excellent, and marvellous Charges, both for the supportation of sundry Armies by Sea and by Land; and also for divers and manifold Contributions outward, to serve, keep, and contain his own Subjects at home in rest and repose; which hath been so politickly handled and conduced, that when the most part of all religious Christians have been infested with cruel Wars, Discords, Divisions, and Dissentions, the great Heads and Princes of the World brought unto Captivity; Cities, Towns, and Places, by force and sedition, taken, spoiled, burnt, and sacked; Men, Women, and Children found in the same slain and destroyed; Virgins, Wives, Widows, and Religious Women, ravished and defloured; Holy Churches and Temples polluted, and turned unto prophane use; the Reliques of the Holy Saints irreverently treated; Hunger, Dearth, and Famine, by mean thereof in the said outward Regions, insuing and generally over all; was depopulation, destruction and confusion; the King's said Subjects in all this time, were by the high providence and politick means of his Grace nevertheless preserved, defended, and maintained, from all these inconveniences and dangers; and such provisions taken, by one way or other, so as reasonable commodity was alwayes given unto them to exercise their Traffiques of Merchandise, and other their Crafts, Mysteries, and Occupations for their living; which could not possibly have been brought about, unless then the King's Highness, with continual studies, travels, and pains, and with his infinite Charges and Expences, had converted the peril and danger of the Enterprises and Exploits, set forth for the reduction of the Enemies unto Peace, from his own Subjects unto Strangers: Whereof finally such Fruit and Effect is ensued, as by the King's policy, puissance, and means, general and universal Peace is established amongst all Christian Princes; and this Realm now, thanked be God, constituted in free, better, and more assured and profitable Amity with all outward Parties, than hath been at any time whereof is memory or remembrance. Considering furthermore, That his Highness, in and about the Premisses, hath been fain to imploy, not only such summs of Mony as hath risen and grown by any manner of contribution made unto his Grace by his said loving Subjects, but also over and above the same, sundry other notable and excellent Summs of his own Treasure and yearly Revenues, which else his Grace might have kept and reserved to his own use; amongst which manifold great Summs so employed, his Highness also, as is notoriously known, and as doth, evidently appear by the accompts of the same, hath to that use and none other, converted all such Money, as by any his Subiects and People, Spiritual and Temporal, hath been advanced unto his Grace by way of Grest and Loan, either particularly, or by any Taxation made of the same, being a thing so well collocate and bestowed, seeing the said high and great Fruits and effects thereof enſued, to the honour, ſurety, well, perfect commodity, and perpetual tranquillity of this ſaid Realm, as nothing could better nor more to the comfort of his ſaid Subjects be deſired, ſtudied, or imagined; Of one mind, conſent and aſſent, and by Authority of this preſent Parliament, do for themſelves, and all the whole body of the Realm whom they do repreſent, freely, liberally, and abſolutely, give and grant unto the King's Highneſs, by Authority of this preſent Parliament, all and every Sum and Sums of Money, which to them, and every of them, is, ought, or might be due, by reaſon of any Money, or any other thing, to his Grace at any time heretofore advanced, or payed, by way of Preſt or Loan, either upon any Letter, or Letters under the King's Privy Seal, general or particular, Letter, Miſive, Promiſe, Bond, or Obligation of payment, or by any Taxation, or other aſſeſſing, by vertue of any Commiſſion or Commiſſions, or by any other mean or means whatſoever it be heretofore paſſed for that purpoſe, and utterly, frankly, liberally, and moſt willingly and benevolently, for them, their Heirs, Executors, and Succeſſors, do remit, releaſe, and quit claim, unto his Highneſs, his Heirs, and Succeſſors for ever, all and every the ſame Sums of Mony, and every parcel thereof, and all and ſingular Suits, Petitions, and demands, which they, or any of them, their Heirs, Succeſſors, or Executors, or the Heirs, Executors or ſucceſſors of any of them, have, had, or may have for the ſame, or any parcel thereof; moſt humbly and lovingly, beſeeching his Highneſs, for the more clear diſcharge for the ſame, that it may be ordained and enacted by the King, our ſaid Sovereign Lord, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by Authority of the ſame, that all Promiſes, Bonds, Wrings, Obligatory Letters, under the King's Privy Seal, Signet, Sign Manual, or Great Seal paſſed, and other Bonds or Promiſes, whatſoever they be, had, made, to any Perſon or Perſons, Spiritual or Temporal, Shire, City, Burrough, Waxentale, Tranſhip, Hamlet, Village, Monaſtery, Church, Cathedral, or Collegiat, or to any Guild, Fraternity, or Body Corporate, Fellowſhip, or Company, or other whatſoever, having capacity to take any Bond eſpecially and generally, jointly or ſeverally, touching or concerning the ſame Preſt or Loan, or every of them, or the repayment of any Sum or Sums of Mony for the ſame, be from henceforth void and of none effect. Cui quidem billæ probe & ad plenum intellectæ per dictum Dominum Regem ex aſſenſu & Authoritate Parliamenti prædicti taliter eſt reſponſum. Le Roy remercie les Seigneurs & ſes communes de leur bonne coeurs en faiſant ceſt graunt, & icelle ſe Majeſte accepte & tout le contenu, & ceſt eſcriture a graunt & aprove avecques tous les articles en ceſte eſcripture ſpecifies.

XXXII. A Letter from Gardiner and Fox, about their Proceedings at Cambridg. An Original.

Feb. 1530. from Cambridg by Stephen Gardiner.

To the King's Highneſs.

PLeaſeth it your Highneſs to be advertiſed, That arriving here at Cambridg upon Saturday laſt paſt at noon, that ſame night, and Sunday in the Morning, we deviſed with the Vice Chancellour, and ſuch other as favoureth your Grace's Cauſe, how and in what ſort to compaſs and attain your Grace's Purpoſe and Intent; wherein we aſſure your Grace, we found much towardneſs, good will, and diligence, in the Vice-Chancellour and Dr. Edmunds, being as ſtudious to ſerve your Grace as we could wiſh or deſire: Nevertheleſs there was not ſo much care, labour, ſtudy, and diligence imployed on our Party, by them, our ſelf, and other, for attaining your Grace's Purpoſe, but there was as much done by others for the lett and empeachment of the ſame; and as we aſſembled, they aſſembled, as we made Friends they made Friends, to lett that nothing ſhould paſs as in the Univerſities Name; wherein the firſt day they were Superiors, for they had put in the ears of them, by whoſe Voices ſuch things do paſs, multas fabulas, too tedious to write unto your Grace. Upon Sunday at afternoon were aſſembled, after the manner of the Univerſity, all the Doctors, Batchellors of Divinity, and Maſters of Art, being in number almoſt two hundred: In that Congregation we delivered your Grace's Letters, which were read openly by the Vice-Chancellor. And for anſwer to be made unto them, firſt the Vice-Chancellor calling apart the Doctors, asked their Advice and Opinion; whereunto they anſwered ſeverally, as their Affections led them, & reſerat in multa confuſione. Tandem they were content Anſwer ſhould be made to the Queſtions by indifferent Men: But then they came to Exceptions againſt the Abbot of St. Benets, who ſeemed to come for that purpoſe; and likewiſe againſt Dr. Reppes, and Dr. Grome; and alſo generally againſt all ſuch as had allowed Dr. Cranmer's Book, inaſmuch as they had already declared their Opinion. We ſaid thereunto That by that reaſon they might except againſt all; for it was lightly, that in a Queſtion ſo notable as this is, every Man Learned hath ſaid to his Friend as he thinketh in it for the time; but we ought not to judge of any Man, that he ſetteth more to defend that which he hath once ſaid, than Truth afterward known. Finally, The Vice-Chancellor, becauſe the day was much ſpent in thoſe altercations, commanding every Man to reſort to his Seat apart, as the manner is in thoſe Aſſemblies, willed every Man's mind to be known ſecretly, whether they would be content with ſuch an Order as he had conceived for anſwer to be made by the Univerſity to your Grace's Letters; whereunto that night they would in no wiſe agree. And forasmuch as it was then dark night, the Vice Chancellor continued the Congregation till the next day at one of the Clock; at which time the Vice-Chancellor proponed a Grace after the form herein incloſed; and, it was first denied: When it was asked again, it was even on both Parties, to be denied or granted; and at the last, by labour of Friends to cause some to depart the House which were against it, it was obtained in such form as the Schedule herein enclosed purporteth; wherein be two Points which we would have left out; but considering by putting in of them, we allured many, and that indeed they shall not hurt the Determination for your Grace's part, we were finally content therewith. The one Point is that where it was first, that quicquid major pars of them that be named decreverit, should be taken for the Determination of the University. Now it referred ad duas partes, wherein we suppose shall be no difficulty. The other Point is, That your Grace's Question shall be openly disputed, which we think to be very honorable; and it is agreed amongst us, That in that Disputation, shall answer, the Abbot of St. Benets, Dr. Reppes, and I Mr. Fox, to all such as will object any thing or reason against the conclusion to be sustained for your Grace's part. And because Mr. Doctor Clyff hath said, That he hath somewhat to say concerning the Canon-Law; I your Secretary shall be adjoined unto them for answer to be made therein. In the Schedule which we send unto your Grace herewith, containing the names of those who shall determine your Grace's Question, all marked with the Letter A. be already of your Grace's Opinion; by which we trust, and with other good means, to induce and obtain a great part of the rest. Thus We beseech Almighty God to preserve your most Noble and Royal Estate. From Cambridge the day of February.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 13:

XXXIII. A Letter from Crook out of Venice, concerning the Opinions of Divines about the Divorce. An Original.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B 13.

PLeaſe it your Highneſs to be advertiſed, That as this day I obtained the Common Seal of the Univerſity of Padua, in ſubſtantial and good form; for all the Doctors were aſſembled upon Sunday, and the Caſe was amongſt them ſolemnly and earneſtly diſputed all Monday, Tueſday, Wedneſday, and Thurſday, and this preſent Friday in the morning again: and thereupon they concluded with your Highneſs, and deſired a Notary to ſet his Sign and Hand unto an Inſtrument, by Leonicus and Simetus deviſed, in corroboration of your Cauſe, and thereby to teſtify that this Inſtrument was their Deed, Device, Act, and Concluſion; and for the more credence to be given to the ſaid Inſtrument, they cauſed the Chancellor of the Poteſtate here to ſet his Hand and Seal for the approbation of the Authority of the Notary: A Copy of all the which things I ſend unto your Highneſs by this Bearer, in moſt humble wiſe beſeeching the ſame to be advertiſed, that the General of the Black-Friers hath given a Commandment, That no Black-Fryer diſpute the Pope's Power; Notwithſtanding Prior Thomas Omnibonus procureth daily new Subſcriptions, and will do till the Brief of contrary Commandment ſhall come unto his hands.

My fidelity bindeth me to advertiſe your Highneſs, that all Lutherans be utterly againſt your Highneſs in this Cauſe, and have letted as much with their wretched Power, Malice, without reaſon or Authority, as they could and might, as well here, as in Padua and Ferrara, where be no ſmall Companies of them. I doubt not but all Chriſtian Univerſities, if they be well handled, will earneſtly conclude with your Highneſs. And to obtain their aſſent, as well through Italy, France, Almagn, Auſtrich, Hungary and Scotland, I think it marveſous expedient, for the preferment of this your moſt honourable and high Cauſe; As from the Seigniory and Dominion of Venice towards Rome, and beyond Rome, I think there can be no more done than is done already. Albeit, gracious Lord, if that I had in time been ſufficiently furniſhed with Mony, albeit I have beſide this Seal procured unto your Highneſs an hundred and ten Subſcriptions, yet it had been nothing in compariſon of that that I might eaſily and would have done; and at this hour I aſſure your Highneſs, that I have neither Proviſion nor Mony, and have borrowed an hundred Crowns, the which alſo are ſpent about the getting of this Seal; of the which my need, and divers impediments in your Highneſs's Cauſe here, I have advertiſed your Highneſs by many and ſundry Letters, and with the ſame ſent divers Books and Writings, part to Hierom Molins a Venetian, and Factor to Mappheus Bernardus by the hands of your Subject Edmund Harwel, part directed to Mr. York, whereof I am nothing aſcertained whether they be exhibited unto your Highneſs or not, to no little diſcomfort unto me; notwithſtanding I have reſerved a Copy of all things, Letters, and other, and herein incloſed a Bill, ſpecifying by whom and to whom I directed my ſaid Letters, Letters, in moſt humble wiſe, beſeeching your moſt Royal Clemency, to ponder my true, ſure, and good endeavours, and not to ſuffer me to be deſtitute of Mony, to my undoing, and utter loſs of your moſt high Cauſes here: for of my ſelf I have nothing whereby to help my ſelf. And thus the moſt Bleſſed Trinity keep and preſerve your Highneſs in his moſt Royal Eſtate. At Venice, the firſt day of July at night, Anno ——— 30. R. Crook.

EX hac Collatione in qua audivimus Argumenta de Controverſia Divortii Sereniſſimi & Illuſtriſſimi Regis Angliæ, Franciæ, &c. propoſita & diligenter agitata à Reverendo D. D. Edwardo Herefordenſi Epiſcopo, D. Nicolao Archidiacono & D. D. Barnes, intelleximus Sereniſſimum Regem maximis & graviſſimis Cauſis adductum, ſuperatum & concluſum eſſe, ut in hoc negotio Matrimonii ſui faceret quod ſequitur. Nam hoc manifeſtum eſt & negare nemo poteſt, quod Lex Levit. tradita Lev. 18. v. 20. prohibet ducere fratris Uxorem, &c. ſed divina, naturalis, & moralis Lex eſt intelligenda tam de vivi quam de mortui fratris Uxore, & quod contra hanc legem nulla contraria lex fieri aut conſtitui poſſit, ſicut & tota Eccleſia ſemper hanc Legem retinuit, & judicavit hujuſmodi nuptias inceſtas eſſe, ſicut teſtantur Synodorum Decreta & Sanctiſſimorum Patrum Clariſſimæ Sententiæ, & has nuptias prohibent & vocant inceſtas etiam jura Civilia. Proinde & nos ſentimus, & hanc Legem de non ducenda Uxore fratris in omnibus Eccleſiis ſervandam eſſe veluti divinam, naturalem, & moralem Legem; Nec in noſtris Eccleſiis vellemus diſpenſare aut permittere, præſertim ante factum, ut ejuſmodi nuptiæ contraherentur, & hanc Doctrinam poſſumus & volumus Deo volente facile defendere. Cæterum quantum ad Divortium pertinet, nondum ſumus plene perſuaſi ut ſententiam noſtram ferre poſſimus, An poſt Contractum Matrimonium in hoc caſu Sereniſſimi Regis deberet fieri Divortium. Rogamus igitur Seren. Regem ut æquo animo ferat, differri noſtram Sententiam in hac re donec erimus certiores.

MArtinus Epiſcopus, Servus Servorum Dei, venerabili Fratri Archiepiſcopo Cantuarienſi ſalutem & Apoſtolicam Benedictionem. Ex MS. D. Petyt.

Quamdiſtricto Dei Judicio de commiſſis tibi ovibus rationem redditurus es, aliquando cogitares, ſi meminiſſes & tu quæ paſtoralis officii cura eſſe debet, quantumq; Eccleſiæ Romanæ, à qua dignitatem & auctoritatem vendicas, jus atque honorem tueri obligatus es, in conſideratione tionem duceres; profecto non usque a deo dormitares neque negligeres: Surrexisses jamdudum, & post oves jam longe aberrantes inclamares, ac pro viribus resisteres iis, qui jura ac privilegia à summo Ecclesiarum capite omnium Christo, Ecclesiæ Romanæ tradita, sacrilego vel ausu violant atque contemnunt. Numquid ideo Pontificalis Dignitas tibi commissa est ut hominibus præsis, opes cumules, & quæ tua sunt non quæ Jesu Christi quærere debeas? Si id existimas vehementer erras, & a Christi intentione longe abes, qui cum Beato Petro oves suas communiret, nil ei aliud nisi ut illas pasceret indixit, priusque non semel, sed bis ac tertio, an ab eo diligeretur expostulans, Estne hæc in Christum dilectio quam habes? Estne hoc amare ac pascere oves? Itane debitum quo Ecclesiæ Romanæ astringeris, recte exsolvis? En ante oculos tuos ab ovili errantes in præcipitium labuntur oves, nec illas revocas neque reducis. In conspectu tuo herbas pergunt pestiferas pascere, nec illas prohibes, immo (quod abominabile est) tuis quasi manibus hujusmodi præbes mortiferum cibum. Te vidente, lupus illas dispergit, & tacet tanquam canis mutus non valens latrare. Aspicis simul & Christi & Ecclesiæ & sedis Apostolicæ mandata, auctoritatem, reverentiamque contemptui haberi, nec semel unum murmuras verbum, clanculum saltem, si nolles palam. An ignoras ante æterni tribunal judicis hujusmodi reatus & culpæ usque ad minimum quadrantem redditurum te rationem? non credis, si qua tuo neglectu perierit ovium (pereunt autem multæ) de tuis manibus sanguis earum exigetur? Quid per os Ezechielis Dominus comminatur, memorare & extimesce. Ipse, inquit, Speculatorem Domini posuit te Deus, si videris gladium venientem, & non insonueris buccina, & aliquis perierit, sanguinem ejus de manibus tuis requiram; hæc dicit Dominus. Qualis autem & qualis iniquitatis & abominationis gladius in Angliæ Regnum atque oves tuas descenderit, tuo judicio (si ratione uteris) relinquimus. Perlege illud Statutum Regium finnes Statutum, si tamen Regium dici fast est. Nam quomodo Statutum, quod Statuta Dei & Ecclesiæ destruit? Quomodo Regium? quod Justum peremit? contra illud quod scriptum est, Honor Regis Judicium diligit. Et judica, venerabilis Frater & Christiane Episcope, ac Catholice Præsul, si justum, si æquum, si à Populo Christiano servari est. Imprimis per illud execrabile Statutum ita Rex Angliæ de Ecclesia cum Provisionibus & Administrationibus disponit, quasi Vicarium suum Christus eum instituisset. Legem condit super Ecclesias, beneficia, Clericos & Ecclesiasticum statum, ad se suamq; laicalem Curiam nonnullas causas Spirituales & Ecclesiasticas jubet introduci; & ut uno verbo concludamus, ita de Clericis statuit, de Ecclesiis & Ecclesiastico Statu, quasi Ecclesiæ claves in manibus haberet, & non Petro, sed sibi hujusmodi cura commissa foret. Præter hanc nefandam Dispositionem, vipereas quasdam contra Clericos adjecit pœnas, quæ ne quidem contra Judæos vel Sarracenos, per ullum de statutis suis, promulgatæ inveniuntur. Possunt ad Angliæ Regnum cujuslibet generis homines libere proficisci; soli acceptantes beneficia Auctoritate Summi Pontificis, Vicarii Jesu Christi jubentur exulari, capi, incarcerari, omnibusq; bonis exui, executores literarum Apostolicarum, Procuratores, Notarii, ac quicunq; alii Curiam seu Processum ab Apostolica sede in Regnum mittentes aut deferentes, ultimo supplicio deputantur, projectiq; extra protectionem Regis exponuntur ab omnibus captivandi. Vide si audita est unquam simil

Stat

Statuti iniquitas: Consideret prudentia tua, si Regem aut Regnum hujusmodi Statuta decent: Cogita si te talia inspicientem silere oporteat, & non magis clamare, contradicere, & pro viribus resistere. Estne ista filialis Reverentia? Estne ista Christiana devotio quam Regnum Angliæ suæ Matri Ecclesiæ ac Sedi Apostolicæ exhibet? Potestne Catholicum Regnum dici, ubi hujusmodi statuuntur profanæ leges & observantur, ubi prohibetur adiri Vicarius Christi, ubi oves suas Successor Apostoli Petri pascere juxta mandatum Domini non permittitur? Christus dixit Petro suisque Successoribus, Pasce oves meas: Statutum autem Regni pascere ipsas non sinit, sed vult ut Rex ipse pascat, devolvendo ad eum in certis casibus Apostolicam Auctoritatem. Christus ædificavit supra Petrum Ecclesiam; sed Regni Statutum id prohibet: Nam non patitur Petri Cathedram de Ecclesia prout judicaverit, expedire, ordinare vel disponere. Christus voluit quod quicquid summus Pontifex in terris solverit aut ligaverit, solutum ligatumve esset in cœlis; Statutum huic divinæ voluntati non assentit: Nam si quos Sacerdotes ad ligandum solvendumque animas Christi Vicarius in Regnum contra Statuti tenorem destinaret, non modo ipsos non admittit Statutum sed exulare jubet, bonis privari, aliisque pœnis affligi, & censuram seu Processum Apostolicum in Regnum deferens, tanquam Sacrilegus capite punitur. Quid ad hoc tua Discretio respondebit? Estne hoc Catholicum Statutum? Potestne sine Christi injuria, sine Evangelii transgressione, sine animæ interitu tolerari aut observari? Cur igitur non clamas, & quasi tuba exaltas vocem tuam, annuncians populo tuo peccata sua, Domui Israel scelera eorum, ne sanguis eorum de manibus tuis requiratur? Quod & si omnes quibus populorum cura commissa est, facere teneantur, quanto magis id tibi erit necessarium exequi, cui populos & populorum ministros, oves & ovium pastores, tuæ solicitudini Romana deputavit Ecclesia, à qua & primatum & Sedis Apostolicæ legationem super Anglicanas Ecclesias suscepisti, & ipsius glorioſissimi Martyris Beati Thomæ olim Cantuariæ Archiepiscopi Successor effectus es, qui adversus similia decernens Statuta, holocaustum se Deo offerens pro libertate Ecclesiastica occubuit. Tu certe ob hæc, omnium primus qui vexillo assumpto in aciem prodire deberes, & fratres Co-episcopos tuos tuo exemplo in certamine sistere, primus omnium terga vertis, & aliquos qui forte resistendi impetum caperent, tua sive pusillanimitate, sive dissimulatione, sive (ut omnes attestantur) evidenti prævaricatione à bono proposito dejicis. Itaque si de te queritur Ecclesia, si in te omnis culpa transfertur, non mirari sed dolere, immo potius teipsum corrigere debes, & debitum quo ovium jure astrictus es audacter exolvere: pro qua re efficienda, si velis quam potes operam adhibere, non magnum certamen subeundum est. Persuade tuo pro officio & Auctoritate tua, secularibus, & eos veritatem instrue. Ostende eis peccatum quo observantes prædictum Statutum illaqueantur: Et erunt, (ut omnes asserunt) prava in directa, & aspera in vias planas. Ne ergo, si tacueramus & nos, tuam aliorumq; desidiam dissimulantes similis apud omnipotentem Deum culpæ reos efficiat, neve ovium nostrarum sanguis (si neglexerimus) de manibus nostris exigatur, tuam fraternitatem qua possumus instantia, toto corde, totoq; affectu hortamur, monemus, requirimus, & in virtute Sanctæ obedientiæ, & sub Excommunicationis pœna cui (si neglexeris) ipso facto te subjicimus, directe præcipiendo mandamus, quatenus quamprimum ad locum ubi Consiliarii Charissimi in Christo Filii nostri Henrici Angliæ Regis Illustris conveniunt, personaliter accedas, eosq; tam Ecclesiasticos quam Seculares pro sapientia tua, quam tibi Dominus inspiraverit, rationibus ac monitionibus reddas instructos, ut prædictum Statutum in proximo Parliamento tollant penitus & aboleant: Cum enim Divinæ & Humanæ rationi, Veteris ac Novi Testamenti, Conciliorum, Sanctorum Patrum, Summorum Pontificum Decretis, ipsius denique Universalis Ecclesiæ observantiæ evidentissime contradicat, nec sine interitu salutis æternæ quovis modo servari possit. Illudque inter alia dicere non omittas, qualiter Ecclesiasticæ libertatis violatores, facientesque Statuta aut consuetudines contra libertatem servari, Officiales, Rectores & Consiliarii locorum ubi hujusmodi Statuta vel consuetudines editæ fuerunt vel servatæ, Ac etiam qui secundum prædicta judicaverint, ipso jure Excommunicationem incurrunt, quæ quantum sit Christi fidelibus metuenda, ipsis plene poteris declarare. Idem sub pœna eadem te facere volumus cum Parliamentum inchoabitur, tam erga prædictos Consiliarios quam Communitates, & alios qui vocem in ipso habuerint Parliamento. Insuper ut pluribus viis honori Dei & Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ & animarum saluti provideatur, sub simili pœna mandes ac præcipias omnibus tam Rectoribus Ecclesiarum, quam aliis officium prædicationis obtinentibus, Secularibus & Religiosis, ut frequenter in sermonibus suis populos de prædicta materia instruere non omittant. Volumus autem ut quicquid super prædictis feceris per tuas literas (quibus saltem duæ graves personæ, quæ ipsis requisitionibus per te faciendis interfuerint, se subscribant) nos certiores efficias. XXXIX. A Letter to the Parliament upon the ſame occaſion.

MArtinus Epiſcopus, Servus Servorum Dei, venerabilibus Fratribus & dilectis Filiis, Nobilibus viris Parliamenti Regni Angliæ, ſalutem & Apoſtolicam Benedictionem. Multis nunciis ac frequentibus exhortationibus, pro debito paſtoralis officii, vos ac Regnum veſtrum hactenus admonuimus, ut pro ſalute animarum veſtrarum, & ipſius Regni honore quoddam deteſtabile Statutum contra Divinum & Humanum Jus editum, quod ſine interitu ſalutis æternæ nullatenus ſervari poteſt, aboleretur. Et quoniam id ſine Parliamento tolli non poſſe, ex parte Chariſſimi in Chriſto Filii noſtri Henrici Regis Angliæ illuſtris, Dilecto Filio Magiſtro Juliano Cauſarum curiæ Cameræ Apoſtolicæ Auditori, tunc Nuncio noſtro, reſponſum extitit, in quo (quam primum poſſet) convocato, quod ſibi poſſibile foret pro noſtræ Requiſitionis executione ſe facturum, idem Rex pollicitus eſt, proteſtans Juribus ac Privilegiis Sanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ & Sedis Apoſtolicæ in nullo velle detrahere aut derogare. Nos volentes ſolita erga vos manſuetudine uti, decrevimus uſq; ad ipſius Parliamenti tempus expectare, ſperantes quod tam Rex juxta ſuam Regiam Promiſſionem, quam vos pro ſalute animarum veſtrarum, Sancte ac Catholice ſecundum noſtram Requiſitionem concludetis. Itaq; cum Parliamentum (ut fertur) jam inſtet, vos omnes quorum animas noſtræ curæ Dominus noſter Jeſus Chriſtus commiſit, hortamur, monemus, obſecramus, ut unanimes veſtrarum animarum ſalutem, ac conſcientiarum puritatem præ cæteris rebus amantes, prædictum abominabile Statutum (quod qui obſervat vel obſervari faciat ſalvari non poteſt) penitus tollatur, & de Regno in perpetuum aboleatis. Quod ſi quis forſitan vobis contrarium perſuadere audeat, quicunq; ille sit, Sæcularis vel Ecclesiastici Status, tanquam hostem animarum vestrarum & honorum, nullatenus audite; nec eum virum Catholicum reputetis, qui adversus Romanæ Ecclesiæ Auctoritatem, Juraque & Privilegia Sedi Apostolicæ Divinitus concessa, aliquid machinari præsumpserit, quibus ipse Rex vester Illustris nolle ullatenus derogare publice protestatus est. Nos quidem ipsi sumus ab omnipotenti Deo Jesu Christo super vos & Universalem Ecclesiam constituti, cujus Doctrinæ ac persuasioni sine ulla contradictione omnimodam fidem vos & quilibet Christianus habere debetis: Nos tamen, etsi indignos, oves suas pascere Christus voluit, claves; aperiendi ac solvendi Cœlos tradidit. Et si quis nos audit, servi Christi testimonium Christianum audit; & si quis nos spernit, Christum spernere convincitur. Et quoniam de vobis ac singulis Christianis in districto Dei Judicio rationem reddituri sumus, ideo vos pro salute vestra tam sæpe tamq; efficaciter admonemus; & ne quisquam sub alicujus damni temporalis prætextu vos ab hac nostra Catholica Doctrina submoveat, ecce nos promptos paratosq; offerimus, omnibus causis, propter quas dictum Statutum conditum esse prætenditur, salubriter providere, ita ut nec Regno nec cuiquam privatæ personæ præjudicium aliquod ex ipsius Statuti abolitione possit accidere. Super his omnibus & nostra intentione plene instructo dilecto Filio Magistro Joanni de Obizis, in dicto Regno Nuntio & Collectori nostro, dabitis Credentiæ plenam fidem. Dat. Act. 33. Anno Regni viceſimo tertio.

XLI. An Act concerning Reſtraint of payment of Annates to the See of Rome

FOraſmuch as it is well perceived, by long approved experience, that great and ineſtimable Sums of Money have been daily conveyed out of this Realm, to the impoveriſhment of the ſame; and ſpecially ſuch ſums of Money as the Popes Holineſs, his Predeceſſors, and the Court of Rome, by long time have heretofore taken of all and ſingular thoſe Spiritual Perſons which have been named, elected, preſented, or poſtulated to be Archbiſhops or Biſhops within this Realm of England, under the Title of Annates, otherwiſe called Firſt-Fruits. Which Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, have been taken of every Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, within this Realm, by reſtraint of the Pope's Bulls, for Confirmations, Elections, Admiſſions, Poſtulations, Proviſions, Collations, Diſpoſitions, Inſtitutions, Inſtallations, Inveſtitures, Orders, Holy Benedictions, Palls, or other things requiſite and neceſſary to the attaining of thoſe their Promotions; and have been compelled to pay, before they could attain the ſame, great ſums of Money, before they might receive any part of the Fruits of the ſaid Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, whereunto they were named, elected, preſented, or poſtulated; by occaſion whereof not only the Treaſure of this Realm hath been greatly conveighed out of the ſame, but alſo it hath hapned many times, by occaſion of death, unto ſuch Arch-Biſhops, and Biſhops, ſo newly promoted, within two or three years after his or their Conſecration, that his or their Friends, by whom he or they have been holpen to advance and make paiment of the ſaid Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, have been thereby utterly undone and impoveriſhed. And for becauſe the ſaid Annates have riſen, grown, and increaſed, by an uncharitable Cuſtom, grounded upon no juſt or good title, and the paiments thereof obtained by reſtraint of Bulls, until the ſame Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, have been paid, or Surety made for the ſame; which declareth the ſaid Paiments to be exacted, and taken by conſtraint, againſt all equity and juſtice. The Noble Men therefore of the Realm, and the Wiſe, Sage, Politick Commons of the ſame, aſſembled in this preſent Parliament, conſidering that the Court of Rome ceaſeth not to tax, take, and exact the ſaid great Sums of Money, under the Title of Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, as aforeſaid, to the great damage of the ſaid Prelates, and this Realm;

Which

Which Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, were firſt ſuffered to be taken within the ſame Realm, for the only defence of Chriſtian People againſt the Infidels, and now they be claimed and demanded as mere duty, only for lucre, againſt all right and conſcience. Inſomuch that it is evidently known, that there hath paſſed out of this Realm unto the Court of Rome, ſithen the ſecond year of the Reign of the moſt Noble Prince, of famous memory, King Henry the Seventh, unto this preſent time, under the name of Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, payed for the expedition of Bulls of Arch-Biſhopricks and Biſhopricks, the ſum of eight hundred thouſand Ducats, amounting in Sterling Money, at the leaſt, to eightſcore thouſand pounds, beſides other great and intolerable Sums which have yearly been conveyed to the ſaid Court of Rome, by many other ways and means, to the great impoveriſhment of this Realm. And albeit, that our ſaid Sovereign the King, and all his natural Subjects, as well Spiritual as Temporal, been as obedient, devout, Catholick and humble Children of God, and Holy Church, as any People be within any Realm Chriſtned; yet the ſaid exactions of Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, be ſo intolerable and importable to this Realm, that it is conſidered and declared, by the whole Body of this Realm now repreſented, by all the Eſtates of the ſame aſſembled in this preſent Parliament, that the King's Highneſs before Almighty God, is bound, as by the duty of a good Chriſtian Prince, for the conſervation and preſervation of the good Eſtate and Common-Wealth of this his Realm, to do all that in him is to obviate, repreſs, and redreſs the ſaid abuſions and exactions of Annates, or Firſt-Fruits. And becauſe that divers Prelates of this Realm being now in extream Age, and in other debilities of their Bodies, ſo that of likelyhood, bodily death in ſhort time ſhall or may ſucceed unto them; by reaſon whereof great ſums of Money ſhall ſhortly after their deaths, be conveighed unto the Court of Rome, for the unreaſonable and uncharitable Cauſes aboveſaid, to the univerſal damage, prejudice, and impoveriſhment of this Realm, if ſpeedy remedy be not in due time provided: It is therefore ordained, eſtabliſhed, and enacted, by Authority of this preſent Parliament, That the unlawful paiment of Annates or Firſt-Fruits, and all manner Contributions for the ſame, for any Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, or for any Bulls hereafter to be obtained from the Court of Rome, to or for the foreſaid purpoſe and intent, ſhall from henceforth utterly ceaſe, and no ſuch hereafter to be payed for any Arch-Biſhoprick or Biſhoprick, within this Realm, other or otherwiſe than hereafter in this preſent Act is declared; And that no manner Perſon, nor Perſons hereafter to be named, elected, preſented, or poſtulated to any Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, within this Realm, ſhall pay the ſaid Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, for the ſaid Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, nor any other manner of Sum or Sums of Money, Penſions or Annates for the ſame, or for any other like exaction, or cauſe, upon pain to forfeit to our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King his Heirs and Succeſſors, all manner his Goods and Chattels for ever, and all the Temporal Lands and Poſſeſſions of the ſame Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, during the time that he or they which ſhall offend, contrary to this preſent Act, ſhall have, poſſeſs, or enjoy, the Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, wherefore he ſhall ſo offend contrary to the form aforeſaid. And furthermore it is enacted, by Authority of this preſent Parliament, That any if any Perſon hereafter named and preſented to the Court of Rome by the King, or any of his Heirs or Succeſſors, to be Biſhop of any See or Dioceſs within this Realm hereafter, ſhall be letted, deferred, or delayed at the Court of Rome from any ſuch Biſhoprick, whereunto he ſhall be ſo repreſented, by means of reſtraint of Bulls Apoſtolick, and other things requiſite to the ſame; or ſhall be denied, at the Court of Rome, upon convenient ſuit made, any manner Bulls requiſite for any of the Cauſes aforeſaid, any ſuch Perſon or Perſons ſo preſented, may be, and ſhall be conſecrated here in England by the Arch-Biſhop, in whoſe Province the ſaid Biſhoprick ſhall be, ſo alway that the ſame Perſon ſhall be named and preſented by the King for the time being to the ſame Arch-Biſhoprick: And if any Perſons being named and preſented, as aforeſaid, to any Arch-Biſhoprick of this Realm, making convenient ſuit, as is aforeſaid, ſhall happen to be letted, deferred, delayed, or otherwiſe diſturbed from the ſame Arch-Biſhoprick, for lack of Pall, Bulls, or other to him requiſite, to be obtained in the Court of Rome in that behalf, that then every ſuch Perſon named and preſented to the Arch-Biſhop, may be, and ſhall be, conſecrated and inveſted, after the preſentation made, as is aforeſaid, by any other two Biſhops within this Realm, whom the King's Highneſs, or any of his Heirs and Succeſſors, Kings of England for the time being, will aſſign and appoint for the ſame, according and in like manner as divers other Arch-Biſhops or Biſhops have been heretofore, in ancient time by ſundry the King's moſt noble Progenitors, made, conſecrated, and inveſted within this Realm: And that every Arch-Biſhop and Biſhop hereafter, being named and preſented by the King's Highneſs, his Heirs or Succeſſors, Kings of England, and being conſecrated and inveſted, as is aforeſaid, ſhall be inſtalled accordingly, and ſhall be accepted, taken, reputed, uſed, and obeyed, as an Arch-Biſhop or Biſhop of the Dignity, See, or Place whereunto he ſo ſhall be named, preſented, and conſecrated requireth; and as other like Prelates of that Province, See, or Dioceſs, have been uſed, accepted, taken, and obeyed, which have had, and obtained compleatly, their Bulls, and other things requiſite in that behalf from the Court of Rome. And alſo ſhall fully and entirely have and enjoy all the Spiritualities and Temporalities of the ſaid Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, in as large, ample, and beneficial manner, as any of his or their Predeceſſors had, or enjoyed in the ſaid Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, ſatisfying and yielding unto the King our Sovereign Lord, and to his Heirs and Succeſſors, Kings of England, all ſuch Duties, Rights and Intereſts, as before this time had been accuſtomed to be paid for any ſuch Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, according to the ancient Laws and Cuſtoms of this Realm, and the King's Prerogative Royal. And to the intent our ſaid Holy Father the Pope, and the Court of Rome, ſhall not think that the pains and labours taken, and hereafter to be taken, about the writing, ſealing, obtaining, and other buſineſſes ſuſtained, and hereafter to be ſuſtained, by the Officers of the ſaid Court of Rome, for and about the Expedition of any Bulls hereafter to be obtained or had for any ſuch Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, ſhall be irremunerated, or ſhall not be ſufficiently and condignly recompenſed in that behalf. And for their more ready expedition to be had therein, it is therefore enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, That every Spiritual Perſon of this Realm hereafter to be named, preſented, or poſtulated, to any Arch-Biſhoprick or Biſhoprick of this Realm, ſhall and may lawfully pay for the writing and obtaining of his or their ſaid Bulls, at the Court of Rome, and enſealing the ſame with Lead to be had without payment of any Annates, or Firſt-Fruits, or other charge or exaction by him or them to be made, yielden, or paied for the ſame, five pounds Sterling, for and after the rate of the clear and whole yearly value of every hundreth pounds Sterling, above all charges of any ſuch Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, or other Money, to the value of the ſaid five pounds, for the clear yearly value of every hundreth pounds of every ſuch Arch-Biſhoprick, or Biſhoptick, and not above, nor in any other wiſe, any thing in this preſent Act before written notwithſtanding. And foraſmuch as the King's Highneſs, and this his High Court of Parliament, neither have, nor do intend to uſe in this, or any other like cauſe, any manner of extremity or violence, before gentle courteſie or friendſhip, ways and means firſt approved and attempted, and without a very great urgent cauſe and occaſion given to the contrary, but principally coveting to disburden his Realm of the ſaid great exactions, and intolerable charges of Annates, and Firſt Fruits, have therefore thought convenient to commit the final order and determination of the Premiſſes, in all things, unto the King's Highneſs. So that if it may ſeem to his high wiſdom, and moſt prudent diſcretion, meet to move the Pope's Holineſs and the Court of Rome, amicably, charitably, and reaſonably, to compound, other to extinct and make fruſtrate the payments of the ſaid Annates, or Firſt-Fruits; or elſe by ſome friendly, loving, and tolerable compoſition to moderate the ſame in ſuch wiſe as may be by this Realm eaſily born and ſuſtained; That then thoſe ways and compoſitions once taken, concluded, and agreed, between the Pope's Holineſs and the King's Highneſs, ſhall ſtand in ſtrength, force, and effect of Law, inviolably to be obſerved. And it is alſo further ordained, and enacted by the Authority of this preſent Parliament, That the King's Highneſs at any time, or times, on this ſide the Feaſt of Eaſter, which ſhall be in the Year of our Lord God, a thouſand five hundred and three and thirty, or at any time on this ſide the beginning of the next Parliament, by his Letters Patents under his Great Seal, to be made, and to be entred of Record in the Roll of this preſent Parliament, may and ſhall have full power and liberty to declare, by the ſaid Letters Patents, whether that the Premiſſes, or any part, clauſe, or matter thereof, ſhall be obſerved, obeyed, executed, and take place and effect, as an Act and Statute of this preſent Parliament, or not. So that if his Highneſs, by his ſaid Letters Patents, before the expiration of the times above limited, thereby do declare his pleaſure to be, That the Premiſſes, or any part, clauſe, or matter thereof, ſhall not be put in execution, obſerved, continued, nor obeyed, in that caſe all the ſaid premiſſes, or ſuch part, clauſe, or matter, as the King's Highneſs ſo ſhall refuſe, diſaffirm, or not ratifie, ſhall ſtand and be from henceforth utterly void and of none effect. And in caſe that the King's Highneſs, before the expiration of the times afore-prefixed, do declare by his ſaid Letters Patents, his pleaſure and determination to be, that the ſaid Premiſſes, or every clauſe, ſentence, and part thereof, that is to ſay, the whole, or ſuch part thereof as the King's Highneſs ſo ſhall affirm, accept, and ratifie, ſhall in all points ſtand, remain, abide, and be put in due and effectual execution, according to the purport, tenour, effect, and true meaning of the ſame; and to ſtand and be from henceforth for ever after, as firm, ſtedfaſt, and available in the Law, as the ſame had been fully and perfectly eſtabliſhed, enacted, and confirmed, to be in every part thereof, immediately, wholly, and entirely executed, in like manner, form and effect, as other Acts and Laws; The which being fully and determinately made, ordained, and enacted in this preſent Parliament: And if that upon the foreſaid reaſonable, amicable and charitable ways and means, by the King's Highneſs to be experimented, moved, or compounded, or otherwiſe approved, it ſhall and may appear, or be ſeen unto his Grace, that this Realm ſhall be continually burdened and charged with this, and ſuch other intolerable Exactions and Demands, as heretofore it hath been. And that thereupon, for continuance of the ſame, our ſaid Holy Father the Pope, or any of his Succeſſors, or the Court of Rome, will, or do, or cauſe to be done at any time hereafter, ſo as above is rehearſed, unjuſtly, uncharitably, and unreaſonably vex, inquiet, moleſt, trouble, or grieve our ſaid Sovereign Lord, his Heirs or Succeſſors, Kings of England, or any of his or their Spiritual or Lay-Subjects, or this his Realm, by Excommunication, Excommengement, Interdiction; or by any other Proceſs, Cenſures, Compulſories, Ways, or Means; Be it enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, That the King's Highneſs, his Heirs and Succeſſors, Kings of England, and all his Spiritual and Lay Subjects of the ſame, without any ſcruples of Conſcience, ſhall and may lawfully, to the honour of Almighty God, the encreaſe and continuance of Vertue and good Example within this Realm, the ſaid Cenſures, Excommunications, Interdictions, Compulſories, or any of them notwithſtanding, miniſter, or cauſe to be miniſtred, throughout this ſaid Realm, and all other the Dominions and Territories belonging or appertaining thereunto; All and all manner of Sacraments, Sacramentals, Ceremonies, or other Divine Services of the Holy Church, or any other thing or things neceſſary for the health of the Soul of Mankind, as they heretofore at any time or times have been vertuouſly uſed or accuſtomed to do within the ſame; and that no manner ſuch Cenſures, Excommunications, Interdictions, or any other Proceſs or Compulſories, ſhall by any of the Prelates, or other Spiritual Fathers of this Region, nor by any of their Miniſters or Subſtitutes, be at any time or times hereafter publiſhed, executed, nor divulged, nor ſuffered to be publiſhed, executed, or divulged in any manner of ways. Cui quidem Billæ prædictæ & ad plenum intellectæ per dictum Dominum Regem aſſenſu & Authoritate Parliamenti prædicti taliter eſt Reſponſum:

XLII. The King's last Letter to the Pope. A Duplicate.

To the Pope's Holiness, 1532.

AFter most humble commendations, and most devout kissing of your blessed Feet. Albeit that we have hitherto differred to make answer to those Letters dated at Bonony, the 7th day of October; which Letters of late were delivered unto us by Paul of Cassali: Yet when they appear to be written for this Cause, that we deeply considering the Contents of the same, should provide for the tranquillity of our own Conscience, and should purge such scruples and doubts conceived of our Cause of Matrimony; We could neither neglect those Letters sent for such a purpose, nor after that we had diligently examined and perpended the effects of the same, which we did very diligently, noting, conferring, and revolving every thing in them contained, with deep study of mind, pretermit the leave to answer unto them. For sith that your Holiness seemeth to go about that thing chiefly, which is to vanquish those Doubts, and to take away Inquietations which daily do prick our Conscience; insomuch as it doth appear at the first sight to be done of zeal, Love, and Piety, we therefore do thank you of your good will. Howbeit sith it is not performed in Deed, that ye pretend, we have thought it expedient to require your Holiness to provide us other Remedies; wherefore forasmuch as your Holiness would vouchsafe to write unto us concerning this Matter, we heartily thank you, greatly lamenting also both the chance of your Holiness, and also ours; unto whom both twain it hath chanced in so high a matter of so great moment to be frustrated and deceived; that is to say, That your Holiness not being instructed, nor having knowledge of the Matter, of your self, should be compelled to hang upon the Judgment of others, and so put forth and make answers, gathered of other Men, being variable and repugnant among themselves. And that we being so long sick, and exagitate with this same Sore, should so long time in vain look for Remedy; which when we have augmented our ægritude and distress, by delay and protracting of time, ye do so cruciate the Patient and Afflicted, as who seeth it should much avail to protract the Cause, and through vain hope of the end of our desire to lead us whither ye will. But to speak plainly to your Holiness; Forasmuch as we have suffered many injuries, which with great difficulty we do sustain and digest; albeit that among all things passed by your Holiness, some cannot be laid, alledged, nor objected against your Holiness, yet in many of them some default appeareth to be in you, which I would to God we could so diminish, as it might appear no default; but it cannot be hid, which is so manifest, and tho we could say nothing, the thing it self speaketh. But as to that that is affirmed in your Letters, both of God's Law, and Man's, otherwise than is necessary and truth, let that be ascribed to the temerity and ignorance of your Counsellors, and your Holiness to be without all default, save only for that ye do not admit more discreet and learned Men to be your Counsellors, and stop the mouths of them which liberally would speak the truth. This truly is your default, and verily a great fault, worthy to be alienate and abhorred of Christ's Vicar, in that ye have dealt so variably, yea rather so inconstantly and deceivably. Be ye not angry with my words, and let it be lawful for me to speak the Truth without displeasure; if your Holiness shall be displeased with that we do rehearse, impute no default in us, but in your own Deeds; which Deeds have so molested and troubled us wrongfully, that we speak now unwillingly, and as enforced thereunto. Never was there any Prince so handled by a Pope, as your Holiness hath intreated us. First, When our Cause was proponed to your Holiness, when it was explicated and declared afore the same; when certain Doubts in it were resolved by your Counsellors, and all things discussed, it was required that answer might be made thereunto by the order of the Law. There was offered a Commission, with a promise also that the same Commission should not be revoked; and whatsoever Sentence should be given, should straight without delay be confirmed. The Judges were sent unto us, the Promise was delivered to us, subscribed with your Holiness's hand; which avouched to confirm the Sentence, and not to revoke the Commission, nor to grant any thing else that might lett the same; and finally to bring us in a greater hope, a certain Commission Decretal, defining the Cause, was delivered to the Judges hands. If your Holiness did grant us all these things justly, ye did unjustly revoke them; and if by good and truth the same was granted, they were not made frustrate nor annihilate without fraud; so as if there were no deceit nor fraud in the Revocation, then how wrongfully and subtilly have been done those things that have been done! Whether will your Holiness say, That ye might do those things that ye have done, or that ye might not do them? If ye will say that ye might do them, where then is the Faith which becometh a Friend, yea, and much more a Pope to have, those things not being performed, which lawfully were promised? And if ye will say that ye might not do them, have we not then very just cause to mistrust those Medicines and Remedies with which in your Letters ye go about to heal our Conscience, especially in that we may perceive and see those Remedies to be prepared for us, not to relieve the Sickness and Disease of our Mind, but for other means, pleasures, and worldly respects? And as it should seem profitable, that we should ever continue in hope or despair, so always the Remedy is attempted; so that we being always a-healing and never healed, should be sick still. And this truly was the chief cause why we did consult and take the advice of every Learned Man, being free, without all affection, that the Truth (which now with our labour and ſtudy we ſeem partly to have attained) by their judgments more manifeſtly divulged, we might more at large perceive; whoſe Judgments and Opinions it is eaſie to ſee how much they differ from that, that thoſe few Men of yours do ſhew unto you, and by thoſe your Letters is ſignified. Thoſe few Men of yours do affirm the prohibition of our Marriage to be inducted only by the Law poſitive, as your Holineſs hath alſo written in your Letters; but all others ſay the prohibition to be inducted, both by the Law of God and Nature: Thoſe Men of yours do ſuggeſt, that it may be diſpenſed for avoiding of ſlanders; The others utterly do contend, that by no means it is lawful to diſpenſe with that, that God and Nature hath forbidden. We do ſeparate from our Cauſe the Authority of the See Apoſtolick, which we do perceive to be deſtitute of that Learning whereby it ſhould be directed; and becauſe your Holineſs doth ever profeſs your ignorance, and is wont to ſpeak of other Mens mouths, we do confer the ſayings of thoſe, with the ſayings of them that be of the contrary Opinion; for to confer the Reaſons it were too long. But now the Univerſities of Cambridge, Oxford, in our Realms; Paris, Orleance, Biturisen, Andegavon, in France; and Bonony in Italy, by one conſent; and alſo divers other of the moſt famous and Learned Men, being freed from all affection, and only moved in reſpect of verity, partly in Italy, and partly in France, do affirm the Marriage of the Brother with the Brother's Wife, to be contrary both to the Law of God and Nature; and alſo do pronounce that no Diſpenſation can be lawful or available to any Chriſtian Man in that behalf: But others think the contrary, by whoſe Counſels your Holineſs hath done that, that ſithence ye have confeſſed ye could not do, in promiſing to us as we have above rehearſed, and giving that Commiſſion to the Cardinal Campege to be ſhewed unto us; and after, if it ſo ſhould ſeem profitable to burn it, as afterwards it was done indeed as we have perceived. Furthermore, thoſe which ſo moderate the Power of your Holineſs, that they do affirm, That the ſame cannot take away the Appellation which is uſed by Man's Law, and yet is available to Divine Matters every-where without diſtinction. No Princes heretofore have more highly eſteemed, nor honoured the See Apoſtolick than we have; wherefore we be the more ſorry to be provoked to this contention, which to our uſage and nature is moſt alienate and abhorred. Thoſe things ſo cruel we write very heavily, and more glad would have been, to have been ſilent if we might, and would have left your Authority untouched with a good will; and conſtrained to ſeek the verity, we fell, againſt our Will, into this contention; but the ſincerity of the Truth prohibited us to keep ſilence, and what ſhould we do in ſo great and many perplexities? For truly if we ſhould obey the Letters of your Holineſs, in that they do affirm that we know to be otherwiſe, we ſhould offend God and our Conſcience, and we ſhould be a great ſlander to them that do the contrary, which be a great number, as we have before rehearſed: Alſo, if we ſhould diſſent from thoſe things which your Holineſs doth pronounce, we would account it not lawful, if there were not a Cauſe to defend the Fact, as we now do, being compelled by neceſſity, leſt we ſhould ſeem to contemn the Authority of the See Apoſtolick. Therefore your Holineſs ought to take it in good part, tho we do ſomewhat at large and more liberally ſpeak in this Cauſe, which which doth ſo oppreſs us, ſpecially foraſmuch as we pretend none atrocity, nor uſe no rhetorick in the exaggerating and encreaſing the indignity of the Matter; but if I ſpeak of any thing that toucheth the quick, it proceedeth of the meer verity, which we cannot nor ought not to hide in this Cauſe, for it toucheth not Worldly Things but Divine, not frail but eternal; in which things no feigned, falſe, nor painted Reaſons, but only the Truth, ſhall obtain and take place: and God is the Truth to whom we are bound to obey rather than to Men; and nevertheleſs we cannot but obey unto men alſo, as we were wont to do, unleſs there be an expreſs cauſe why we ſhould not; which by thoſe our Letters we now do to your Holineſs: and we do it with charity, not intending to ſpread it abroad, nor yet further to impugn your Authority, unleſs you do compel us; albeit alſo, that that we do, doth not impugn your Authority, but confirmeth the ſame, which we revocate to its firſt foundations; and better it is in the middle way to return, than always to run forth head-long and do ill. Wherefore if your Holineſs do regard or eſteem the tranquillity of our Mind, let the ſame be eſtabliſhed with verity, which hath been brought to light by the conſent of ſo many Learned Men; ſo ſhall your Holineſs reduce and bring us to a certainty and quietneſs, and ſhall deliver us from all anxiety, and ſhall provide both for us and our Realm, and finally ſhall do your Office and Duty. The reſidue of our Affairs we have committed to our Ambaſſadors to be propounded unto you, to whom we beſeech your Holineſs to give credence, &c.

Rome, April 29. 1532.

PLeaſe it your Highneſs; this is to advertiſe the ſame, That ſithen we William Bennet, Edward Karne, and Edmond Bonner, ſent over Letters of the 7th of this preſent to your Highneſs; There hath been two Diſputations publick, the one the 13th of this, the other the 20th day of the ſame, according to the order given and aſſigned, which was three Concluſions to be diſputed every Conſiſtory; and what was ſpoken, as well by your Highneſs's Counſel, for the juſtification of the Concluſion purpoſed the ſaid 13th, as alſo for the impugnation thereof by the party adverſe, with Anſwers made thereunto by your Highneſs's ſaid Counſel, as fully as were any wiſe deduced, your ſaid Highneſs ſhall perceive by the Books ſent herewithall containing the ſame; and alſo the Juſtifications, Objections, and Anſwers, made in the 6th of this preſent, according as I Edward Karne in my ſaid Letters promiſed. The Copies of all the which Juſtifications, Objections, and Anſwers, after that they were fully noted and deduced in writing, and maturely conſidered by your Highneſs's Learned Counſel, I Edward Karne did bring to the Pope's Holineſs, and to the Cardinals, for their better information; and likewiſe did of the firſt, alwiſe afore the Conſiſtory, according to the order aſſigned at the beginning; looking in likewiſe that the Queen's Counſel ſhould do this ſame, but as yet they have done nothing therein, though your Ambaſſadors and I have called upon the Pope many times for the ſame. And as concerning ſuch things as were ſpoken and done for either part in the Diſputation of the 20th day, it is not poſſible for us, by reaſon of the ſhortneſs of time, to reduce all in good order, and to ſend the ſame to your Highneſs at this time; nevertheleſs with all ſpeed it ſhall be made ready, and ſent to your Highneſs by the next Courier. After the Diſputation done, the ſaid 13th day of this preſent, the Advocate of the party adverſe did alledge, That we did ſeek this Diſputation but only to defer the Proceſs; proteſting therefore, That the Queen's Counſel would diſpute no more; and deſiring therefore the Pope's Holineſs, and the whole Conſiſtory, to make proceſs in the principal Cauſe. Whereunto I Edward Karne ſaid, That the Pope's Holineſs, with the whole Senate, had granted the Diſputations upon the Matters, and given an order that the Concluſions publiſhed ſhould be diſputed according to the ſame. Whereupon I deſired that foraſmuch as there remained remained ſixteen Concluſions not diſputed (which to propoſe and juſtifify, with your Highneſs's Counſel, I would be ready at all times) that if the party adverſe knowing the Concluſions to be Canonical, would not confeſs them, and thereby avoid Diſputations, that then the ſaid Party ſhould diſpute them, and upon the refuſal of both the ſame, the Matters excuſatories to be admitted by his Holineſs, eſpecially becauſe the ſaid Party adverſe hath nothing material that could be perceived to lett the ſame. The Pope's Holineſs anſwered, that he would deliberate upon the demand of both Parties. The 16th of this preſent, the Datary on the Pope's behalf ſent unto me Edward Karne an Intimation for diſputation of the Conſiſtory to be kept the 20. of this preſent, and that I ſhould ſend the Concluſions not diſputed, that they might be in the ſaid Conſiſtory diſputed; adding withall, that the ſaid Conſiſtory ſhould be ultimus & peremptorius terminus quoad alias Diſputationes. Of the which Intimation your Highneſs ſhall receive a Copy herewith. Upon this, with the advice of your Ambaſſadors and Counſel here, I repaired unto the ſaid Datary, and brought unto him three Concluſions to be diſputed, with a Proteſtation, De non recedendo ab ordine hactenus obſervato, according to the Proem of the ſaid Concluſions, the Copy whereof your Highneſs ſhall receive herewith. Afterwards, with the ſame Concluſions and Proteſtation, I went to Cardinal de Monte, who ſaid, at the beginning, That all the Conſiſtory crieth out upon the Diſputations, and that we had been heard ſufficiently, and that it was enough that we ſhould have the fourth Diſputation; adding withall, That it was a thing never ſeen before after ſuch ſort; and that it ſtood not with the honour of the See to have ſuch Diſputations in the Conſiſtory, to the great diſquieting of the Pope and the Cardinals, eſpecially conſidering the manner that is uſed, and that all the Concluſions be touched which ſhould content us. To this I anſwered, and deſired his moſt Reverend Lordſhip to call to his remembrance, what he had promiſed to your Highneſs's Ambaſſadors and me, in the Caſtel-Angel upon Shrove-Sunday, the Pope being preſent, and allowing the ſame, contented that all the Concluſions ſhould be diſputed ſingulariter; and that I ſhould at my pleaſure, from time to time, chuſe the Concluſions to be diſputed. And how alſo afterward, viz. 17. Feb. the Pope's Holineſs, Cardinal Ancona, and his Lordſhip, not going from that promiſe, gave direction for three Concluſions to be diſputed every Conſiſtory; the choice whereof to be at my liberty (according to the Copy of the ſaid Order which I ſent to your Highneſs with my Letters, of the date of the 22. of the laſt)? And furthermore, that what time the order to diſpute three Concluſions in a Conſiſtory was ſent unto me, and I required to ſend the Concluſions firſt to be diſputed according to the ſaid order; I did, to avoid all manner of doubts, proteſt afore I would accept it, and in the deliverance of the ſaid Concluſions, that I would not otherwiſe accept it, but that all the Concluſions, according to the order promiſed in Caſtel-Angel, ſhould be diſputed and examined ſingulariter, and that ſtanding, and not otherwiſe, I delivered my ſaid Concluſions according to the Order of the 17th of February, which Order the Pope's Holineſs hitherto had approved and obſerved, and from that I neither could nor would go: And where he ſaid that we had been heard ſufficiently; I ſaid, that Audience and Information ration of less than the one half of a Matter could not be sufficient; and if they intended to see the truth of the whole, every point must be discussed. And as for the crying out of the Cardinals, I said, They had no cause so to do, for it was more for the honour of the See Apostolick, to see such a Cause as this is, well and surely tried, so that the Truth may appear, and the Matters be well known, than to proceed precipitanter, as they did at the beginning of this Matter, afore they well knew what the Matter was. And as touching the disquieting the Pope's Holiness, and the said Cardinals, I said, your Highness for their pains was much beholden unto them; nevertheless, I said, that they might on the other side ponder such pains as your Highness hath taken for them, in part declared by me; which was much more than for them to sit in their Chairs two or three hours in a week, to hear the justice of your defence in this cause. And as touching the manner used in the said Disputation, I said, his Lordship knew well that it was by the Party adverse, which all manner of wayes goeth about to fatigate and make weary the Consistory of the Disputations, specially in chiding, scolding and alledging Laws and Decisions that never were, nor spoken of by any Doctor, and vainly continuing the time, to the intent that the Pope's Holiness, and the Cardinals, dissolving the Consistory, and not having audience, the said party, without Law, Reason, or any good ground, might attain their desire, and keep under the Truth, that it should not appear; and if any thing was sharply spoken of our Party, I said it was done only for our defence, and to shew the errors and falsity of the Queens Advocates in their Allegations, wherein, I said, they should not be spared. And forasmuch as on the behalf of your Highness there was nothing spoken but that which was grounded upon Law, and declared in what place, so that it cannot be denied; I desired his Lordship that he would continue his goodness in this Matter, as your Highness's especial trust was he would do; and that we might always, as we were accustomed, have recourse unto the same in all our Business for his good help and counsel. His Lordship not yet satisfied, said, That as concerning the Order, the Pope's Holiness might interpretate and declare what he meant by it; and as touching the Conclusions, they were superfluous, impertinent, and calumnious, only proposed to defer the Matter. I answered, and said, That to interpretate the said Order where it is clear out of doubt, the Pope's Holiness considering the promise made on Shrove Sunday, with my Protestation foresaid, and the execution of the said Order to that time, in divers Consistories observed, could not by right interpretate the said Order, admitting disputation upon all the Conclusions; and of this I said, That if such alterations were made, without any cause given of your Highness's Party, there was little certainty to be reckoned upon amongst them. And as touching the superfluity and impertinency of the said Conclusions, I said, That that was the saying of the Party adverse, that did not understand the same Conclusions. And further, that such Conclusions as were clamorously, by the Advocates of the Party adverse, alledged to be superfluous, his Lordship in the Disputation and trial thereof in the Consistory, did manifestly perceive that it was not so. And where it was alledged the said Conclusions to be calumnious, and laid in to delay the Process. I answered, That we might well alledge again the Counſel of the party adverſe, the thing againſt us alledged, and ſ truly, that we were calumniouſly dealed withal, ſeeing the matters were ſo juſt and clear, and yet not admitted Then his Lordſhip went fur ther, and ſaid, that Impedimentum allegatum erat perpetuum, becauſe you Highneſs, ex cauſa reipublica, could not come out your Realm, and quæ dignitas veſtra eſt perpetua; and alſo quod Cauſa requirit celeritatem. T this I ſaid, that his Lordſhip miſtook the Matter, for we ſaid not i the matters that your Highneſs could not go out of your Realm to t place, but we ſaid, that the ſame could not go, ad loca tam remota, as R is: ſo that it was not perpetuum impedimentum. And to the other I ſhe ed him a Text, and the common opinion of Doctors in a Cauſe of Ma trimony, being inter Regem & Reginam which took away the thi that he had ſaid. Then his Lordſhip ſaid, That it was enough that t place were ſure to the Procurator by the Chapter, Cum olim de teſtib I ſaid, That that Chapter did not prove that Allegation, and that the miſtook the Text that ſo did underſtand it, for the Alternative that in that Text is not referred ad locum tutum, but ad ordinem Citationis in choandæ in perſona principali, aut ejus procuratore; and ſo Petrus de Ar chorano underſtandeth that Text; and otherwiſe underſtanding the ſam it ſhould be againſt the Chapter, Ex parte de appellatione, and the com mon opinion there. Then he ſaid that Aretine ſaith, Quod ſufficit quo locus ſit tutus procuratori. I ſaid, that under his favour, Aretine ſaith th contrary, for he ſaith, Quod partibus debet locus tutus aſſignari ſi poterit, & ſi non poterit partibus, detur procuratoribus. Then his Lordſhip ſaid t me, That I knew well he began to ſet forward theſe Diſputations, an that he would do the beſt he could for the furtherance thereof.

The 19*th* of this preſent I went with your Highneſs's Ambaſſadors t the Pope, and delivered his Holineſs in writing thoſe things that were done in the Diſputation of the 13*th* of this: And then your Ambaſſa dors were in hand with the Pope to alter the Intimation, and to put ou the term peremptory, and other that were excluſory of further Diſputa tions to be had upon the ſame Concluſions. The Pope's Holineſs ſai That Diſputations was no act Judicial requiring to be in the Conſiſtory and therefore he ſaid, he would call certain Congregations of Card nals, on Friday and Monday following, to hear the Diſputations. The I William Benet ſaid, That that could not ſtand very well with the De cree of the Intimation, which was peremptory for any further Diſputa tions after the 20*th* of this preſent; and therefore I ſpake that the ſam term peremptory might be put out of the Intimation, alledging with that upon the ſaid Friday or Monday it was no time to hear the Diſput tion, being ſo nigh after; and that his Holineſs hitherto hath obſerve the Conſiſtory for the Diſputations, which Conſiſtory cannot be un after Eaſter, if the manner of the Court be obſerved. Then the Po ſaid, he might call a Conſiſtory when he would, as he hath done making of Cardinals, an Act much more ſolemn than a Diſputatio To that I ſaid, his Holineſs might ſo do if he would; however, ſhould be præter ſolitum morem: and therefore deſired his Holineſs conſider therein the order before aſſigned, and that this term peremp would not ſtand with the order. His Holineſs then willed we ſhou inform the Cardinals, Ancona, and de Monte, and ſo we did; Ancona ſhe ed himſelf ſomewhat reaſonable, and was contented the term peremp ſhould be put out. De Monte ſaid that the Pope would promiſe to hear the Concluſions diſputed in Congregations, calling thereto certain Cardinals, ſo that the term peremptory ſhould not be prejudicial. Then I Edward Karne deſired him, that if the ſaid term ſhould not be prejudicial, that it might be ſtricken out, for I told him plainly that I would not ſtand to words, the writing ſhewing the contrary; adding withal, that I would not diſpute in this term, tanquam peremptorio, but would manifeſtly ſhew and proteſt, That I, with other your Highneſs's Counſel, were ready to defend the Concluſions publiſhed according to the order given, and hitherto obſerved; alledging alſo, that the Concluſions being juſtified, the Matters ought to be admitted; and that if the Pope's Holineſs and the Cardinals would not give audience to me and your Highneſs's ſaid Counſel, for the manifeſt trial and ſhowing of the truth, they ſhould give us cauſe to complain upon them, and to cry out uſque ad Sidera, your Highneſs's Ambaſſadors all affirming the ſame. Then the ſaid Cardinal de Monte ſaid, that the Pope's Holineſs would provide for the Diſputations, notwithſtanding the term peremptory aſſigned, and ſaid alſo, that in the Morning he would ſpeak with the Pope, and give your Ambaſſadors and me an anſwer.

In the morning, which was the 20*th* of this preſent, the ſaid Cardinal would, that nothing of the Decree of intimation ſhould be manifeſted, becauſe the other part had a Copy thereof, but would the Pope's Holineſs to give an order that the word peremptory ſhould be only for Diſputations to be had in the Conſiſtory, and not in Congregations, in which Congregations, the Concluſions remaining might be diſputed; and tho they had drawn out this Order, yet becauſe it was nothing plain, neither certain to be conformable to the former Order, I would have, had the ſaid Cardinal to ſpeak to the ſaid Datary for to make it as afore; and he was then contented, howbeit the Pope's Holineſs commanded all the Cardinals to their places, ſo that I could not have the ſaid Order, and was driven thereby either to diſpute and accept the term, tanquam peremptorium, or elſe to fly the Diſputations, giving occaſion to the adverſe Party to ſay, that I diffided in the juſtneſs of the Matters, and defence of the Concluſions. Whereupon your Highneſs's Ambaſſadors and we, with other your Learned Counſel, concluded, that I Edward Karne ſhould proteſt, De non conſentiendo in termino, tanquam peremptorio, and afterward to proceed to the propoſing of the Concluſions, and ſo I did by mouth according to the tenor of a Copy, which herewith your Highneſs ſhall receive. When I had proteſted, and the Pope had ſpoken this word Acceptamus, the Queen's Advocate began to proteſt that they would diſpute no more, and deſired his Holineſs to proceed in the principal Cauſe. Then I Edward Karne ſaid, That the Pope's Holineſs did well perceive, that the Concluſions were publiſhed and propoſed, not only for them to diſpute, but alſo for all other, that who would, for the information of his Holineſs, and the whole Conſiſtory. And therefore I ſaid, that tho they would not diſpute, yet I was there, with other your Highneſs's Learned Counſel, to propoſe the Concluſions, according to the Order given, juſtifying them to be Canonical, and ready to defend them againſt all thoſe that would gainſay them; and thereupon deſired the Pope's Holineſs, that tho the Counſel of the Party Adverſe would not diſpute, yet I with your Highneſs's Learned Counſel might be heard again; againſt which my deſire the Queen's Advocate made great exclamations, till at the laſt the Pope commanded him to ſilence, and willed us to go to the Concluſions, which we did.

And here now it is determined, That we ſhall have no more Diſputations in the Conſiſtory, but the reſt of the Concluſions to be diſputed in Congregations before the Pope, purpoſely made for the ſame; and what therein ſhall be determined or done, your Highneſs from time to time ſhall thereof by us be advertiſed, and of all other our doings in that behalf.

And as concerning the Letters which your Highneſs ſent by Francis the Courier, of the laſt of February, as well to the Pope, as to me Edward Karne, for the admiſſion of me and the Matter excuſatory, we ſhall, according to your Highneſs's pleaſure and order aſſigned, in the common Letter ſent unto us by your ſaid Highneſs, proceed and do therein as may be moſt beneficial and profitable for the ſame.

And thus moſt humbly we commend us to your Highneſs, beſeeching Almighty God to preſerve the ſame in felicity and health many years. At Rome the 28*th* of March 1532.

XLV. Another Letter concerning the Proceſs at Rome.

An Original.

Cotton Libr. Vitell. B. 13.

PLeaſeth it your Highneſs, ſithen our Letters of the 23 of March, here hath been great labour, and ſolliciting, to bring the Diſputation publick out of the Conſiſtory kept once in the week, into the Congregations, to be obſerved and kept before the Pope's Holineſs and the Cardinals, in ſuch place, and as oft as ſhould pleaſe them; to the intent, as we perceived that the ſaid Diſputation might be the ſooner ended, and not take ſuch effect as it was deviſed for. And upon this great importune labour, I, Edward Karne, was moniſhed oftentimes to ſend Concluſions to be propoſed in the ſaid Congregations, as well in Palm-Sunday-week, as in Eaſter-week, as appeareth by the Copies of the Intimations ſent herewithal to your Highneſs: Upon which Intimations I delivered certain Concluſions, according to the order taken at the beginning, with a Proteſtation deviſed by your Grace's Counſel here, De non-recedendo ab eodem ordine, & de proponendo eaſdem Concluſiones in in Consistorio, juxta eundem ordinem & non aliter. That notwithstanding the Pope's Holiness caused me to be monished again, *cum Commination*e, that if I would not come in, cum Advocatis, the third day of April, procederes ad ulteriora, protestatione mea prævia non obstante. Whereupon, with the advice of your said Learned Counsel, I conceived a Protestation, and the same delivered to the Pope's Holiness the said third day in the morning, protesting as it was therein contained, and causing it to be registred by the Datary; of the which Protestation your Highness shall also receive a Copy herewithal. This notwithstanding, the Pope's Holiness, the said third day in the afternoon made a Congregation, where the said Protestation was examined; and after the Treaty had upon the same, we were in conclusion remitted again to the Consistory, there to be heard, as much as the Consistory intendeth to hear, upon the Conclusions that are published; which was much more beneficial to us, than to have had all proposed in Congregations to have been kept, as is afore And by this means the Matter was shifted off, and deferred unto the 10th of this month; at which time the Pope's Holiness kept the Consistory. And one Mr. Providel, a singular good Clerk, which came from Bonony for the furtherance of your Highness's Cause, very compendiously, and after good fashion and handling, to the great consolation, as appeared, of the Audience there, proposed three Conclusions, of the which two concerned the habilitation of me Edward Karne, to lay in the Matters Excusatory: And the third was, that the Cause ought to be committed, extra curiam, ad locum tutum utrique parti: Of the which Conclusions, and also his Sayings, the said 10th day, your Highness shall receive a Copy herewithal. And forasmuch as at the said Consistory, neither the Imperials, neither yet the Queens Counsel, did appear; I, Edward Karne, with the advice of your Highness's Counsel, said to the Pope's Holiness, after the Proposition made by Mr. Providel, that his Holiness might perceive well, that if the Party adverse had any good matter to alledge, against such things as were deduced for the justification of the Conclusions, and matter Excusatory, and did not diffide of their part, they would not have absented themselves, or shrunken from the Disputations, which they afore had accepted and taken; wherefore I accused their contumacy and absence, desiring that it might be enacted; and thereupon departed from the Consistory, for that day dissolved.

The 14th of this present, the Pope's Holiness caused Intimation to be made unto me, of the Consistory to be kept the 17th of the same; willing me to be there, cum Advocatis, to dispute all the Conclusions not proposed and disputed: Upon the which Intimation, I delivered to the Datary three Conclusions, the 19, the 20, and the 21 in order, with a Protestation devised by your Learned Counsel, sent here-withal to your Highness; And in the said Consistory, Mr. Providel did also alledge for the justification of the Matters and Conclusions; and over that answered to such Objections as he thought the Party adverse to make foundation upon, and that very compendiously, being sorry that the Imperials, and Queen's Counsel, did not come in to dispute the said Conclusions; and the sayings of the said Mr. Providel in the said Consistory, with my Protestation also, in not agreeing to the term, as peremptory your Highness shall perceive in writing sent here-withal.

As

As concerning the ſeven Concluſions yet remaining undiſputed, we think the Pope's Holineſs will hear us no further in the Conſiſtory; ſaying, that the Part adverſe will not abide the Diſputations, nor come into the ſame: Nevertheleſs to take otherwiſe out of the Conſiſtory, with the Cardinals Information, his Holineſs is well contented.

And verily, Sir, to ſtudy, labour, ſet forward, and call upon ſuch things as may confer to the advancement of the Matter, and your Highneſs's Purpoſe, there ſhall not want, neither good will, neither diligence to the uttermoſt, that we can excogitate or deſire, as hitherto ſurely neither Party hath failed; truſting in God that thereby if Juſtice be not oppreſſed, ſome good effect ſhall follow, to the good contentation of your Highneſs. With theſe Preſents, your Highneſs ſhall alſo receive a Copy of all things that were ſpoken, as well for your Highneſs's behalf, as by the Party adverſe, in the Conſiſtory, the 20th day of March.

And thus moſt humbly we commend us to your Highneſs, beſeeching Almighty God long to continue the ſame in his moſt Royal Eſtate. At Rome, the 29*th* of April.

Your Highneſs's moſt humble Subjects, and poor Servants,

Edward Karne.

Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. 13 SEreniſſime & Invictiſſime Domine noſter Supreme, ſalutem. Tribus Superioribus Conſiſtoriis ante vacationes habitis, de Cauſâ Excuſatoria actum fuit; ſed quid illud fuerit quod in primo egerunt reſcire non potuimus, quia Cardinales pœna Excommunicationis prohibiti fuerant quicquam revelare. Secundo etiam aliquid ſuper eadem cauſa tractarunt quod itidem nos celaverunt. Sed ultimo illo, quod die octavo Julii Congregatum fuit, ita ut inferius patebit, conſtituerunt. Quum ergo poſtero die Pontificem adiviſſemus, ut quod decretum foret cognoſceremus, ab eo ſic accepimus; nolle ſe ore ſuo, propterea quod Juriſperitus non fa Conſiſtorii deliberationem pronunciare; quocirca die ſequenti ad ipſum rediremus, quoniam vellet Cardinales Montem & Anconitanum ad ipſum nobis proferre: Et nihilominus idem quod deinde ex ipſis Cardinalibus audivimus tunc explicavit, noluit tamen nobis eſſe Reſponſilo co. Igitur ſicut dixerat, redivimus, & nobis duo illi Cardinales ſic retulerunt ſummum Dominum & Cardinales decreviſſe, literas Exhortatorias cum à Pontifice, tum à Collegio Cardinalium, Majeſtati veſtræ ſcribendi bendas esse, quibus vestram Majestatem adhortarentur, ut velit hic ad Causam Procuratorem constituere, idq; per totum Octobrem proximum facere. Pontifex præterea suadebat ut ad idem nos Majestatem Vestram cohortaremur, idemq; fecerunt Cardinales, volentes omnes ambiguitates & dubitationes tollere. Respondimus, velle quod nobis injungebatur Majestati Vestræ scribere; verum illud non posse reticere quod erga Majestatem Vestram inique actum videbatur; quum neq; Excusator admissus, neq; ipsius allegationes forent probatæ ac receptæ, id quod tam sæpe instantissime petitum fuerat. Præterea non posse nos non valde mirari ac etiam summopere conqueri, quod quum pro comperto haberemus juris esse id fieri, esset nihilominus denegatum; quum præsertim petendo Mandatum procuratorium, tacite viderentur rejicere Excusatorem, & per ipsum allegata. Sic autem illi nobis Responderunt, neque Excusatorem fuisse rejectum, neque per ipsum allegata, sed in eodem quo prius, statu permanere; hoc autem excusatorium negotium minime, ut nobis judicibus clarum, sed dubium videri. Ibiq; Anconitanus quædam nostris contraria adduxit, quæ D. Karne suis literis recenset. Dicebam quoq; in hac re favorabilius nos, quam adversarios fuisse tractatos; illud etiam addentes, quod si procuratorium mandatum mittatur, justitia optime ministrabitur, ac etiam quatenus fieri possit, favorabiliter; idque & Pontifex & Cardinales ambo constanter asseverabant. Quum vero nos sæpius diceremus, excusatorem admitti debuisse; dixerunt, si recte considerare velimus, nos idem ipsum re habuisse; si enim (aiebant), Procurator hic constituatur, literæ Remissoriæ & Compulsoriæ decernentur, ad testes in partibus examinandos. Itemq; vir aliquis probus ad id delegabitur ad utramque partem, testesque scil. examinandos, ita ut processus in partibus fiat; Atque hoc pacto nos id consequi quod desideramus, quoniam quod ad totius causæ decisionem pertinet, ex eo quod de Pontificis potestate cognoscendum, & de jure Divino disceptandum sit, ac aliis etiam de causis, ipsam Decisionem Pontifici integram semper reservari nihilominus oporteret, quamvis causam alibi quam Romæ cognosci permissum fuisset. Nobis certe visum est, haud parum esse quod obtinuimus, longe enim pejora timebamus, quum nemo in urbe esset, qui non crederet Excusatorem una cum suis allegationibus rejectum iri. Hunc quidem eventum rei Cæsariani ægerrime tulerunt. Optime valeat Majestas vestra. Romæ die 13 Julii 1532.

Likewise passed Judgment (confirming the King's Marriage with Queen Ann) at Lambeth, May 28. 1533. which is in the same Inspeximus.

Act 5. Anno Regni 25.

XLVIII. An Act concerning the Deprivations of the Bishops of Salisbury and Worcester.

WHere before this time the Church of England, by the King's most noble Progenitors, and the Nobles of the same, have been founded, ordained, and established, in the Estate and degree of Prelatic Dignities, and other Promotions Spiritual, to the intent and purpose that the said Prelates, and other Persons, having the said Dignities and Promotions Spiritual, continually should be abiding, and Residents upon their said Promotions within this Realm; and also keep, use, and exercise Hospitality, Divine Services, teaching and preaching of the Laws of Almighty God, to ſuch Perſons as were and have been within the precinct of their Promotions or dignities, for the Wealth of the Souls of their Givers and Founders, greatly to the honour of Almighty God. Of the which ſaid Spiritual Perſons, the King's Highneſs, and his moſt noble Progenitors, have had right honourable, and well-learned Perſonages, apt, meet, and convenient, for to guide and inſtruct his Highneſs, and his moſt noble Progenitors, in their Counſels concerning as well their Outward as Inward Affairs, to be deviſed and practiſed for the utility and preſervation of this Realm; by reaſon whereof the Iſſues, Revenues, Profits, and Treaſure, riſing and coming of the ſaid Spiritual promotions and Dignities, were and ſhould be ſpent, employed, and converted within this Realm, to the great profit and commodity of the King's Subjects of the ſame. And where alſo by the laudable Laws and Proviſions of this Realm, before this time made, it hath been ordained, uſed, and eſtabliſhed, that no Perſon nor Perſons, of whatſoever Eſtate, Degree, or Quality he or they were, ſhould take or receive within this Realm of England, to Farm, by any Procuracy, Writ, Letter of Attorney, Adminiſtrations, by Indenture, or by any other Mean, any Benefice, or other Promotion within this Realm, of any Perſon or Perſons, but only of the King's true and lawful Subjects, being born under the King's Dominions. And alſo that no Perſon or Perſons, of what eſtate and degree ſoever he or they were, by reaſon of any ſuch Farm, Procuracie, Letter of Attorney, Adminiſtration, Indenture, or by any other mean, as is aforeſaid, ſhould carry, conveigh, or cauſe to be carried and conveighed out of this Realm any Gold, Silver, Treaſure, or other Commodity, by Letter of Exchange, or by way of Merchandiſe, or otherwiſe, for any of the Cauſes aforeſaid, to the profit or commodity of any Alien, or other Stranger, being born out of this Realm, having any ſuch Promotion Spiritual within the ſame, without licence of the King's Highneſs, by the advice of his Council, as by the ſame Laws, Statutes and Proviſions, more plainly at large it may appear; which ſaid laudable Laws, Statutes, and Proviſions, were made, deviſed, and ordained, by great policy and foreſight of the King's moſt noble Progenitors, the Nobles and Commons of this Realm, for the great profit, utility, and benefit of the ſame, to the intent that the Gold, Silver, Treaſure, Riches, and other Commodity of the ſame, by the occaſion aforeſaid, ſhould not be exhauſted, employed, converted, and otherwiſe tranſported out of this Realm and Dominions of the ſame, to the uſe, profit, and commodity of any Stranger being born out of this Realm, or the Dominions of the ſame; But only to be ſpent, and uſed, and beſtowed within the ſame, to the great comfort and conſolation of the Subjects of this Realm. Notwithſtanding which ſaid wholſom Laws, Statutes, and Proviſions, the King's Highneſs being a Prince of great benignity and Liberality, having no knowledge, nor other due information, or inſtruction of the ſame Laws, Statutes, and proviſions, heretofore hath nominated, and preferred and promoted, Laurence Campegius Biſhop of Sarum, with all the Spiritual and Temporal Poſſeſſions, Promotions, and other Emoluments and Commodities in any wiſe belonging or appertaining to the ſame: And alſo hath nominated, preferred, and promoted Hierome, being another Stranger, born out of the King's ſaid Realm and Dominions, to the the See and Biſhoprick of Worceſter, with all the Spiritual and Temporal Promotions, and other Emoluments and Commodities, in any wiſe belonging or appertaining to the ſame. Which ſaid two Biſhops, and namely the Biſhop of Sarum, nothing regarding their Duties to Almighty God, nor their Cures of the ſaid Biſhopricks, everſith or for the more part of the time of their ſaid Promotions or Profections into the ſame, have been, and yet be reſident, dwelling and abiding at the See of Rome, or elſewhere, in other parts beyond the Sea, far out and from any of the King's ſaid Dominions; by reaſon whereof, the great Hoſpitality, Divine Service, teaching and Preaching the Laws, and Examples of good living, and the other good and neceſſary effects before rehearſed, have been many years by-paſt, and yet continually be, not only withdrawn, decayed, hindred, and miniſhed, but alſo great quantity of Gold, Silver, and Treaſure, to the yearly ſum and value of 3000*l.* at the leaſt, have been yearly taken and conveighed out of this Realm, to the ſingular profit, and great enriching of the ſaid Biſhops, and daily is like to be conveighed, tranſported, and ſent, contrary to the purport and effect of the ſaid former wholſome Laws and Statutes, to the great impoveriſhing of this Realm, as well preſently as for to come, if ſpeedy remedy be not had therefore in brief time provided. In conſideration whereof, be it enacted by the Authority of this preſent Parliament, that the ſaid two ſeveral Sees and Biſhopricks of Salisbury and Worceſter, and either of them from henceforth, ſhall be taken, reputed, and accounted in the Law to be utterly void, vacant, and utterly deſtitute of any Incumbent, or Prelate, &c.

XLVIII. A Letter from Cromwel to Fiſher, about the Maid of Kent, Anno 34, or end of 35.

MY Lord, in my right hearty wiſe I commend me to your Lordſhip, doing you to underſtand, that I have received your Letters dated at Rocheſter, the 18*th* day of this Month; in which ye declare what craft and cunning ye have to perſwade, and to ſet a good Countenance upon an ill Matter, drawing ſome Scriptures to your purpoſe; which well weighed, according to the places whereout they be taken, make not ſo much for your purpoſe as ye alledge them for; and where in the firſt Leaf of your Letters ye write, that ye doubt nothing, neither before God nor before the World, if need ſhall that require, ſo to declare your ſelf, whatſoever hath been ſaid of you, that ye have not deſerved ſuch heavy words, or terrible threats, as hath been ſent from me unto you by your Brother. Cotton Libr. Cleop. E. 4.

How ye can declare your ſelf afore God and the World, when need ſhall require, I cannot tell; but I think verily that your Declaration made by theſe Letters, is far inſufficient to prove that ye have deſerved no heavy words in this behalf. And to ſay plainly, I ſent you no heavy words, but words of great comfort, willing your Brother to ſhew you how benign and merciful the Prince, was: And that I thought it expedient for you to write unto his Highness, and to recognize your Offences, and desire his pardon, which his Grace would not deny you now in your age and sickness; which my counsel I would you had followed, rather than to have written these Letters to me, excusing your self altho' there were no manner of default in you. But, my Lord, if it were in another manner of case than your own, and out of the Matter which ye favour, I doubt not but that ye would think him that should have done as ye have done, not only worthy heavy Words, but also heavy Deeds; for where ye labour to excuse your self of your Hearing, Bribing, and concealing of the Maiden's false and feigned Revelations, and of your manifold sending of your Chaplains unto her, by a certain intent which ye pretend your self to have had, to know by communing with her, or by sending your Chaplains unto her, whether her Revelations were of God, or no, alledging divers Scriptures that ye were bound to prove them, and to receive them after they were proved. My Lord, whether you have used a due means to try her and her Revelations, or no, it appeareth by the process of your own Letters. For where you write that ye had conceived a great opinion of the holiness of this Woman, for many considerations rehearsed in your Letters, comprised in six Articles; whereof the first is grounded upon the bruit and fame of her; the second, upon her entring into Religion after her trances and diffiguration; the third, upon rehearsal that her Ghostly father being Learned and Religious, should testify that she was a Woman of great holiness; the fourth, upon the report that divers other vertuous Priests, Men of good Learning and Reputation, should so testifie of her, with which Ghostly Father, and Priests, ye never spake, as ye confess in your Letters; the fifth, upon the praises of my late Lord of Canterbury, which showed you, as ye write, that she had many great Visions; the sixth, upon the saying of the Prophet Amos, Non faciet Dominus Deus Verbum, nisi revelaverit secretum suum ad servos suos Prophetas. By which Considerations ye were induced to the desire to know the very certainty of this Matter, whether these Revelations which were pretended to be shewed to her from God, were true Revelations or not. Your Lordship in all the sequel of your Letters, shew not that ye made any further trial upon the truth of her and her Revelations, but only in communing with her and sending your Chaplains to her with idle Questions, as of the 3 Mary Magdalens, by which your communication and sending, ye tried out nothing of her falshood, neither (as it is credibly supposed) intended to do as ye might have done, in any wise more easily than with communing with her, or sending to her; for little credence was to be given to her, affirming her own feigned Revelations to be from God; for if credence should be given to every such lewd Person as would affirm himself to have Revelations from God, what readier way were there to subvert all Common-Weals and good orders in the World?

Verily, my Lord, if ye had intended to trace out the truth of her, and of her Revelations, ye would have taken another way with you first, you would not have been converted with the vain Voices of the People, making bruits of her Trances and Diffiguration, but like a wise, discreet, and circumspect Prelate, ye should have examined (as other since) such sad and credible persons as were present at her Trances, and Disfigurings, not one or two, but a good number; by whose testimony ye should have proved, whether the Bruits of her Trances and Disfigurations were true or not. And likewise ye should have tried by what craft and perswasion she was made a Religious Woman; and if ye had been so desirous, as ye pretended, to enquire out the truth or falshood of this Woman, and of her Revelations; it is to be supposed ye would have spoken with her good, religious, and well-learned Ghostly Father ere this time, and also with the vertuous and well-learned Priests, (as they were esteemed) of whose reports ye would have been informed by them which heard them speak; or ye would also have been minded to see the Book of her Revelations, which was offered you, of which ye might have had more trial of her and her Revelations, than of a hundred communications with her, or of as many sendings of your Chaplains unto her. As for the late Lord of Canterbury's saying unto you, that she had many great Visions, it ought to move you never a deal to give credence unto her or her Revelations; for the said Lord knew no more certainty of her, or of her Revelations, than he did by her own Report. And as touching the saying of Amos the Prophet, I think verily the same moved you but a little to hearken unto her; for sithence the Consummation and the end of the Old Testament, and sithen the Passion of Christ, God hath done many great and notable things in the World, whereof he shewed nothing to his Prophets that hath come to the knowledge of Men. My Lord, all these things moved you not to give credence unto her, but only the very matter whereupon she made her false Prophecies; to which matter ye were so affected, as ye be noted to be in all matters which ye enter once into, that nothing could come amiss that made for that purpose. And here I appeal to your Conscience, and instantly desire you to answer, Whether if she had shewed you as many Revelations for the confirmation of the King's Grace's Marriage, which he now enjoyeth, as she did to the contrary, ye would have given as much credence to her as the same done, and would have let the trial of her and her Revelations, to overpass those many years, where ye dwelt not from her but twenty miles in the same Shire where her Trances, and Disfigurings, and Prophecies in her Trances were surmised, and reported. And if percase ye will say (as is not unlike but ye will say, minded as ye were wont to be) that the matter is not like, for the Law of God, in your opinion, standeth with the one and not with the other: Surely, my Lord, I suppose there had been no great cause to trust the one more than the other; for ye know by Scriptures of the Bible, that God may by his Revelation dispense with his own Law, as with the Israelites spoiling the Egyptians, and with Jacob to have four Wives, and such other. Think you, my Lord, that any indifferent Man, considering the quality of the Matter, and your affections, and also the negligent passing over of such lawful Trials as ye might have had of the said Maiden, and her Revelations, is so dull, that cannot perceive and discern that your communing, and often sending to the said maid, was rather to hear and bruit many of her Revelations, than to try out the truth and falshood of the same? And in this business, I suppose, it will be hard for you to purge your self before God, or the World, but that ye have been in great default in hearing, believing, believing, and concealing ſuch things as tended to the deſtruction of the Prince; and that her Revelations were bent and purpoſed to that end, it hath been duly proved afore as great Aſſembly and Council of the Lords of this Realm, as hath been ſeen many years meet out of a Parliament. And what the ſaid Lords deemed them worthy to ſuffer, which ſaid, heard, believed, and concealed thoſe falſe Revelations, be more terrible than any threats ſpoken by me to your Brother.

And where ye go about to defend, that ye be not to be blamed for concealing the Revelations concerning the King's Grace, becauſe ye thought it not neceſſary to rehearſe them to his Highneſs, for ſix Cauſes following in your Letters; afore I ſhew you my mind concerning theſe Cauſes, I ſuppoſe that albeit you percaſe thought it not neceſſary to be ſhewed to the Prince by you, yet that your thinking ſhall not be your Trial, but the Law muſt define whether ye oughted to utter it or not.

And as to the firſt of the ſaid ſeven Cauſes; Albeit ſhe told you that ſhe had ſhewed her Revelations concerning the King's Grace to the King her ſelf; yet her ſaying, or others, diſcharged not you, but that ye were bound, by your fidelity, to ſhew to the King's Grace that thing which ſeemed to concern his Grace and his Reign ſo nighly: for how knew you that ſhe ſhowed theſe Revelations to the King's Grace, but by her own ſaying, to which ye ſhould have given no ſuch credence, as to forbear the utterance of ſo great Matters concerning a King's Weal? And why ſhould you ſo ſiniſterly judge the Prince, that if ye had ſhewed the ſame unto him, he would have thought that ye had brought that tale unto him, more for the ſtrengthning and confirmation of your Opinion, than for any other thing elſe. Verily, my Lord, whatſoever your Judgement be, I ſee daily ſuch benignity and excellent humanity in his Grace, that I doubt not but his Highneſs would have accepted it in good part, if ye had ſhewed the ſame Revelations unto him, as ye were bounden by your fidelity.

To the ſecond Cauſe; Albeit ſhe ſhowed you not that any Prince, or other Temporal Lord ſhould put the King's Grace in danger of his Crown; yet there were wayes enough by which her ſaid Revelations might have put the King's Grace in danger, as the foreſaid Council of Lords have ſubſtantially and duly conſidered: And therefore albeit ſhe ſhewed you not the means whereby the danger ſhould enſue to the King, yet ye were nevertheleſs bounden to ſhew him of the danger.

To the third; think you my Lord, that if any Perſon would come unto you, and ſhew you, that the King's deſtruction were conſpired againſt a certain time, and would fully ſhew you that he were ſent from his Maſter to ſhew the ſame to the King, and will ſay further unto that, he would go ſtreight to the King; were it not yet your duty to certifie the King's Grace of this Revelation, and alſo to enquire whether the ſaid Perſon had done his foreſaid Meſſage or no? Yes verily, and ſo were ye bound, tho' the maiden ſhewed you it was her Meſſage from God to be declared by her to the King's Grace.

To the fourth; Here ye tranſlate the temporal Duty that ye owe to your Prince, to the ſpiritual Duty of ſuch as be bound to declare the Word of God to the People, and to ſhew unto them the ill and puniſh-

ment of it in another World; the concealment whereof pertaineth to the Judgement of God, but the concealment of this Matter pertaineth to other Judges of this Realm.

To the fifth; There could no blame be imputed to you, if ye had shewed the Maidens Revelations to the King's Grace, albeit they were afterward found false, for no Man ought to be blamed doing his Duty: And if a Man would shew you secretly, that there were a great Mischief intended against the Prince, were ye to be blamed if ye shewed him of it; albeit it was a feigned talk, and the said mischief were never intended?

To the sixth; Concerning an Imagination of Mr. Parr, it was known that he was beside himself, and therefore they were not blamed that made no report thereof; but it was not like in this case, for ye took not this Maiden for a mad Woman, for if ye had, ye would not have given unto her so great credence as ye did.

To the final, and seventh Cause; Where ye lay unto the charge of our Sovereign, that hath so unkindly entreated you with grievous Words, and terrible Letters, for showing his Grace truth in his great matter, whereby ye were discomforted to shew unto him the Maidens Revelations: I believe that I know the King's Goodness, and natural Gentleness so well, that his Grace would not so unkindly handled you, as your unkindly writings him, unless ye gave him other Causes than be expressed in your Letters. And whatsoever the King's Grace hath said or written unto you heretofore, yet notwithstanding ye were nevertheless bounden to utter to him those pernicious Revelations.

Finally; Where ye desire, for the Passion of Christ, that ye be no more twitched in this matter, for if ye be put to that strait, ye will not lose your Soul, but ye will speak as your Conscience bindeth you, with many more words of great courage. My Lord, if ye had taken my counsel sent unto you by your Brother, and followed the same, submitting your self, by your Letters, at the King's Grace, for your offences in this behalf, I would have trusted that ye should never be quykkrand in this matter more. But now, where ye take upon you to defend the whole Matter, as ye were in no default, I cannot so far promise you: And surely, my Lord, if the Matter come to trial, your own confession in this Letter, besides the Witness which be against you, will be sufficient to condemn you: Wherefore, my Lord, I will eft-soons advise you, That laying apart all such excuses as ye have alledged in your Letters, which in my opinion be of small effect, as I have declared, ye beseech the King's Grace, by your Letters, to be your Gracious Lord, and to remit unto you your negligence, over-sight, and offence, committed against his Highness in this behalf; and I dare undertake that his Highness shall benignly accept you into his gracious favour, all matters of displeasure past afore this time forgotten and forgiven. As touching the speaking of your Conscience, It is thought that ye have written and have spoken as much as ye can, and many things, as some right probably believes, against your own Conscience: and many report, that at the last Convocation, ye spake many things which ye could not well defend; and therefore it is not greatly feared what ye can say or write in that Matter, howsoever ye be quykkrane and startled. And if ye had taken, &c.

obſerve and fulfil, by all the means that they beſt may, the Statutes of this Realm, made or to be made, for the ſuppreſſion and taking away of the uſurped and pretenſed Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome within this Realm: and for the aſſertion and confirmation of the Authority, Juriſdiction, and Prerogative of our moſt noble Sovereign Lord the King, and his Succeſſors; and that they ſhall diligently inſtruct their Juniors and Youngers, and all other committed to their Cure, That the King's Power is by the Laws of God moſt excellent of all under God in Earth; and that we ought to obey him afore all other Powers, by God's Preſcript; and that the Biſhop of Rome's Juriſdiction or Authority heretofore uſurped, by no means is founded or eſtabliſhed by Holy Scripture: but that the ſame, partly by the craft and deceit of the ſame Biſhop of Rome, and by his evil and ambitious Canons and Decretals; and partly by the toleration and permiſſion of Princes, by little and little hath grown up; and therefore now, of moſt right and equity, is taken away, and clean expelled out of this Realm.

Alſo, that the Abbot, Prior, or Preſident and Brethren, may be declared, by the Kings Supream Power and Authority Eccleſiaſtical, to be abſolved and looſed from all manner Obedience, Oath, and Profeſſion by them heretofore perchance promiſed, or made, to the ſaid Biſhop of Rome, or to any other in his ſtead, or occupying his Authority; or to any other Foreign Prince, or Perſon: And nevertheleſs let it be enjoined to them, that they ſhall not promiſe or give ſuch Oath or Profeſſion to any ſuch Foreign Potentate hereafter. And if the Statutes of the ſaid Order Religious, or Place, ſeem to bind them to Obedience, or Subjection or any other Recognizance of Superiority to the ſaid Biſhop of Rome, or to any other Forreign Power, Potentate, Perſon or Place by any ways: ſuch Statutes, by the King's Grace's Viſitors, be utterly annihilate, broken, and declared void and of none effect; and that they be in no caſe bounden or obligate to the ſame, and ſuch Statutes to be forthwith utterly put forth and aboliſhed out of the Books, or Muniments of that Religion, Order or Place, by the Preſident and his Brethren.

Alſo, that no Monk, or Brother of this Monaſtery, by any means go forth of the Precinct of the ſame.

Alſo, that Women, of what ſtate or degree ſoever they be, be utterly excluded from entring into the Limits or Circuit of this Monaſtery, or place, unleſs they firſt obtain licence of the King's Highneſs, or his Viſitor.

Alſo, that there be no entring into this Monaſtery but one, and that by the great fore-gate of the ſame, which diligently ſhall be watched and kept by ſome Porter ſpecially appointed for that purpoſe, and ſhall be ſhut and opened by the ſame both day and night, at convenient and accuſtomed hours; which Porter ſhall repel all manner Women from entrance into the ſaid Monaſtery.

Alſo, that all and ſingular Brethren, and Monks of this Monaſtery, take their refections altogether in a place called the Miſericorde, ſuch days as they eat Fleſh, and all other days in their Refectory; and that at every Meſs there ſit four of them, not of duty demanding to them any certain, uſual, or accuſtomed duty or portion of Meat as they were wont to do; but that they be content with ſuch Victuals as is ſet before them, and there take their Refections ſoberly, without exceſs, with giving due thanks thanks to God; and that at every ſuch Refection, ſome Chapter of the New Teſtament, or Old, by ſome of the ſaid Brethren, be read and recited to the other, keeping ſilence, and giving audience to the ſame.

Alſo, that the Abbot and Preſident do daily prepare one Table for himſelf and his Gueſts thither reſorting, and that not over-ſumptuous, and full of delicate and ſtrange Diſhes, but honeſtly furniſhed with common Meats; At which Table, the ſaid Abbot, or ſome Senior in his ſtead, ſhall ſit to receive, and gently entertain the Strangers, the Gueſts.

Alſo, that none of the Brethren ſend any part of his Meat, or the leavings thereof to any Perſon, but that there be aſſigned an Almoner, which ſhall gather the Leavings, both of the Covent and Strangers Tables, after that the Servants of the Houſe have had their convenient Refections, and diſtribute the ſame to poor People; amongſt whom ſpecial conſideration be had of ſuch, before other, as be Kinſfolk to any of the ſaid Brethren, if they be of like power and debility as other be; and alſo of thoſe which endeavour themſelves, with all their will and labour, to get their living with their hands, and yet cannot fully help themſelves for their chargeable Houſhold, and multitude of Children: yet let not them be ſo cheriſhed, that they ſhall leave labour and fall to idleneſs; with conſideration alſo ſpecially to be had of them, which by weakneſs of their Limbs and Body be ſo impotent that they cannot labour; and by no means let ſuch Alms be given to valiant mighty and idle Beggars and Vagabonds, as commonly uſe to reſort about ſuch places; which rather, as drove-beaſts and Mychers, ſhould be driven away and compelled to labour, than in their idleneſs and lewdneſs, againſt the form of the King's Grace's Statute in this behalf made, cheriſhed, and maintained, to the great hindrance and damage of the Common-Weal.

Alſo, that all other Almſes or Diſtributions due, or accuſtomed to be made, by reaſon of the Foundation, Statutes, or cuſtoms of this place, be made and given, as largely and as liberally as ever they were at any time heretofore.

Alſo, that the Abbot, Prior, or Preſident, ſhall find Wood and fewel ſufficient to make Fire in the Refectory, from Alhallow-even to Good-Friday.

Alſo, that all the Brethren of this Houſe, except the Abbot, and ſuch as be ſick, or evil at eaſe, and thoſe that have fulfilled their Jubilee, lie together in the Dormitory, every one by himſelf, in ſeveral Beds.

Alſo, that no Brother, or Monk, of this Houſe, have any Child or Boy laying, or privily accompanying with him, or otherwiſe haunting unto him, other than to help him to Maſs.

Alſo, that the Brethren of this Houſe, when they be ſick, or evil at eaſe, be ſeen unto, and be kept in the Infirmary duly, as well for their ſuſtenance of Meat and Drink, as for their good keeping.

Alſo, that the Abbot, or Preſident, keep and find in ſome Univerſity, one or two of his Brothers, according to the Ability and Poſſeſſions of this Houſe, which Brethren, after they be learned in good and holy Letters, when they return home, may inſtruct and teach their Brethren, and diligently preach the Word of God.

Alſo, that every day, by the ſpace of one hour, a Leſſon of Holy Scripture be kept in this Covent, to which all, under pain by this ſaid Preſident to be moderated, ſhall reſort; which Preſident ſhall have Authority to diſpenſe with them, that they, with a low and treatable voice, ſay their long hours, which were wont to be ſung.

Alſo, that the Brethren of this Houſe, after Divine Service done, read or hear ſomewhat of Holy Scripture, or occupy themſelves in ſome ſuch like honeſt and laudable exerciſe.

Alſo, that all and every Brethren of this Houſe ſhall obſerve the Rule, Statutes, and laudable Cuſtoms of this Religion, as far as they do agree with Holy Scripture and the Word of God. And that the Abbot, Prior, or Preſident of this Monaſtery, every day ſhall expound to his Brethren, as plainly as may be, in Engliſh, a certain part of the Rule that they have profeſſed, and apply the ſame always to the Doctrine of Chriſt, and not contrariwiſe; and he ſhall teach them, that the ſaid Rule, and other their principles of Religion (ſo far as they be laudible) be taken out of Holy Scripture; and he ſhall ſhow them the places from whence they were derived; and that their Ceremonies, and other obſervances of Religion, be none other things than as the firſt Letters or Principles, and certain Introductions to true Chriſtianity, or to obſerve an order in the Church. And that true Religion is not contained in Apparel, manner of going, ſhaven Heads, and ſuch other marks; nor in ſilence, faſting, up-riſing in the night, ſinging and ſuch other kind of Ceremonies, but in cleanneſs of mind, pureneſs of living, Chriſt's Faith not feigned, and brotherly Charity, and true honouring of God in Spirit and Verity. And that thoſe above-ſaid things were inſtituted and begun, that they being firſt exerciſed in theſe, in proceſs of time might aſcend to thoſe as by certain ſteps, that is to ſay, to the chief point and end of Religion: and therefore let them be diligently exhorted, that they do not continually ſtick and ſurceaſe in ſuch Ceremonies and Obſervances, as though they had perfectly fulfilled the chief and outmoſt of the whole true Religion; but that when they have once paſt ſuch things, they endeavour themſelves to higher things, and convert their minds from ſuch external Matters, to more inward and deeper Conſiderations, as the Law of God and Chriſtian Religion doth teach and ſhow. And that they aſſure not themſelves of any Reward or Commodity any wiſe, by reaſon of ſuch Ceremonies and Obſervances, except they refer all ſuch to Chriſt, and for his ſake obſerve them; and for that they might thereby the more eaſily keep ſuch things as he hath commanded, as well to them as to all Chriſtian People.

Alſo, that the Abbot and Preſident of this Place ſhall make a full and true reckoning and accompt of his Adminiſtration every year to his Brethren, aſwell of his Receipts as Expences; and that the ſaid Accompt be written in a great Book remaining with the Covent.

Alſo, that the Abbot and Preſident of this Houſe ſhall make no waſte of the Woods pertaining to this Houſe, nor ſhall ſet out unadviſedly any Farms of Reverſions, without the conſent of the more part of the Convent.

Alſo, that there be aſſigned a Book and a Regiſter that may copy out into that Book all ſuch Writings, word by word, as ſhall paſs under the Convent-Seal of this Houſe.

Alſo,

Alſo, that no Man be ſuffered to profeſs, or to wear the Habit of Religion in this Houſe e're he be 24 years of Age compleat; And that they entice nor allure no Man with ſuaſions and blandiments to take the Religion upon him.

Item, That they ſhall not ſhew no Reliques, or feigned Miracles, for encreaſe of Lucre, but that they exhort Pilgrims and Strangers to give that to the Poor, that they thought to offer to their Images or Reliques.

Alſo, that they ſhall ſuffer no Fairs, or Markets, to be kept or uſed within the limits of this Houſe.

Alſo that every Brother of this Houſe that is a Prieſt, ſhall every day in his Maſs, pray for the moſt happy and moſt proſperous eſtate of our Sovereign Lord the King, and his moſt noble and lawful Wife Queen Anne.

Alſo, that if either the Maſter, or any Brother of this Houſe, do infringe any of the ſaid Injunctions, any of them ſhall denounce the ſame, or procure to be denounced, as ſoon as may be, to the King's Majeſty, or to his Viſitor-General, or his Deputy. And the Abbot, or Maſter, ſhall miniſter ſpending Mony, and other Neceſſaries, for the way to him that ſhall ſo denounce.

Other ſpiritual Injunctions may be added by the Viſitor, as the place and nature of the Comperts ſhall require, after his diſcretion.

Reſerving Power to give more Injunctions, and to examine and diſcuſs the Comperts, to puniſh and reform them that be convict of any notable Crime, to ſearch and try the Foundations, Charters, Donations, Appropriations and Muniments of the ſaid Places; and to diſpoſe all ſuch Papiſtical Eſcripts as ſhall be there found, to the Right Honourable Mr. Thomas Cromwell General-Viſitor to the King's ſaid Highneſs, as ſhall ſeem moſt expedient to his high wiſdom and diſcretion.

III. Some Particulars relating to the Diſſolution of Monaſteries.

Section I.

The Preamble of the Surrender of the Monaſtery of Langden.

OMnibus Chriſti fidelibus, &c. Willielmus Dyer, Abbas Monaſterii Beatæ Mariæ Virginis & S. Thomæ Martyris de Langden, in Com. Kanc, & ejuſdem loci Conventus, Ordinis Præmonſtrat. capitulum dictæ domus plene facientes, ejuſdemq; domus (quæ in ſuis fructibus, reditibus, provenien. even. & emolumen, non mediocriter deteriorata eſt, & quaſi in totum diminuta, ingentiq; ære alieno obruta, oppreſſa, & gravata extitit) ſtatum uſq; adeo matura deliberatione, & diligenti inſtatu, conſiderantes, ponderantes, & penſantes, quod niſi celeri remedio, regia proviſione huic Monaſterio ſive Prioratui (quippe quod de ejus fundatione & perſonatu exiſtit) brevi ſuccurratur & provideatur, funditus funditus in Spiritualibus & Temporalibus annihiletur, per præsentes damus & concedimus, &c.

The rest follows in the ordinary form of Law: but the ordinary Preamble in most Surrenders is,

Omnibus Christi fidelibus, &c. Nos — Salutem. Sciatis quod nos, deliberate, certa scientia, & mero motu, nostris, ex quibusdam causis, justis, & rationabilibus, nos, animas & conscientias nostras specialiter moventibus, ultro & sponte dedisse & concessisse Domino Regi, &c.

But it seems some few Houses though they were prevailed with to surrender, yet would not do it with such a Preamble, for there are about twenty Surrenders without any Preamble at all, made to John London Clerk, ad usum Domini Regis.

Section IV.

IT ſeems there was generally a Confeſſion made with the Surrender: Of theſe ſome few are yet extant, though undoubtedly great care was taken to deſtroy as many as could be in Queen Mary's time. That long and full one made by the Prior of St. Andrews in Northampton, the Preamble whereof is printed by Fuller, and is at large printed by Weaver, is yet preſerved in the Augmentation-Office. There are ſome few more alſo extant, ſix of theſe I have ſeen, one of them follows.

For-

FOraſmuch as we Richard Green, Abbot of our Monaſtery of our Bleſſed Lady St. Mary of Betleſden, and the Convent of the ſaid Monaſtery, do profoundly conſider, That the whole manner and trade of living, which we and our pretenſed Religion have practiſed, and uſed many days, does moſt principally conſiſt in certain dumb Ceremonies, and other certain Conſtitutions of the Biſhops of Rome, and other Forinſecal Potentates, as the Abbot of Ciſtins, and therein only nuſled, and not taught in the true knowledg of God's Laws, procuring always Exemptions of the Biſhops of Rome from our Ordinaries and Dioceſans: ſubmitting our ſelves principally to Forinſecal Potentates and Powers, which never came here to reform ſuch diſorders of living and abuſes, as now have been found to have reigned amongſt us. And therefore now aſſuredly knowing, that the moſt perfect way of living is moſt principally and ſufficiently declared unto us by our Maſter Chriſt, his Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, and that it is moſt expedient for us to be governed and ordered by our Supreme Head, under God, the King's moſt noble Grace, with our mutual Aſſent and Conſent, ſubmit our ſelves, and every one of us, to the moſt benign Mercy of the King's Majeſty; and by theſe Preſents do Surrender, &c.

The Surrender follows in common form, ſigned by the Abbot, Subprior, and 9 Monks, 25 Septemb. Regni 30.

There are others to the ſame purpoſe, Signed by the Guardian and ſeven Franciſcans at Aleſbury, the firſt of October. By the Franciſcans at Bedford the third of October. The Franciſcans in Coventry the fifth of October. And the Franciſcans in Stamford the eighth of October. And the Carmelites in Stamford upon the ſame day, which I ſhall alſo inſert, the former four agreeing to it.

FOraſmuch as the Prior and Friers of this Houſe of Carmelitu in Stamford, commonly called the White-Friers in Stamford, in the County of Lincoln, do profoundly conſider that the perfection of Chriſtian living doth not conſiſt in ſome Ceremonies, wearing of a white Coat, diſguiſing our ſelves after ſtrange faſhions, dockying and becking, wearing Scapulars and Hoods, and other-like Papiſtical Ceremonies, wherein we have been moſt principally practiſed and nuſled in times paſt; but the very true way to pleaſe God, and to live a true Chriſtian Man, without all hypocriſy and feigned diſſimulation, is ſincerely declared to us by our Maſter Chriſt, his Evangeliſts, and Apoſtles; being minded hereafter to follow the ſame, conforming our ſelf to the Will and Pleaſure of our Supream Head under God on Earth, the King's Majeſty; and not to follow henceforth the ſuperſtitious Traditions of any Forinſecal Potentate or Power, with mutual Aſſent and Conſent, do ſubmit our ſelves to the Mercy of our ſaid Sovereign Lord, and with the like mutual Aſſent and Conſent do Surrender, &c.

Signed by the Prior, and ſix Friers.

Of the manner of ſuppreſſing the Monaſteries after they were ſurrendred.

THE Reader will beſt underſtand this by the following account of the Suppreſſion of the Monaſtery of Teuksbury, copied from a Book that is in the Augmentation-Office, which begins thus:

THe Certificate of Robert Southwell Eſquire, William Petre, Edward Kairne, and John London, Doctors of Law: John Ap-price, John Kingſman, Richard Paulet, and William Bernars, Eſquires, Commiſſioners aſſigned by the King's Majeſty, to take the Surrenders of divers Monaſteries, by force of his Grace's Commiſſion to them, 6, 5, 4, or 3 of them, in that behalf directed; bearing date at his Highneſs's Palace of Weſtminſter, the 7*th* day of November, in the 31 year of the Reign of our moſt Dread Soveraign Lord Henry the Eighth, by the Grace of God, King of England, and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in Earth immediately under Chriſt Supreme Head of the Church of England, of all and ſingular their Proceedings, as well in and of theſe Monaſteries by his Majeſty appointed to be altered, as of others to be diſſolved, according to the tenour, purport and effect of his Graces ſaid Commiſſion; with Inſtructions to them likewiſe delivered, as hereafter enſueth.

IV. Queen Ann Boleyn's laſt Letter to King Henry.

Cotton Libr. Otho C. 10.

YOur Grace's Diſpleaſure, and my Impriſonment, are things ſo ſtrange unto me, as what to write, or what to excuſe, I am altogether ignorant. Whereas you ſend unto me (willing me to confeſs a Truth, and ſo obtain your Favour) by ſuch an one whom you know to be mine antient profeſſed Enemy. I no ſooner received this Meſſage by him, than I rightly conceived your meaning; and if, as you ſay, confeſſing a Truth indeed may procure my ſafety, I ſhall with all willingneſs and duty perform your Command.

But let not your Grace ever imagine that your poor Wife will ever be brought to acknowledge a Fault, where not ſo much as a thought thereof preceded. And to ſpeak a Truth, never Prince had Wife more loyal in all Duty, and in all true Affection, than you have ever found in Ann Boleyn, with which Name and Place I could willingly have contented my ſelf, if God, and your Grace's Pleaſure had been ſo pleaſed. Neither did I at any time ſo far forget my ſelf in my Exaltation, or received Queenſhip, but that I always looked for ſuch an alteration as now I find; for the ground of my Preferment being on no ſurer Foundation than your Grace's Fancy; the leaſt alteration I knew, was fit and ſufficient to draw that Fancy to ſome other Subject. You have choſen me, from a low eſtate, to be your Queen and Companion, far beyond my deſert or deſire. If then you found me worthy of ſuch Honour, Good your Grace let not any light Fancy, or bad Counſel of mine Enemies, withdraw your Princely Favour from me; neither let that Stain, that unworthy Stain of diſloyal Heart towards your good Grace, ever caſt ſo foul a blot on your moſt dutiful Wife, and the Infant-Princeſs your Daughter: Try me, good King, but let me have a lawful Trial, and let not my ſworn Enemies ſit as my Accuſers and Judges; yea, let me receive an open Trial, for my Truth ſhall fear no open ſhame; then ſhall you ſee, either mine Innocency cleared, your Suſpicion and Conſcience ſatisfied, the ignominy and ſlander of the World ſtopped, or my Guilt openly declared. So that whatſoever God or you may determine of me, your Grace may be freed from an open Cenſure; and mine Offence being ſo lawfully proved, your Grace is at liberty, both before God and Man, not only to execute worthy Puniſhment on me as an unlawful Wife, but to follow your Affection, already ſetled, on that Party, for whoſe ſake I am now as I am, whoſe Name I could ſome good while ſince have pointed unto; your Grace being not ignorant of my ſuſpicion therein.

Infant

But if you have already determined of me, and that not only my Death, but an infamous Slander muſt bring you the enjoying of your deſired happineſs; then I deſire of God, that he will pardon your great Sin therein, and likewiſe mine Enemies, the Inſtruments thereof; and that he will not call you to a ſtrict account for your unprincely and cruel uſage of me, at his General Judgment-Seat, where both you and my ſelf muſt ſhortly appear, and in whoſe Judgment I doubt not (whatſoever the World may think of me) mine Innocence ſhall be openly known, and ſufficiently cleared.

My laſt aud only Requeſt ſhall be, That my ſelf may only bear the burden of your Grace's diſpleaſure, and that it may not touch the Innocent Souls of thoſe poor Gentlemen, who (as I underſtand) are likewiſe in ſtrait Impriſonment for my ſake. If ever I have found favour in your ſight, if ever the Name of Ann Boleyn hath been pleaſing in your Ears, then let me obtain this Requeſt; and I will ſo leave to trouble your Grace any further, with mine earneſt Prayers to the Trinity to have your Grace in his good keeping, and to direct you in all your Actions. From my doleful Priſon in the Tower, this 6th of May.

Your moſt Loyal and ever

Faithful Wife,

Ann Boleyn.

V. The Judgment of the Convocation concerning General-Councils. Publiſhed by the L. Herbert from the Original.

AS concerning General-Councils, like-as we (taught by long experience) do perfectly know that there never was, nor is, any thing deviſed, invented, or inſtituted by our Fore-Fathers, more expedient or more neceſſary for the eſtabliſhment of our Faith, for the extirpation of Hereſies, and the aboliſhing of Sects and Schiſms; and finally, for the reducing of Chriſt's People unto one perfect unity and concord in his Religion, than by the having of General-Councils; ſo that the ſame be lawfully had and congregated in Spiritu Sancto, and be alſo conform and agreeable, as well concerning the ſurety and indifferency of the Places, as all other Points requiſite and neceſſary for the ſame, unto that wholſome and godly Inſtitution and Uſage, for the which they were at firſt deviſed and uſed in the Primitive Church: Even ſo on the other ſide, taught by like experience, we eſteem, repute, and judg, That there is, ne can be any thing in the World more peſtilent and pernicious to the Common-Weal of Chriſtendom, or whereby the Truth of God's Word hath in times paſt, or hereafter may be ſooner defaced or ſubverted, or whereof hath and may enſue more contention, more diſcord and other deviliſh Effects, than when ſuch General Councils have or ſhall be aſſembled, not chriſtianly, nor charitably, but for and upon private malice and ambition, or other worldly and carnal Reſpects and conſiderations, according to the ſaying of Gregory Nazianzen, in his Epiſtle to one Procopius, wherein he writeth this Sentence following; Sic ſentio, ſi verum ſcribendum eſt, omnes Conventus Epiſcoporum fugiendos eſſe, quia nullius Synodi finem vidi bonum, neque habentem magis ſolutionem malorum, quam incrementum: Nam cupiditates contentionum, & gloria (ſed ne putes me odioſum iſta ſcribentem) vincunt rationem. That is to ſay; "I think this, if I ſhould write truly, That all General "Councils be to be eſchewed, for I never ſaw that they produced any "good End or Effect, nor that any Proviſion or Remedy, but rather "increaſe of Miſchiefs proceeded of them. For the deſire of maintenance of Mens Opinions, and ambition of Glory (but reckon not that "I write this of Malice) hath always in them overcomed Reaſon. Wherefore we think that Chriſtian Princes, eſpecially and above all things, ought and muſt, with all their Wills, Power, and Diligence, foreſee and provide; Ne Sanctiſſima hac in parte majorum Inſtituta, ad improbiſſimos ambitionis aut malitiæ effectus explendos, diverſiſſimo ſuo fine & ſceleratiſſimo pervertantur: Neve ad alium prætextum poſſint valere, & longe diverſum effectum orbi producere quam Sanctiſſima rei facies præ ſe ferat. That is to ſay, "Leſt the moſt noble wholſome Inſtitutions of our Elders in this behalf, be perverted to a moſt contrary and moſt wicked "End and Effect; that is to ſay, to fulfil and ſatisfy the wicked affections of Mens Ambition and Malice; or, leſt they might prevail for any "other colour, or bring forth any other Effect, than their moſt vertuous "and laudable Countenance doth outwardly to the World ſhew or pretend. And firſt of all, we think they ought principally to conſider who hath the Authority to call together a General Council. Secondly, Whether the Cauſes alledged, be ſo weighty and ſo urgent, that neceſſarily they require a General Council, nor can otherwiſe be remedied. Thirdly, Who ought to be Judges in the General Council. Fourthly, What order of proceeding is to be obſerved in the ſame; and how the Opinions or Judgments of the Fathers are to be conſulted or asked. Fifthly, What Doctrines are to be allowed or defended, with divers other things which in General Councils ought of reaſon and equity to be obſerved. And as unto the firſt Point, We think that neither the Biſhop of Rome, nor any one Prince, of what Eſtate, Degree, or Preheminence ſoever he be, may, by his own Authority, call, indict, or ſummon any General Council, without the expreſs conſent, aſſent, and agreement of the reſidue of Chriſtian Princes, and eſpecially ſuch as have have within their own Realms and Seigniories, Imperium merum, that is to ſay, of ſuch as have the whole, intire, and ſupream Government and Authority over all their Subjects, without knowledging or recognizing of any other ſupream Power or Authority. And this to be true, we be induced to think, by many and ſundry, as well Examples as great Reaſons and Authority. The which, foraſmuch as it ſhould be over long and tedious to expreſs here particularly, we have thought good to omit the ſame for this preſent. And in witneſs that this is our plain and determinate Sentence, Opinion and Judgment, touching the Premiſſes, we the Prelats and Clergy under-written, being congregate together in the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, and repreſenting the whole Clergy of the ſame, have to theſe Preſents ſubſcribed our Names the 20th of July, in the Year of our Lord 1556. 28 Hen. 8.

Item; Of what Order, Rule, or Religion, the ſame Houſe is, and whether it be a Cell or not: and if it be a Cell, then the Commiſſioners to deliver to the Governour of the Houſe a Privy Seal; and alſo to injoin him, in the King's Name, under a great pain, to appear without delay before the Chancellor of the Augmentations of the Revenues of the the King's Crown and the Council; and in the mean time not to meddle with the ſame Cell, till the King's Pleaſure be further known.

Item; What number of Perſons of Religion be in the ſame, and the converſation of their Lives; and how many of them be Prieſts, and how many of them will go to other Houſes of that Religion; or how many will take Capacities; and how many Servants or Hinds the ſame Houſe keepeth commonly, and what other Perſons have their living in the ſame Houſe.

Item; To ſurvey the quantity or value of the Lead and Bells of the ſame Houſe, as near as they can; with the ruin, decay, ſtate and plight of the ſame.

Item; Incontinently to call for the Covent-Seal, with all Writings and Charters, Evidences and Muniments concerning any of the Poſſeſſions to be delivered to them, and put the ſame in ſure keeping; and to take a juſt Inventory betwixt them and the Governour, or other Head-Officer, by Indenture, of the Ornaments, Plate, Jewels, Chattels, ready-Mony, Stuff of Houſhold, Coin, as well ſigned as not ſigned; Stock and Store in the Farmer's hands, and the value thereof, as near as they can, which were appertaining to the ſame Houſes the firſt day of March laſt paſt; and what Debts the Houſe doth owe, and to what Perſon; and what Debts be owing to them, and by whom.

Item; After, to cauſe the Covent, or Common-Seal, the Plate, Jewels, and ready Mony, to be put in ſafe keeping, and the reſidue of the Particulars ſpecified in the Inventory, to be left in the keeping of the Governor, or ſome other head Officer, without waſting or conſumption of the ſame, unleſs it be for neceſſary expence of the Houſe.

Item; That they command the Governour, or other Receiver of the ſame Houſe, to receive no Rents of their Farms, until they know further of the King's Pleaſure, except ſuch Rents as muſt needs be had for their neceſſary Food or Suſtenance, or for paiment of their Servants Wages.

Item; To ſurvey diſcreetly the Demeſnes of the ſame Houſe; that is to ſay, ſuch as have not been commonly uſed to be letten out, and to certify the clear yearly value thereof.

Item; To examine the true yearly value of all the Farms of the ſame Houſe, deducting thereof Rents reſerved, Pentions and Portions paid out of the ſame, Synodals, and Proxies; Bailiffs, Receivers, Stewards, and Auditors Fees, and the Names of them to whom they be paid and due, and to none other.

Item; What Leaſes hath been made to any Farmer, of the Farms pertaining to the ſame Houſe; and what Rent they reſerved, and to whom, and for how many Years; and a Copy of the Indenture if they can get it, or elſe the Counter-pane.

Item; To ſearch and enquire what Woods, Parks, Forreſts, Commons, or other Profit, belonging to any of the Poſſeſſions of the ſame Houſes, the Number of the Acres, the Age and Value, as near as they can.

Item; What Grants, Bargains, Sales, Gifts, Alienations, Leaſes of any Lands, Tenements, Woods, or Offices, hath been made by any the ſaid Governors, of any of the ſaid Houſes, within one Year next before the the 4th day of February last past, and of what things, or to what value, and to whom, and for what estate.

Item; If there be any House of the Religion aforesaid omitted and not certified in the Exchequer, then the said Commissioners to survey the same, and to make Certificate accordingly.

Item; That they straitly command every Governour of every such House limited in their Commission, to sow and till their Grounds as they have done before, till the King's Pleasure be further known.

Item; If there be any House given by the King to any Person, in any of the said several Limits of the said Commission, the Names whereof shall be declared to the said Commissioners, Then the said Commissioners shall immediately take the Covent from the Governour, and take an Inventory indented of the Lead, Bells, Debts, Goods, Chattels, Plate, Jewels, Ornaments, Stock and Store, to the King's use; and to make sale of the Goods, Chattels, and other Implements, Plate and Jewels only excepted.

Item; The said Commissioners in every such House, to send such of the Religious Persons that will remain in the same Religion, to some other great House of that Religion, by their discretion, with a Letter to a Governour for the Receipt of them; and the Residue of them that will go to the World, to send them to my Lord of Canterbury, and the Lord Chancellor for their Capacities, with the Letter of the same Commissioners.

Item; The said Commissioners to give the said Persons that will have Capacities, some reasonable Rewards, according to the distance of the place, by their discretions to be appointed.

Item; The said Commissioners to command the Governour to resort to the Chancellor of the Augmentation for his yearly Stipend and Pension.

Item; If there be any House dissolved or given up to the King by their Deed, then the Commissioners shall order themselves in every point and purpose, as the Houses given by the King to any other Person, in form aforesaid.

Item; Every of the said Commissioners having in charge to survey more than one Shire within the Limits of their Commission, immediately after they have perused one Shire, parcel of their Charge, in form aforesaid, shall send to the Chancellour of the Court for the Augmentation of the Revenues of the King's Crown, a brief Certificate of all these Comperts, according to the Instructions aforesaid, what they have done in the premisses; and in every County so surveyed, then to proceed further to another County; and so as they pass the said Counties to make the like Certificate, and so forth, till their Limits be surveyed, and there to remain till they know further of the King's pleasure.

Item; If the said Commissioners have but one County in charge, then to certify the said Chancellor in form aforesaid, and there to remain till they know further of the King's Pleasure.

VII. Injunctions given by the Authority of the King's Highneſs to the Clergy of this Realm.

Regiſter, Craum, fol. 47.

IN the Name of God. Amen. In the Year of our Lord God, One thouſand five hundred thirty ſix, and of the moſt noble Reign of our Sovereign Lord Henry the Eighth, King of England and France the 28th Year, and the day of I Thomas Cromwel Knight, Lord Cromwel, Keeper of the Privy-Seal of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and Vicegerent unto the ſame, for and concerning all his Juriſdictions Eccleſiaſtical within the Realm, viſiting by the King's Highneſs's Supream Authority Eccleſiaſtical, the People and Clergy of this Deanery of by my truſty Commiſſary lawfully deputed and conſtitute for this part, have, to the glory of Almighty God, to the King's Highneſs's honour, the Publick-weal of this his Realm, and encreaſe of Vertue in the ſame, appointed and aſſigned theſe Injunctions enſuing to be kept and obſerved, of the Dean, Parſons, Vicars, Curats, and Stipendaries reſiant, or having cure of Souls, or any other Spiritual Adminiſtrations within this Deanery, under the pains hereafter limited and appointed.

The firſt is; That the Dean, Parſons, Vicars, and other, having cure of Soul any-where within this Deanery, ſhall faithfully keep and obſerve, and as far as in them may lie, ſhall cauſe to be obſerved and kept of other, all and ſingular Laws and Statutes of this Realm, made for the aboliſhing and extirpation of the Biſhop of Rome's pretenſed and uſurped Power and Juriſdiction within this Realm. And for the eſtabliſhment and confirmation of the King's Authority and Juriſdiction of the ſame, as of the Supream Head of the Church of England; and ſhall, to the uttermoſt of their Wit, Knowledg, and Learning, purely, ſincerely, and without any colour or diſſimulation, declare, manifeſt, and open, for the ſpace of one quarter of a year next enſuing, once every Sunday, and after that at the leaſt-wiſe twice every quarter, in their Sermons and other Collations, that the Biſhop of Rome's uſurped Power and Juriſdiction, having no eſtabliſhment nor ground by the Law of God, was of moſt juſt cauſes taken away and aboliſhed; and therefore they owe unto him no manner of Obedience or Subjection; and that the King's Power is within his Dominion the higheſt Power and Potentate, under God, to whom all Men within the ſame Dominions, by God's Commandment, owe moſt Loyalty and Obedience, afore and above all other Powers and Potentates in Earth.

Item; Whereas certain Articles were lately deviſed and put forth by the King's Highneſs's Authority, and condeſcended upon by the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm in Convocation, whereof part are neceſſary to be holden and believed for our Salvation, and the other part do concern and teach certain laudable Ceremonies, Rites, and Uſages of the Church, meet and convenient to be kept and uſed for decent and politick order in the ſame; the ſaid Dean, Parſons, Vicars, and other Curats, ſhall ſo open and declare in their ſaid Sermons, and other Collations, Collations the ſaid Articles unto them that be under their Cure, that they may plainly know and diſcern which of them be neceſſary to be believed and obſerved for their Salvation, and which be not neceſſary, but only do concern the decent and politick order of the ſaid Church: according to ſuch Commandment and Admonition as hath been given unto them heretofore, by Authority of the King's Highneſs in that behalf.

Moreover, that they ſhall declare unto all ſuch as be under their Cure, the Articles likewiſe deviſed, put forth, and authorized of late, for and concerning the abrogation of certain ſuperfluous Holy-days, according to the effect and purport of the ſame Articles: and perſwade their Pariſhioners to keep and obſerve the ſame inviolable, as things honeſtly provided, decreed, and eſtabliſhed, by common conſent, and publick Authority, for the Weal, Commodity, and Profit of all this Realm.

Beſides this, to the intent that all Superſtition and Hypocriſie, crept into divers Mens hearts, may vaniſh away, they ſhall not ſet forth or extol any Images, Reliques, or Miracles, for any ſuperſtition or lucre; nor allure the People by any inticements to the pilgrimages of any Saint, otherwiſe than is permitted in the Articles lately put forth by the Authority of the King's Majeſty, and condeſcended upon by the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm in Convocation; as though it were proper or peculiar to that Saint to give this Commodity, or that: ſeeing all Goodneſs, health, and Grace, ought to be both asked and looked for only of God, as of the very Author of the ſame, and of none other, for without him it cannot be given: But they ſhall exhort, as well their Pariſhioners as other Pilgrims, that they do rather apply themſelves to the keeping of God's Commandments, and fulfilling of his Works of Charity: perſwading them that they ſhall pleaſe God more by the true exerciſing of the bodily Labour, Travail, or Occupation, and providing for their Families, than if they went about to the ſaid Pilgrimages; and that it ſhall profit more their Souls health, if they do beſtow that on the Poor and Needy, which they would have beſtowed upon the ſaid Images or Reliques.

Alſo in the ſame their Sermons, and other Collations, the Parſons, Vicars, and other Curates, aforeſaid, ſhall diligently admoniſh the Fathers and Mothers, Maſters and Governours of Youth, being within their Cure, to teach, or cauſe to be taught, their Children and Servants, even from their Infancy, their Pater Noſter, the Articles of our Faith, and the ten Commandments, in their Mother Tongue: And the ſame ſo taught, ſhall cauſe the ſaid Youth oft to repeat and underſtand. And to the intent that this may be the more eaſily done, the ſaid Curates ſhall, in their Sermons, deliberately and plainly recite of the ſaid Pater Noſter, the Articles of our Faith, and the ten Commandments, one Clauſe or Article one day, and another another day, till thoſe be taught and learnt by little; and ſhall deliver the ſame in writing, or ſhow where printed Books containing the ſame be to be ſold, to them that can read or will deſire the ſame. And thereto that the ſaid Fathers and Mothers, Maſters and Governours, do beſtow their Children and Servants, even from their Childhood, either to Learning, or ſome other honeſt Exerciſe, Occupation, or Husbandry: exhorting, counſelling, and by all the ways and means they may, as well in their ſaid Sermons and Collations, as otherwiſe, perſwading the ſaid Fathers, Mothers, Maſters, and other Governours, being under their Cure and Charge, diligently to provide and foreſee that the ſaid Youth be in no manner-wiſe kept or brought up in idleneſs, leſt at any time afterwards they be driven, for lack of ſome Myſtery or Occupation to live by, to fall to begging, ſtealing, or ſome other unthriftineſs; foraſmuch as we may daily ſee, through ſloth and idleneſs, divers valiant Men fall, ſome to begging, and ſome to theft and Murder; which after brought to calamity and miſery, impute a great part thereof to their Friends and Governours, which ſuffered them to be brought up ſo idlely in their Youth; where if they had been well educated and brought up in ſome good Literature, Occupation, or Myſtery, they ſhould, being Rulers of their own Family, have profited, as well themſelves as divers other Perſons, to the great commodity and ornament of the Common-weal.

Alſo, that the ſaid Parſons, Vicars, and other Curates, ſhall diligently provide that the Sacraments and Sacramentals be duly and reverently miniſtred in their Pariſhes; and if at any time it hapned them, either in any of the Caſes expreſſed in the Statutes of this Realm, or of ſpecial licence given by the King's Majeſty to be abſent from their Benefices, they ſhall leave their Cure, not to a rude and unlearned Perſon, but to an honeſt, well learned, and expert Curate, that may teach the rude and unlearned of their Cure wholſom Doctrine, and reduce them to the right way that do err; and always let them ſee, that neither they, nor their Vicars, do ſeek more their own profit, promotion, or advantage, than the profit of the Souls that they have under their Cure, or the Glory of God.

Alſo, the ſaid Dean, Parſons, Vicars, Curats, and other Prieſts, ſhall in no wiſe, at any unlawful time, nor for any other cauſe, than for their honeſt neceſſity, haunt or reſort to any Taverns or Ale houſes; And after their Dinner and Supper, they ſhall not give themſelves to Drinking or Riot, ſpending their time idlely, by Day or by Night, at Tables or Cards-playing, or any other unlawful Game; but at ſuch times as they ſhall have ſuch leiſure, they ſhall read or hear ſomewhat of Holy Scripture, or ſhall occupy themſelves with ſome other honeſt Exerciſe; and that they alway do thoſe things which appertain to good congruence and honeſty, with profit of the Common-weal, having always in mind, That they ought to excel all others in purity of life, and ſhould be examples to all other to live well and chriſtianly.

Furthermore; Becauſe the Goods of the Church are called the Goods of the Poor, and at theſe days nothing is leſs ſeen than the Poor to be ſuſtained with the ſame; all Parſons, Vicars, Penſionaries, Prebendaries, and other Beneficed Men within the Deanery, not being reſident upon their Benefices, which may diſpend yearly 20 l. or above within this Deanry or elſe where, ſhall diſtribute hereafter yearly amongſt their their poor Parishioners, or other Inhabitants there, in the presence of the Church-Wardens, or some other honest Men of the Parish; the fortieth part of the Fruits and Revenues of the said Benefices: lest they be worthily noted of Ingratitude: which reserving so many parts to themselves, cannot vouchsafe to impart the fortieth portion thereof amongst the poor People of that Parish, that is so fruitful and profitable unto them.

And to the intent that Learned Men may hereafter spring the more for the execution of the Premisses; Every Parson, Vicar, Clerk, or beneficed Man within this Deanery, having yearly to dispend in Benefices, and other promotions of the Church, an 100 l. shall give competent exhibition to one Scholar; and for as many hundred pounds more as he may dispend, to so many Scholars more shall give like exhibition in the University of Oxford or Cambridge, or some Grammer-School; which after they have profited in good Learning, may be Partners of their Patrons Cure and Charge, as well in preaching as otherwise, in the execution of their Offices; or may, when need shall be, otherwise profit the Common-wealth with their Counsel and Wisdom.

Also, that all persons, Vicars, and Clerks, having Churches, Chappels, or Mansion within this Deanery, shall bestow yearly hereafter upon the same Mansions, or Chancels of their Churches being in decay, the fifth part of their Benefices till they be fully repaired: and the same so repaired, shall always keep and maintain in good state.

All which and singular Injunctions shall be inviolably observed of the said Dean, Parsons, Vicars, Curats, Stipendaries, and other Clerks and beneficed Men, under the pain of suspension and sepuestration of the Fruits of their Benefices, until they have done their duty according to these Injunctions.

VIII. Cromwel's Letter to Shaxton, Bishop of Sarum, taken from a Copy writ by his Secretary.

MY Lord, after hearty Commendations, I cannot but both much marvel that you whom I have taken as mine trusty Friend, should judge me, as I perceive by your Letters you do, and also be glad that ye so frankly utter your Stomach to me. I would thank you for your plain writing and free monitions; saving that you seem fuller of suspicion than it becometh a Prelate of your sort to be: and (to say that maketh me more sorry) much worse perswaded of me than I thought any of your Learning and Judgement could have been. I took a Matter out of your hands to mine, if upon Considerations mine Office bind me to do so, what cause have ye to complain? if I had done this, either upon affection, or intending prejudice to your estimation, you might have expostulated with me; and yet if ye then had done it after a gentler sort, I should both sooner have amended that I did amiss, Cott. Libr. Cleop. E. 4.

and alſo have had better cauſe to judge your writing to me, to be of a friendly heart towards me. If ye be offended with my ſharp Letters, how can your teſty words (I had almoſt given them another Name) delight me? I required you to uſe no extremity in your office, durus eſt hic ſermo, ye call it; and when ye have done, ye begin again, even as though all being ſaid, all were ſtill behind. If ye have uſed none extremity, I am I enſure you as glad of it as I ought to be: And though ye do not, yet upon a complaint my Office bindeth me to ſuccour him that ſaith he is over-matched, and is compelled to ſuſtain wrong. I was thus informed, and by Perſons to whom I gave more credit than I intend to do hereafter, if they have abuſed me, as ye would make me believe they have. They thus complaining, could I do leſs than grant unto them ſuch Remedies as the King's Highneſs and his Laws give indifferently to all his Subjects? Might I not alſo ſomewhat gather, that ye proceeded the ſorer againſt the Reader, Roger London, when I had ſeen how much you deſired the preferment of your Servant to that Revenue? My Lord, you had ſhewed your ſelf of much more patience, I will not ſay of much more prudence, if you had contented your ſelf with their lawful Appeal, and my lawful Injunctions; and rather have written ſomewhat fully to inſtruct us in this Matter, than thus to deſire to conquer me by ſhrewd words, to vanquiſh me by ſharp threp of Scripture, which as I know to uſe travel, ſo I truſt to God as great a Clerk as ye be, is done already. Thus out of their place, it becometh me not, neither yet I am wont to vaunt my ſelf of well-doing, I know who worketh all that is well wrought by me; and whereas he is the whole Doer, I intend not to offer him this wrong, to labour, and I to take the thanks; yet as I do not ceaſe to give thanks, that it hath pleaſed his Goodneſs to uſe me as an Inſtrument, and to work ſomewhat by me, ſo I truſt I am as ready to ſerve him in my Calling, to my little power, as ye are preſt to write worſe of me than ye ought to think. My Prayer is, That God give me no longer life, than I ſhall be glad to uſe mine Office in ædificationem, and not in deſtructionem, as ye bear me in hand I do. God, ye ſay, will judge ſuch uſing of Authority, meaning flatly, that I do abuſe ſuch Power as hath pleaſed God and the King's Highneſs to ſet me in; God, I ſay, will judge ſuch Judges as ye are, and charge alſo ſuch thoughts as ye miſuſe: ye do not ſo well as I would ye ſhould do, if ye ſo think of me as your Letters make me think ye do. The Crime that ye charge me withal, is greater than I may or ought to bear, untruer, I truſt, than they that would faineſt ſhall be able to prove. It is a ſtrange thing, you ſay, that I neither would write, nor ſend you word by mouth, what ye ſhould do with the Popiſh Monks of Abington; and that the Abbot of Redding could get ſtraight-way my Letters to inhibit your juſt doings; That was not my mind which I wrot, I did not intend to lett your juſt doings, but rather to require you to do juſtly; neither was I ſwift in granting my Letters to him, albeit I am much readier to help him that complains of wrong, than preſt to further on him that deſireth puniſhment of a Perſon whom I am not ſure hath offened. I made you no anſwer, a ſtrange thing! my Lord, I thought ye had better known my Buſineſs, than for ſuch a Matter to eſteem me not your Friend; you might have better judged that I was too much cumbred with other Affiairs, that thoſe which

ſued for the Abbot, could better eſpy their time than you could. Some Man will think it rather utter diſpleaſure conceived before, than that ye have any urgent occaſion here to misjudge my mind towards you. As concerning your Manor, you muſt uſe your Priviledges as things lent unto you, ſo long as ye ſhall occupy them well, that is, according to the mind and pleaſure of them that gave you them. I took neither the Monk's Cauſe, nor any other, into my hands, to be a bearer of any ſuch whom their upright dealings is not able to bear. No, you know I think, that I love ſuch readers of Scripture as little as ye do: would God Men of your ſort were as diligent to ſee that in all their Dioceſes good were made, as I am glad to remove things when I know them; if ye had taken even then but half the pains to ſend up ſuch things againſt him as ye now ſend, neither you ſhould have had cauſe, no nor occaſion thus eaſily to divine of my good or evil-will towards you, nor I have been cumbred with this anſwer. My Lord, I pray you, while I am your Friend, take me to be ſo, for if I were not, or if I knew any cauſe why I ought not, I would not be afraid to ſhew you what had alienated my mind from you; ſo you ſhould well perceive that my diſpleaſure ſhould laſt no longer than there were cauſe. I paſs over your Nemo læditur niſi à ſeipſo, I pray with you this firſt part, Our Lord have pity upon me; the other part is not in my Prayers, That God ſhould turn my heart, for he is my Judge, I may err in my doings for want of knowledge, but I willingly bear no miſdoers, I willingly hurt none whom honeſty and the King's Laws do not refuſe. Undo not you your ſelf, I intend nothing leſs than to work you any diſpleaſure. If hitherto I have ſhewed you any pleaſure, I am glad of it: I ſhowed it to your Qualities and not to you; if they tarry with you, my good-will cannot depart from you, except your Prayer be heard, that is, My heart be turned. I aſſure you I am right glad ye are in the place ye are in, and will do what ſhall lie in me to aid you in your Office, to maintain your Reputation, to give you credit among your Flock, and elſe where; as long as I ſhall ſee you faithful to your Duty, according to your Calling. I will not become your good Lord, as your deſire is, I am and have been your Friend, and take you to be mine; caſt out vain ſuſpicion; let raſh Judgement rule Men of leſs wit and diſcretion; wilfulneſs becometh all Men better than a Biſhop, which ſhould always teach us to lack gladly our own Will, becauſe you may not have your own Will. Here is Chriſtus paup. facit & ditat, cum Dominus dedit & Dominus abſtulit, to what porpoſe? Sit nomen Domini benedictum, can never lack his place, it becometh always in ſeaſon; or elſe as great a Divine as ye are, I would ſay, it were not the beſt placed here, except you wiſt better, you had rather loſe all than any part of your will. I pray you teach Patience better in your Deeds, or elſe ſpeak as little of it as ye can. My Lord, you might have provoked another in my place, that would have uſed leſs patience with you, finding ſo little in you; but I can take your Writings, and this Heat of your Stomach, even as well as I can, I truſt, beware of Flatterers. As for the Abbot of Redding, and his Monk, if I find them as ye ſay they are, I will order them as I ſhall think good. Ye ſhall do well to do your Duty; if you ſo do, ye have no cauſe to miſtruſt my Friendſhip; if ye do not, I muſt tell it you, and that ſomewhat after the plaineſt ſort, To take a Cauſe out of your hands into mine mine, I do but mine Office, you meddle further than your Office will bear you, thus roughly to handle me for using of mine. If ye do so no more, I let pass all that is past, and offer you such kindness as ye shall lawfully desire at my hands. Thus fare you well

EJus qui immobilis permanens sua providentia ordine mirabili dat cuncta moveri, disponente clementia, vices, licet immeriti gerentes in terris, & in sede justitiæ constituti, juxta prophetæ quoque Hieremiæ vaticinium dicentis: Ecce te constitui super gentes & Regna, ut evellas & destruas ædifices, plantes, præcipuum super omnes Reges Universæ Terræ cunctosq; populos obtinentes principatum: ac illum qui pius & misericors est, & vindictam ei qui illam prævenit paratam temperat, nec quos impœnitentes videt severa ultione castigat, quin prius comminetur, in assidue autem peccantes & in peccatis perseverantes, cum excessus misericordiæ fines prætereunt, ut saltem metu pœnæ ad cor reverti cogantur, justitiæ vires exercet, imitantes; ex incumbenti nobis Apostolicæ sollicitudinis studio per-urgemur, ut cunctarum personarum nostræ curæ cœlitus commissarum salubri statui solertius intendamus, ac erroribus & scandalis, quæ Hostis antiqui versutia imminere conspicimus, propensius obviemus, excessusq; & enormia ac scandalosa crimina congrua severitate coerceamus, & juxta Apostolum inobedientiam ovium promptius ulciscendo, illorum perpetratores debita correctione fic compescamus, quod eos Dei iram provocasse pœniteat, & ex hoc aliis exemplum cautelæ salutaris accedat.

3. Cum autem debitis diligentiis deſuper factis clamorem ad nos, ut præfertur, delatum, verum eſſe, ſimulque, quod dolenter referimus, dictum Henricum Regem ita in profundum malorum deſcendiſſe, ut de ejus reſipiſcentia nulla penitus videatur ſpes haberi poſſe, reperimus: Nos attendentes vetere lege, crimen adulterii notatum lapidari mandatum, ac auctores Schiſmatis halitu terræ abſorptos, eorumq; ſequaces cœleſti igne igne conſumptos, Elymamque Magum viis Domini reſiſtentem per Apoſtolum æterna ſeveritate damnatum fuiſſe, volenteſq; ne in diſtricto examine ipſius Henrici Regis & ſubditorum ſuorum, quos ſecum in perditionem trahere videmus, animarum ratio à nobis expoſcatur, quantum nobis ex alto conceditur, providere contra Henricum Regem, ejuſque complices, fautores, adhærentes, & ſequaces, & in præmiſſis quomodolibet culpabiles, contra quod ex eo quod exceſſus, & delicta prædicta adeo manifeſta ſunt & notoria, ut nulla poſſint tergiverſatione celari, abſque ulteriori mora ad executionem procedere poſſemus, benignius agendo, decrevimus infraſcripto modo procedere.

4. Habita itaque ſuper his cum venerabilibus fratribus noſtris S. R. E. Cardinalibus deliberatione matura, & de illorum conſilio & aſſenſu, præfatum Henricum Regem, ejuſque complices, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores & ſequaces, ac quoſcunque alios in præmiſſis, ceu eorum aliquo quoquo modo culpabiles, tam Laicos quam Clericos, etiam regulares cujuſcunque dignitatis, ſtatus, gradus, ordinis, conditionis, præeminentiæ, & excellentiæ exiſtant, (quorum nomina & cognomina, perinde ac ſi præſentibus inſererentur, pro ſufficienter expreſſis haberi volumus) per viſcera miſericordiæ Dei noſtri hortamur, & requirimus in Domino, quatenus Henricus Rex à prædictis erroribus prorſus abſtineat, & conſtitutiones, ſeu leges prædictas, ſicut de facto eas fecit, revocet, caſſet, & annullet, & coactione ſubditorum ſuorum ad eas ſervandas, necnon carceratione, captura, & punitione illorum, qui ipſis conſtitutionibus ſeu legibus adhærere, aut eas ſervare noluerint, & ab aliis erroribus prædictis penitus, & omnino abſtineat, & ſi quos præmiſſorum occaſione captivos habeat, relaxet.

5. Complices vero, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces dicti Henrici Regis in præmiſſis, & circa ea ipſi Henrico Regi ſuper his de cætero non adſiſtant, nec adhæreant, vel faveant, nec ei conſilium, auxilium, vel favorem, deſuper præſtent.

6. Aliàs ſi Henricus Rex, ac fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces, hortationibus & requiſitionibus hujuſmodi non annuerint cum effectu, Henricum Regem, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores & ſequaces, ac alios culpabiles prædictos, auctoritate Apoſtolica, ac ex certa noſtra ſcientia, & de Apoſtolicæ poteſtatis plenitudine, tenore præſentium, in virtute ſanctæ obedientiæ, ac ſub majoris Excommunicationis lata ſententia, à qua etiam prætextu cujuſcunque privilegii, vel facultatis, etiam in forma confeſſionalis, cum quibuſcunque efficaciſſimis clauſulis nobis & Sedè prædicta quomodolibet conceſſis, & etiam iteratis vicibus innovatis, ab alio quam à Romano Pontifice, præterquam in mortis Articulo conſtituti, ita tamen, quod ſi aliquem abſolvi contingat, qui poſtmodum convaluerit, niſi poſt convaleſcentiam, monitioni & mandatis noſtris hujuſmodi paruerit cum effectu, in eandem Excommunicationis ſententiam reincidant, abſolvi non poſſint.

7. Necnon rebellionis, & quoad Henricum Regem, etiam perditionis Regni, & Dominiorum prædictorum, & tam quoad eum, quam quoad alios monitos ſupradictos ſupra & infraſcriptis pœnis, quas ſi dictis monitioni & mandatis, ut præfertur, non paruerint, eos & eorum ſingulos, ipſo facto reſpective incurrere volumus, per præſentes monemus; eiſque & eorum cuilibet diſtricte præcipiendo mandamus, quatenus Henricus Rex per ſe, vel procuratorem legitimum & ſufficienti mandato ſuffultum, ſultum, infra nonaginta, complices vero, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces, ac alii in præmiſſis quomodolibet culpabiles ſupradicti, Seculares & Eccleſiaſtici etiam regulares, perſonaliter infra ſexaginta dies compareant coram nobis, ad ſe ſuper præmiſſis legitime excuſandum & defendendum; alias videndum & audiendum contra eos & eorum ſingulos, etiam nominatim, quos ſic monemus, quatenus expediat, ad omnes & ſingulos, actus, etiam ſententiam definitivam, declaratoriam, condemnatoriam, & privatoriam, ac mandatum executivum procedi. Quod ſi Henricus Rex, & alii moniti prædicti intra dictos terminos eis ut præfertur, reſpective præfixos non comparuerint, & prædictam Excommunicationis ſententiam per tres dies, poſt lapſum dictorum terminorum animo, quod abſit, ſuſtinuerint indurato, cenſuras ipſas aggravamus, & ſucceſſive reaggravamus, Henricumq; ipſum, privationis Regni & Dominiorum prædictorum, & tam eum quam alios monitos prædictos, & eorum ſingulos, omnes & ſingulas alias pœnas prædictas incurriſſe, ab omnibuſq; Chriſti fidelibus, cum eorum bonis perpetuo diffidatos eſſe. Et ſi interim ab humanis decedat, Eccleſiaſtica debere carere ſepultura, auctoritate & poteſtatis plenitudine prædictis decernimus, & declaramus, eoſque anathematis, maledictionis, & damnationis æternæ mucrone percutimus.

8. Necnon quæ præfatus Henricus Rex quomodolibet, & ex quavis cauſa tenet, habet, aut poſſidet, Quamdiu Henricus Rex, & alii moniti prædicti, & eorum ſinguli in aliis per dictum Henricum Regem non tentis, habitis, aut poſſeſſis permanſerint, & triduo poſt eorum inde receſſum, & alia quæcunq; ad quæ Henricum Regem, & alios monitos prædictos, poſt lapſum dictorum terminorum declinare contigerit, Dominia, civitates, terras, caſtra, villas, oppida, Metropolitanaſque, & alias Cathedrales, cæteraſq; inferiores Eccleſias, necnon Monaſteria, Prioratus, Domos, Conventus, & loca religioſa, vel pia cujuſcunque, etiam S. Benedict. Cluniacen. Ciſtercien. Præmonſtraten. ac Prædicatorum, Minorum, Eremitarum, S. Auguſtini, Carmelitarum, & aliorum Ordinum, ac Congregationum, & Militiarum quarumcunque in ipſis Dominiis, Civitatibus, terris, caſtris, villis, oppidis, & locis exiſtentia, Eccleſiaſtico ſupponimus Interdicto, ita ut illo durante in iis etiam prætextu cujuſcunque Apoſtolici indulti, Eccleſiis, Monaſteriis, Prioratibus, Domibus, Conventibus, locis, ordinibus, aut perſonis, etiam quacunq; dignitate fulgentibus conceſſi, præterquam in caſibus à jure permiſſis, ac etiam in illis alias quam clauſis januis, & Excommunicatis & interdictis excluſis, nequeant Miſſæ, aut alia divina officia celebrari.

9. Et Henrici Regis, complicumque, fautorum, adhærentium, conſultorum, ſequacium, & culpabilium prædictorum filii, pœnarum, ut hic in hoc caſu par eſt, participes ſint, omnes & ſingulos ejuſdem Henrici Regis ex dicta Anna, ac ſingulorum aliorum prædictorum filios natos, & naſcituros, alioſque deſcendentes, uſque in eum gradum, ad quem jura pœnas in caſibus hujuſmodi extendunt (nemine excepto, nullaq; minoris ætatis, aut ſexus, vel ignorantiæ, vel alterius cujuſvis cauſæ habita ratione) dignitatibus, & honoribus in quibus quomodolibet conſtituti exiſtunt, ſeu quibus gaudent, utuntur, potiuntur, aut muniti ſunt, necnon privilegiis, conceſſionibus, gratiis, indulgentiis, immunitatibus, remiſſionibus, libertatibus, & indultis, ac dominiis, civitatibus, caſtris, terris, villis, oppidis, & locis, etiam Commendatis, vel in Gubernium conceſſis, & quæ in feudum, emphyteuſim, vel alias à Romanis, vel aliis Eccleſiis, Monaſteriis, & locis Eccleſiaſticis, ac ſecularibus Principibus, Dominiis, Potentatibus, etiam Regibus & Imperatoribus, aut aliis privatis, vel publicis perſonis quomodolibet habent, tenent, aut poſſident, cæteriſq; omnibus bonis, mobilibus & immobilibus, juribus & actionibus, eis quomodolibet competentibus privatos, dictaq; bona feudalia, vel emphyteutica, & alia quæcunq; ab aliis quomodolibet obtenta, ad directos dominos, ita ut de illis libere diſponere poſſint, reſpective devoluta, & eos qui Eccleſiaſtici fuerint, etiamſi religioſi exiſtant, Eccleſiis etiam Cathedralibus, & Metropolitanis, necnon Monaſteriis & Prioratibus, præpoſituris, præpoſitatibus, dignitatibus, perſonatibus, Officiis, Canonicatibus & Præbendis, aliiſq; beneficiis Eccleſiaſticis per eos quomodolibet obtentis privatos, & ad illa ac alia in poſterum obtinenda inhabiles eſſe, ſimiliter decernimus & declaramus; eoſq; ſic reſpective privatos ad illa, & alia quæcunq; ſimilia, ac dignitates, honores, adminiſtrationes, & officia, jura, ac feuda in poſterum obtinenda, auctoritate & ſcientia, ac plenitudine ſimilibus inhabilitamus.

10. Ipſiuſq; Henrici Regis, ac Regni omniumq; aliorum dominiorum, civitatum, terrarum, caſtrorum, villarum, fortalitiorum, arcium, oppidorum, & locorum ſuorum, etiam de facto obtentorum Magiſtratus, judices, Caſtellanos, Cuſtodes & Officiales quoſcunque, necnon Communitates, Univerſitates, Collegia, Feudatarios, vaſſallos, ſubditos, cives, incolas, & habitatores etiam forenſes, dicto Regi de facto obedientes, tam ſæculares, quam ſi qui rationis alicujus temporalitatis ipſum Henricum Regem in ſuperiorem recognoſcant, etiam Eccleſiaſticos, à præfato rege, ſeu ejus complicibus, fautoribus, adhærentibus, conſultoribus, & ſequacibus ſupradictis deputatis, à juramento fidelitatis, jure vaſſallitico, & omni erga Regem, & alios prædictos ſubjectione abſolvimus, ac penitus liberamus. His nihilominus ſub Excommunicationis pœna mandantes, ut ab ejuſdem Henrici Regis, ſuorumq; officialium, judicum, & magiſtratuum quorumcunq; obedientia penitus & omnino recedant, nec illos in ſuperiores recognoſcant, neque illorum mandatis optemperent.

11. Et ut alii eorum exemplo perterriti diſcant ab hujuſmodi exceſſibus abſtinere, eiſdem auctoritate, ſcientia, & plenitudine, volumus, ac decernimus, quod Henricus Rex & complices, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, ſequaces, & alii in præmiſſis culpabiles, poſtquam alias pœnis prædictas, ut præfertur, reſpective incurrerint, necnon præfati deſcendentes, ex tunc infames exiſtant, & ad teſtimonium non admittantur, teſtamenta, & codicillos, aut alias diſpoſitiones, etiam inter vivos concedere, & facere non poſſint, & ad alicujus ſucceſſionem ex teſtamento, vel ab inteſtato, necnon ad jurisdictionem, ſeu judicandi poteſtatem, & ad Notoriatus Officium, omneſq; actus ligitimos quoſcunq;, ita ut eorum proceſſus, ſive inſtrumenta atq; alii actus quicunque, nullius ſint roboris vel momenti, inhabiles exiſtant, & nulli ipſis, ſed ipſi aliis ſuper quocunque debito & negotio, tam civili, quam criminali, de jure reſpondere teneantur.

12. Et nihilominus omnes, & ſingulos Chriſti fideles, ſub Excommunicationis, & aliis infraſcriptis pœnis, monemus, ut monitos, Excommunicatos, aggravatos, interdictos, privatos, maledictos, & damnatos prædictos evitent, & quantum in eis eſt, & ab aliis evitari faciant, faciant, nec cum eiſdem, ſeu præfati Regis Civitatum, Dominiorum, Terrarum, Caſtrorum, Comitatuum, Villarum, Fortalitiorum, Oppidorum, & locorum prædictorum civibus, incolis, vel habitatoribus aut ſubditis & vaſſallis, emendo, vendendo, permutando, aut quamcunque mercaturam, ſeu negotium exercendo, commercium, ſeu aliquam converſationem, ſeu communionem habeant: aut vinum, granum, ſal, ſeu alia victualia, arma, pannos, merces vel quaſvis alias mercantias, vel res per mare in eorum navibus, triremibus, aut aliis navigiis, ſive per terram cum mulis, vel aliis animalibus, deferre aut conducere, ſeu deferri aut conduci facere, vel delata per illos recipere, publice vel occulte, aut talia facientibus auxilium, conſilium, favorem publice vel occulte, directe vel indirecte, quovis quæſito colore, per ſe, vel alium, ſeu alios quoquo modo præſtare præſumant. Quod ſi fecerint, ultra Excommunicationis prædictæ, etiam nullitatis contractuum quos inirent, necnon perditionis mercium, victualium, & bonorum omnium delatorum, quæ capientium fiant, pœnas ſimiliter eo ipſo incurrant.

13. Cæterum quia convenire non videtur, ut cum his qui Eccleſiam contemnunt, dum præſertim ex eorum pertinacia ſpes corrigibilitatis non habetur, hi qui divinis obſequiis vacant, converſentur, quod etiam illos tuto facere non poſſe dubitandum eſt, omnium & ſingularum Metropolitanarum & aliarum Cathedralium, cæterarumq; inferiorum Eccleſiarum & Monaſteriorum, domorum & locorum Religioſorum, & piorum quorumcumque, etiam S. Auguſtini, S. Benedicti, Cluniacen. Ciſtercien. Præmonſtraten. ac Prædicatorum, Minorum, Carmelitarum, aliorumque quorumcumq; ordinum, & Militiarum, etiam Hoſpitalis Hieroſolymitani, Prælatis, Abbatibus, Prioribus, Præceptoribus, Præpoſitis, Miniſtris, Cuſtodibus, Guardianis, Conventibus, Monachis & Canonicis, necnon Parochialium Eccleſiarum Rectoribus, aliiſque quibuſcunq; perſonis Eccleſiaſticis in Regno & Dominiis prædictis commorantibus, ſub Excommunicationis ac privationis Adminiſtrationum & regiminum Monaſteriorum, dignitatum, perſonatuum, adminiſtrationum, ac officiorum, Canonicatuumque, & Præbendarum, Parochialium Eccleſiarum, & aliorum beneficiorum Eccleſiaſticorum quorumcumq; quomodolibet qualificatorum, per eos quomodolibet obtentorum, pœnis mandamus, quatenus infra quinq; dies, poſt omnes & ſingulos terminos prædictos elapſos, de ipſis Regno, & Dominiis, dimiſſis tamen aliquibus Preſbyteris in Eccleſiis quarum curam habuerint, pro adminiſtrando baptiſmate parvulis, & in pœnitentia decedentibus, ac aliis Sacramentis Eccleſiaſticis, quæ tempore Interdicti miniſtrari permittuntur, exeant & diſcedant, neque ad Regnum, & Dominia prædicta revertantur; donec moniti, & Excommunicati, aggravati, reaggravati, privati, maledicti, & damnati prædictis monitionibus, & mandatis noſtris hujuſmodi obtemperaverint, meruerint à cenſuris hujuſmodi abſolutionis beneficium obtinere, ſeu Interdictum in Regno, & Dominiis prædictis, fuerit ſublatum.

14. Præterea ſi præmiſſis non obſtantibus, Henricus Rex, Complices, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces prædicti in eorum pertinacia perſeveraverint, nec conſcientiæ ſtimulus eos ad cor reduxerit, in eorum forte potentia, & armis confidentes, omnes & ſingulos Duces, Marchiones, Comites, & alios quoſcunq; tam Seculares, quam Eccleſiaſticos etiam forenſes, de facto dicto Henrico Regi obedientes, ſub ejuſdem Excommunicationis, ac perditionis bonorum ſuorum (quæ, ut infra dicitur, ſimiliter capientium fiant) pœnis, requirimus & monemus, quatenus omni mora, & excuſatione poſtpoſita, eos, & eorum ſingulos, ac ipſorum milites & ſtipendiarios, tam equeſtres quam pedeſtres, alioſque quoſcumque, qui eis cum armis faverint, de Regno & Dominis prædictis, etiam vi armorum, ſi opus fuerit, expellant: ac quod Henricus Rex, & ejus complices, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces, mandatis noſtris non obtemperantes prædicti, de Civitatibus, Terris, Caſtris, Villis, Oppidis, Fortalitiis, aut aliis locis Regni & Dominii prædictorum ſe non intromittant, procurent: eis ſub omnibus & ſingulis pœnis prædictis inhibentes, ne in favorem Henrici, ejuſque complicum, fautorum, adhærentium, conſultorum, & ſequacium aliorumq; monitorum prædictorum, mandatis noſtris non obtemperantium, arma cujuſlibet generis offenſiva, vel defenſiva, Machinas quoq; bellicas, ſeu tormenta (artellarias nuncupata) ſumant aut teneant, ſeu illis utantur, aut armatos aliquos præter conſuetam familiam parent, aut ab Henrico Rege, complicibus, fautoribus, adhærentibus, conſultoribus, & ſequacibus, vel aliis in Regis ipſius favorem paratos, quomodolibet, quavis occaſione vel cauſa, per ſe vel alium ſeu alios, publice vel occulte, directe vel indirecte teneant, vel receptent, aut dicto Henrico Regi, ſeu illius complicibus, fautoribus, adhærentibus, conſultoribus, & ſequacibus prædictis, conſilium, auxilium, vel quomodolibet ex quavis cauſa, vel quovis quæſito colore ſive ingenio, publice vel occulte, directe vel indirecte, tacite vel expreſſe, per ſe vel alium ſeu alios præmiſſis, vel aliquo præmiſſorum præſtent, ſeu præſtari faciant quoquomodo.

15. Præterea ad dictum Henricum Regem facilius ad ſanitatem, & præfatæ Sedis obedientiam reducendum, omnes & ſingulos Chriſtianos Principes, quacunq; etiam Imperiali & Regali dignitate fulgentes, per viſcera miſericordiæ Dei noſtri (cujus cauſa agitur) hortamur & in Domino requirimus, eis nihilominus, qui Imperatore & Rege inferiores fuerint, quos propter excellentiam dignitatis à cenſuris excipimus, ſub Excommunicationis pœna mandantes, ne Henrico Regi ejuſq; complicibus, fautoribus, adhærentibus, conſultoribus, & ſequacibus, vel eorum alicui, per ſe vel alium ſeu alios, publice vel occulte, directe vel indirecte, tacite vel expreſſe, etiam ſub prætextu confœderationum aut obligationum quocumque etiam juramento, aut quavis alia firmitate roboratarum, & ſæpius geminatarum, à quibus quidem obligationibus & juramentis omnibus, nos eos & eorum ſingulos eiſdem auctoritate & ſcientia ac plenitudine per præſentes abſolvimus, ipſaſque confœderationes & obligationes tam factas, quam in poſterum faciendas, quas tamen (in quantum Henricus Rex & complices, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces prædicti circa præmiſſa, vel eorum aliquod ſe directe vel indirecte juvare poſſent) ſub eadem pœna fieri prohibemus, nullius roboris vel momenti, nullaſque, irritas, caſſas, inanes, ac pro infectis habendas fore decernimus & declaramus, conſilium, auxilium, vel favorem quomodolibet præſtent, quinimo ſi qui illis, aut eorum alicui ad præſens quomodolibet aſſiſtant, ab ipſis omnino & cum affectu recedant. Quod ſi non fecerint poſtquam præſentes publicatæ & executioni demandatæ fuerint, & dicti termini lapſi fuerint, omnes & ſingulas civitates, terras, oppida, caſtra, villas, & alia loca eis ſubjecta, ſimili Eccleſiaſtico Interdicto ſupponimus, volentes ipſum Interdictum donec ipſi Principes à Conſilio, auxilio, & favore Henrico Regi & complicibus, fautoribus, adhærentibus, conſultoribus & ſequacibus prædictis præſtando deſtiterint, perdurare.

16. Inſuper tam Principes prædictos, quam quoſcumq; alios, etiam ad ſtipendia quorumcumq; Chriſti fidelium militantes, & alias quaſcumq; perſonas, tam per mare, quam per terras, armigeros habentes, ſimiliter hortamur & requirimus, & nihilominus eis in virtute ſanctæ obedientiæ mandantes, quatenus contra Henricum Regem, complices, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces prædictos, dum in erroribus prædictis, ac adverſus Sedem prædictam, rebellione permanſerint, armis inſurgant, eoſq; & eorum ſingulos perſequantur, ac ad unitatem Eccleſiæ, & obedientiam dictæ Sedis redire cogant & compellant; & tam eos quam ipſorum ſubditos & vaſſallos, ac civitatum, terrarum, caſtrorum, oppidorum, villarum, & locorum ſuorum incolas, & habitatores, alioſque omnes & ſingulas perſonas ſupradictis mandatis noſtris, ut præfertur, non obtemperantes, & quæ præfatum Henricum Regem, poſtquam cenſuras, & pœnas prædictas incurrerit, in Dominum quomodolibet, etiam de facto recognoverint, vel ei quovis modo obtemperare præſumpſerint, aut qui eum, ac complices, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, ſequaces ac alios non obtemperantes prædictos, ex Regno & Dominiis prædictis, ut præfertur, expellere noluerint, ubicunq; eos invenerint, eorumque bona, mobilia & immobilia, mercantias, pecunias, navigia, credita, res, & animalia, etiam extra territorium dicti Henrici Regis ubilibet conſiſtentia, capiant.

17. Nos enim eis bona, mercantias, pecunias, navigia, res, & animalia prædicta ſic capta, in proprios eorum uſus convertendi, eiſdem auctoritate, ſcientia, & poteſtatis plenitudine, plenariam licentiam, facultatem & auctoritatem concedimus, illa omnia ad eoſdem capientes plenarie pertinere, & ſpectare, & perſonas ex Regno & Dominiis prædictis originem trahentes, ſeu in illis domicilium habentes, aut quomodolibet habitantes, mandatis noſtris prædictis non obtemperantes, ubicunq; eos capi contigerit, capientium ſervos fieri decernentes: præſenteſque literas quoad hoc ad omnes alios cujuſcunq; dignitatis, gradus, ſtatus, ordinis, vel conditionis fuerint, qui ipſi Henrico Regi, vel ejus complicibus, fautoribus, adhærentibus, conſultoribus, & ſequacibus, aut aliis monitionibus, & mandatis noſtris hujuſmodi quoad commercium non obtemperantibus, vel eorum alicui victualia, arma, vel pecunias ſubminiſtrare, aut cum eis commercium habere, ſen auxilium, conſilium, vel favorem, per ſe vel alium, ſeu alios, publice vel occulte, directe vel indirecte, quovis modo contra tenorem præſentium præſtare præſumſerint, extendentes.

18. Et ut præmiſſa facilius iis quos concernunt innoteſcant, univerſis & ſingulis Patriarchis, Archiepiſcopis, Epiſcopis, & Patriarchalium Metropolitan, & aliarum Cathedralium, & Collegiatarum Eccleſiarum Prælatis, Capitulis, aliiſq; perſonis Eccleſiaſticis, Sæcularibus ac quorumvis ordinum Regularibus, necnon omnibus & ſingulis, etiam mendicantium ordinum Profeſſoribus, exemptis & non exemptis, ubilibet conſtitutis, per eaſdem præſentes ſub Excommunicationis & privationis Eccleſiarum, Monaſteriorum, ac aliorum Beneficiorum Eccleſiaſticorum, graduum quoque & officiorum, necnon privilegiorum, & indultorum quorumcunq; etiam à Sede prædicta quomodolibet emanatorum pœnis ipſo facto incurrendis, præcipimus & mandamus, quatenus ipſi ac eorum ſinguli, ſi, & poſtquam vigore præſentium deſuper requiſiti fuerint, infra tres dies immediate ſequentes, præfatum Henricum Regem, omneſq; alios alios & ſingulos, qui ſupradictas cenſuras & pœnas incurrerint, in eorum Eccleſiis, Dominicis & aliis feſtivis diebus, dum major inibi populi multitudo ad divina convenerit, cum Crucis vexillo, pulſatis campanis, & accenſis, ac demum extinctis, & in terram projectis, & conculcatis candelis, & aliis in ſimilibus ſervari ſolitis cæremoniis ſervatis, Excommunicatos publice nuncient, & ab aliis nuntiari, ac ab omnibus arctius evitari faciant & mandent, necnon ſub ſupradictis cenſuris & pœnis, præſentes literas, vel earum tranſumptum, ſub forma infraſcripta confectum, infra terminum trium dierum, poſtquam, ut præfertur, requiſiti fuerint, in Eccleſiis, Monaſteriis, Conventibus, & aliis eorum locis, publicari & affigi faciant.

19. Volentes, omnes & ſingulos cujuſcunq; ſtatus, gradus, conditionis, præeminentiæ, dignitatis, aut excellentiæ fuerint, qui quo minus præſentes literæ vel earum tranſumpta, copiæ, ſeu exemplaria, in ſuis civitatibus, terris, caſtris, oppidis, villis, & locis legi & affigi, ac publicari poſſint, per ſe, vel alium, ſeu alios, publice vel occulte, directe vel indirecte impediverint, eaſdem cenſuras & pœnas, ipſo facto incurrere. Et cum fraus & dolus nemini debeant patrocinari, ne quiſquam ex his, qui alicui regimini & adminiſtrationi deputati ſunt, infra tempus ſui regiminis ſeu adminiſtrationis prædictas ſententias, cenſuras & pœnas ſuſtineat, quaſi poſt dictum tempus ſententiis, cenſuris & pœnis prædictis amplius ligatus non exiſtat, quemcunque qui dum in regimine, & adminiſtratione exiſtens, monitioni & mandato noſtris, quoad præmiſſa vel aliquid eorum obtemperare noluerit, etiam depoſito regimine, & adminiſtratione hujuſmodi, niſi paruerit, eiſdem cenſuris & pœnis ſubjacere decernimus.

20. Et ne Henricus Rex ejuſq; complices, & fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces, aliiq; quos præmiſſa concernunt, ignorantiam earundem præſentium literarum, & in eis contentorum prætendere valeant, literas ipſas (in quibus omnes & ſingulos, tam juris, quam facti, etiam ſolemnitatum, & proceſſuum, citationumq; omiſſarum defectus, etiam ſi tales ſint, de quibus ſpecialis, & expreſſa mentio facienda eſſet, propter notorietatem facti, auctoritate, ſcientia, & poteſtatis plenitudine, ſimilibus, ſupplemus) in Baſilicæ Principis Apoſtolorum, & Cancellariæ Apoſtolicæ de urbe, & in partibus in Collegiatæ B. Mariæ Burgen. Tornacen. & Parochialis de Dunikerke oppidorum Morinenſis diœceſis, Eccleſiarum valvis affigi, & publicari mandamus: Decernentes quod earundem literarum publicatio ſic facta, Henricum Regem, ejuſque complices, fautores, adhærentes, conſultores, & ſequaces, omneſq; alios, & ſingulos quos literæ ipſæ quomodolibet concernunt, perinde eos arctent, acſi literæ ipſæ eis perſonaliter lectæ, & intimatæ fuiſſent, cum non ſit veriſimile, quod ea, quæ tam patenter fiunt, debeant apud eos incognita remanere.

21. Cæterum quia difficile foret præſentes literas ad ſingula quæque loca, ad quæ neceſſarium eſſet deferri, ſingula volumus & dicta auctoritate decernimus, quod earum tranſumptis manu publici Notarii confectis, vel in alma urbe impreſſis, ac ſigillo alicujus perſonæ in dignitate Eccleſiaſtica conſtitutæ munitis, ubiq; eadem fides adhibeatur, quæ originalibus adhiberetur, ſi eſſent exhibitæ vel oſtenſæ.

22. Nulli ergo omnino hominum liceat hanc paginam noſtræ monitionis, aggravationis, reaggravationis, declarationis, percuſſionis, ſuppoſitionis, inhabilitationis, abſolutionis, liberationis, requiſitionis, inhibitionis,

X. The judgement of ſome Biſhops concerning the King's Supremacy. An Original.

THe words of St. John in his 20*th* Chap. Sicut miſit me Pater, & ego mitto vos, &c. hath no reſpect to a King's or a Princes Power, but only to ſhew how that the Miniſters of the Word of God, choſen and ſent for that intent, are the Meſſengers of Chriſt, to teach the Truth of his Goſpel, and to looſe and bind ſin, &c. as Chriſt was the Meſſenger of his Father. The words alſo of St. Paul, in the 20*th* Chap. of the Acts; Attendite vobis & univerſo gregi, in qua vos Spiritus Sanctus poſuit Epiſcopos regere Eccleſiam Dei, were ſpoken to the Biſhops and Prieſts, to be diligent Paſtors of the People, both to teach them diligently, and alſo to be circumſpect that falſe Preachers ſhould not ſeduce the People, as followeth immediately after in the ſame place. Other places of Scripture declear the highneſs and excellency of Chriſtian Princes Authority and Power; the which of a truth is moſt high, for he hath power and charge generally over all, as well Biſhops, and Prieſt, as other. The Biſhops and Prieſts have charge of Souls within their own Cures, power to miniſter Sacraments, and to teach the Word of God; to the which Word of God Chriſtian Princes knowledge themſelves ſubject; and in caſe the Biſhops be negligent, it is the Chriſtian Princes Office to ſee them do their duty.

XI. Injunctions to the Clergy made by Cromwell.

Regiſt. Cranmer. IN the Name of God, Amen. By the Authority and Commiſſion of the excellent Prince Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England and of France, Defenſor of the Faith; Lord of Ireland; and in Earth Supream Head, under Chriſt, of the Church of England. I Thomas Lord Cromwel, Privy-Seal, and Vice-gerent to the King's ſaid Highneſs, for all his Juriſdiction Eccleſiaſtical within this Realm, do, for the advancement of the true honour of Almighty God, encreaſe of Vertue, and diſcharge of the King's Majeſty, give and exhibit unto you theſe Injunctions following, to be kept, obſerved, and fulfilled, upon the pains hereafter declared.

Firſt; That ye ſhall truly obſerve and keep all and ſingular the King's Highneſs Injunctions, given unto you heretofore in my Name, by his Grace's Authority; not only upon the pains therein expreſſed, but alſo in your default after this ſecond monition continued, upon further puniſhment to be ſtraitly extended towards you by the King's Highneſs Arbitriment, or his Vice-gerent aforeſaid.

Item; That ye ſhall provide on this ſide the Feaſt of next coming, one Book of the whole Bible of the largeſt Volume in Engliſh, and the ſame ſet up in ſome convenient place within the ſaid Church that ye have Cure of, whereas your Pariſhioners may moſt commodiouſly reſort to the ſame and read it; the charge of which Book ſhall be ratably born between you the Parſon and the Pariſhioners aforeſaid, that is to ſay, the one half by you, and the other half by them.

Item; That you ſhall diſcourage no Man privily or apertly from the reading or hearing of the ſaid Bible, but ſhall expreſly provoke, ſtir, and exhort every Perſon to read the ſame, as that which is the very lively Word of God, that every Chriſtian Man is bound to embrace, believe, and follow, if he look to be ſaved; admoniſhing them nevertheleſs to avoid all contention, altercation therein, and to uſe an honeſt ſobriety in the inquiſition of the true ſence of the ſame, and refer the explication of the obſcure places to Men of higher judgement in Scripture.

Item; That ye ſhall every Sunday and Holy-day through the Year, openly and plainly recite to your Pariſhioners, twice or thrice together, or oftner, if need require, one particle or ſentence of the Pater Noſter, or Creed, in Engliſh, to the intent they may learn the ſame by Heart; And ſo from day to day, to give them one little leſſon or ſentence of the ſame, till they have learned the whole Pater Noſter and Creed, in Engliſh, by rote. And as they be taught every ſentence of the ſame by rote, ye ſhall expound and declare the underſtanding of the ſame unto them, exhorting all Parents and Houſholders to teach their Children and Servants the ſame, as they are bound in Conſcience to do. And that done, ye ſhall declare unto them the Ten Commandments, one by one one, every Sunday and Holy-day, till they be likewiſe perfect in the ſame.

Item; That ye ſhall in Confeſſions every Lent examine every Perſon that cometh to Confeſſion unto you, whether they can recite the Articles of our Faith, and the Pater Noſter in Engliſh, and hear them ſay the ſame particularly; wherein if they be not perfect, ye ſhall declare to the ſame, That every Chriſtian Perſon ought to know the ſame before they ſhould receive the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar; and moniſh them to learn the ſame more perfectly by the next year following, or elſe, like-as they ought not to preſume to come to God's Board without perfect knowledge of the ſame, and if they do, it is to the great peril of their ſouls; ſo ye ſhall declare unto them, that ye look for other Injunctions from the King's Highneſs by that time, to ſtay and repel all ſuch from God's Board as ſhall be found ignorant in the Premiſſes, whereof ye do thus admoniſh them, to the intent they ſhould both eſchew the peril of their Souls, and alſo the worldly rebuke that they might incur after by the ſame.

Item; That ye ſhall make, or cauſe to be made, in the ſaid Church, and every other Cure ye have, one Sermon every quarter of the year at leaſt, wherein ye ſhall purely and ſincerely declare the very Goſpel of Chriſt, and in the ſame exhort your Hearers to the Works of Charity, Mercy, and Faith, eſpecially preſcribed and commanded in Scripture, and not to repoſe their truſt or affiance in any other Works deviſed by Mens fantaſies beſides Scripture: as in wandring to Pilgrimages, offering of Money, Candles, or Tapers, Images, or Reliques; or kiſſing or licking the ſame over, ſaying over a number of Beads, not underſtanded or minded on, or in ſuch-lick ſuperſtition; for the doing whereof, ye not only have no promiſe of reward in Scripture, but contrariwiſe great threats and maledictions of God, as things tending to Idolatry and Superſtition, which of all other Offences God Almighty doth moſt deteſt and abhor, for that the ſame diminiſheth moſt his honour and glory.

Item; That ſuch feigned Images as ye know in any of your Cures to be ſo abuſed with Pilgrimages or Offerings of any thing made thereunto, ye ſhall, for avoiding of that moſt deteſtable offence of Idolatry, forthwith take down, and without delay; and ſhall ſuffer from henceforth no Candles, Tapers, or Images of Wax to be ſet afore any Image or Picture, but only the Light that commonly goeth a-croſs the Church by the Root-loft, the Light before the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Light about the Sepulchre; which for the adorning of the Church, and Divine Service, ye ſhall ſuffer to remain: ſtill admoniſhing your Pariſhioners, that Images ſerve for none other purpoſe, but as to be Books of unlearned Men, that ken no Letters, whereby they might be otherwiſe admoniſhed of the lives and converſation of them that the ſaid Images do repreſent; which Images if they abuſe, for any other intent than for ſuch remembrances, they commit Idolatry in the ſame, to the great danger of their Souls: And therefore the King's Highneſs graciouſly tendring the weal of his Subjects Souls, hath in part already, and more will hereafter, travail for the abolishing of such Images as might be an occasion of so great an offence to God, and so great a danger to the Souls of his loving Subjects.

Item; That in all such Benefices, or Cures, as ye have, whereupon ye be not your self Resident, ye shall appoint such Curates in your stead, as can both by their ability, and also promptly execute these Injunctions, and do their duty; otherwise that ye are bounden in every behalf accordingly, and may profit them, no less with good Examples of living, than with declaration of the Word of God, or else their lack and defaults shall be imputed unto you, who shall straitly answer for the same if they do otherwise.

Item; That ye shall admit no Man to preach within any your Benefices or Cures, but such as shall appear unto you to be sufficiently licensed thereunto by the King's Highness, or his Grace's Authority, by the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, or the Bishop of this Diocess; and such as shall be so licensed, ye shall gladly receive to declare the Word of God, without any resistance or contradiction.

Item; If ye have heretofore declared to your Parishioners any thing to the extolling or setting forth of Pilgrimages, feigned Reliques, or Images, or any such superstition, that you shall now openly afore the same recant and reprove the same, shewing them (as the truth is) that ye did the same upon no ground of Scripture, but as one led and seduced by a common Error and Abuse crept into the Church, through the sufferance and avarice of such as felt profit by the same.

Item; If ye do or shall know any Man within your Parish, or elsewhere, that is a Letter of the Word of God to be read in English, or sincerely preached, or of the execution of these Injunctions; or a favourer of the Bishop of Rome's pretensed power, now by the Laws of this Realm justly rejected and extirped; ye shall detect and present the same to the King's Highness, or his honourable Council, or to his Vicegerent aforesaid, or the Justice of the Peace next adjoining.

Item; That you, and every Parson, Vicar, or Curate within this Diocess, shall for every Church keep one Book or Register, wherein he shall write the day and year of every Wedding, Christning, and Burying, made within your Parish for your time, and so every Man succeeding you likewise; and also there insert every Person's Name that shall be so wedded, christned, and buried; and for the safe keeping of the same Book, the Parish shall be bound to provide, of their common charges, one sure Coffer with two Locks and Keys, whereof the one to remain with you, and the other with the Wardens of every such Parish wherein the said Book shall be laid up; which Book ye shall every Sunday take forth, and in the presence of the said Wardens, or one of them, write and record in the same, all the Weddings, Christnings, and Buryings, made the whole Week afore; and that done, to lay up the Book in the said Coffer, as afore: And for every time that the same shall be omitted, the Party that shall be in the fault thereof, shall forfeit to the said Church

Church 3 s. 4 d. to be employed on the reparation of the ſaid Church.

Item; That ye ſhall every quarter of a year read theſe and the other former Injunctions, given unto you by the Authority of the King's Highneſs, openly and deliberately before all your Pariſhioners, to the intent that both you may be the better admoniſhed of your duty, and your ſaid Pariſhioners the more incited to enſue the ſame for their part.

Item; Foraſmuch as by a Law eſtabliſhed, every Man is bound to pay the Tithes; no Man ſhall, by colour of duty, omitted by their Curates, detain their Tithes, and ſo redouble one wrong with another, or be his own Judge, but ſhall truly pay the ſame, as hath been accuſtomed, to their Parſons and Curates, without any reſtraint or diminution; and ſuch lack or default as they can juſtly find in their Parſons or Curates, to call for reformation thereof at their Ordinaries, and other Superiors hands; who, upon complaint, and due proof thereof, ſhall reform the ſame accordingly.

Item; That no Parſon ſhall from henceforth alter or change the order and manner of any Faſting-day that is commanded and indicted by the Church, nor of any Prayer, or of Divine Service, otherwiſe than is ſpecified in the ſaid Injunctions, until ſuch time as the ſame ſhall be ſo ordered and tranſported by the King's Highneſs's Authority; The Eves of ſuch Saints, whoſe Holy-dayes be abrogated, be only excepted, which ſhall be declared henceforth to be no Faſting-dayes; excepted, alſo the commemoration of Thomas Becket, ſome-time Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, which ſhall be clean omitted, and in the ſtead thereof, the Ferial Service uſed.

Item; That the knolling of the Avies after Service, and certain other times, which hath been brought in and begun by the pretence of the Biſhop of Rome's pardon, henceforth be leſt and omitted, leſt the People do hereafter truſt to have pardon for the ſaying of their Avies, between the ſaid knolling, as they have done in times paſt.

Item; Where in times paſt Men have uſed in divers places in their Proceſſions to ſing Ora pro nobis to ſo many Saints, that they had no time to ſing the good Suffrages following, as Parce nobis Domine, and Libera nos Domine, it muſt be taught and preached, that better it were to omit Ora pro nobis, and to ſing the other Suffrages.

All which and ſingular Injunctions I miniſter unto you and your Succeſſors, by the King's Highneſs Authority to me committed in this part, which I charge and command you by the ſame Authority to obſerve and keep upon pain of Deprivation, Sequeſtration of your Fruits, or ſuch other coercion as to the King's Highneſs, or his Vice-gerent for the time being, ſhall ſeem convenient.

Theſe are alſo in the Bp. of London's Regiſter, Fol. 29, 30. with Bonner's Mandate to his Arch-Deacons for obſerving them, 30 Sept. 1541. Anno Regn. 32.

XII. Injunctions

XII. Injunctions given by Thomas Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, to the Parſons, Vicars, and other Curats in his Viſitation, kept (ſede vacante) within the Dioceſs of Hereford, Anno Domini 1538.

I.

FIrſt; That ye, and every one of you, ſhall, with all your diligence and faithful obedience, obſerve, and cauſe to be obſerved, all and ſingular the King's Highneſs Injunctions, by his Graces Commiſſaries given in ſuch places as they in times paſt have viſited.

II.

Item; That ye, and every one of you ſhall have, by the firſt day of Auguſt next coming, as well a whole Bible in Latin and Engliſh, or at the leaſt a New Teſtament of both the ſame Language, as the Copies of the King's Highneſs Injunctions.

III.

Item; That ye ſhall every day ſtudy one Chapter of the ſaid Bible, or New Teſtament, conferring the Latin and Engliſh together, and to begin at the firſt part of the Book, and ſo to continue until the end of the ſame.

IV.

Item; That ye, or none of you, ſhall diſcourage any Lay-Man from the reading of the Bible in Engliſh or Latin, but encourage them to that, admoniſhing them that they ſo read it, for reformation of their own Life, and knowledge of their Duty; and that they be not bold or preſumptuous in judging of matters afore they have perfect knowledge.

V.

Item; That ye, both in your Preaching and ſecret Confeſſion, and all other works and doings, ſhall excite and move your Pariſhioners unto ſuch Works as are commanded expreſly of God, for the which God ſhall demand of them a ſtrict reckoning; and all other Works which Men do of their own Will or Devotion, to teach your Pariſhioners that they are not to be ſo highly eſteemed as the other; and that for the not doing of them God will not ask any accompt.

VI.

Item; That ye, nor none of you, ſuffer no Friar, or Religious Man, to have any Cure or Service within your Churches or Cures, except they be lawfully diſpenſed withal, or licenſed by the Ordinary.

VII.

Item; That ye, and every one of you, do not admit any young Man or Woman to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, which never received it before, until that he or ſhe openly in the Church, after Maſs, or evening Song, upon the Holy-day, do recite, in the vulgar Tongue, the Pater Noſter, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments.

VIII.

Item; That ye, and every one of you, ſhall two times in a quarter declare to your Pariſhioners the Band of Matrimony, and what great danger it is to all Men that uſeth their Bodies but with ſuch Perſons as they lawfully may by the Law of God. And to exhort in the ſaid Time

Times your Pariſhioners, that they make no privy Contracts, as they will avoid the extream pain of the Laws uſed within the King's Realm, by his Graces Authority.

XIII. A Letter of Cromwell's to the Biſhop of Landaff, directing him how to proceed in the Reformation. An Original.

AFter my right hearty Commendations to your Lordſhip, ye ſhall herewith receive the King's Highneſs Letters addreſſed unto you, to put you in remembrance of his Highneſs travels, and your duty touching order to be taken for Preaching, to the intent the People may be taught the Truth, and yet not charged at the beginning with over-many Novelties; the publication whereof, unleſs the ſame be tempered and qualified with much wiſdom, do rather breed Contention, Diviſion, and contrariety in Opinion in the unlearned Multitude, than either edifie, or remove from them, and out of their hearts, ſuch abuſes as, by the corrupt and unſavoury teaching of the Biſhop of Rome and his Diſciples, have crept in the ſame. The effect of which Letters albeit I doubt not, but as well for the honeſty of the Matter, as for your own diſcharge, ye will ſo conſider and put iu execution, as ſhall be to his Grace's ſatisfaction in that behalf: Yet foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed his Majeſty to appoint and conſtitute me in the room and place of his Supream and Principal Miniſter, in all Matters that may touch any thing his Clergy, or their doings, I thought it alſo my part, for the exoneration of my Duty towards his Highneſs, and the rather to anſwer to his Grace's Expectation, Opinion, and Truſt conceived in me, and in that amongſt other committed to my fidelity, to deſire and pray you, in ſuch ſubſtantial ſort and manner, to travel in the execution of the Contents of his Grace's ſaid Letters; namely, for avoiding of Contrariety in Preaching, of the pronunciation of Novelties, without wiſe and diſcreet qualification, and the repreſſion of the temerity of thoſe, that either privily, or apertly, directly or indirectly, would advance the pretended Authority of the Biſhop of Rome; as I be not for my diſcharge enforced to complain further, and to declare what I have now written unto you for that purpoſe, and ſo to charge you with your own fault, and to deviſe ſuch remedy for the ſame, as ſhall appertain: deſiring your Lordſhip to accept my meaning herein, tending only to an honeſt, friendly, and Chriſtian Reformation, for avoidage of further inconvenience, and to think none unkindneſs, tho in this Matter, wherein it is almoſt more than time to ſpeak, I write frankly, compelled and enforced thereunto, both in reſpect of my private Duty, and otherwiſe, for my diſcharge; foraſmuch as it pleaſeth his Majeſty to uſe me in the lieu of a Counſellour, whoſe Office is as an Eye to the Prince, to foreſee, and in time to provide remedy for ſuch Abuſes, Enormities, and Inconveniences, as might elſe with a little ſufferance engender more evil in Publick Weal, than could be after recovered, with much labour, ſtudy, diligence, ligence, and travails. And thus moſt heartily fare you well. From the Rolls, the 6th of January.

Your Lordſhip's Friend,

Thomas Cromwell.

XV. The King's Letters Patents for printing the Bible in Engliſh.

Rot. Pat. 31. Hen. 8.

HEnry the Eighth, &c. To all and ſingular Printers and Sellers of Books within this our Realm, and all other Officers, Miniſters, and Subjects, theſe our Lettters hearing or ſeeing, Greeting. We let you wit, That being deſirous to have our People at all times convenient, give themſelves to the attaining the knowledg of God's Word, whereby they will the better honour him, and obſerve and keep his Commandments; and alſo do their Duties better to us, being their Prince and Soveraign Lord: And conſidering that this our Zeal and Deſire cannot by any mean take ſo good effect, as by the granting to them the free and liberal uſe of the Bible in our own natural Engliſh Tongue: ſo unleſs it be foreſeen that the ſame paſs at the beginning by one Tranſlation to be peruſed and conſidered; The frailty of Men is ſuch, that the diverſity thereof may breed and bring forth manifold Inconveniences; as when wilful and heady Folk ſhall confer upon the diverſity of the ſaid Tranſlations. We have therefore appointed our right truſty and well-beloved Counſellor, the Lord Cromwell, Keeper of our Privy-Seal, to take for us, and in our Name, ſpecial care and charge, that no manner of Perſon, or Perſons, within this our Realm, ſhall enterpriſe, attempt, or ſet in hand to print any Bible in the Engliſh Tongue of any manner of Volumn, during the ſpace of five years next enſuing after the Date hereof, but only all ſuch as ſhall be deputed, aſſigned, and admitted by the ſaid Lord Cromwell.

XVI. The Attainder of Thomas Cromwell.

Item quædam alia petitio, formam cujuſdam actus attincturæ in ſe continens, exhibita eſt ſuæ Regiæ Majeſtati in Parliamento prædicto, cujus tenor ſequitur in hæc verba.

IN their moſt humble-wiſe ſhewing to your moſt Royal Majeſty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all your moſt loving and obedient Subjects, the Commons in this your moſt high Court of Parliament aſſembled; That where your moſt Royal Majeſty, our Natural Sovereign Lord, is juſtly, and lawfully, really entituled to be our ſole Supream Head and Governour, of this your Realm of England, and of the Dominions of the ſame; to whom, and to none other under God, the Kingly Direction, Order, and Governance of your moſt loving and obedient Subjects, and People of this your Realm, only appertaineth and belongeth. And the which your moſt loving and obedient Subjects, your Highneſs prudently and quietly, without any manner of diſturbance by a long time moſt graciouſly hath preſerved, ſuſtained and defended: And your Highneſs, for the Quietneſs, Wealth, and Tranquility of your ſaid humble and obedient Subjects, hath made, and ordained, divers and many moſt godly, vertuous, and wholſome Laws; and for due execution of the ſame, hath not deſiſted to travel in your own moſt Royal Perſon, to ſupport and maintain, as well the Laws of Almighty God, as the Laws by your Highneſs made and ordained, by due and condign Execution of the ſame Laws upon the Tranſgreſſors offending contrary to the ſame: And your Majeſty hath always moſt vertuouſly ſtudied and laboured, by all ways, and all means, to and for the ſetting forth thereof, in ſuch wiſe as might be moſt to the Honour, Glory, and Pleaſure of Almighty God; and for the common accord and wealth of this your Realm, and other your Dominions: And for the true execution of the ſame, hath elected, choſen and made divers, as well of your Nobles as others, to be of your moſt Honourrble Council, as to the Honour of a Noble Prince appertaineth. And where your Majeſty hath had a ſpecial truſt and confidence in your ſaid moſt truſty Counſellors, that the ſame your Counſellors, and every of them, had minded and intended, and finally purpoſed to have followed and purſued your moſt Godly and Princely Purpoſe, as of truth the more number hath moſt faithfully done; Yet nevertheleſs Thomas Cromwell, now Earl of Eſſex, whom your Majeſty took and received into your truſty Service, the ſame Thomas then being a Man of very baſe and low degree, and for ſingular Favour, Truſt and Confidence, which your Majeſty bare and had in him, did not only erect and advance the ſame Thomas unto the ſtate of an Earl, and enriched him with manifold Gifts, as well of Goods, as of Lands and Offices, but alſo him, the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, did erect and make one of your moſt truſty Counſellors, as well concerning your Grace's Supream Juriſdictions Eccleſiaſtical, as your moſt high ſecret Affairs Temporal. Nevertheleſs your Majeſty now of late hath found, and tried, by a large number of Witneſſes, being your faithful Subjects, and Perſonages of great Honour,

Worſhip, and Diſcretion, the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, contrary to the ſingular truſt and confidence which your Majeſty had in him, to be the moſt falſe and corrupt Traitor, Deceiver, and Circumventor againſt your moſt Royal Perſon, and the Imperial Crown of this your Realm, that hath been known, ſeen, or heard of in all the time of your moſt noble Reign: Inſomuch that it is manifeſtly proved and declared, by the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes aforeſaid, That the ſame Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, uſurping upon your Kingly Eſtate, Power, Authority, and Office; without your Grace's Commandment or Aſſent, hath taken upon him to ſet at liberty divers Perſons being convicted and attainted of Miſpriſion of High Treaſon; and divers other being apprehended, and in Priſon, for Suſpection of High Treaſon; and over that, divers and many times, at ſundry places in this your Realm, for manifold Sums of Mony to him given, moſt traiterouſly hath taken upon him, by ſeveral Writings, to give and grant, as well unto Aliens, as to your Subjects, a great number of Licenſes for conveying and carrying of Mony, Corn, Grain, Beans, Beer, Leather, Tallow, Bells, Mettals, Horſes, and other Commodities of this your Realm, contrary to your Highneſs's moſt Godly and Gracious Proclamations made for the Common-Wealth of the People of this your Realm in that behalf, and in derogation of your Crown and Dignity. And the ſame Thomas Cromwell, elated and full of Pride, contrary to his moſt bounden Duty, of his own Authority and Power, not regarding your Majeſty Royal; And further, taking upon him your Power, Sovereign Lord, in that behalf, divers and many times moſt traiterouſly hath conſtituted, deputed and aſſigned, many ſingular Perſons of your Subjects to be Commiſſioners in many, your great, urgent and weighty Cauſes and Affairs, executed and done in this your Realm, without the aſſent, knowledg, or conſent of your Highneſs. And further alſo, being a Perſon of as poor and low degree, as few be within this your Realm; pretending to have ſo great a ſtroak about you, our, and his natural Sovereign Liege Lord, that he letted not to ſay publickly, and declare, That he was ſure of you; which is deteſtable, and to be abhorred amongſt all good Subjects in any Chriſtian Realm, that any Subject ſhould enterprize or take upon him ſo to ſpeak of his Sovereign Liege Lord and King. And alſo of his own Authority and Power without your Highneſs's conſent, hath made, and granted, as well to Strangers as to your own Subjects, divers and many Paſs-ports, to paſs over the Seas, with Horſes, and great Sums of Money, without any ſearch. And over that, moſt Gracious Sovereign Lord, amongſt divers other his Treaſons, Deceits, and Falſhoods, the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, being a deteſtable Heretick, and being in himſelf utterly diſpoſed to ſet and ſow common Sedition and Variance among your true and loving Subjects, hath ſecretly ſet forth and diſperſed into all Shires, and other Territories of this your Realm, and other your Dominions, great numbers of falſe Erroneous Books, whereof many were printed and made beyond the Seas, and divers other within this Realm, compriſing and declaring, among many other Evils and Errors, manifeſt Matters to induce and lead your Subjects to diffidence, and refuſal of the true and ſincere Faith and Belief, which Chriſtian Religion bindeth all Chriſtian People to have, in the moſt Holy and Bleſſed Sacrament

Sacrament of the Altar, and other Articles of Chriſtian Religion, moſt graciouſly declared by your Majeſty, by Authority of Parliament: And certain Matters compriſed in ſome of the ſaid Books, hath cauſed to be tranſlated into our Maternal and Engliſh Tongue: And upon report made unto him by the Tranſlator thereof, that the Matter ſo tranſlated hath expreſly been againſt the ſaid moſt Bleſſed and Holy Sacrament; Yet the ſame Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, after he had read the ſame Tranſlation, moſt heretically hath affirmed the ſame material Hereſie ſo tranſlated, to be good; and further hath ſaid, that he found no fault therein; and over that, hath openly and obſtinately holden Opinion, and ſaid, That it was as lawful for every Chriſtian Man to be a Miniſter of the ſaid Sacrament, as well as a Prieſt. And where alſo your moſt Royal Majeſty, being a Prince of Vertue, Learning, and Juſtice, of ſingular Confidence and Truſt, did conſtitute and make the ſame Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, your Highneſs's Vicegerent within this your Realm of England; and by the ſame, gave unto him Authority and Power, not only to redreſs and reform all, and all manner of Errors, and Erroneous Opinions, inſurging and growing among your loving and obedient Subjects of this your Realm, and of the Dominions of the ſame, but alſo to order and direct all Eccleſiaſtical and Spiritual Cauſes within your ſaid Realm and Dominions; the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, not regarding his Duty to Almighty God, and to your Highneſs, under the Seal of your Vicegerent, hath, without your Grace's aſſent or knowledg, licenſed and authorized divers Perſons, detected and ſuſpected of Hereſies, openly to teach and preach amongſt your moſt loving and obedient Subjects within this your Realm of England. And under the pretence and colour of the ſaid great Authorities and Cures, which your Majeſty hath committed unto him in the Premiſſes, hath not only, of his corrupt and damnable Will and Mind, actually, at ſome time, by his own Deed and Commandment, and at many other Times by his Letters expreſly written to divers worſhipful Perſons, being Sheriffs, in ſundry Shires of this your Realm, falſly ſuggeſting thereby your Graces Pleaſure ſo to have been, cauſed to be ſet at large many falſe Hereticks, ſome being there indicted, and ſome other being thereof apprehended, and in Ward: and commonly, upon complaints made by credible Perſons unto the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, of great and moſt deteſtable Hereſies committed and ſprung in many places of this your Realm, with declaration of the ſpecialities of the ſame Hereſies, and the Names of the Offenders therein, the ſame Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, by his crafty and ſubtil means and inventions, hath not only defended the ſame Hereticks from Puniſhment and Reformation; but being a fautor, maintainer, and ſupporter of Hereticks, divers times hath terribly rebuked divers of the ſaid credible Perſons being their Accuſers, and ſome others of them hath perſecuted and vexed by Impriſonment and otherwiſe. So that thereby many of your Grace's true and loving Subjects have been in much dread and fear, to detect or accuſe ſuch deteſtable known Hereticks; the particularities and ſpecialities of which ſaid abominable Hereſies, Errors, and Offences, committed and done by the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, being over-tedious, long, and of too great number here to be expreſſed, declared, or written. And to the intent to have thoſe damnable damnable Errors and Hereſies, to be inculcated, impreſſed, and infixed in the Hearts of your Subjects, as well contrary to God's Laws, as to your Laws and Ordinances. Moſt Gracious Soveraign Lord, the ſame Thomas Cromwel, Earl of Eſſex, hath allured and drawn unto him by Retainours, many of your Subjects ſunderly inhabiting in every of your ſaid Shires and Territories, as well erroneouſly perſwading and declaring to them the Contents of the falſe erroneous Books, above-written to be good, true, and beſt ſtanding with the moſt Holy Word and Pleaſure of God; as other his falſe and heretical Opinions and Errors; whereby, and by his Confederacies therein, he hath cauſed many of your faithful Subjects to be greatly infected with Hereſies, and other Errors, contrary to the right Laws and Pleaſure of Almighty God. And the ſame Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, by the falſe and traiterous means above-written, ſuppoſing himſelf to be fully able, by force and ſtrength, to maintain and defend his ſaid abominable Treaſons, Hereſies, and Errors, not regarding his moſt bounden Duty to Almighty God, and his Laws, nor the natural Duty of Allegiance to your Majeſty, in the laſt day of March in the 30 year of your moſt gracious Reign, in the Pariſh of St. Peter the Poor, within your City of London, upon demonſtration and declaration then and there made unto him, that there were certain new Preachers, as Robert Barnes Clerk, and other, whereof part were committed to the Tower of London, for preaching and teaching of leud Learning againſt your Highneſs's Proclamations; the ſame Thomas affirming the ſame preaching to be good, moſt deteſtably, arrogantly, erroneouſly, wilfully, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly, expreſly againſt your Laws and Statutes, then and there did not let to declare, and ſay, theſe moſt traiterous and deteſtable words enſuing, amongſt other words of like matter and effect; that is to ſay, That if the King would turn from it, yet I would not turn; And if the King did turn, and all his People, I would fight in the Field in mine own Perſon, with my Sword in my hand againſt him and all others; and then, and there, moſt traiterouſly pulled out his Dagger, and held it on high, ſaying theſe words, Or elſe this Dagger thruſt me to the heart, if I would not die in that Quarrel againſt them all: And I truſt, if I live one year or two, it ſhould not lie in the Kings Power to reſiſt or let it if he would. And further, then and there ſwearing by a great Oath, traiterouſly affirmed the ſame his traiterous ſaying and pronounciation of words, ſaying, I will do ſo indeed, extending up his Arm, as though he had had a Sword in his hand; to the moſt perilous, grievous, and wicked Example of all other your loving, faithful and obedient Subjects in this your Realm, and to the peril of your moſt Royal Perſon. And moreover, our moſt gracious Soveraign Lord, the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, hath acquired and obtained into his poſſeſſion, by Oppreſſion, Bribery, Extort, Power, and falſe Promiſes made by him, to your Subjects of your Realm, innumerable Sums of Mony and Treaſure; and being ſo enriched, hath had your Nobles of your Realm in great diſdain, deriſion, and deteſtation, as by expreſs words by him moſt opprobriouſly ſpoken hath appeared. And being put in remembrance of others, of his eſtate, which your Highneſs hath called him unto, offending in like Treaſons, the laſt day of January, in the 31 year of your moſt noble Reign, at the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, moſt arrogantly, willingly, willingly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly, ſaid, publiſhed, and declared, That if the Lords would handle him ſo, that he would give them ſuch a Break-faſt as never was made in England, and that the proudeſt of them ſhould know; to the great peril and danger, as well of your Majeſty, as of your Heirs and Succeſſors: For the which his moſt deteſtable and abominable Hereſies and Treaſons, and many other his like Offences and Treaſons over-long here to be rehearſed and declared. Be it Enacted, Ordained, and eſtabliſhed by your Majeſty, with the Aſſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, That the ſaid Thomas Cromwel, Earl of Eſſex, for his abominable and deteſtable Hereſies and Treaſons, by him moſt abominably, heretically, and traiterouſly practiſed, committed, and done, as well againſt Almighty God, as againſt your Majeſty, and this your ſaid Realm, ſhall be, and ſtand, by Authority of this preſent Parliament, convicted and attainted of Hereſie and High Treaſon, and be adjudged an abominable and deteſtable Heretick and Traitor; and ſhall have and ſuffer ſuch pains of Death, loſſes, and forfeitures of Goods, Debts, and Chattels, as in caſe of Hereſie and High Treaſon, or as in caſes of either of them, at the pleaſure of your moſt Royal Majeſty. And that the ſame Thomas Cromwel, Earl of Eſſex, ſhall, by Authority aboveſaid, loſe, and forfeit to your Highneſs, and to your Heirs and Succeſſors, all ſuch his Caſtles, Lordſhips, Mannors, Meſſuages, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Reverſions, Remainders, Services, Poſſeſſions, Offices, Rights, Conditions, and all other his Hereditaments, of what names, nature, or qualities ſoever they be, which he the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, or any other to his uſe had, or ought to have had, of any Eſtate of Inheritance, in Fee-Simple or Fee Tail, in Reverſion or Poſſeſſion, at the ſaid laſt day of March, in the ſaid thirtieth Year of your moſt Gracious Reign, or any time ſith or after, as in Caſes of High Treaſon. And that all the ſaid Caſtles, Lordſhips, Mannors, Lands, Meſſuages, Tenements, Rents, Reverſions, Remainders, Services, Poſſeſſions, Offices, and all other the Premiſſes forfeited, as is aboveſaid, ſhall be deemed, inveſted, and adjudged, in the Lawful, real, and actual poſſeſſion of your Highneſs, your Heirs, and Succeſſors for ever in the ſame, and in ſuch eſtate, manner, and form, as if the ſaid Caſtles, Lordſhips, Mannors, Meſſuages, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Reverſions, Remainders, Services, Poſſeſſions, Offices, and other the Premiſes, with their Appurtenances, and every of them, were ſpecially or particularly founden, by Office or Offices, Inquiſition or Inquiſitions, to be taken by any Eſcheator, or Eſcheators, or any other Commiſſioner or Commiſſioners, by virtue of any Commiſſion or Commiſſions to them or any of them, to be directed in any County or Counties, Shire or Shires, within this your Realm of England, where the ſaid Caſtles, and other the Premiſſes or any of them, been, or do lye, and returned into any of your Majeſties Courts. Saving to all and ſingular, Perſon and Perſons, Bodies politick and corporate, their Heirs and Succeſſors, and their Succeſſors and Aſſignes of every of them, other than the ſaid Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Eſſex, and his Heirs, and all and every other Perſon and Perſons, claiming by the ſame Thomas Cromwell, and to his uſe, all ſuch Right, Title, Entrie, Poſſeſſions, Intereſt, Reverſions, Remainders,

Leaſe,

Leaſe, Leaſes, Conditions, Fees, Offices, Rents, Annuities, Commons, and all other Commodities, Profits, and Hereditaments what ſoever they or any of them might, ſhould, or ought to have had, if this Act had never been had or made. Provided always, and be it enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, that this Act of Attainder, ne any Offence, ne other thing therein contained, extend not unto the Deanery of Wells in the County of Summerſet; nor to any Mannors, Lands, Tenements, or Hereditaments thereunto belonging; nor be in any wiſe prejudicial or hurtful to the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, nor to the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of St. Andrew of Wells, nor to any of them, nor to any of their Succeſſors; but that the ſaid Biſhop, Dean, and Chapters, and their Succeſſors, and every of them, ſhall and may have, hold, uſe, occupy, and enjoy, all and ſingular their Titles, Rights, Mannors, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Reverſions, and Services, and all and ſingular other their Hereditaments, Commodities, and Profits, of what nature, kind, or quality, or condition ſoever they be, in as ample and large manner and form, as tho this Act of Attainder, or any Offence therein mentioned, had never been had, committed, nor made; and that from hence forth the Dean, and his Succeſſors, Deans of the ſaid Cathedral Church that hereafter ſhall be perfected, elected, and admitted to the ſame, Shall, by the Authority aforeſaid, be Dean of the ſaid Cathedral Church, fully and wholly incorporated with the Chapter of the ſame, in as ample, large, and like manner and form, to all intents and purpoſes, as the Deans before this time hath been and uſed to be, with the ſaid Chapter of the ſaid Cathedral Church of Wells. And that the ſame Dean and Chapter, and their Succeſſors, ſhall have, occupy, and enjoy, all and ſingular their ſuch Poſſeſſions, Manners, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Reverſions, and Services, and all and ſingular their Hereditaments, of what nature, kind, name or names they be called or known. And ſhall be adjudged and deemed in actual and real poſſeſſion and ſeizin of, and in the ſame Premiſes, to all intents and purpoſes, according to their old Corporation, as tho this Act of Attainder, or any thing, clauſe, or matter therein contained had never been had, committed, nor made. This ſaid Act of Attainder, or any other Act, Proviſion, or any thing heretofore had or made to the contrary notwithſtanding. Cui quidem petitioni cum proviſione prædict. perlect. & intellect. per dictum Dominum Regem ex Authoritate & conſenſu Parliamenti prædicti ſic Reſponſum eſt.

To the King, my moſt Gracious Sovereign Lord his Royal Majeſty.

MOſt Merciful King, and moſt Gracious Sovereign Lord, may it pleaſe the ſame to be advertiſed, That the laſt time it pleaſed your beſign Goodneſs to ſend unto me the Right Honourable Lord Chancellor, the Right Honourable Duke of Norff. and the Lord Admiral, to examine, and alſo to declare unto me divers things from your Majeſty; among the which, one ſpecial thing they moved, and, thereupon they charged me, as I would anſwer before God at the dreadful day of Judgment, and alſo upon the extream danger and damnation of my Soul and Conſcience, to ſay what I knew in the Marriage, and concerning the Marriage, between your Highneſs and the Queen. To the which I anſwered as I knew, declaring unto them the Particulars, as nigh as I then could call to remembrance. Which when they had heard, they, in your Majeſties Name, and upon like charge as they had given me before, commanded me to write to your Highneſs the Truth, as much as I knew in that Matter; which now I do, and the very truth, as God ſhall ſave me, to the uttermoſt of my knowledg. Firſt; After your Majeſty heard of the Lady Ann of Cleves arrival at Dover, and that her Journeys were appointed towards Greenwich, and that ſhe ſhould be at Rocheſter on New-years Even at night, your Highneſs declared to me, that you would privily viſit her at Rocheſter, upon New-years day, adding theſe words, To nouriſh love; which accordingly your Grace did upon New-years-day, as is above-ſaid. And the next day, being Friday, your Grace returned to Greenwich, where I ſpake with your Grace, and demanded of your Majeſty, How ye liked the Lady Ann: your Highneſs anſwered, as me thought, heavily, and not pleaſantly, Nothing ſo well as ſhe was ſpoken of; ſaying further, That if your Highneſs had known as much before as ye then knew, ſhe ſhould not have come within this Realm; ſaying as by the way of lamentation, What Remedy? Unto the which I anſwered and ſaid, I know, none but was very ſorry therefore; and ſo God knoweth I was, for I thought it a hard beginning. The next day after the receipt of the ſaid Lady, and her entry made unto Greenwich, and after your Highneſs had brought her to her Chamber, I then waited upon your Highneſs into your Privy-Chamber; and being there, your Grace called me unto you, ſaying to me theſe words, or the like, My Lord, is it not as I told you? ſay what they will, ſhe is nothing ſo fair as ſhe hath been reported; howbeit ſhe is well and ſeemly. Whereunto I anſwered and ſaid, By my Faith, Sir, ye ſay truth; adding thereunto, that I thought ſhe had a Queenly manner; and nevertheleſs was ſorry that your Grace was no better content: And thereupon your Grace commanded me to call together your Council, which were theſe by name; The Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, the Dukes of Norfolk and

Cotton Libr. Otho C. 10.

Suffolk, my Lord Admiral, and my Lord of Dureſme, and my ſelf to commune of theſe Matters, and to know what Commiſſions the Agents of Cleves had brought, as well touching the performance of the Covenants ſent before from hence to Dr. Wotton, to have been concluded in Cleves, as alſo in the declaration how the Matters ſtood for the Covenants of Marriage, between the Duke of Lorrain's Son, and the ſaid Lady Ann. Whereupon Oleſleger and Hogeſton were called, and the Matters propoſed; whereby it plainly appeared, that they were much aſtoniſhed and abaſhed, and deſired that they might make anſwer in the next morning, which was Sunday: And upon the Sunday in the morning your ſaid Counſellors and they met together early, and there eft ſoons was propoſed unto them, as well touching the Commiſſion for the performance of the Treaty and Articles ſent to Mr. Wotton, as alſo touching the Contracts and Covenants of Marriage between the Duke of Lorrain's Son, and the Lady Ann, and what terms they ſtood in. To which things ſo propoſed, they anſwered as Men much perplexed, That as touching Commiſſion, they had none to treat concerning the Articles ſent to Mr. Wotton. And as to the contract and covenants of Marriage they could ſay nothing, but that a Revocation was made, and that they were but Sponſals. And finally, after much reaſoning, they offered themſelves to remain Priſoners, until ſuch time as they ſhould have ſent unto them from Cleves the firſt Articles ratified under the Duke their Maſters Sign and Seal, and alſo the Copy of the Revocation made between the Duke of Lorrain's Son and the Lady Ann. Upon the which Anſwers, I was ſent to your Highneſs by my Lords of your Council, to declare to your Highneſs their Anſwer; and came to you, by the Privy Way, into your Privy Chamber, and declared unto the ſame all the circumſtances, wherewith your Grace was very much diſpleaſed, ſaying, I am not well handled; inſomuch that I might well perceive that your Highneſs was fully determined not to have gone through with the Marriage at that time, ſaying unto me theſe words, or the like in effect; That if it were not that ſhe is come ſo far into my Realm, and the great Preparations that my States and People have made for her, and for fear of making a ruffle in the World; that is, to mean to drive her Brother into the hands of the Emperor, and the French King's hands, being now together, I would never have ne married her. So that I might well perceive your Grace was neither content with the Perſon, ne yet with the Proceedings of the Agents; And at after-dinner, the ſaid Sunday, your Grace ſent for all your ſaid Counſellors in, repeating how your Highneſs was handled, as well touching the ſaid Articles, as alſo the ſaid Matter of the Duke of Lorrain's Son. It might, and I doubt not, did appear unto them how loth your Highneſs was to have married at that time. And thereupon, and upon the Conſiderations aforeſaid, your Grace thought that it ſhould be well done that ſhe ſhould make a Proteſtation before your ſaid Counſellors and Notaries to be preſent, that ſhe was free from all Contracts; which was done accordingly. And thereupon I repairing to your Highneſs, declared how that ſhe had made her Proteſtation. Whereunto your Grace anſwered in effect theſe words, or much like; Is there none other Remedy, but that I muſt needs, againſt my Will, put my Neck in the Yoke? and ſo departed, leaving your Highneſs in a ſtudy or penſiveneſs. And yet your Grace determined the next morning morning to go through; and in the morning, which was Monday, your Majesty preparing your self towards the Ceremonies; There was one Question, who should lead to the Church? And it was appointed that the Earl of Essex deceased, and an Earl that came with her, should lead her to the Church. And thereupon one came to your Highness, and said to you, That the Earl of Essex was not come; whereupon your Grace appointed me to be one that should lead her: And so I went into her Chamber, to the intent to have done your Commandment; and shortly after I came into her Chamber, the Earl of Essex was come: Whereupon I repaired back again into your Graces Privy Chamber, and shewed your Highness how he was come; and thereupon your Majesty advanced towards the Gallery out of your Privy Chamber; and your Grace being in and about the midst of your Chamber of Presence, called me unto you, saying these words, or the like in Sentence; My Lord, if it were not to satisfy the World, and my Realm, I would not do that I must do this day for none earthly thing; and therewith one brought your Grace Word that she was coming; and thereupon your Grace repaired into the Gallery towards the Closet, and there paused for her coming, being nothing content that she so long tarried, as I judged then. And so consequently she came, and your Grace afterwards proceeded to the Ceremonies; and they being finished, travelled the day as appertained, and the night after the custom. And in the morning on Tuesday, I repairing to your Majesty into your Privy-Chamber, finding your Grace not so pleasant as I trusted to have done, I was so bold to ask your Grace how you liked the Queen? Whereunto your Grace soberly answered, saying, That I was not all Men, surely, as ye know, I liked her before not well, but now I like her much worse; for, quoth your Highness, I have felt her Belly, and her Breasts, and thereby, as I can judg, she should be no Maid; which strook me so to the Heart when I felt them, that I had neither will nor courage to proceed any farther in other Matters; saying, I have left her as good a Maid as I found her: Which methought then ye spake displeasantly, which made me very sorry to hear; Your Highness also after Candlemas, and before Shrovetide, once or twice said, That ye were in the same case with her as ye were afore, and that your Heart could never consent to meddle with her carnally. Notwithstanding your Highness alledged that ye for the most part used to lay nightly, or every second night by her, and yet your Majesty ever said, That she was as good a Maid for you, as ever her Mother bare her, for any thing ye had ministred to her. Your Highness shewed to me also in Lent last passed, at such time as your Grace had some communication with her of my Lady Mary, how that she began to wax stubborn and wilful, ever lamenting your fate, and ever verifying that ye never had any carnal knowledg with her: And also after Easter, your Grace likewise, at divers times, and in the Whitsun-week, in your Grace's Privy-Chamber at Greenwich, exceedingly lamented your fate, and that your greatest grief was, That ye should surely never have any more Children for the comfort of this Realm, if ye should so continue; assuring me, that before God ye thought she was never your lawful Wife. At which time your Grace knoweth what answer I made; which was, that I would for my part do my utmost to comfort and deliver your Grace of your Afflictions; and how sorry I was both to see and hear your Grace, God knoweth. Your Grace divers times ſithen Whitſuntide, ever alledging one thing, and alſo ſaying, That ye had as much to do to move the conſent of your Heart and Mind as ever did Man, and that you took God to witneſs; but ever, you ſaid, the Obſtacle could never out of your Mind. And, Gracious Prince, after that you had firſt ſeen her at Rocheſter, I never thought in my heart that ye were or would be contented with that Marriage. And Sir, I know now in what caſe I ſtand, in which is only the Mercy of God and your Grace; if I have not, to the uttermoſt of my remembrance, ſaid the Truth, and the whole Truth in this Matter, God never help me. I am ſure there is, as I think, no man in this your Realm that knew more in this than I did, your Highneſs only excepted. And I am ſure, my Lord Admiral calling to his remembrance, can ſhew your Highneſs, and be my Witneſs what I ſaid unto him after your Grace came from Rocheſter, yea, and after your Grace's Marriage: And alſo now of late, ſithence Witſuntide, and I doubt not but many and divers of my Lords of your Council, both before your Marriage, and ſithence, have right well perceived that your Majeſty hath not been well pleaſed with your Marriage. And as I ſhall anſwer to God, I never thought your Grace content, after you had once ſeen her at Rocheſter. And this is all that I know, moſt gracious and moſt merciful Sovereign Lord, beſeeching Almighty God, who ever hath in all your Cauſes counſelled, preſerved, opened, maintained, relieved, and defended your Highneſs; So he will now vouchſafe to counſel you, preſerve you, maintain you, remedy you, relieve and defend you, as may be moſt to your Honour, with Proſperity, Health, and Comfort of your Hearts deſire. For the which, and for the long Life, and proſperous Reign of your moſt Royal Majeſty, I ſhall, during my Life, and whiles I am here, pray to Almighty God, that he of his moſt abundant Goodneſs will help, aid, and comfort you, after your continuance of Neſtor's Years: that that moſt noble Imp, the Prince's Grace, your moſt dear Son, may ſucceed you to Reign long, proſperouſly, and feliciouſly to God's pleaſure: beſeeching moſt humbly your Grace to pardon this my rude writing, and to conſider that I a moſt woful Priſoner, ready to take the Death, when it ſhall pleaſe God and your Majeſty; and yet the frail fleſh inciteth me continually to call to your Grace for Mercy and Grace for mine Offences; and thus Chriſt ſave, preſerve, and keep you.

Written at the Tower this Wedneſday, the laſt of June, with the heavy Heart, and trembling hand, of your Highneſs's moſt heavy and moſt miſerable Priſoner, and poor Slave,

Thomas Cromwell,

Moſt Gracious Prince, I cry for Mercy, Mercy, Mercy.

FIrſt I depoſe and declare, That this hereafter written is meerly the verity intended, upon none ſiniſter affection, nor yet upon none hatred nor diſpleaſure, and herein I take God to witneſs. Now to the Matter I ſay and affirm; That when the firſt communication was had with me for the Marriage of the Lady Ann of Cleves, I was glad to hearken to it, truſting to have ſome aſſured Friend by it; I much doubting that time, both the Emperor, France, and the Biſhop of Rome; and alſo becauſe I heard ſo much, both of her excellent Beauty and virtuous Conditions. But when I ſaw her at Rocheſter, the firſt time that ever I ſaw her, it rejoiced my heart that I had kept me free from making any Pact or Bond before with her till I ſaw her my ſelf; for then I aſſure you I liked her ſo ill, and ſo far contrary to that ſhe was praiſed, that I was woe that ever ſhe came into England; and delibe-rated with my ſelf, that if it were poſſible to find means to break off, I would never enter Yoke with her. Of which miſliking, both the great Maſter, the Admiral that now is, and the Maſter of the Horſes, can and will here record. Then after my Repair to Greenwich, the next day af-ter I think, and doubt not, but that the Lord of Eſſex well examined, can, and will, or hath declared what I then ſaid to him in that caſe; not doubting, but ſince he is a Perſon which knoweth himſelf condemned to dye by Act of Parliament, will not damn his Soul, but truly declare the Truth, not only at the time ſpoken by me, but alſo continually till the day of Marriage; and alſo many times after, whereby my lack of conſent, I doubt not, doth or ſhall well appear; And alſo lack enough of the Will and Power to conſummate the ſame; wherein both he, my Phyſitians, the Lord Privy Seal that now is, Hennage and Denny can, and I doubt not will teſtifie according to truth, which is, That I never for Love to the Woman conſented to marry; nor yet if ſhe brought Maiden-head with her, took any from her by true Carnal Copulation. This is my brief, true, and perfect Declaration. Cotton Libr. Otho. C. 10.

Vos itaq; Convocari & in Synodum Univerſalem noſtra Autoritate convenire volentes, vobis conjunctim & diviſim committimus atq; mandamus ut inſpecta hujus negotii veritate, ac ſolum Deum præ oculis habentes, quod verum, quod juſtum, quod honeſtum, quod ſanctum eſt, id nobis de communi Concilio ſcripto annuncio renuncietis & de communi conſenſu licere definiatis: Nempe hoc unum a vobis noſtro jure poſtulamus, ut tanquam fida & proba Eccleſiæ membra cauſæ huic Eccleſiaſticæ, quæ maxima eſt, in juſtitia & veritate adeſſe velitis & eam maturrime juxta Commiſſionem vobis in hac parte factam abſolvere & expedire. In cujus rei Teſtimonium has Literas noſtras fieri fecimus Patentes, Teſte meipſo apud Weſtmon. ſexto die Julii, Anno Regni noſtri triceſſimo ſecundo. Nos tenorem & effectum Veſtræ Commiſſionis per omnia ſequentes, poſtquam matura deliberatione perpendimus & conſideravimus omnes Matrimonii prætenſi inter Veſtram Majeſtatem Illuſtriſſimam & Nobilem fœminam Dominam Annam Clevenſem circumſtantias, nobis multis modis expoſitas, cognitas & perſpectas, tandem ad definitionem & determinationem ſequentem, quam communi omnium conſenſu juſtorumq; animorum noſtrorum judicio ac recto conſcientiæ dictamine protulimus, proceſſimus, in hunc modum & (quod tenor Veſtræ Commiſſionis exigit) Veſtræ Nobiliſſimæ Majeſtati in hoc præſenti ſcripto referend. duximus, & ſignificamus prout ſequitur.

Primum itaq; comperimus & conſideravimus Matrimonium inter Majeſtatem Veſtram & Nobilem fœminam Dominam Annam Clevenſem prætenſam præcontracto quodam ſive ſponſaliorum, ſive Matrimonii, inter dictam Dominam Annam & Marchionem Lotharingiæ concluſo ambiguum, plane impeditum & perplexum reddi; Animadvertimus enim quod quamvis Veſtra Majeſtas in prima hujus Matrimonii prætenſi tractatione

tractatione præcontractus prædicti, & de quo tum ſermo multus habebatur, diſcuſſionem & declarationem ante ſolemnizandum cum dicta Domina Anna Matrimonium tanta inſtantia exegerit, ut pro conditione contrahendi deinde Matrimonii fuiſſe merito exiſtimari poſſit, qua conditione defacta nihil ageretur; atq; hæc cum ita ſe haberent tamen neq; ante ſolemnizationem illa de præcontractu ambiguitas expedita & declarata eſt, cum id ipſum tum temporis Majeſtas Veſtra denuo expoſceret & efflagitaret, cui clara jam & expedita eſſe omnia falſo renunciabatur, neq; poſtea quicquam efficax ut promiſſum ab Oratoribus fuerat, huc tranſmiſſum eſt, quo ſcrupulus ille ex præcontractu natus eximeretur, tolleretur aut amoveretur, adeo quidem ut prætenſum Matrimonium inter Majeſtatem Veſtram & Dominam Annam prædictam non modo ex conditionis defectu corruerit, ſed ſi nulla conditio hujuſmodi omnino fuiſſet, certe quidem Matrimonium hujuſmodi prætenſum ex ſola præcontractus hujuſmodi cauſa non explicata in ſuſpenſo manſerit, in eum etiam caſum nullius vigoris omnino ac valoris pronunciandum, quo præcontractum illum verbis de præſenti factum fuiſſe conſtiterit, id quod multis de cauſis eſt veriſimilius & merito ſuſpectum haberi poteſt.

Conſideravimus præterea ex his quæ allegata, affirmata & probata nobis fuerunt, quod prætenſum Matrimonium inter Majeſtatem veſtram & Dominam Annam prædictam internum, purum, perfectum & integrum conſenſum non habuit: Imo contra quemadmodum inter ipſa tractationis initia, cum de hoc Matrimonio ageretur, plurimus illecebrarum fucus adhibitus eſt, & magnus laudationum acervus ſupra fidem cumulatus, ut hic perduceretur & obtruderetur ignota, ita ſolemnizationis actus qui inſtabat a Majeſtate Veſtra animo reluctante & diſſentiente exortus eſt, cauſis maximis & graviſſimis urgentibus & prementibus quæ animum invitum & alienum perpellere merito poſſent.

Conſideravimus etiam carnalem Copulam inter Majeſtatem Veſtram & prædictam Dominam Annam minime ſecutam eſſe, nec cum ea juſto impedimento intercedente conſequi deinde poſſe. Quæ omnia ex his quas audivimus probationibus, vera & certa eſſe exiſtimamus. Poſtremo illud quoq; Conſideramus, quod & nobis ab aliis propoſitum etiam nos verum eſſe fatemur, agnoſcimus & approbamus viz. ut ſi Majeſtas Veſtra (modo ne fiat divinæ juſſioni præjudicium) in libertate contrahendi Matrimonii cum alia eſſe declaretur, maxime totius Regni beneficio id futurum. Cum quidem Regni fœlicitas omnis & conſervatio, tum in Regia Veſtra perſona ad Dei honorem & divinarum legum executionem conſervandam conſiſtit, tum in vitandis etiam ſiniſtris omnibus opinionibus & ſcandalis quæ de Majeſtatis Veſtræ progenie poſt natam nobis ex prætenſo Matrimonio ſobolem ſuborirentur, ſi præcontractus ille de quo diximus, & cujus declaratio nulla ſecuta eſt, prædictæ Dominæ Annæ objiceretur. His itaq; de cauſis & conſiderationibus aliiſq; multis non neceſſariis quæ exprimantur, cum ſeparatim ſingulis, tum conjunctim omnibus conſideratis & perpenſis, Nos Archiepiſcopi & Epiſcopi, cum Decanis, Archidiaconis, & reliquo hujus Regni Clero nunc congregato, circumſtantias facti ejuſq; veritatem ut antedictum eſt conſiderantes, tum vero quid Eccleſia in hujuſmodi caſibus & poſſit facere & ſæpenumero antehac fecerit perpendentes, tenore præſentium declaramus & definimus, Majeſtatem Veſtram prædicto Matrimonio prætenſo, utpote nullo & invalido, non alligari, ſed alio deſuper judicio non expectato

Eccleſiæ

Eccleſiæ ſuæ Autoritate fretam poſſe arbitrio ſuo ad contrahend. & conſummand. Matrimonium cum quavis fœmina, divino jure vobiſcum contrahere non prohibita, procedere, prætenſo illo cum Domina Anna prædicta Matrimonio non obſtante.

Similiter Dominam Annam prædictam non obſtante Matrimonio prætenſo cum Majeſtate Veſtra, quod nullo pacto obſtare debere Decernimus, poſſe arbitrio ſuo cum quavis alia perſona divino jure non prohibita Matrimonium contrahere. Hæc Nos Clerum & doctam Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ partem repræſentantes, tum vera, juſta, honeſta, & ſancta eſſe Affirmamus, tum eiſdem qui perfectiſſime, integerrime, & efficaciſſimæ ad omnem intentionem, propoſitum & effectum a nobis exigi poteſt, Conſentimus & Aſſentimur per præſentes. In quorum omnium & ſingulorum teſtimonium hæc ſcripta manuum noſtrarum ſubſcriptione, communimus, utriuſq; etiam Archiepiſcopi ſigillo appoſito. Dat. Weſtmon. nono die menſis Julii, Anno Dom. 1540.

XX. Ann of Cleve's Letter to her Brother

BROTHER,

Cotton Libr. Otho. C. 10. BEcauſe I had rather ye knew the Truth by mine Advertiſement, than for want thereof ye ſhould be deceived by vain Reports, I write theſe preſent Letters unto you, by which ye ſhall underſtand, That being advertiſed how the Nobles and Commons of this Realm deſired the King's Highneſs here to commit the examination of the Matter of Marriage, between me and his Majeſty, to the determination of the Clergy: I did the more willingly conſent thereunto, and ſince the determination made, have alſo allowed, approved, and agreed unto the ſame, wherein I have more reſpect, as becometh me, to Truth and good Pleaſure, than any worldly Affection that might move me to the contrary. I account God pleaſed with that is done, and know my ſelf to have ſuffered no wrong or injury; but being my Body preſerved in the integrity which I brought into this Realm, and I truly diſcharged from all band of Conſent, I find the King's Highneſs, whom I cannot juſtly have as my Husband, to be nevertheleſs as a moſt kind, loving, and friendly Father and Brother, and to uſe me as honourably, and with as much humanity and liberality as you, I my ſelf, or any of our Kin or Allies could wiſh or deſire; wherein I am, for my own part, ſo well content and ſatisfied, that I much deſire my Mother, You, and other mine Allies ſo to underſtand it, accept, and take it; and ſo to uſe your ſelf towards this Noble and Vertuous Prince, as he may have cauſe to continue his friendſhip towards you, which on his behalf ſhall nothing be impaired or altered for this Matter; for ſo hath it pleaſed his Highneſs to ſignify unto me, that like as he will ſhew me always a moſt fatherly and brotherly kindneſs, and has ſo provided for me; ſo will he remain with you, and other, according to ſuch terms as have paſſed in the ſame knot of Amity which betwen you hath been concluded, this Matter notwithſtanding, in ſuch wiſe as neither I, ne you, or any of our Friends ſhall have juſt cauſe of Miſcontentment. Thus much I have thought thought neceſſary to write unto you, leſt for want of true knowledg ye might otherwiſe take this Matter than ye ought, and in other ſort care for me than ye ſhould have cauſe. Only I require this of you, That ye ſo uſe your ſelf, as for your untowardneſs in this Matter, I fare not the worſe; whereunto I truſt you will have regard.

XXI. The Reſolutions of ſeveral Biſhops and Divines, of ſome Queſtions concerning the Sacraments; by which it will appear with what maturity and care they proceeded in the Reformation, taken from the Originals, under their own hands. Only in copying them, I judged it might be more acceptable to the Reader to ſee every Mans anſwer ſet down after every Queſtion; and therefore they are publiſhed in this method. Ex M. SS. D. Stillfleet.

The firſt Queſtion.

What a Sacrament is by the Scripture?

Anſwers.

THe Scripture ſheweth not what a Sacrament is, nevertheleſs where in the Latin Text we have Sacramentum, there in the Greek we have Myſterium; and ſo by the Scripture, Sacramentum may be called Myſterium, id eſt, res occulta ſive arcana. Canterbury

To the firſt; In Scripture we neither find definition nor deſcription of a Sacrament. York.

Without prejudice to the Truth, and ſaving always more better Judgment, Cum facultate etiam melius deliberandi in hæc parte. London.

To the firſt Queſtion; I think that the Scriptures do uſe this word Sacrament, in divers places, according to the Matter it treateth upon, Tobie 12. Rev. 1. Wiſd. 2. 6, 12. Dan. 2. Eph. 1. 3, 5. Col. 1. 1 Tim. 10. Rev. 17. as alſo it doth divers other words: Yet, what a Sacrament is by definition, or deſcription of Scripture, I cannot find it explicated openly. Likewiſe as I cannot find the definition or deſcription of the Trinity, nor yet ſuch like things. Marry, what other Men can find, being daily and of long ſeaſon exerciſed in Scripture, I cannot tell, referring therefore this thing to their better knowledg.

I think that where this word Sactamentum is found in the Scripture in the Latin Tranſlation, there in the Greek is found this word Μυστήριον, that is to ſay, a Myſtery, or a ſecret Thing. Rocheſter.

What the word Sacrament betokeneth, or what is the definition, deſcription, or notification thereof, I have found no ſuch plainly ſet out by Scripture. But this I find, that it ſhould appear by the ſame Scripture, that the Latin word Sacramentum, and the Greek word Myſterium, Carlile.

be in manner always uſed for one thing; as much as to ſay as, Abſconditum, Occultatum, vel in occulto.

Dr. Robertſon. . Thomas Robertſon. Ad Quæſtiones.

Dr. Cox. I find not in Scripture, the definition of a Sacrament, nor what a Sacrament is.

Dr. Day. I find no definition in Scripture of this word Sacramentum; howbeit whereſoever it is found in Scripture, the ſame is in the Greek Myſterium, which ſignifieth a ſecret, or hid Thing.

Dr. Ogelthorp. Non habetur in Scripturis, quid Sacramentum proprie ſit, niſi quod ſubinde Myſterium dicitur: varia enim, & in Scripturis, & in Eccleſiaſticis Scriptoribus reperitur ejus nominis ſignificatio; ideoque definiri non poteſt.

Dr. Redmayn. I find no definition of this word Sacrament in the Scripture; nor likewiſe of this word Gratia, or Lex, with innumerable more; and yet what they ſignifie, it is known; ſo the ſignification of this word Sacrament is plain, it is nothing elſe but a ſecret hid Thing, or any Myſtery.

Dr. Edgworth. Like as Angelus, Cœlum, Terra, be ſpoken of in Scripture, yet none of them defined: ſo altho Sacramentum be ſpoken of in Scripture, yet it hath no definition there, but is taken divers ways, and in divers ſignifications.

Dr. Symmons. This word Sacrament in Scripture is not defined.

Dr. Treſham. I ſay this word Sacrament, taken in his common ſignification, betokeneth a Myſtery, and hid, or a ſecret thing: But if ye underſtand it in his proper ſignification, as we uſe to apply it only to the ſeven Sacraments, the Scripture ſheweth not what a Sacrament is. And yet leſt any man might be offended, thinking, that becauſe the Scripture ſheweth not what a Sacrament is, therefore the ſame is a light thing, or little to be eſteemed: Here may be remembred, that there are ſome weighty and godly things, being alſo of our Belief, which the Scripture ſheweth not expreſly what they are. As for Example; We believe the Son is conſubſtantial to the Father: Item; that the Father is unbegotten, yet the Scripture ſheweth not what is conſubſtantial, nor what is unbegotten, neither maketh any mention of the words. Likewiſe it is true, Baptiſm is a Sacrament, Pennance is a Sacrament, &c. yet the Scripture ſheweth not what a Sacrament is.

Edwardus

Edwardus Leyghton.

Reſponſions unto the Queſtions.

To the firſt Queſtion, I ſay; That in Holy Scripture I never found, and I think there is no Man that will find a definition or deſcription of this word Sacramentum; which is as much to ſay in Engliſh, as a Myſtery, a ſecret, or a hid thing. Dr. Leyghton.

I do read no definition of this word Sacramentum in Scripture; but ſometimes it is uſed in Scripture, to ſignify a thing ſecret or hid. Dr. Coren.

In primo articulo conveniunt omnes, non ſatis conſtare ex Scriptura, quid ſit Sacramentum; Pleriq; tamen dicunt Græce appellari, Myſterium, (i. e.) a ſecret or a hid Thing. Conveniunt.

In the Anſwer unto the firſt Queſtion, They do all agree, that it is not evident by Scripture, what a Sacrament is, but Myſterium, that is, a ſecret, or a hid Thing. Agreement.

2. Queſtion.

What a Sacrament is by the Ancient Authors?

Anſwers.

THe Ancient Doctors call a Sacrament, Sacræ rei ſignum, viz. viſibile Verbum, Symbolum, atque pactio qua ſumus conſtricti. Canterbury

To the ſecond; Of St Auguſtine's words, this Deſcription following of a Sacrament may be gathered; Sacramentum eſt inviſibilis gratiæ, viſibilis Forma. And this thing, that is ſuch viſible form or ſign of inviſible Grace in Sacraments, we find in Scripture, altho we find not the word Sacrament, ſaving only in the Sacrament of Matrimony. York.

To the ſecond; I find in Authors this Declaration, Sacramentum eſt ſacræ rei ſignum. Alſo, Inviſibilis Gratiæ viſibilis Forma. Alſo, Viſibilis Forma inviſibilis Gratiæ imaginem gerens & cauſa exiſtens. And of the verity and goodneſs of this Deſcription or Declaration, I refer me to the Divines, better acquainted with this Matter than I am. London.

I think that this word Sacrament, as it is taken of the Old Authors, hath divers and ſundry ſignifications, for ſometime it is extended to all holy ſigns, ſometimes to all Myſteries, ſometimes to all Allegories, &c. Rocheſter.

Thomas Waldenſis, who writeth a ſolemn Work de Sacramentis, cauſeth me to ſay, that this word, Sacramentum in communi, is defined of the Ancient Authors; who after that he had ſhewed how that Wycliff, and before him Berengarius hath ſaid, that Auguſtine defineth Sacramentum thus; Sacramentum eſt ſacrum ſignum; and Signum in this wiſe, Carlile.

De Doctrina Christiana. Signum est res præter speciem quam sensibus ingerit aliquid aliud ex se faciens in cogitationem venire. He himself, with Ancient Authors, as he saith, defineth it thus; Sacramentum est invisibilis Gratiæ visibilis Forma, vel, Sacramentum est Sacræ rei Signum: Both these Descriptions (saith he) be of the Ancient Fathers.

Dr. Robertson. Sacramentum a vetustioribus, quemadmodum fert Hugo de S. Victore & Thomas Aquinas, nondum reperiri definitum, nisi quod Augustinus, interdum vocet Sacramenta, Sacra signa aut signacula, interdum similitudines earum rerum, quarum sunt Sacramenta. Et Rabanus, Sacramentum dicitur, quod sub tegumento rerum corporalium, virtus Divina secretius salutem eorundem Sacramentorum operatur, unde & a secretis virtutibus vel Sacris, Sacramenta dicuntur.

Dr. Cox. The Ancient Authors commonly say, That a Sacrament is, Sacræ rei Signum, or Sacrosanctum Signaculum; but they do not utterly and properly define what it is.

Dr. Day. The Ancient Doctors take this word, Sacramentum, diversly, and apply it to many things.

Dr. Oglethorpe. Ex Augustino & aliis colligitur, Sacramentum posse dici, Sacræ rei Signum, vel, invisibilis gratiæ visibilis Forma, quanquam hæc posterior definitio non conveniat omnibus Sacramentis, scil. tantum septem istis usitatis; sed nec his quoq; ex æquo, cum non æqualem conferant gratiam.

Dr. Redmayn. Generally it is taken to signify every secret Mystery, and Sacramenta be called, Sacrarum, rerum signa, or, Sacra signacula: And as this word Sacrament particularly is attributed to the chief Sacraments of the Church, this definition of a Sacrament may be gathered of St. August. Invisibilis Gratiæ visibilis Forma. And also that a Sacrament is a mystical or secret Work which consisteth ex Verbo & elemento. And Cyprian saith, Verborum solennitas & Sacri invocatio nominis, & signa institutionibus Apostolicis Sacerdotum Ministeriis Attributa, visibile celebrant Sacramentum, rem vero ipsam Spiritus Sanctus format & efficit.

Dr. Edgeworth By the Ancient Authors, Sacramentum hath many significations, sometimes it is called a secret Counsel. Tob. 12. Sacramentum Regis abscondere bonum est. Nebuchadnezar's Dream was called Sacramentum, Dan. 2. The Mystery of Christ's Incarnation, and of our Redemption is so called, Ephes. 3. and 1 Tim. 3. so that every secret Thing having some privy sense or signification, is called Sacramentum, generally extending the Vocable: Notwithstanding in one signification, Sacramentum, accordeth properly to them that be commonly called the Seven Sacraments; and hath this definition taken of St. August. and others, Invisibilis gratiæ visibilis Forma, ut ipsius imaginem gerat & quodammodo causa existat.

Dr. Symmons. The Ancient Authors of Divinity use this word Sacrament in divers significations, for they call it Mysterium; and so the Scripture useth it it in many places, as 1 Tim. 3. Tobie 12. Wiſd. 2. *Dan.*2. Eph. 1. & 3. The word Sacrament is alſo uſed for a Figure or a ſign of the Old Teſtament, ſignifying Chriſt, as the Paſchal Lamb, and the Brazen Serpent, and divers other holy ſigns. It is alſo taken of the Holy Authors, to be an Holy ſign, which maketh to the ſanctification of the ſoul, given to God againſt ſin for our ſalvation, as it may be gathered of them; for this word Sacrament is called by them Sacrum Signum; but I have not read any expreſs definition common to all Sacraments.

This word Sacrament, in the Ancient Authors, is oft-times uſed in this general ſignification, and ſo (as is before ſaid) it is a Myſtery, or ſecret Thing; and ſometimes the ſame word is uſed as appliable only unto the ſeven Sacraments; and is thus deſcribed, A viſible Form of an inviſible Grace; and thus alſo, a thing by the which, under the covering of viſible Things, the godly Power doth work our health. Dr. Treſham.

To the ſecond I ſay; That Hugo de Sancto Victore, is one of the moſt Ancient Authors that I ever could perceive, took upon him to define or deſcribe a Sacrament: Howbeit, I ſuppoſe, that this common deſcription which the Schoolmen uſe, after the Maſter of the Sentences, viz. Sacramentum eſt inviſibilis Gratiæ viſibilis ſeu ſenſibilis Forma, may be gathered of St. Auſtin, and divers other Ancient Authors words in many places of their Works. Dr. Leyghton.

I do find no definition plainly ſet forth in Old Authors; notwithſtanding this definition, Inviſibilis Gratiæ viſibilis Forma, may be gathered out of St. Auguſtine. Dr. Coren.

In ſecundo Articulo conveniunt omnes, Sacramentum eſſe ſacræ rei ſignum. Treſham, Oglethorpus, & Edgworth, dicunt hanc definitionem, Sacramentum eſt inviſibilis gratiæ viſibilis Forma, his ſeptem convenire. Thurlebeus ait, non convenire omnibus ſeptem, & æque plurибus poſſe attribui atq; ſeptem. Con.

In the ſecond they put many deſcriptions of a Sacrament, as the ſign of a holy Thing, a viſible Word, &c. But upon this one definition, a Sacrament is a viſible Form of inviſible Grace, they do not all agree: for Doctors, Edgworth, Treſham, and Oglethorp ſay, That it is applicable only and properly unto the word Sacrament, as it ſignifieth the ſeven Sacraments uſually received. My Lord Elect of Weſtminſter ſaith, That it agreeth not unto all the Seven, nor yet more ſpecially unto the Seven, than unto any other. Agreem.

How many Sacraments there be by the Scripture?

Anſwers.

Canterbury THe Scripture ſheweth not how many Sacraments there be, but Incarnatio Chriſti and Matrimonium, be called in the Scripture Myſteria, and therefore we may call them by the Scripture Sacramenta. But one Sacramentum the Scripture maketh mention of, which is hard to be revealed fully, as would to God it were, and that is Myſterium Iniquitatis, or Myſterium Meretricis magnæ & Beſtiæ.

York. To the third; In Scripture we find no preciſe number of Sacraments.

London. To the third; I find not ſet forth the expreſs number, with expreſs declaration of this many and no more; nor yet of theſe expreſſly by Scripture which we uſe, eſpecially under the name of Sacraments, ſaving only of Matrimony.

Rocheſter. I think that in the Scripture be innumerable Sacraments, for all Myſteries, all Ceremonies, all the Facts of Chriſt, the whole ſtory of the Jews, and the Revelations of the Apocalypſe, may be named Sacraments.

Carlile. The certain number of Sacraments, or Myſteries, contained within Scripture, cannot be well expreſſed or aſſigned; for Scripture containeth more than infallibly may be rehearſed.

Dr. Robertſon. De iſtis ſeptem, quæ uſitate vocamus Sacramenta, nullum invenio nomine Sacramenti appellari, niſi Matrimonium. Matrimonium eſſe Sacramentum, probat Eckius, Homi 73. & conferre gratiam, ibid.

Dr. Cox. There be divers Sacraments by the Scripture, as in Tobie 12. Sacramentum Regis, the King's ſecret. Alſo Nebuchadnezzar's Dream, Dan. 2. is called, Sacramentum. Incarnatio Chriſti, Sacramentum, Epheſ. 3. Matrimonium, Sacramentum.

Dr. Day. Taking for Sacraments any thing, that this word, Sacramentum, doth ſignify, there be in Scripture a great number of Sacraments more than ſeven.

Dr. Ogleſthorpe. Non habetur determinatus Sacramentorum numerus in Scripturis, ſunt enim innumera fere illic, quæ paſſim vocantur Sacramenta; cum omnis allegoria, omneq; Myſterium, dicatur Sacramentum. Quin & ſomnia, ac ſecreta, ſubinde Sacramenta vocantur. Tobie 2. Sacramentum Regis abſcondere bonum eſt; & Dan. 2. Imploremus miſericordias Dei Cœli ſuper Sacramento iſto, & ſomnio. Paulus etiam Epiſt. 2. vocat Myſterium Incarnationis Chriſti Sacramentum: Et in Apoc. 1. vocat Sacramentum ſeptem Stellarum. Ac hoc præcipue obſervandum venit, nullum nullum a ſeptem Sacramentis receptis, hoc nomine appellari, prætor ſolum Matrimonium.

As many as there be Myſteries, which be innumerable; but by Scripture, I think, the ſeven which be named Sacraments, may principally bear the name. Dr. Redmayn.

Speaking of Sacraments generally, they be innumerable ſpoken of in Scripture; but properly to ſpeak of Sacraments, there be but ſeven that may be ſo called, of which Matrimony is expreſly called Sacramentum, Epheſ. 5. and as I think, in the Germane and proper ſignification of a Sacrament; ſo that the indiviſible knot of the Man and his Wife in one Body, by the Sacrament of Matrimony, is the matter of this Sacrament; upon which, as on the literal verity the Apoſtle foundeth this allegorical ſaying, Ego autem dico in Chriſto, & in Eccleſia; for the myſtical ſenſe preſuppoſeth a verity in the Letter on which that is taken. Six more there be to which the definition doth agree, as manifeſtly doth appear by the Scriptures, with the expoſition of the ancient Authors. Dr. Edgworth.

In the Scripture there is no certain number of Sacraments. Dr. Symmons.

I find no more of the ſeven, called expreſly Sacraments, but only Matrimony, but extending the name of Sacrament in his moſt general acception; there are in Scripture a great number of Sacraments, whereof the Apoſtle ſaith, Si noverint Myſteria omnia, &c. Dr. Treſham.

To the third; I ſay, that I find not in Scripture any of theſe ſeven which we commonly call Sacraments, called Sacramentum, but only Matrimonium. But I find divers and many other things called Sacraments in Scripture, as in the 12 of Tobie, Sacramentum Regis abſcondere bonum eſt. Item Apoc. 17. Dicamus tibi Sacramentum. Item, 1 Tim. 3. Magnum eſt pietatis Sacramentum, &c. Dr. Leyghton.

I cannot tell how many Sacraments be, by Scripture, for they be above one hundred. Dr. Coren.

In tertio conveniunt ſatis: non eſſe certum numerum Sacramentorum per Scripturas. Redmaynus addit, But by Scripture I think the ſeven which be named Sacraments, may principally bear the Name. Idem ſentit Edgworth, & ſeptem tantum. Matrimonium in Scripturis haberi ſub nomine ſacramenti pleriq; dicunt. Con.

In the third they do agree, That there is no certain number of Sacraments by Scripture, but even as many as there be Myſteries; and none of theſe ſeven called Sacraments, but only Matrimony in Scripture. Agreem.

How many Sacraments there be by the ancient Authors?

Anſwers.

Canterbury BY the Ancient Authors there be many Sacraments more than ſeven, for all the Figures which ſignify Chriſt to come, or teſtify that he is come, be called Sacraments, as all the Figures of the Old Law, and in the New Law; Euchariſtia, Baptiſmus, Paſcha, Dies Dominicus, lotio Pedum, ſignum Crucis, Chriſma, Matrimonium, Ordo, Sabbatum, Impoſitio manuum, Oleum, Conſecratio Olei, Lac, Mel, Aqua, Vinum, Sal, Ignis, Cinis, adapertio Aurium, veſtis candida, and all the Parables of Chriſt, with the Propheſies of the Apocalyps, and ſuch others, be called by the Doctors, Sacramenta.

York. To the fourth; There is no preciſe number of Sacraments mentioned by the Ancient Authors, taking the word Sacrament, in his moſt general ſignification.

London. To the fourth; I find that St. Auſtine ſpeaketh, de Baptiſmo, de Euchariſtia, de Mrtrimonio, de Ordinatione Clericorum, de Sacramento chriſmatis & Unctionis: Alſo I find in the ſaid St. Auſtine, that in the Old Law there were many Sacraments, and in the New Law few.

Rocheſter. I think that in the Doctors be found many more Sacraments than ſeven, viz. Panis Catechumenorum, ſignum Crucis, Oleum, Lac, Sal, Mel, &c.

Carlile. That Scripture containeth, by the ſame Holy Ghoſt which is Author thereof, the Holy Doctors, and Ancient Fathers expoundeth; So that where in Scripture the number of Sacraments is uncertain, it cannot be among them certain.

Dr. Robertſon. Apud Auguſtinum lego Sacramentum Nuptiarum, Sacramentum Baptiſmi, Sacramentum Euchariſtiæ, quod & altaris ſive panis vocat; Sacramentum Ordinationis; Sacramentum Chriſmatis, quod datur per manus impoſitionem Baptizatis; Sacramentum Unctionis.

Dr. Cox. I find in the Ancient Authors, that Baptiſm is called Sacramentum, Euchariſtia Sacramentum, Matrimonium Sacramentum, Ordo Sacramentum, Chriſma Sacramentum, Impoſitio Manuum per Baptiſmum Sacramentum, Dilectio Sacramentum, Lotio pedum Sacramentum, Oleum, Mel, Lac, Sacramenta; and many others.

Dr. Day. There be a great ſort of Sacraments found in the Doctors, after the acception above-ſaid, more than ſeven.

Taking

Taking this word Sacrament univerſally for Myſteries, or all ſecret Tokens, there be more Sacraments than can be reckoned; but the ſeven by old Authors may ſpecially obtain the name. Lotio pedum is ſpoken of in old Authors, as a ſpecial Sacrament uſed then in the Church, and as it appeareth, having a great ground in the Scripture; and I think it were better to renew that again, and ſo to have eight Sacraments, rather than to diminiſh the number of the ſeven now uſed. Dr. Redmayn.

Even like as to the next Queſtion before. Dr. Edgworth.

The ancient Authors acknowledg many more than ſeven; for they call in their Writings, all Rites and Ceremonies, Sacraments. Dr. Symmons.

Generally, as many as Myſteries, ſpecially ſeven, and no more of like nature to them; for although I find not expreſs mention where Penance is called a Sacrament, yet I think it may be deduced and proved by Cyprian, in his Sermon de paſſione Chriſti, in theſe words; Deniq; quicunq; ſiunt Sacramentorum Miniſtri, per operationem authoritas in figura Crucis omnibus Sacramentis largitur effectum, & cuncta peragit nobis quod omnibus nominibus eminet a Sacramentorum vicariis invocatum: at licet indigni ſint qui accipiunt, Sacramentorum tamen reverentia & propinquiorem ad Deum parat acceſſum, & ubi redierint ad cor conſtat ablutionis donum, & reddit effectus munerum, nec alias quæri aut repeti neceſſe eſt ſalutiferum Sacramentum; in theſe words, redit effectus munerum; and, nec alias repeti neceſſe eſt ſalutiferum Sacramentum, muſt needs be underſtood Penance, and alſo that Penance is a Sacrament: For as our firſt acceſs to God is by the Sacrament Baptiſm, which Cyprian there following called Ablutionem primam; ſo if we fall by deadly ſin, we cannot repetere God again, but by Penance; which repeting (i. e.) Penance, Cyprian calleth Salutiferum Sacramentum. Dr. Treſham.

To the fourth, I ſay; That I find in Ancienter Authors every one of theſe ſeven, which we call commonly Sacraments, called Sacramentum; as in Auſtin every one of them is called Sacramentum but only Penance; which Cyprian calleth Sacramentum. Alſo I find in the ancienter Authors divers other things (beſides the ſeven) called Sacraments, as Lotio Pedum in Cyprian, &c. Dr. Leyghton.

In quarto conveniunt, plura eſſe Sacramenta quam ſeptem apud Authores: Redman addit; But the ſeven, by old Authors, may ſpecially obtain the name. Idem putat Edgworth, and Treſham. Lotio Pedum, he thinketh were better to be renewed, and ſo made eight Sacraments, than the number of the ſeven to be diminiſhed. Treſhamus citat Cyprianum in Serm. de Paſſione Chriſti pro pœnitentia, quod dicatur Sacramentum, cum alii fere omnes nuſquam appellari aiunt Sacramentum apud Authores, & hic locus aperte agit de Baptiſmo, quod vocat donum ablutionis, & Sacramentum Salutiferum. Con.

Agreem. In the fourth they agree, That there is no determinate number of Sacraments ſpoken of in the old Authors; but that my Lord of York, and Edgworth, Treſham, Redman, Crayford, and Simmons, ſay, That thoſe ſeven by old Authors, may ſpecially obtain the name of Sacraments. The Biſhop of St. Davids ſaith, That there be but four Sacraments in the old Doctors moſt chiefly ſpoken of, and they be Baptiſm, the Sacrament of the Altar, Matrimony, and Penance.

5. Queſtion.

Whether this word Sacrament, be and ought to be attributed to the ſeven only? And whether the ſeven Sacraments be found in any of the old Authors?

Anſwers.

Canterbury I Know no cauſe why this word Sacrament ſhould be attributed to the ſeven only; for the old Authors never preſcribed any certain number of Sacraments, nor in all their Books I never read theſe two words joined together, viz. ſeptem Sacramenta.

York. To the fifth; To the firſt part of this Queſtion, this word Sacrament is uſed and applied in Scripture, to ſome things that be none of the ſeven Sacraments. To the ſecond part; The ſeven Sacraments be found in ſome of the ancient Authors.

London. To the fifth, I anſwer; That this word Sacrament, in our Language commonly hath been attributed to the ſeven cuſtomably called Sacraments, not for that yet, that the word Sacrament cannot be applied to any more, but for that the ſeven have been ſpecially of very long and ancient ſeaſon received, continued and taken for things of ſuch ſort.

Rocheſter. I think that the name of a Sacrament is, and may be attributed to more than ſeven, and that all the ſeven Sacraments be found in the old Authors, tho all peradventure be not found in one Author. But I have not read Penance called by the name of a Sacrament in any of them.

Carlile. Certain it is, that this word Sacrament, neither is nor ought to be attributed to ſeven only, for both Scripture and ancient Authors otherwiſe applieth it; but yet nothing letteth, but that this word Sacrament may moſt eſpecially, and in a certain due preheminence, be applied to the ſeven Sacraments, of moſt ancient name and uſage among Chriſtian Men. And that the ancient Authors have ſo uſed and applied it, affirmeth the ſaid Thomas Walden, convincing Wycliffe and Berengarius, who enforced the contrary; from Cyprian, and alſo Auguſtine, with other holy Doctors, they may ſo well be gathered.

Dr. Robertſon. Vocabulum, Sacramenti, in Sacris Literis, nulli Sacramentorum quod ſciam tribuitur, niſi Matrimonio: a vetuſtis Scriptoribus tribuitur Ceremoniis & umbris legis, Incarnationi Chriſti, figuris, allegoriis, & feſtivitatibus:

vitatibus: Apud Paulum legitur divinitatis, voluntatis divinæ, & pietatis Sacramentum. Cæterum loquendo de Sacramentis his, quæ sunt invisibilis gratiæ collatæ in Ecclesia Christi visibilia signa, opinor non plura quam septem inveniri, hisq; magis proprie quam reliquis, sub hac ratione, tribui nomen Sacramenti.

This word Sacrament is not, nor ought not to be attributed to these seven only. Those that we call seven Sacraments, be found in old Authors, altho some of them be seldom found called by this name Sacrament. Dr. Cox.

This word, Sacramentum, neither is, nor ought to be so attributed unto these seven, but that it is, and may be attributed to many more things, and so the Ancienter Doctors use it. The seven Sacraments be found in Ancient Doctors under the name of Sacrament, saving that I remember not that I have read in them Pennance called a Sacrament. Dr. Day.

Nomen commune est multis aliis rebus, quam septem istis usitatis Sacramentis. Septem Sacramenta, seorsim & sparsim reperiuntur in veterum monumentis. Dr. Oglethorp.

To the seven specially and principally, and in general to innumerable more. But I cannot tell whether in any Old Author might be found these two words, seven Sacraments, or this number limited; but every one of the seven Sacraments, one by one, be found in the Old Authors. Dr. Redmayn.

Sacramentum, in his proper signification, is and ought to be attributed to the seven only; and they be all seven found in the Authors. Dr. Edgworth.

This word, Sacrament, is not only to be attributed to the seven, but that the seven Sacraments especially conferreth Grace, the Old Authors especially accounteth them by the number of seven; and these seven are found in Authors and Scriptures, altho they be not found by the name of seven. Dr. Symmons.

I say, this word Sacrament is attributed to the seven; and that the seven Sacraments are found in the Ancient Authors. Dr. Tresham.

To the fifth I say, first, (as before) that this word Sacramentum, is not applied or attributed in Holy Scripture to any of the seven, but only to Matrimony. But it is attributed in Scripture, and Ancient Authors to many other things besides these. Howbeit, taking this word, Sacramentum, for a sensible sign of the invisible Grace of God given unto Christian People, as the Schoolmen, and many late Writers take it; I think that the seven commonly called Sacraments, are to be called only and most properly Sacraments. Dr. Leyghton.

This word Sacrament, may well be attributed to the seven; and so it is found in Old Authors, saving that I do not read expresly in old Doctors, Pennance to be under the name of a Sacrament, unless it be in Chrysostome, in the Exposition ad Hebræ. Homil. 20. sect. 1. cap. 10. in principio. Dr. Coren.

Non. Con. Inquinto præter Herfordenſ. Roffenſ. Dayium. Oglethorpum, Meneveníſ. & Coxum putant omnes nomen Sacramenti præcipue his ſeptem convenire. Symons addit. The ſeven Sacraments ſpecially confer Grace: Eboracenſ. Curren, Treſham, Symons, aiunt ſeptem Sacramenta inveniri apud veteres, quanquam Curren & Symons mox videntur iterum negare.

Diſſent. In the fifth; The Biſhops of Hereford and St. Davids, Dr. Day, Dr. Cox, ſay, That this word, Sacrament, in the Old Authors, is not attributed unto the ſeven only, and ought not to be attributed. The Biſhop of Carliſle alledging Waldenſis. Doctors, Curren, Edgworth, Symons, Treſham ſay, That it is and may be attributed, And Dr. Curren, and Mr. Symmons, ſeem to vary againſt themſelves each in their own Anſwers; for Dr. Curren ſaith, That this word Sacrament is attributed unto the ſeven in the old Doctors, and yet he cannot find that it is attributed unto Pennance. Dr. Symons ſaith, That the Old Authors account them by the number of ſeven; and yet he ſaith, That they be not found there by the name of ſeven.

2. Queſtion.

Whether the determinate number of ſeven Sacraments be a Doctrine, either of the Scripture, or of the old Authors, and ſo to be taught?

Anſwers.

Canterbury THe determinate number of ſeven Sacraments is no Doctrine of the Scripture, nor of the Old Authors.

York. To the ſixth; The Scripture maketh no mention of the Sacraments determined to ſeven preciſely; but the Scripture maketh mention of ſeven Sacraments, which be uſed in Chriſt's Church, and grounded partly in Scripture; and no more be in uſe of the ſaid Church but ſeven ſo grounded; and ſome of the Ancient Doctors make mention of ſeven, and of no more than ſeven, as uſed in Chriſts Church ſo grounded; wherefore a Doctrine may be had of ſeven Sacraments preciſely uſed in Chriſt's Church, and grounded in Scripture.

London. To the ſixth; I think it be a Doctrine ſet forth by the Ancient Fathers, one from another, taking their matter and ground out of Scripture, as they underſtood it; tho Scripture, for all that, doth not give unto all the ſeven, the ſpecial names by which now they are called, nor yet openly call them by the name of Sacrament, except only (as is before-ſaid) the Sacrament of Matrimony.

Rocheſter. Albeit the ſeven Sacraments be in effect found both in the Scripture, and in the Old Authors, and may therefore be ſo taught; yet I have not read this preciſe and determinate number of ſeven Sacra-

Sacraments, neither in the Scripture, nor in the ancient Writers.

By what is here before-ſaid, I think it doth well appear, that both the Scripture of God, and holy Expoſitors of the ſame, would have the ſeven Sacraments both taught, and in due form exhibited to all Chriſtian People, as it ſhall alſo better appear by what followeth. Carlile.

In Scriptura tantum unum ex iſtis ſeptem Sacramentum vocari invenio, nimirum Matrimonium: apud veteres reperiuntur omnia hæc ſeptem, a nullo tamen, quod ſciam, nomine 7. Sacramentorum celebrari, niſi quod Eraſ. ait 7. a veteribus recenſeri: Auguſt. loquens de Sacramentis ad Januarium Ep. 118. ait numerum ſeptenarium tribui Eccleſiæ proprie inſtar univerſitatis; Item objectum fuiſſe Huſſo in Concilio Conſtantienti quod infideliter ſenſerit de 7. Sacramentis. De perfectione Num. Septenarii, vide Auguſt. lib. 1. de Civ. cap. 31. Dr. Robertſon.

This determinate number of ſeven Sacraments, is no Doctrine of Scripture, nor of the Old Authors, nor ought not to be taught as ſuch a determinate number by Scripture and Old Authors. Dr. Cox.

Neither the Scripture, nor the Ancient Authors, do recite the determinate number of the ſeven Sacraments; but the Doctrine of the ſeven Sacraments is grounded in Scripture, and taught by the ancient Authors, albeit not altogether. Dr. Day.

Septenarius Sacramentorum numerus, Doctrina eſt recentium Theologorum; quam illi partim ex Scriptura, partim ex veterum ſcriptis, argute in ſacrum hunc (ut aiunt) numerum, collegerunt. Dr. Oglethorpe.

I think, as I find by old Authors, the ancient Church uſed all theſe ſeven Sacraments; and ſo I think it good to be taught. Dr. Redmayn.

The determinate number of ſeven Sacraments, is not taught in any one Proceſs of the Scripture, nor of any one of the old Authors of purpoſe ſpeaking of them altogether, or in one Proceſs, as far as I can remember; albeit they all ſeven be there, and there ſpoken of in Scripture manifeſtly, and ſo have the old Authors left them in ſundry places of their Writings; and ſo it ought to be taught. Dr. Edgworth.

Foraſmuch as the Scripture teacheth theſe ſeven, and ſheweth ſpecial Graces given by the ſame, the which are not ſo given by others, called Sacraments, the old Authors perceiving the ſpecial Graces, have accounted them in a certain number, and ſo have been uſed by Doctors to be called ſeven, and without inconvenience may ſo be taught. Dr. Symmons.

I ſay, The determinate number of ſeven is not expreſly mentioned in the Scripture, like as the determinate number of the ſeven Petitions of the Prayer is not expreſly mentioned; and as I think the ſeven Petitions to have their ground in Scripture, even ſo do I think of the ſeven Sacraments, to be grounded in Scripture. Dr. Treſham.

To

Dr. Leyghton. To the sixth I say as before, That the old Authors call each of these seven, Sacraments; but be it, I cannot remember that ever I read the determinate, precise, and express number of seven Sacraments in any of the ancient Authors, nor in Scripture. Howbeit we may find in Scripture, and the old Authors, also mention made, and the Doctrine of each of these seven, commonly called Sacraments.

Dr. Coren. The determinate number of seven, is a Doctrine to be taught, for every one of them be contained in Scripture, tho they have not the number of seven set forth there, no more than the Petitions of the Pater Noster be called seven, nor the Articles of the Creed be called twelve.

Agreem. In the sixth, touching the determinate number of the seven Sacraments, the Bishop of Duresme, Hereford, St. Davids, and Rochester, the Elect of Westminster, Dr. Day, and Dr. Oglethorpe say, This prescribed number of Sacraments is not found in the old Authors. The Bishop of York, Drs. Curren, Tresham, and Symmons, say the contrary. Concerning the second part, Whether it be a Doctrine to be taught? The Bishops of Hereford, St. Davids, and Dr. Cox, Think it ought not to be so taught as such a determinate number by Scripture. The Bishops of York, London, Carliste; Drs. Day, Curren, Tresham, Symmons, Crayford, Think it a Doctrine meet to be taught: And some of them say, That it is founded on Scripture.

7. Question.

What is found in Scripture of the Matter, Nature, Effect, and Vertue of such as we call the seven Sacraments; so as altho the Name be not there, yet whether the thing be in Scripture or no, and in what wise spoken of?

Answers.

Canterbury. I Find not in the Scripture, the Matter, Nature, and Effect of all these which we call the seven Sacraments, but only of certain of them, as of Baptism, in which we be regenerated and pardoned of our sin by the Blood of Christ: of Eucharistia, in which we be concorporated unto Christ, and made lively Members of his Body, nourished and and fed to the Everlasting Life, if we receive it as we ought to do, and else it is to us rather Death than Life. Of Pennance also I find in the Scripture, whereby sinners after Baptism returning wholly unto God, be accepted again unto Gods Favour and Mercy. But the Scripture speaketh not of pennance, as we call it a Sacrament, consisting in three parts, Contrition, Confession, and Satisfaction; but the Scripture taketh Pennance for a pure conversion of a sinner in heart and mind from his sins unto God, making no mention of private Confession of all deadly sins to a Priest, nor of Ecclesiastical satisfaction to be enjoined by him. Of Matrimony also I find very much in Scripture, and among other things, that it is a Mean whereby God doth use the infirmity of our Concupiscence to the setting forth of his Glory, and encrease of the World, thereby sanctifying the Act of Carnal Conjunction between the Man and the Wife to that use; yea, altho one Party be an Infidel: and in this, Matrimony is also a promise of salvation, if the Parents bring up their Children in the Faith, Love, and Fear of God. Of the Matter, Nature, and Effect of the other three, that is to say, Confirmation, Order, and extream Unction, I read nothing in the Scripture, as they be taken for Sacraments.

To the seventh; Of Baptism, we find in Scripture the Justification by the Word of Christ; we find also that the Matter of Baptism is Water, the Effect and Virtue is Remission of sins. Of Confirmation, we find that the Apostles did confirm those that were baptized, by laying their hands upon them, and that the Effect then was the coming of the Holy Ghost into them, upon whom the Apostles laid their hands, in a visible sign of the gift of divers Languages, and therewith of ghostly strength to confess Christ, following upon the same. Of the Sacrament of the Altar, we find the Institution by Christ, and the Matter thereof, bread and Wine, the Effect, Increase of Grace. Of the Sacrament of Pennance, we find the Institution in the Gospel, the Effect, Reconciliation of the sinner, and the union of him to the Mystical Body of Christ. Of the Sacrament of Matrimony, we find the Institution both in the Old and New Testament, and the Effect thereof, Remedy against Concupiscence and Discharge of sin, which otherwise should be in the Office of Generation. Of the Sacrament of Order, we find, that our Saviour gave to his Apostles power to baptize, to bind and to loose sinners, to remit sins, and to receive them, to teach and preach his Word, and to consecrate his most precious Body and Blood, which be the highest Offices of Order; and the effect thereof Grace, we find in Scripture. Of extream Unction, we find in the Epistle of the Holy Apostle St. James, and of the Effects of the same. York.

To the seventh, I find, that St. Austin is of this sentence, That where the Sacraments of the old Law did promise Grace and Comfort, the Sacraments of the New Law do give it indeed. And moreover he saith, That the Sacraments of the New Law are, factu faciliora, pauciora, salubriora, & fœliciora, more easier, more fewer, more wholsomer, and more happy. London.

The

Rochester. The Scripture teacheth of Baptism, the Sacrament of the Altar, Matrimony and Pennance manifestly: There be also in the Scripture manifest Examples of Confirmation, viz. That it was done after Baptism by the Apostles, per Manuum Impositionem. The Scripture teacheth also of Order, that it was done, per Manuum Impositionem cum oratione & jejunio. Of the Unction of sick Men, the Epistle of St. James teacheth manifestly.

Carlile. I think verily, That of the Substance, Effect, and Vertue of these seven usual Sacraments, that are to be taken and esteemed above others, we have plainly and expresly by Holy Scripture. Of Baptism, That whosoever believeth in Christ, and is Christened, shall be saved; and except that one be born again of Water and the Holy Ghost, he cannot come within the Kingdom of God. Of Matrimony, we have in Scripture, both by name, and in effect, in the Old and New Testament, both by Christ and his Apostle Paul. Of the Sacrament of the Altar, I find plainly, expresly, both in the Holy Gospels, and other places of Scripture. Of Pennance in like manner. Of Confirmation we have in Scripture, that when the Samaritans, by the preaching of Philip, had received the Word of God, and were Christened, the Apostles hearing of the same, sent Peter and John unto them; who when they came thither, they prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost: then they laid their hands upon them, and so they received the Holy Ghost; This, said Bede, is the Office and Duty only of Bishops. And this manner and form, (saith St. Hierom) as it is written in the Acts, the Church hath kept, That the Bishop should go abroad to call for the Grace of the Holy Ghost, and lay his hands upon them, who had been Christened by Priests and Deacons. Of the Sacrament of Orders, we have, That Christ made his Apostles the Teachers of the Law, and Ministers of his Sacraments, that they should duly do it, and make and ordain others likewise to do it after them. And so the Apostles ordained Matthias to be one of their number. St. Paul made and ordained Timothy and Titus, with others likewise. Of the Sacrament of Extream Unction, we have manifestly in the Gospel of Mark, and Epistle of St James.

Dr. Robertson. Materia Sacramentorum est Verbum & Elementum, virtus quam Deus per illa digne sumentibus conferat gratiam, juxta suam promissionem, nimirum quod sint Sacra Signacula, non tantum signantia, sed etiam significantia. Unde opinor constari hanc Sacramentorum vim esse in Sacris Literis.

Dr. Cox. I find in Scripture, of such things as we use to call Sacraments. First, Of Baptism manifestly. Of Eucharistia manifestly. Of Pennance manifestly. Of Matrimony manifestly. Of Ordering, per manus Impositionem & Orationem manifestly. It is also manifest, that the Apostles laid their hands upon them that were Christened. Of the Unction of the sick with Prayer manifestly.

Dr. Day. Albeit the seven Sacraments be not found in Scripture expressed by name, yet the thing it self, that is, the Matter, Nature, Effect and Vertue of of them is found there. Of Baptiſm in divers places; of the moſt Holy Communion; of Matrimony; of Abſolution; of Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, how they were ordained per Manuum Impoſitionem cum Oratione; Of laying the Apoſtles Hands on them that were Chriſtened, which is a part of Confirmation; of Unction of them that were ſick, with Prayer joined withal.

Natura, vis, effectus, ac uniuſcujuſq; Sacramenti proprietas, ſeorſim in Scriptura reperitur, ut veteres eam interpretati ſunt. Dr. Oglethorpe.

As it appeareth in the Articles which be drawn of the ſaid ſeven Sacraments. Dr. Redmayn.

In Scripture we find of the Form of the Sacraments, as the words Sacramental; and the Matter, as the Element, Oil, Chriſm; and the Patient receiving the Sacrament; and of Grace and encreaſe of Vertue given by them, as the Effects. Dr. Edgeworth

The things are contained in Scripture, as Baptiſm, Confirmation, Euchariſtia, Pœnitentia, Extrema Unctio, Ordo, altho they have not there this name Sacramentum as Matrimony hath; and every one of them hath his Matter, Nature, Effect and Vertue. Dr. Symmons.

I think the Thing, the Matter, the Nature, the Effect, and Vertue of them all be in the Scripture, and all there inſtituted by Gods Authority; for I think that no one Man, neither the whole Church hath power to inſtitute a Sacrament, but that ſuch Inſtitution pertaineth only to God. Dr. Treſham.

To the ſeventh, I ſay, That we may evidently find in Scripture, the ſubſtance of every one of the ſeven Sacraments, the Nature, Effect, and Vertue of the ſame; as of Baptiſm, Confirmation, Pennance, Matrimony, and ſo forth of the reſt. Dr. Leyghton.

Of the Matter, Nature, Vertue, and Effect, of ſuch as we call Sacraments, Scripture maketh mention: Of Baptiſm manifeſtly; of the moſt Holy Communion manifeſtly; of Abſolution manifeſtly; of Matrimony manifeſtly; of Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, Scripture ſpeaketh manifeſtly, for they were ordered, per Impoſitiones Manuum Presbyterii cum Oratione & Jejunio. Dr. Coren.

In the ſeventh they do agree, ſaving this, That the Biſhop of St. Davids ſays, That the Nature, Effect, and Vertue of theſe ſeven Sacraments, only Baptiſm, the Sacrament of the Altar, Matrimony, Pennance, are con-
